Watch Your Step, Joe

Joe McCarthy lost his face in the Moss case, but he plans to try and regain it by re-summoning Mrs. Annie Lee Moss and confronting her with ONE of the two "unnamed" witnesses who will swear that she was a dues paying, card carrying member of the Communist Party. Truth of the matter is that Joe is desperate and fighting hard to get out of the trap he got himself into.

The Moss case has proven to be his nemesis and now he must either prove himself or be exposed for the irresponsible character he is.

While the Republican members of the sub-committee are playing ball with the proposed investigation, the President in his strongest statement made to date against "McCarhyism" really put the onus on the witch hunters who hide behind congressional immunity.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Moss, who appeared on Columnist Drew Pearson's Sunday show was compared with Mrs. Anna Rosenberg, once a target of McCarthy's wrath, only to have the Wisconsin senator proved absolutely false in his assertions. . .and the sensational McCarthy expose by Harry Greenspun of the Las Vegas Sun is rapidly gaining momentum here in the capital.

Some excerpts from the Greenspun story were printed in this column several weeks ago, including the implication that Senator McCarthy was linked up with German communists in the Malmedy Massacre trials. . .a flash report from the sub-committee hearings on Richard Sears as proposed counsel for the investigation says that the Boston lawyer will not serve; another round against Joe.

Stand And Be Counted

The debate in the Senate on the Hawaiian-Alaskan statehood bill and the roll call provided some drama as well as mixed emotions for mixed voting which left some of us puzzled about what goes on in the upper story with some of the boys. It was the first time this session that 90 percent of the senate was present for a roll call.

The cloak rooms were full and the floor was conspicuously empty during the windy debates by Sens. Maroney, Smathers, and East for and against statehood. But when the Smathers amendment to make the two territories commonwealths came up, absentee solons came scurrying from all directions.

Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine hurried in to stand and be counted against a commonwealth and then scurried back out, hurried back later again for the final roll call. . .Michigan's Sen. Potter provided a comedy touch when he started a sniffing round among several senators drifting in and out of the cloak rooms. Somebody had sent in some samples of Hawaiian perfume to seduce the boys in favor of statehood and the puckish junior senator from Michigan had every one chuckling as some senators sniffed away like cocaine happy heads.

GOP Centennial Huddle

The centennial pageant depicting the 100th anniversary of Grand Old Party caused many a headache and considerable harrassment in the Women's division. The show and the sweat was over participation of Negroes in the program.

With an eye on the bad reaction from the Lincoln Day Box Supper, somebody tardily thought about not repeating the faux pas and invitations were extended to several groups and individuals to participate.

First on the list was the Howard university choir which because of a blunder on the part of the D. C. police was barred from the Lincoln Day Box Supper. The choir declined the invitation. Then the St. Luke's Baptist church choir was asked. They too were unable to accept. It was also reported that concert singer, Dorothy Maynor was invited, but was unable to accept.

But as it turned out, Baritone Arthur Davis, did an excellent job of leading the Star Spangled Banner with a solo verse and a deep sigh of relief went up from the bosoms of the ladies.

Davis, who made his debut at Town Hall in 1943, has studied at Howard U., Catholic U. in Washington, London U. and the Royal university of Brussels, Belgium. He was an understudy in Porgy and Bess. It was also reported that headquarters received dozens of telephone calls inquiring into the Negro participation in the pageant.

Expediency Makes Strange Bedfellows

Seeping down through the grapevine is a rumour that the National Urban League and U. S. Steel, its former arch enemy are "going steady" now. The rumour says that Urban League has called off the hounds and that in turn, U. S. Steel has dropped something in the kitty.

Says further that two high placed persons in the league are responsible for the action and that said action has caused a serious rift among the board members of the organization. While the NAACP is continuing its fight on U. S. Steel in the Delaware Valley Levittown Housing project, Urban league will go its separate way: have no parts in the fight.

And Levitt, the man who is building the big housing projects with part government funds is reported to have made the remark that any white man who lives next to a Negro must be a Communist.

Speaking of housing, Albert Cole, head of Housing and Home Finance, said last week that no specific steps had been taken yet to implement the directive in the President's housing message to Congress last January that special safeguards should be taken to protect the rights of minorities in housing regulations.

House Gallery Jitters

For about five seconds last week, the gun-shy House of Representatives thought the Puerto Ricans were after them again. Near panic resulted when a high school kid who got into the gallery without checking his camera let go with a flash bulb that made a loud pistol like report, got the boys on the floor on the jump ready to take to the woods.

Congressman Barratt O'Hara of Illinois who was speaking on the Housing bill on the floor at the time thought for a while that somebody was either objecting to his face or his remarks. He asked who would want to take his picture anyway before resuming his speech.

Although the temperature was in the low forties some solons were observed profusely wiping away perspiration. Now the congressional boys are considering bringing in electrical eye equipment to x-ray visitors for metal objects. . .don't look now fellows but your jitters are showing!

Interracial Misunderstandings

The series of all-day interracial conferences scheduled by the District school system got under way last week amidst the violent objections of many white groups. The conferences which were designed to prepare for the possible ending of segregation by the Supreme Court are to include the entire system starting with principals and supervisors, and then the 3,500 teachers in the schools.

Superintendent Hobart Corning said that the seminars were to deal with the problem of devloping human understanding and relationships. . .no matter under what general plan the schools are organized."

While the D. C. school board was anticipating, speculation was running wild about the date of "D Day" (Decision Day to you). The word got around that the decision would not be forthcoming until mid-June because nobody on the bench had been assigned yet to write the opinion. . .but then who knows a couple of weeks back everybody got hopped up over a report in a Georgia paper that the day was at hand. What happened? Nothing.

Which leads to information just received that the court has devised an absolutely leak proof system on decisions which has worked beautifully under test. But despite this, some of the forecasters are saying "Ha Ha. The decisions are made and under seal and they will be read the second week in May." "Quien Sabe" Who knows what next Monday will bring.

HOLD INTERRACIAL CONFERENCE

In Johannesburg, South Africa, in April of 1954, 146 women came together in a historic conference. African women sat side by side with Indian, coloured and European women. They were nurses, factory hands, farm workers and housewives; delegates from the branches of the liberation movement, trade unions, women's leagues, professional and religious organizations.

Mrs. Dodson

Altogether 230,500 women from all parts of South Africa were represented women determined to win their social, economic and political rights and to make life free and happy.

South Africa is one of the countries in which the government does not represent the will of the great majority of the people. The rights of free speech, assembly, organization and movement have been drastically reduced and are constantly being further whittled down until there is danger of living in a police state where no freedom is allowed to any opponent of the regime.

Women have been drawn into this struggle in large numbers. As Africans, Indians, of coloured they suffer the indignities and injures which are heaped upon their people. As women they suffer the additional discrimination upon their sex. The women of the oppressed nationalities have therefore to carry on a twofold struggle — for freedom from race and national discrimination, and for the removal of the inferiority of their status as women.

"Gone are the days when the place of women was in the kitchen and looking after the children. Today they are marching side by side with men on the road to freedom," were the words of Ida Mntwana, president of the African National Congress (Transvaal) Women's Section, addressing the conference, at which, she was elected the first president of the new Federation of South African Women.

"The large attendance at this conference is a clear demonstration of the ground we have already covered," she said, "We have come together, women of all races, to co-ordinate our efforts into one great army capable of shaping the future destiny of our children and to consolidate the efforts of members of various national groups. The success of this congress will depend on what we are prepared to do outside this hall. Let us unite, let us go forward with courage and determination!"

Ray Alexander, one of the main driving forces in this South African women's movement, in her opening report to the conference said: "All of us are here because we want to find solutions to the problems which mean so much to women; the winning of equality, democratic rights for women and our men, the right of our children to be brought up in decent homes, schools with opportunities for full life.

The government of our country represents a minority of the people. It is a government of Europeans only and represents the interests of the landowners, mine-owners and factory owners. To maintain power it makes laws discriminating against the great majority of the people — the Africans, Indians and Coloured people.

These laws divide them according to races; deny the majority freedom of movement, residence, ownership and education, and seek to keep the people in ignorance, poverty, and submission, a source of cheap and unskilled labour."

"The people will not become submissive slaves. The reply is to organize men and women, young and old, in a united fight against unjust laws and for security, peace, friendship and freedom. In these struggles our women have played an important part. During the Defiance Campaign, hundreds went to goal. some of them expectant mothers, some with their babies. These struggles have produced many leaders, have made us feel the need for an organization to embrace still wider sections of women and make them a great force in the struggle for freedom."

Mrs. Alexander spoke of the inspiring work done by the Women's International Democratic Federation in support of the fight of women all over the world for happiness and peace.

WHAT ALL WOMN SHOULD KNOW

THE WAY BUDGETS of many countries are crushing burdens. The people demand medical care, security for the future, but the resources of many countries are squandered on armaments, on the manufacture of atomic weapons, on military bases, and on the maintenance of foreign troops and atom bases on their soil, all in an insane race towards death.

Mrs. Dodson

IN HIS BUDGET MESSAGE to the United States Congress on the 21st of January, 1954, President Eisenhower stated: "The proposed 1955 expenditure for the atomic energy commission and for the Mutual Military Programme will be at the highest level since the initiation of the two programmes, and the budget provides greater expenditure for air power in the fiscal year 1955 than in any year since the close of the World War II. In the U. S. A. for 1954-55, 68 percent of the budget is to be spent for armament.

ON FEBRUARY 18, 1954 the British government published a white paper on defense, which declared: "We intend as soon as possible to build up in the Royal Air Force a force of modern bombers capable of using the atomic weapons to the fullest extent." The British government has allotted 1640 million pounds for arms expenditure.

IN 1953 FOR MILITARY PURPOSES, France spent 45 percent of her total budget, Italy 36 percent, Greece 80 percent, Yugoslavia 75 percent, Turkey 60 percent Japan 72 percent and for the West German budget for 1954, 88 per cent is to be allotted for rearmament and the upkeep of occupational troops.

ON JANUARY 24TH THE NEW map pin-pointing the United States Air Force Bases around the world. The total number is not known as many are secret, but there are believed to be well over 400. From all parts of Western Europe and Asia protests by the people are mounting against the occupation of their lands for the establishment of atomic bases that threaten the peace of the world.

Threats to use the bomb have become so frequent and numerous both by military leaders and in the Congress of the United States that the Secretary of Defense, Charles Wilson was forced to state on February 3rd, 1954: "I personally wish we would quit rattling the atom bomb like the old-fashioned sabre."

ON MARCH 10TH, 1954, General Gruenther, American Supreme Commander of N. A. T. O. said: "In the next three or four years, we will have the potential for launching an attack by long and short range aircraft, by guided missiles and by artillery. I am talking about atomic weapons."

In a special message to Mr. Dulles on April 13th, 1954, Dr. Adenauer of the West German Federal Republic proposed the hydrogen bombs be stockpiled in West Germany. This would put into the hands of the Nazis and war criminals in the heart of Europe, the terrible destructive power of the H-bomb.

ON MARCH 16TH, 1954, Sterling Cole, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, said that America has the hydrogen bomb and "we have planes that can carry any weapon we have to any part of the world." On the same day Mr. Dulles, the United States Secretary of State, declared that President Eisenhower had the authority, without consulting Congress or their allies to order instantaneous mass retaliation.

THE ATOM RATTLING, the atomic expenditure, the repetition of dangerous tests, which have brought suffering to the Japanese people and alarm to the world, is accompanied by a wave of hysteria and of war fever in the U. S. A. itself, and the worse victims are the children.

"THE IMAGINATION OF THE PEOPLE OF THE WORLD is captivated by the tremendous possibilities that the utilization of atomic energy could open up to peaceful purposes and for the increase of prosperity and progress in the world. Today we possess the power to transform the world.

We have the power to eliminate disease, to conquer our deserts and waste expanses of the world. New and powerful sources of energy can be put at the service of mankind. The wide-spread development of atomic processes can free men from hard and tiring labour.

Underground work can become a thing of the past and rationally organized agriculture and modern chemistry can produce everything needed by the population of the earth.

Federated CLUBS

On Monday, Dec. 6, at the Metropolitan Community church, 4100 South Parkway, the Chicago and Northern District Association of Colored Women, Inc. will hold its second quarterly meeting of the club's fiscal year — 1954-55, when reports from all officers - elected and appointed — will be heard by the officers and members of 70 clubs and the public at large. The public is cordially invited.

Mrs. Dodson

At the all-day meeting, beginning promptly at 9 a.m., Mesdames Estelle Howse, chaplain; Estelle Wright, chairman of religious training; and Gertrude Bell, chairman of music will open the morning session with a spirited devotional service. This is an enjoyable hour in which everyone participates, therefore, all are urged to come on time.

LATIN AMERICAN WOMEN UNITE IN NINE COUNTRIES

FOR THE FIRST TIME in the history of the continent (South America) the women of Latin America met in Rio de Janeiro (Brazil) in August of 1954 and organized a Latin American Women's Conference. There were 368 delegates present along wth hundreds of guests representing nine countries: Bolivia, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Uruguay, Paraguay.

Mrs. Dodson

All the delegates contributed to the discussion either at the main conference or in the commissions on the two items on the agenda —the rights of women and the defense of children. They also spoke on the question of democratic liberties and the necessity for the peoples of Latin America to LIBERATE THEMSELVES FROM FOREIGN INTERFERENCE, so that they would be able to use the wealth of their lands for the progress of their people, and to live in PEACE. The importance of this was emphasized by women of completely different races, nationalities, social backgrounds and political opinions.

MOVEMENT IS RESENTED

As was expected, the calling of such a conference caused considerable alarm among those who would like to keep the Latin American people in a state of servitude and poverty. They did not prohibit the conference; they could not go that far; but they put every possible obstacle in its way, mobilizing a press campaign against it and refusing visas. They even went to the length of sending forged letters and telegrams announcing that the conference was called off.

In spite of these obstacles, and in spite of the immense organizational problem of holding a conference of women coming from all over such a vast continent, the conference of Latim American Women was a big success. The problems discussed and the important resolutions adopted, aroused great enthusiasm among the women who attended. They felt that they were taking a part in an event which might be called historic in the life of Latin American women.

This conference was greeted in the name of the Women's International Democratic Federation by Mrs. Maria-Maddalene Rossi, president of the Union of Italian Women, and clearly showed the development which has already been made in the women's movements of Latin America and the immense possibilities open to them.

The delegates pledged to undertake a vast campaign in their respective countries, to make known the work of the conference and to unite all women around its demands. It was also decided to call a second conference, at which time they would report their new experiences and new victories.

The Conference of Latin American Women, realizing the need to strengthen the unity of the women of Latin America, who are rising to defend the rights of women and those of their children, recommended: First, that every year August 27 to 31 be celebrated as an anniversary of this historic conference through cultural activities and radio and press publicity; Second, that greetings be exchanged between those countries that have taken part in it, and supported it and among those who will adopt the principles approved by this conference, as the first step toward FRATERNIZATION of the women of Latin America.

Since September 6, the Women's International Democratic Federation has been broadcasting a radio program every Monday in French, German, English and Spanish. This programme reflects the development of the women's movements throughout the world and gives information on the living conditions of women and on their activities in defense of their rights, their homes, their children and PEACE.

Women are beginning to realize that: One woman is USEFUL, one hundred women are FORCEFUL, one thousand women are POWERFUL, and one million women (UNITED) are INVINCIBLE. More power to them.

AFRICAN WOMEN ARISE THAT THEY MAY LIVE

Throughout the whole of Africa women are rising up together with the men, to fight for a life of human dignity, for progesss, for a future for their children, for democratic liberties and respect for their people's rights to liberty and national independence.

ORGANIZED WHITE WOMEN OF THE WORLD ARE HELPING THEM.

Mrs. Dodson

The women of the world have heard of bloody events in Kenya with horror and indignation. Having seized the best land from which they chased the rightful owners, the settlers and British Administrators are exploiting the men and women in real SLAVE conditions and mean to prevent any form of democratic life.

One by one the trade unions and the national movements are being banned or are subjected to restrictions tantamount to banning. However, 400,000 signatures were collected to a petition protesting against the seizure of land.

Meetings of tens of thousands of people demanded political rights and decent living conditions. And the Kikuyu people, who are the most numerous of the peoples in Kenya, were able to organize an educational association giving lessons to 62,000 children.

The British government decided to intervene; great publicity was given to the so-called crimes of the Mau-Mau, and police action was taken.

The women of Kenya addressed a pitiful petition to the Queen of England. "Our children", they said, suffer from hunger because our cattle have been confiscated as well as our sheep and our goats and our other property, as 'collective punishment'.

"The government of Kenya has closed down our independent schools".

They demand that a commission of inquiry be set up to investigate "the very serious and unjust situation which is existing in Kenya."

But British troops and British planes were sent to Kenya, and according to official information alone, in two months, May and June of 1953 183 air raids were made, 1096 bombs were dropped ammunition were fired.

A message sent in September to the Kenya Defense Committee in London Dodson states: "The houses of those who leave home, for fear of death or of CASTRATION, are burnt down; many with children inside . . .It tells of the tortures inflicted on women to force them to agree that they have taken the Mau-Mau oath.

Boiling water is poured on their breasts until the skin comes off, then the women are left lying there.

"In some villages the population has been completely wiped out. The list of tortures by terror and hunger is inexhaustible— whole populations are being eterminated, others are being forced into camps, or driven into the reserve after they had all their cattle taken from them, often their only means of keeping alive.

A letter sent by a group of Ki-Kuyu people states: "Young Europeans in the police reserve and in the Kenya regiment go to the reserve and arrest people there, taking them at night to the forests, which by Govenment regulations are prohibited areas.

There they handcuff them together, shoot them and leave their bodies as PROOF that they were TERRORISTS.

This exgenious method of extermination creates great confusion among the Kenyu people. They are afraid to sleep in their huts and spend the nights in the gardens or in the bush near their homes, which is even worse.

"For if they are NOT found at home at night they are said to have gone to a Mau-Mau oath taking. Anyone found hiding at night is shot indiscriminately, even women and children.

"The whole country is living in a terrible state of fear, like animals in a bag. There is great danger, there is great fear, there is great sorrow because it has been discovered that the aim is to exterminate the KIKUYU NATION.

Women of the world support the women of Kenya in their struggle and even in GREAT BRITAIN demonstrations have taken place demanding an end to the MASSACRE.

Women are demanding that the United Nations Organizations intervene in favor of the people of Kenya, so that they can enjoy the democratic rights and the elementary liberty provided for in the CHARTER of the UNO. DOES THIS CONDITION LOOK AS IF GREAT BRITAIN WANTS PEACE IN THE WORLD?

NATIVE AFRICAN WOMEN ENTER FIGHT FOR LIFE

Women all over the world, women's organizations are working with all their energy to support the fight of the African women, through articles in the Press, meetings, demonstrations, delegations, protests, letters and telegrams.

Mrs. Dodson

All women, all people of the colonising countries who condemn the acts of their governments and the crimes committed in their names are urged to intervene to put an end to the repression and terror, so that the rights of the peoples as individuals and as nations shall be respected.

The fight of the people of Africa, is the fight of all the peoples of the world. The women of the whole world must express their solidarity with them. Everywhere the peoples are rising and intensifying the fight to enable men, women and children of the whole earth to attain PROGRESS, HAPPINESS, LIBERTY and PEACE.

The peoples of Africa, nearly 200,000,000 human beings ACCUSE the colonial powers and financial interest that are opposing their march toward progress prosperity and liberty.

We are told that Africa is an immense "reserve of men and raw materials which the Western Powers cannot do without," wrote the French newspaper, Le Monde. on September 2, 1951.

"The role of the Dark Continent in another world war will be even greater than it was during the last two wars. This refers to stragetic deployment in the with- uranium) and the mines in Morocco, the Congo, Rhodesia and South Africa. It aslo refers to the press-ganging of men in Africa to support the foreign intervention in Korea and Viet-Nam.

The same newspaper in June of 1952 drew attention to "the stagetic deployment in the withdrawal of an important sector of the British military disposition which. . . resumed a firm position in Kenya. . . " while on November 6, 1953, the American Secretary of State, Mr. Byroade (in charge of Near Eastern South Asian and African affairs) expressed the great interest of the United States in this continent. "North Africa," he said, "is an important region from an economic point of view and from a strategic point of view.

"In addition there are American air bases in Morocco which have great strategic value in the protection not only of Africa but also of Western Europe. This is why North Africa interests us directly."

All these facts and plans, which they refer to, mean more exploitation and more misery for the African population and repression is spreading geographically — strategically one may say.

However, the aims and principles of the UNO charter signed by colonial powers are: "to develop friendly relations among nations based on respect for the principle of EQUAL RIGHTS and self-determination of peoples."

It might be well for the UNO to assume the task encumbent upon it, and in particular to demand that the colonial powers, members of the UNO, desist from repression and terrorisation and begin to respect the rights of the peoples.

Women all over the world must be told what is happening in Africa. They must be shown the justice of the struggle of these people acting with such courage and sacrifice in their fight for a [illegible] life. They must be shown that in their struggle, the people of Africa are ALSO FIGHTING IN DEFENSE OF WORLD PEACE.

"WHITE SUPREMACY" is the means employed in South Africa to maintain the supremacy of the white man's interest. This is proved by the fact that African Africans and Indians, but also the progressive Europeans.

These measures not only hit the Native Africans and Indians, but also the progressive Europeans.

AFRICA STRETCHES FORTH HER HAND FOR HELP—ALSO

The United States has poured billions of dollars and commodities into Europe and Asia and is still doing so, but what has it done for Africa?

Mrs. Taylor

Let us see some reasons why she too needs help.

Africa is a source of untold riches. She has a population of nearly 200 million people. Everyone knows of the vast natural wealth of this continent. From its soil and from the labor of its people comes the gold, diamonds, iron, copper, tin, phosphates, precious woods, cotton, bananas, palm oil, cocoa, wheat, wine, oranges, olives and olive oil, ground nuts and the oil they produce and spices; as well as, a host of other industrial agricultural raw materials to say nothing of that most coveted metal-uranium.

It is estimated today that Africa produces nearly 95 per cent of the world uranium, 80 per cent of its gold, 80 per cent of its cobalt, 50 per cent of its cocoa (on the Gold Coast and in Nigeria).

Many of the natural resources of this country are still unexploited; water power, iron ore, bauxite, coal lignite, etc. This could be a flourishing country. The people could live happily and in plenty . . . but all they know is terrible POVERTY: Because they have a RIGHT TO LIVE and because they want to defend their children, the WOMEN OF AFRICA are entering the struggle.

According to the calculations of the United Nations the 24 African countries for which figures are available, we find that 5 have less than one doctor per 50,000 inhabitants; 12 have one doctor between 10,000; 4 have one doctor between 5,000 and 10,000 and 3 have one doctor between 2,000 and 5,000 inhabitants.

There is no single African country numbered among the 23 countries of the world in this respect, which have less than 2,000 inhabitants per doctor. Even these statistics flatter the real position of the African people, since many of the doctors serve only EUROPEANS.

HOW DO THESE PEOPLE LIVE?

The enormous African continent can only be reached via ports. Ships come and go . . . What do they bring? What do they carry away? We need only look at some of the territories where the population is declining to get a typical picture of the living conditions in Africa, "Equitorial Africa is dying before our very eyes" says an official French report. "It is high time for the public authorities to pay some attention to it." In less than fifty years the number of inhabitants has decreased by half. But dry statistics and official statements hide the untold sufferings of people who live under the tragic circumstances of COLONIAL RULE.

Infant mortality in Africa is among the highest in the world. On the Ivory Coast, in Togoland and in Guinea it is as high as 33 per cent for the first two years of life. In South Africa the figure for African children is always over 15 percent in certain regions is 40 percent to 60 percent. In Tunis and Egypt it is not unusual for a mother to have born 8 or 10 children, but to have only one or even none at all living.

Dr. Jellife, senior director of medicine at University College of Ibandan, Nigeria, writes: "Evidence from all areas of Trans-Sahara Africa has shown that the new-born African baby is underweight and physiologically immature. There seems little doubt that this is primarily due to maternal malnutrition."

In North Africa it is an actual fact that the mothers and children are forced to work with the father for his wage alone. Throughout Central Africa women work under the tropical sun or in deluges of rain with their children on their backs.

They work on the tea plantations, in the cotton fields and on road building; they work as carriers walking for tens of miles. The payments of rates and taxes demanded in coin forces the workers, particularly women, to take work at any price so that they can make the payment. Thus the colonialists and the administration are supplied with abundant cheap labor.

A United Nations report on Africa throws a glaring light on the reasons for maintaining excessively low wages, it says "The export industries are based on cheap labor which enables them to compete on the world market." In 1950 British colonial profits rose to 10 million sterling.

The children in Dades Valley in Morocco eat earth, and infant mortality rates have reached 75 percent. There are no schools for the vast majority of children . . . Readers, are you interested in Africa?

EQUAL SCHOOLS FOR NEGROES

It has been a long time a-coming but it is here at last—the unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court—'Segregation because of race in the publicly-supported schools of the United States is UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND, SEGREGATED PUBLIC SCHOOLS ARE NOT EQUAL AND CAN NOT BE MADE EQUAL," for, segregation deprives the plaintiffs of the equal protection under the 14th Amendment to the United States Constitution.

Mrs. Dodson

Some years ago I was released from the public school system of Savannah, Ga., where I had made a creditable record as a teacher and loaned for two years to the Georgia State Department of Education as a state supervisor of elementary education in rural public schools. I worked under the direction of Walter B. Hill, Supervisor of Negro Education for the state.

My territory covered the southern half of Georgia and my records show that I visited 60 counties, spending usually a week in each, holding institutes for teachers, checking school houses, selling the idea of better schools for Negro children to their parents, and contacting the outstanding citizens, white and colored, the county supervisors and county boards of education.

The state department and the Rosenwald Fund furnished financial aid and the late Henry Hunt of Fort Valley, Ga., and Joseph W. Holly, president of the Albany State College assisted,—in that—I worked out from their schools as an extention worker. My job was to "Beat the Bushes", awaken the Negroes as to their needs and opportunities ,and secure the interest and friendship as well as support of county officials, local citizens black and white.

Two years at this facinating task brought wonderful results which stand out in the educational fields of rural Georgia today. Money raised by the Negro and white citizens, the county and the Rosenwald Fund established whatever decent schools Negroes have in rural Georgia. Sometimes the whites would get a new school and turn over their old one to Negroes. Lodge halls and churches allowed the public schools to be held in them. The salary paid teachers was less than a scrub woman gets today for a day's work.

It is a long story but an interesting one. I have not sufficient space to present many true instances but many of my readers can bear witness to the truth of these statements because of their own experience in the South. How men in authority, in positions of honor, governors, members of the Senate and House can lie as they do about the equality of schools for blacks, it is no wonder that other nations and races have no respect for the word of the United States of America.

Mr. Hill, my supervisor, made my itinerary but I was privileged to add or eliminate as I saw fit. I remember being sent to Ashburn, Ga. At the court house I met the county superintendent and told him my story. I asked about the public schools for Negroes. He said, "I'll tell you the truth, I don't know much about the Nigger schools but I'll put you in the hands of my wife (she was the white supervisor) and Ellen (who was the Negro supervisor): They will tell you all about it and whatever they say is all right."

One day I walked into an old lodge hall in Abbyville, Ga. The public school was held there. To my great surprise the teacher was nursing her baby and teaching at the same time. There were a half dozen long switches beside her. She did have perfect order. Her pay was $18.00 per month.

A male teacher invited me to Whigham, Ga. The school house, a one room affair was propped up on one side with small trees. They rang the town bell at the court house. I was truly frightened when instead of seeing colored men and women entering the room, a large number of white men and boys came running up the steps and made up my audience. I was prepared to talk to colored people but I had to change quickly. Believe me, I silently prayed and asked God to put the proper words in my mouth.

At that time Negroes were leaving the South on every train and the whites were afraid all Negroes would leave. I used this as my theme and after I got started I warmed up to the subject and my audience enjoyed what I said. When I got through I had the promises of trees, hauling planeing lumber, bricks, and everything needed for a new school house.

I'll have to stop now but go to Vienna, Ga., Senator George's home; go to Cuthbert, Ga., where Fletcher Henderson lived and Nashville, Ga., Fitzgerald, and other towns and see the brick school h Georgia and get t the efforts that I about. they were n educational funds of

WHAT OTHER RULIN THE SUPREME COURT REN DER? WHAT KIND OF DEMOCRACY DOES THE SOUTH WANT? IT HAS KEPT ITSELF DOWN BECAUSE OF ITS TREATMENT OF THE NEGRO.

MAKING DEMOCRACY WORK

Robert Sengstacke Abbott founder and publisher of The Chicago Defender, dreamed that democracy could and should work, and he did something about it. In the masthead of his paper he continually preached that democracy could and must work, and he lived to see much of it come true. We who survive him have seen and shall see much more especially, if we take a hand in making it work. To his memory.

Mrs. Dodson

They called him a dreamer, to whom their father gave a coat of many colors, and for his dreams they mocked him and planned his ruin; but when through time and change and chastenings sore, they awoke to truth and found their plans in ruins and his dreams come true, in deep remorse and humbleness of heart, they marvelled, knew his grace, rejoiced and shared his glory; and they and all their house were saved alive—BECAUSE HE DREAMED.

Today, as then, the scoffers call him dreamer who dares to look beyond and sees what is and what could be, and nursing a spark of faith says in his heart—IT SHALL BE—.They call him dreamer and bid him stand aside; but when, through days of toil and nights of hope and disappointment he brings to pass the thing he dreamed—they turn and with belated cheers proclaim him great; and they and all mankind know better days—BECAUSE HE DREAMED Thank God for dreamers! Thank God for dreams! Thank God for Robert Sengstacke Abbott!

Robert Sengstacke Abbott died February 29, 1940. In the 14 years that have passed since then, great changes have taken place but the clarion voice of Robert Sengstacke Abbott will continue to ring down through the ages telling his people to awake to their advantages, work for promotion, become prepared to accept opportunities when they open, travel and know the world and its peoples, learn another language beside their mother tongue.

He urges them to stop pitying themselves and in the language of Bill Dawson 'Don't get mad, get wise', remember they are a great part of the largest group of human beings on earth—COLORED PEOPLE. He cites them that nations, races and individuals rise and fall as they forget God and His commandments: 'Love the Lord' and love thy neighbor as thyself' for upon these two rests the law and the prophet.'

MAKING DEMOCRACY WORK —IT MUST WORK AND THE AMERICAN NEGRO MUST DO HIS PART IN MAKING IT WORK . . .else how can he expect to enjoy it? A revolution is already upon us. The technological changes, already wrought in human life and already penetrating our daily lives are more radical in their implications than any of the changes suggested by economic radicals of whatever type including socialism and communism.

No form of theory has suggested such fundamental alterations in ways of life. The reality of these revolutionary changes are shouting to us in brazen tongues and pressing upon us with tempestuous force. We cannot choose whether we shall retain our old ways of social organization; the changes are already here, good or bad, as we may view them, and they will continue to come.

Instability has fallen upon our modern world through drift and indifference. The problem of the modern world is to find its way out of instability and insecurity into a world where change goes on, but with equilibrium in the moving forces. It is not the speed that produces the danger, but the lack of synchronization of the parts in the moving machine.

The problem of the future is the problem of SOCIAL ENGINEERING which will call for the highest talents of any race. Democracy calls for a new orientation possible and directed toward a future characterized by rapid social and political change toward invention, adaptation and readjustment.

In the world of government this involves a change from control by tradition and taboo to control by DESIGN, PURPOSE and PLAN to a situation in which government is dominated by the spirit of science and animated by values growing out of the new world of discovery and invention.

This is the central point in the new form of democratic, civic education which towers above all minor changes and adjustments of programs, and courses curriculums and readings and this will determine and condition them every step of the way.

This is not a line or direction which will invoke or require the surrender of the value of human experience; but it will emphatically call for the abandonment of the BLIND WORSHIP of the PAST, and will look to the utilization of experience for remolding the future and the present. In this way DEMOCRACY WILL WORK FOR ALL AMERICANS.

WOMEN OF AMERICA ARE "ASLEEP AT THE SWITCH"

By REBECCA STILES DODSON

IN A RELEASE of the Women's Committee for "Equal Justice", and a letter from Mrs. Mary Church Terrell of 1615 "S" street, N.W., Washington, D.C., who led the delegation, we have learned that representatives from Philadelphia, New York, North Carolina and other points visited Attorney General of the United States of America, Herbert Brownell's department of justice in the nation's capital Saturday, Feb. 27.

Mrs. Dodson

They placed before the Civil Rights Division the evidence of violation of that courageous colored women, Mrs. Rosa Lee Ingram of Georgia.

Mrs. Terrell says: "We were well received but they could do NOTHING, so they said. THE STATURE OF LIMITATION HAD RUN ITS COURSE." More than three years had lapsed since the conviction of this woman, FRAMED because she defended her honor and the HONOR OF AMERICAN WOMANHOOD; convicted only through the gross violation of her CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS. Her government now says it cannot intervene to end this infamous life sentence because already she has spent TOO MANY YEARS IN JAIL. WE WAITED TOO LONG TO CALL UPON IT.

"Why is the government not watching the persecution of colored men and women? Could there be a more colossal fraud! The formal letter of the law is used as a barrier to prevent our securing the justice which all decency demands should be accorded this heroic woman WITHOUT our INSISTENCE.

Continuing the story Mrs. Terrell writes, "We told Mr. Caldwell, head of the department, that some of us had been to Georgia to see the Governor. Just before the turn of the new year I had led a large PRAYER CRUSADE for JUSTICE to Georgia. Governor Talmadge referred us to his Board of Pardons and Paroles He did not have jurisdiction! "The new law of 1945 had transferred jurisdiction where paroles and pardons are concerned, and are to be considered, into the hands of a board,' he said. 'Here again was SUBTERFUGE and the passing OF THE BUCK. This is the situation we are now up against in state and nation."

MOTHER OF THE YEAR

The Women's Committee for Equal Justice will seek to have this colored woman, Rosa Lee Ingram, now incarcerate din a Georgia prison at Reidsville, named the MOTHER OF THE YEAR. She deserves the honored consideration from progressive mankind, and especially from thinking women. The FREEDOM of this mother of fourteen children must be secured. This objective can be realized NOW, if we give CONTINUITY, greater CLARITY and STRENGTH to the fight.

Editor's Notes: Are you interested in the case of Rosa Lee Ingram? If so, contact the Women's Committee for Equal Justice, 6 East 17th st., New York City.

NANNIE BURROUGHS URGES HELP FOR CHURCH WOMEN

By REBECCA STILES DODSON

In her wonderful quarterly journal for the first three months of 1954, Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, president of the woman's convention, Auxiliary to the National Baptist Convention, Inc., pens a timely and provocative editorial entitled "HELP THOSE WOMEN."

Mrs. Dodson

The article is addressed to the Baptist in particular but this columnist is so much in accord with it that she wants to help get it across to the reading public, so that, in turn, it will reach all denominations, all churches, all club women and all people everywhere.

It could be the forerunner of a bloodless revolution in the churches—man-controlled as they are—but a bit of blood-letting will do them good and clear away many ancient customs and traditions (and imperialistic discriminatory laws) that are now stumbling blocks in the way of the progress of God's church. Therefore, read and carefully consider the wisdom advanced and lend a hand to spreading the gospel of TRUTH in a confused world.

"HELP THOSE WOMEN"

Negro church women are carrying most of the load of their churches. Without their faithful services and sacrificial gifts, the average Negro church would have to close its doors, But, the churches would get even more support if they would do more for the people who are actually carrying the load. Furthermore, the churches would get much better results if the women were encouraged to take training, regularly.

It would be more profitable to the churches to invest something in the training of the women who are already engaged in the service than to take a chance on WAITING FOR YOUNG PEOPLE WHO ARE NOW IN SCHOOL. Nine-tenths of them will come out and go about their business.

Furthermore, there are not 150 Negro women in all our high schools and colleges — put together — even thinking of preparing to enter the field of Christian service. The church had better do something definite to build up the women who are now on the jobs by special training, than to wait for the unenlisted.

Negro church women should be given larger opportunity for developement. Of course Many can not stay away from their homes, their children, or their employment long enough to take regular courses. For such earnest, promising women — as we can find — we propose that the Woman's Convention begin a campaign for carrying out the order given in II Timothy 2:15. Church organizations would make the desire to STUDY and to KNOW CONTAGIOUS.

The contagion will spread if the program is properly presented and directed. The great literacy campaign in Africa caught fire because preachers, teachers and Christian leaders made ignorance of the word of God UNPOPULAR. Those who aspire for leadership want to know HOW.

If well-planned the properly directed institutes are given a fair trial they will not only give something brand new in education, but they will give our church women a brand new outlook on the various fields of service and they will give our churches real leaven in the lump.

There is no question what Negro Baptist can do if they catch the vision and decide to unite in a mighty crusade to help those women who are already laboring with the churches as best they can in the gospel. Their present best can be made much better.

The call is to women across the nation. STUDY, KNOW, and DO the will of GOD IN KINGDOM BUILDING! "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed" is God's order—not man's. Ashamed? Yes, ashamed! If the leader who does not know and is not trying to learn is NOT ASHAMED of her satisfied ignorance, the people whom she tries to lead are ashamed of her.

The need for better prepared leaders is so great that our churches cannot attract and hold young people unless we can provide more qualified persons for Missionary leadership and for our Sunday Schools and other organizations of the churches. Too many people in our churches lack the actual basic five point requirements for leadership.

The person entering the field of leaderships service should know WHAT, WHY, HOW, WITH WHOM and FOR WHOM. The answer to these five questions must be clear and constructive In this day of opportunities for learning, any would-be leader should be ashamed NOT TO KNOW.

STUDY is the basic requirements. The future of our churches depends upon whether we can actually challenge our church people to be done with "satisfied ignorance". Keep this fact in mind— the Bible puts a premium on studying and knowing. It is therefore, our bounded duty to obey God and get light by which to walk and lead.

WOMEN WANT TO LIVE

Women of the world are against the use of the BOMB. All over the world they are demanding the prohibition of atomic weapons. The women of the United States are less articulate in their demands than all women elsewhere.

Mrs. Dodson

The world-renowned scientist, Prof. Albert Einstein has repeatedly given his great name to demands for the banning of the bomb, and has warned: "In the development of the atomic weapons and hydrogen bombs there lies at the end and more and more clearly general annihilation."

The World Peace Council — March 1954 stated that "It was not to wipe man from the face of the earth, not to shatter in an instant the fruits of his thousands of years of creative labour that these tremendous forces were discovered by science, but rather to find means to relieve his present miseries and help him to achieve a fuller life."

The American physicist Dr. Hans Bethe of Cornell University, U. S. A., warned that "We should lose much more than our lives in a war waged with hyrdogen bombs, we should lose all human values and freedoms at the same time, so completely would they be lost, that we should not be able to recover them for an indefinite period."

The International Federation of Scientific Workers, in a resolution passed on Sept. 14, 1953, demanded that humanity, "must not allow the new possibilities that science offers to be used for destruction" and suggested that the first step toward the banning of weapons of mass destruction was taken when a majority of the great powers ratified the Geneva Protocol of June 17, 1925, prohibiting the use of biological weapons."

Expressing the great mass of opinion as early as 1950, Prof. Kathleen Lonsdale of the University of London and vice chairman of the scientists' association, wrote in a letter to the London Times in December, 1950: "I can not imagine that the God of the New Testament could bless the deliberate blasting, burning and blinding of children, however misguided or mistaken.

THE WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES DECLARED:

"The hydrogen bomb is a perversion and a negation of moral standards to which man is bound, IT IS A SIN AGAINST GOD. The hydrogen bomb marks the latest and most terrible step in the increasingly rapid transformation of war, formerly a battle between men and nations, into a mass slaughter of human lives. We representatives of the Christian church call urgently for a new and unprecedented effort to insure peace."

Dr. Donald Soper, president of the Methodist Conference and a leader of a million British Methodists, issued an appeal to all Christians following the Bikini hydrogen bomb test, saying: "I appeal to Christians everywhere to demand of their governments that whatever the cost and whatever the dangers, such weapons should be entirely outlawed.

WOMEN WANT TO LIVE

In Stockholm, Sweden, the World Defenders of Peace launched an appeal to the peoples of the world which declared: "We demand the total banning of atomic weapons, arm of terror and mass extermination of populations. We demand the establishment of strict international control to ensure the implementation of this banning.

"We consider that any government which would be the first to use the atomic weapon against any country whatsoever would be committing a crime against humanity and should be dealt with as a war criminal. We call on all men of good will to sign this appeal." The Women's International Democratic Federation, on behalf of tens of millions of women throughout the world gave full support to the campaign.

In a special appeal to women, the executive committee of the W.I.D.F. assembled at Helsinki Finland, called upon all women to collect signatures to the Stockholm appeal in each factory, each village, each street, each house and each family.

The response was overwhelming and 500,000,000 signatures were collected for banning atomic weapons. Women are urged to raise your voices in your organizations and with your neighbor — ACT FOR YOUR CHILDREN'S SAKE ACT FOR HUMANITY'S SAKE — so that the world may live.

Better keep your eyes on Congress

Baltimore, Md.

NOW THAT echoes from all of the election babble have about died, this reporter feels safe to discuss some of the issues facing the 84th Congress without fear of being accused of partisan politics.

Mrs. Dunnigan

Although the representatives in both the Senate and the House have already been chosen, the voter still has very definite responsibilities. The citizen's task now is to familiarize himself with current issues and to keep his eyes on Congress to see how his representative votes on each issue.

Just a couple of months prior to the election, the Americans for Democratic Action published a 250-page book on "Politics in 1954," which analyzed 14 major issues facing the nation today.

THE PURPOSE of this book was to place squarely on the line an authoritative analysis of the current issues so that they might be used as a yardstick in evaluating the candidates up for election.

Now that the election is over they might still be used as a meter to measure the record of the man, or woman, whom you sent to Washington to represent you.

Of the 14 topics discussed in this book by as many outstanding liberals in this country, the one which interests us most was that of "Civil Rights," analyzed by Cong. Charles R. Howell of New Jersey.

Rep. Howell began his discussion by stating that civil rights for the first time since the Civil War ceased to be an issue between the Democratic and Republican parties in 1948 when the Democratic National Convention wrote into its platform that famous civil rights plank. Since that time this issue has been between the liberals and conservatives.

HE DEFINED civil rights as "personal, political, and economic rights guaranteed under the Constitution and the law, and implicit in the democratic way of life; the right of every individual to participate freely in our democratic society without discrimination or restraint imposed on him by reason of his race, religion or ancestry."

He recalled that civil rights as a political issue revolves around legislative and administrative action to insure that these rights are made secure in practice as they are accepted in concept.

The civil rights measures currently under consideration before the legislature deals with four subjects:

(1) Fair employement practices, designed to prevent discrimination in employement on grounds of race, color, creed, or national orgin.

(2) Anti-poll tax legislation to prohibit the use of state poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting for federal officers;

(3) Anti-lynching legislation, to place penalties on cities and counties, as well as individuals responsible for lynchings; and

(4) Anti-discrimination or segregation legislation, to effectively bar these illegal practices in interstate transportation.

IF AND when these issues come up in the new Congress, keep your eyes on your senator's vote and put him to the task on the cloture issue, which must necessarily be invoked before any civil rights issues can be brought to the floor for action.

Civil Rights has passed in the House from time to time, but it, too, has its rules problem, centering around the powerful Rules Committee which can bottle up legislation that it does not wish to go to the floor.

Watch your representative's vote on these issues in the House, and see if he has the courage to sign a petition to bring such bills to a vote in case they are bottled up in this "watch dog" committee.

The writer of this chapter warned against booby traps in civil rights legislation. This is often done by attaching anti-discrimination amendments to welfare measures such as health or housing bills.

Sometimes this is done by a legislator who wishes to impress his constituents that he is in favor of civil rights and sometimes it is done as a means of killing the entire piece of legislation.

BEWARE OF advocates of "toothless civil rights bills," wrote the Congressman. That is the person who affirms certain rights as a matter of public policy, but carefully avoids including enforcement provisions.

Public policy is pretty clear, but enforceable legislation is needed on these issues to guarantee certain rights in the Federal Courts.

The toothless measures might accomplish something along the lines of education, conciliation and persuasion, but these steps can only be accomplished successfully if the necessary enforcement powers are in compulsion to be used on those who are determined to resist compliance with the law.

This writer feels hopeful of the outcome of these issues in the new congress because the progress toward achievement along these lines has been steadily gaining speed.

The setbacks have been few and momentary because the American ideals will prevail.

But the voters must push them by constantly prodding their representatives in congress who must necessarily take the proper action to make them effective.

All about that Jones boys mixup

"THE WHOLE TOWN'S talking about the Jones Boy," or so used to sing Eddie Fisher on almost every disc jocky program, but the little ditty really came to life around Washington a little while ago. Everybody was actually the Jones boys, especially around in the foreign service circles.

Mrs. Dunnigan

While nobody was actually able to get the true, straight - forward story it seems that the Jones boys' mixup was due to GOP appointments of two brothers from Chicago to foreign service posts. Both were assigned to serve in Liberia under the Foreign Operations Administration.

One Jones brother, or so the story goes, refused to serve in a foreign country under the supervision of his own brother.

So FOA officials didn't know what to do with the latter brother; therefore, they permitted him to sort of float around the administration until they could find a place for him.

Pro American

HE HAD finished his orientation and completed the necessary medical treatment and shots approximately six months ago — now he was all ready for foreign service and had nowhere to go.

P-4

Those who frequent the building which houses the FOA said it was not unusual to see George Maceo Jones just wondering around the corridors and spending his time chatting with anyone he happened to meet.

But now the "mix-up" is apparently straightened out and both brothers will soon be settled in their foreign posts.

Richard (Dick) Jones will be in Liberia as a technical advisor under the old Point-4 program, while George Maceo Jones will soon leave for India to serve as an advisor on the housing program.

Baltimore

A NUMBER of colored persons are now being appointed to foreign posts, but try and get the information, if you will, from the Foreign Operations Administration, and you will come up with a complete blank.

After spending an entire afternoon and being shifted to at least a dozen people trying to get a bit of information on two or three appointees, this columnist came up with exactly zero.

It is known, however, that Miss Ruth H. Richardson of Washington has gone to Liberia to serve as a public health nurse in the health mission.

Miss Patsy Graves is scheduled to leave Saturday for India where she will work as a home economist and Miss Gwendolyn Fowler of Des Moines, Iowa, is taking orientation for some type of appointment — where or what could not be learned.

"What's the reason for all the secrecy at the Foreign Operations Administration? Well your guess is as good as mine.

Could it be possible that the United States Government is trying to impress foreign countries of its democracy by giving colored citizens diplomatic appointments and at the same time trying to keep reactionary Dixiecrats from knowing that the darker Americans are being assigned to decent foreign service jobs?

Pat. 12-4-54

"JUST TELL 'EM we're rising!" is the often quoted phrase once uttered by one of our early statesmen, but it might well be applied to our status in Government today.

The new Congress which convenes in January will have three colored representatives. The latest addition will be Congressman Charles C. Diggs Jr., Democrat of Michigan.

And one of the most important men in the 84th Congress will be Rep. William L. Dawson, Democrat of Illinois. Congressman Dawson will head the committee assigned to investigate Government operations.

This committee in the House of Representatives has the same responsibility which Senator McCarthy's committee has in the Senate. It is believed that Dawson will not concentrate on communism but will study inefficiency in Government, exactly what McCarthy is supposed to do.

WITH THE Democrats being in majority, Mrs. Christine Davis will again assume the position of majority clerk in the House Committee on Government Operations, a job which carries a salary near the $10,000 mark.

Congressman Dawson will perhaps have a young lawyer as a secretary during the incoming year. His very reliable secretary Miss Leah Brock, who has served him so efficiently for the past few years, has just completed her law course at the Georgetown Law School, being the first woman of color to receive this honor.

Congressman Adam Clayton Powell's secretary, Mrs. Maxienne Dargins -Fleming, has just been released from the hospital where she underwent surgery. She is reported doing nicely and is expected to be in top physical condition when the new Congress convenes.

Congressman Powell, himself, will be in the best of health also since he has recently undergone a physical check - up at Bethesda Hospital.

Assistant Secretary of Labor J. Ernest Wilkins just returned Tuesday from a 10 - day trip to Rome, Italy, where he represented his government at the meeting of the governing body of the International Labor Organization.

Are these not indication "we're rising?"

Jim crow on death bed in Washington

COMMISSIONER Samuel Spencer reported last week that recent integration in the fire department in the District of Columia marked the end of practically all segregation within the D.C. government.

He listed a few places, however, where integration is not complete. Among them were Lorton reformatory, the workhouse at Occoquan and the D.C. Village for the aged and infirm at Blue Plains.

Integration in the fire department got off to a sort of rough start with white firemen reportedly administering the "silent treatment" to the colored men shifted to their companies.

— o O o —

OFFICIALS BELIEVE from the beginning that this aloofness was nothing so serious that a good hot fire couldn't cure.

The local NAACP branch, however, is not pleased with segregated boys' clubs in the District. Eugene Davidson let the association's disapproval be known through letters to Leon Chatelain Jr., president, board of directors, Metropolitan Boys' club and to the District commissioners.

Integration in the public schools has worked so well that the superintendent has initiated a "speed - up" program permitting students of all grade levels to transfer to schools nearest their homes immediately, if they so desire.

— o O o —

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER was so pleased with the smoothness in which the school integration program got under way that he sent a note to commissioner Spencer expressing his delight in knowing how well this plan for "mixed classes and faculties" had worked out.

The commissioner has kept the President informed, in Denver where he is vacationing, on the progress of integration.

This columnist had predicted that the President would be pleased at the conduct of Washington in accepting integration. She got a slight raking "over the coals," however, for making such statement.

An unsigned letter sent to this reporter "pooh - poohed" the statement in a recent column that the President would be pleased to know how integration actually worked out.

— o O o —

"WE HAD TO smile at that remark," the writer stated, "because all informed know the court and the President were really off on a political binge when they decided to appease the NAACP and force colored pupils in white schools where definitely (they are) not welcome."

The letter went on to state that they did not see "President and Mrs. Eisenhower's grandchildren, Vice President Nixon's children, Secretary Brownell's children or Chief Justice Warren's frolicking about in colored schools or playgrounds. Nor Mrs. Roosevelt's (great advocate of equality, etc., etc.) 18 grandchildren, two great grandchildren about with "colored children."

The anonymous writer expressed bitterness about the whole business of integration in the schools, restaurants and theaters, but he (or she) was kind enough to praise achievements of Ralph Bunche, Walter White, Thurgood Marshall, Nabrit and Hill. These men have good legal minds, the writer said, but they were trained in colored schools.

— o O o —

WHILE THIS columnist believes that every individual should have the right to speak his own mind, and every organization should establish its own policy, still she cannot agree with the anonymous letter-writer or any other person or group, whether white or colored, who insists on hanging on to that outdated custom of segregation.

That's why it was hard for her to understand why the Federation of Civic associations so vigorously opposed the proposal to merge with the Federation of Citizens associations.

It was reported that when the American Veterans committee last week proposed that the two groups merge "for the betterment of the city," both the president, Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, and former president, Woolsey Hall, voiced strong objections.

Paul Cooke, chairman, Washington AVC chapter and teacher at Miner's Teachers college, felt a merger of the two bodies would "end separateness" and exercise leadership as representatives of the community, instead of particular races.

— o O o —

IF INTEGRATION is to work successfully, it must have the support from both sides, our people must be as unprejudiced and unbiased against other races as they hope others to be against them.

The Americans for Democratic action held its 8th annual garden party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Victor G. Reuther, Saturday. The party was given "in honor of those who laid the groundwork for the Supreme Court decision prohibiting segregation in the schools of the District of Columbia."

Among the honored guests were the children and their parents who brought the suit to court, their lawyers, the Consolidated Parent group which raised the money and community organizations which filed briefs.

— o O oq—

THE 32ND annual conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges will be held in Washington Oct. 19-21.

Theme of this meeting will be "Home Economics Education." In speaking of home economics it might be mentioned that Miss Patsy Graves, one - time holder of a top home economic position in the department of agriculture, is expected to leave for India the latter part of next month to serve as home economics advisor under the Foreign Operations administration.

The Republican 'RIF'

ALL THE HUBBUB flouting forth from a national newspaper regarding the "firing" of Mrs. Jane M. Spaulding and Mrs. Ruth C. Mueller from their Republican appointed posts turned out to be just a farce.

Mrs. Dunnigan

While it might be possible that both have felt the effect of the economy. "RIF" (reduction in force), it is expected that they will be placed in comparable, if not better, positions.

Mrs. Mueller, who was serving as assistant to Miss Bertha Atkins, director of the Women's Division of the Republican National Committee, happened to be one of 24 people let out of the Committee in the reduction in force drive — but she was definitely not "fired."

THE DICTIONARY gives many definitions for "fired," but the one that perhaps fits this situation best says that fired means "to drive out by, or as if by, fire." It also says that the word could mean "to eject forcibly, specifically to discharge from a position;" or it could mean "to grow irritated or angry."

Whatever definition might be applied to this story, the statement that the two women were "fired" carries a bad implication.

"I left the job in the good grace of the committee," said Mrs. Mueller. "And they are putting forth every effort to place me elsewhere."

She claims that she has some pretty definite plans for the future but they cannot be revealed at the present time.

THE FOREIGN CLAIMS Settlement Commission, where Mrs. Spaulding has served as a special consultant for nearly a year, recently sent out dismissal notices to 65 persons according to the chairman, Whitney Gillilland.

These dismissals were necessary because of budget limitations and because the commission is under direction to complete its actions on claims for certain countries by December 31.

Another portion of the program will terminate on March 31, stated the chairman, when a number of other employees will be dismissed.

IN REFERRING to Mrs. Spaulding's work with the commission, the chairman said, "I hope she can be retained here or kept in government in a job of comparable grade. Her services are of value to the government."

A future job for Mrs. Spaulding remains to be worked out, according to the commission chairman. It is rumored, however, that she is slated for a bigger and better position.

While the administration, the committee, the commission and even Mrs. Spaulding herself are all mum on the prospective appointment, it is believed that a public announcement will soon be forthcoming.

Mrs. Spaulding came to Washington as special assistant to Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of what was then Federal Security Administration.

Later she came to what was then, the War Claims Commission at a salary exceeding $10,000 which was an increase from her former position.

VAL WASHINGTON, an assistant to the chairman of the Republican National Committee, who usually has the last word concerning patronage, expressed concern about both women appointees.

He stated that the committee has absolutely no complaint about Mrs. Mueller as an individual, or about her work. The committee staff is always reduced in the years when there is no election, he said.

Mrs. Mueller was just one of two - dozen who were let out because there was nothing in the committee now for them to do.

As for Mrs. Spaulding, he merely stated that she knew all along that the War Claims Commission was a temporary agency and that her position there was not a permanent one.

The agency is gradually terminating because it is completing the task for which it was set up.

Days of Bowles' seen numbered

IT SEEMED for awhile last week that "happy days were here again" especially in Delaware after the judge decided that the children at Milford had every legal right to attend an integrated school.

He promised to issue an injunction soon which would permit the 10 children to return to the Milford school where they registered at the beginning of the term.

The newly elected school board of Milford declared, however, that it would seek to block the injunction until an appeal could be taken to the State Supreme Court.

In the meantime the NAACP called upon the Court of Chancery, Tuesday, to decide whether an injunction should be granted to restrain the Milford school board from keeping the children out of the high school.

—o O o—

THE OUTLOOK for Bryant Bowles' future doesn't look so rosy sine the law is on his trail. This self - styled hero of fascism is on bond for leading a conspiracy to incite riots.

Bowles is said to have been somewhat disappointed when his rable-rousing tactics did not even make the front page of the Washington daily papers. He had hoped to steal the headline spotlight, but it didn't work out that way.

It was said that editors came to sort of a gentlemen's agreement to keep the school protest stories tucked far away in the back pages of the papers.

It was rumored further, from those in the know, that official action taken in the Washington situation was ordered from the very top as secret as it was kept.

—o O o—

BOWLES MIGHT be surprised, too, to find the organized effort which is taking part in many sections of the country to see that the Supreme Court's decision actually works.

Conferences are being called and study groups are going into action to see what can actually be done. At the National Council of Negro Women headquarters such a conference was held last week.

Another was held by the American Council on Human Rights with educational and business leaders attending from various sections of the country.

A discussion was held on this subject by the Women's National Press Club last week, also, with Harry Ashmore, author of "The Negro and the Schools," making the principal address and answering the questions.

At another meeting it was reported that community leaders were discussing what they could do to educate their communities on the acceptance of integration in education.

—o O o—

EVER SINCE Secretary of Defense Wilson compared the unemployed to kennel dogs who sit up on their fannies and yelp for food rather than to go in search for it like the hunting dogs do, the statement has been over emphasized.

There is hardly a public speaker in Washington these days who doesn't have a "dog" story.

At the Women's National Press Club luncheon, Friday, the main speaker, Harry Ashmore, compared those who would force integration with the grouchy "dog-hater" who complains because his neighbor's dog barks.

He can go to court, said Ashmore, and get out an injunction to have the dog stop barking, if the dog doesn't stop he can have him destroyed. But one thing he must remember, he must live with his neighbor.

—o O o—

HIS POINT? Well he was trying to say that a colored child can force his way into a white school perhaps through court order, but he still has to deal with the persons with whom he has stirred up a great deal of hostility.

At the White House Press Assoiation luncheon held for President William V. S. Tubman of Liberia, Tueslay, the first speaker, Secretary Waugh, said, "I'm going to begin by telling you a story of a 'dog" back in Nevada."

The audience gasped and sighed, some even yelled out, "Oh, no!" But the speaker continued, "There was once an old farmer back in Nevada who cleverly remarked, 'My dog ain't bad. My dog won't bite. My dog ain't got no teeth. I ain't go no dog no how."

Must Maintain Our Own Rights

By C. A. FRANKLIN

This is another in a series of editorials written by Editor C. A. Franklin on the limitations suffered by Negro workers. He urges more doing and less grumbling. He says we can't talk our way out.

Kansas City Times

One of a group whose services are no longer desired at an ammunition factory in this area telephoned to this newspaper reciting his dismissal. Since reduction in working forces takes place every day and is in accordance with custom, it is not clear to us what we could do. Something could be done but the responsibility is the worker's. It's his rights that are abused. Furthermore, the responsibility is his because the Fair Employment Practice Directive is an agency put in his hands for the correction of his wrong.

This is the situation. But instead of meeting it squarely the workers dismissed apparently wanted outsiders to take a hand. The citizen must maintain his rights. By maintaining them he grows strong. By surrendering them he admits that he is weak, and if he is no more efficient for his employer than he is for himself he asks for what he gets.

Let's consider further this matter of the citizen maintaining his rights. Ever since this newspaper condemned "Racketeering in the Church," complaints about church management are brought to us. In one case the Bishop keeps under his own personal control funds raised specifically to finance the church.

He is so bold about it that nobody challenges him. Yet written down in the laws of every state, and backed by the 14th Amendment of the Consititution, is laid out the course by which the most insignificant giver of this money can eradicate this selfish procedure. Your money is your money and when it is given by you for a specific purpose it must be used for that purpose.

Both the citizen's income and outgo have the protection of the law. If we have not the guts to demand the correction of wrongness, that's our fault.

It takes a mixture of impudence and ignorance for a man to tell God that He turned out an inferior article when He made the darker races. So long as the United States talks democracy but insists upon caste, something remains to be done. Such duplicity leads us for moral bankruptcy. The Supreme Court was right in forbidding this nonsense and time will bring about the needed adjustments.

Kansas City Times 12-10-54

Already there is a surprising amount of conformity with the Court's decision, much more than one had the right to expect, considering the length of time prejudice dictated public relations.

Negro(C.A. FRANKLIN)

This paper recently told the story of a group of white youths who were the guests of a New Rochelle, New York school. We could not ask a more reasonable attitude than they showed. When integration has done its work for a year or two receptiveness will become working democracy.

We are not expressing a mere hope. Back in Senator Tillman's day there were personal friendships which defied all color barriers. It's only a half step to fair play and brotherhood from there.

A generation ago when Negroes had not yet attained participation in athletics and had strictly segregated contests, the Lincoln-Howard game was the big event of our group.

I was told at the time that the social side of the game was the big feature. Who and what they had on, not the score, was what people talked about.

And, believe it or not, they had reason to talk because Milady had a fur coat for her back and another fur coat to wrap up her feet. I have sat on cold benches in northern stadiums but with a blanket under me and another around me. No fur coat!

Came the second World War with the employment of Negroes generally in war production. A new situation, but the show-off disposition continued. A war worker from Lake City paraded around in 18th St. taverns with a $100 bill in his coat lapel where other folks put a gardenia.

What next? I'll tell you. The story comes out of Chicago. Negroes in Chicago bought costly motor cars, so costly that they did not have money left with which to pay room rent, so they slept in their cars on the street. I heard of a show-off right here in Kansas City who drove his 1954 Cadillac into a filling station and asked for 50 cents worth of gas.

May heaven help us! We seem not to have sense enough to save ourselves.

The older people will be slower in adopting the integration principle. No wonder! Up to now they have lived as segregation dictated. They didn't have to think. The way of life was thrust upon them and everybody seemed to think it was right.

Not so with youth. Integration is a challenge. I am happy to say that young people are meeting the challenge. I write this in Virginia, one of the die-hard states, but the kids have got the democratic spirit. Shenandoah National park, being national, is open to everybody and there is where I saw democracy at work.

A Negro Boy Scout in uniform was taken in hand by a white Scout troop camping in the park. What more could we ask? It was no show-off as the second incident indicates.

The lodge is a natural assembly place. A white Scout thrust his hand toward a Negro boy and said, "Shake." The other boy was slow in responding. The white boy said, "I mean it. Shake." Virginia can have its unreconstructed oldsters, but its future is in the hands of the kids who are sound Americans.

Kansas City, Mo. P.I.

Believe it or not, at the top of production there were 2700 Negroes employed at Lake City. The company which operated this ammunition factory had a policy of recruiting 10 per cent of its employes from among Negroes.

I was too busy trying to get Negroes into war production elsewhere to follow through the story of how this came about, but I am sure it happened just as I heard it and it reaches a lesson which we all should learn.

Prior to the war, there was a Negro employed in the yards of one of the railroads. He was the machinist. The first Negro workers put on at Lake City were women and, thanks to them, the men had a ready-made reputation for excellence handed to them.

At this critical moment, this machinist applied for work at Lake City. He knew his business. And on the beginning he made, hundreds, even thousands of us were put to work. Suppose this man had not been willing to pioneer. I knew the general manager of the plant, a fine man if ever there was one. There was no prejudice in him, but he was charged with the duty of producing ammunition, not of solving the race question. We the workers, had to do our jobs.

Turn back the pages of history. There, written in sweat and tears of emancipation, is the record of Negroes in "Negro jobs." That was because we took the road of least resistance. We were barbers, waiters, domestics, ditch diggers and farm hands. Somebody had to cut loose from the old mores and strike out in a new direction with what results the above tells the story.

Let me emphasize this thought by telling of another pioneer. When I came to Kansas City in 1913, the Crosthwaites were already here and doing well. He was a teacher, she was a lodge leader and their children were being educated.

One of them, David, took out on an entirely new path. He took engineering at Purdue university. I confess I was old-fashioned enough to doubt that he would do anything with his education. My parents had left the South to give me a chance and yet I could not see another Negro when given a chance to make good. David had been with the Dunham Engineering company whose plant is in Michigan City, Ind., for a great many years. He is one of the dependables in a company doing nation-wide heating installation.

Sooner or later, you and I have a choice of following the beaten path or setting up a new plan. Let's bear in mind that we are our brothers' keeper. Let's stop talking about "I'm the only Negro in the block and the only Negro on the job." Let's don't be the "only" anything. Let's get in front when we are capable and lead our people through the wilderness into the promised land.

Whether you are selling goods or labor or skill, good salesmanship will increase your profits. This is so evident that I am led to wonder why we wait so long to practice it. All about us are examples of good selling and all about us are results of bad selling. We have no excuse for failure

Fri. 8-20-54

Within the next ten years, thanks to mixed schools, there will be more Negroes employed in business, if we put our best foot forward. There will not be more of us employed if our best is not good enough. Up to now, we have been able to explain away our unemployment but there will be no sympathy for us and there should not be when we can get ahead on merit.

Sam Jones did well to get a common labor job. His grandson will be permitted schooling that qualifies him for any job. There will be hang-over from custom but nothing big enough to stop us unless we stop ourselves. The Negro errand boy from the grocery store must bring his smiles along with his packages. The waitress must concentrate on service. Everybody knows she's smart and attractive, but the customer wants food, not entertainment.

Fri. 8-20-54

We are entering into an entirely new world. Our manners must be acceptable, also our production. Following the great migration, tens of thousands of us took up residence in the big cities of the North. We did not know how to live on South Parkway in Chicago, but we learned. We quit stuffing rags in broken windows and we must stop attracting attention by unusual conduct. We have got to sell our selves. It won't be easy, but it will bring the top price.

Black is not evil. It is the vilest of lies to blame any man for the way in which God made him. However, the phrase carries a punch and a lot of small, mean people seize upon it when they are quarrelsome.

When others blame us for our color, we have no choice but to bear it. We cannot change our skin. But, sad to relate, we do exhibit color prejudice. Won't it be a tragedy if we don't drop it at once? What a spectacle it would be for a Negro boy to shout on a mixed school playground what has been commonplace on Negro playgrounds!

The radio master of ceremonies pokes fun at southern-born whites. He does it in a kindly manner and he is so received. But he couldn't treat kindly either the words or the meaning which we hear in our part of town. It's not all our fault, but it is our job to correct it.

The Job of Educating White People

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)—The speaker became worried when some of the people in the audience began to shift about. He became more serious when several, in the back of the auditorium, got up and slowly walked out. It was later when he realized, the demonstration was not necessarily directed against him.

As a Negro, he was telling his audience of the inherent defects in our social structure. He was trying to point up the responsibilities each has to share in order to bring about a remedy. Specifically, he was trying to educate his people as to their duties as American citizens. Unfortunately, he was telling a story as old as the hills, one which is perhaps more entrenched in the minds and souls of Negroes than that of any other.

The real fact is, Negroes have long realized the significance of their duties and have gone about trying to practice them to the extent of the traditions, and laws of the communities in which they live. And the best answer to this has been brought out, not by a Negro, but by a Southern white man.

The incident is still clear and the gestures he made emphasizing his point are firmly entrenched in my mind.

"Your problem of education lies not with the Negro, but with the men of my race," he said firmly. "White people, more and more, need to be educated on the position of the Negro in America," he continued.

Sitting in his office, high above the streets of a Southern metropolis, the man went on to tell from experience how little white people understand the Negro and how costly it is for them to remain apathetic. He said the best weapon with which to crack this hard wall of misunderstanding is intelligent Negro leadership. He said Negro leaders have spent enough time telling their own people about the fruits of democracy. What they have been telling their own people should be allowed to reach white people on every level and without opposition by those who advocate freedom for all.

The man's talk was not without optimism, for he did touch on some of the obvious changes already brought about through education. In the "old days", he said, the nearest point at which white people got next to Negroes was through the maid or the cook who brought the news to the breakfast and dinner tables. Improved techniques of communications have changed this, he added.

He went back to the radio and mentioned how the turn of buttons brought the voices of Negroes right into the living rooms of even the most fashionable homes of white people. When television came, he said, the impact, had revolutionary effects. The entire household could see Negro Americans competing in performance on an equal basis. This has almost completely destroyed the myth of racial inferiority. But he added, "more is needed to be done."

"First of all your newspapers and magazines should be of such quality that reflect the best within the group. The writings should not be shoddy and tainted with the filth of bigotry. "Your speakers," he continued, should be more factual in their expressions and not use the rambling techniques of the mediocre politician."

The man had been talking with such force that he had to stop, push himself away from his desk and stand up to drive home his final point.

"The real job of your leaders," he continued, "is to keep preaching democracy in every town, city and hamlet. Not so much to Negroes during this period of transition, but to white people, who still remain ignorant to its significance."

The Negro Teacher And Integration

The telephone rang and the voice at the other end of the line echoed in desperation:

"What about the Negro teachers and the Supreme Court decision? Will we lose our jobs when integration becomes a reality?

There was a pause and I could hear the person at the other end of the line doing a bit of throat-clearing. There was also a quaver in the voice as the person tried to calm the emotions.

"Well, I just wanted to know," the voice said and quietly hung up the receiver.

It was obvious that the person was frightened . . . frightened because she thought her job was at stake with this new ruling being in effect. No doubt, she had been told all along that Negro teachers should work to maintain a dual school system, because economically, they would be the first to feel the adverse effects.

What many teachers don't know is that this is only one side of the story and the wrong side at that. Economically, the Negro teacher will not be hurt through integration. Opponents to integration would like for it to happen this way, and usually they are the ones who control the channels of propaganda. And one has only to observe some of our main networks of communications to see how effective this can be.

What teachers should do is sit down and trace a little of the history they have been studying and teaching and draw their own conclusions.

First of all, the American populaiton is definitely on the increase. The National Association of Manufacturers predicts that by 1975 our population will have jumped to near two hundred million souls. This figure represents a lot of babies.

These babies will need homes, clothes, food and naturally school buildings and teachers. There will be millions of jobs for qualified people in the fields of their choice. But the effects of social change often have deeper implications and that which affects the present period is not much different from any other in our history. Deep-rooted factions always argue that changes bring about instability, the consequences of which disturb the status of employment.

The same story was told at the advent of the automobile. The blacksmith, the stable boys and innkeepers were disturbed by the coming of the horseless carriage, believing that their skills would be replaced by auto and electrical mechanics. That may have been true, but today we have far more people employed, making automobiles, digging the iron ore out of the ground, running service stations and managing food shops than perhaps all the industries combined during this period.

There was also a howl when the tractor came on the scene and subsequently the cotton picker. What would the poor Negro farm hands do in the wake of all this mechanization? The answer is clear. Since 1940 more than a million Negroes have migrated from the farms to the cities. And they have not been idle in doing so. They have acquired jobs. Their income and living standards have been higher than at any other time in history of the country.

The tractor and the cotton picker emancipated the Negro farm hand. And the result has been good. Instead of following the line of the shiftless underpaid farm hand, the Negro is gradually becoming a skilled workman with good pay, better housing and better educational opportunities for his children.

For the Negro teacher, there is no reason for fear. Like the Negro farm hand, the future points to better economic status for all and fuller integration into industry at large. For every Negro teacher replaced by integration there will be three jobs available in industry. With the going of segregation goes a disease a disease which has long plagued its victims with the stigma of second-class methods and second-class training. Neither has any place in a democratic society.

American People On Trial, Not Court Decision, John Potts Says

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) —

The American people are on trial and not the United States Supreme Court's decision, the president of Voorhees College told the Hungry Club Forum yesterday at the Butler Street YMCA.

President John F. Potts said America's challenge is to implement school integration by understanding and treating prejudice.

OMEGA PSI PHI FRATERNITY

World 11-5-54

President Potts was the featured speaker of the National Achievement Week program of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Inc., an annual feature held by the fraternity throughout the nation.

President Potts touched on the scope of the fraternity's achievement week program and said, "It is broad enough to include the achievements of all peoples, regardless of ethnic or religious differences."

The scope also includes, President Potts said, "special attention to achievements in the area of civil rights to the end that our democracy will become more functional and all Americans will enjoy first class citizenship."

AWARDS MADE

President Potts, national grand chaplain of Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, mentioned some of the people on the national scene who have been recipients of Omega awards and included Judge J. Waites Waring, Thurgood Marshall and others.

Citing a story to document his thesis, President Potts said:

"The decision of the Supreme Court of May 17th outlawing segregation in public schools is not on trial—the people in America are."

To document this, Mr. Potts said the theory was based upon a Christian ethic enunciated 2,000 years ago when the sermon was preached on Mount. He said already the moral and spiritual fibre of this nation has been greatly strengthened even before the Court answers the "important" question of when.

CONCEPT OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. Potts added further that the theory was in keeping with the fundamental concept of democracy that each individual, regardless of physical differences, has worth and dignity, and anything in our society which degrades and humiliates the individual and robs him of his rights which he inherited from birth is inconsistent with the democratic principles upon which America was founded.

"The decision supports and makes more realistic America's idea of universal public education," Mr. Potts said. This, he further stated, is based upon the theory that every child, regardless of race, should have the opportunity to develop to his maximum capacity at the expense of the taxpayers.

GRAND BASILEUS

The grand basileus stated with emphasis that:

"When we consider the role of education today based upon the research of psychologists and social scientists, we discover that virtually all modern authorities agree that setting Negro children apart in separate schools promotes feelings of inferiority, interferes with healthy emotional development and retards the ability to learn."

DEATH STRUGGLE

Mr. Potts said that the decision is not on trial because it was necessary to help America with its death struggle with Communism. He said the entire world felt the impact of the decision of the Supreme Court and that millions of non-white peoples in other lands view it as concrete evidence of American leadership in the world.

Mr. Potts scored the ranting of rabble rousers who would make political capital of the Court's decree. He added that the decision represents all that is decent and fair in the American way of life.

Citing why the people are on trial and not the Court's decision Mr. Potts said, "the real task of implementation, the acid test of community acceptance will rest with the people."

Mr. Potts believes that America should apply social "know how" comparable to the "industrial know how" she implemented during World War II.

GREATEST CHALLENGE

"This represents one of the greatest challenges the American people have ever faced. How we respond to this challenge will in a large manner determine the destiny of our country years to come," President Potts said.

Pointing out the decision could be put into effect, President Potts called for the formation of citizens committees similar to those citizens groups organized for the improvement of public school education all over the United States. He said these committees should be bi-racial.

President Potts stated that some other steps that should take place on community level should be full participation of Negroes in the planning and administration of local school systems. Another, he said should be the integration of parent-teacher organizations.

The educator said teachers' organizations should seek ways of bridging the racial gap with qualifications, salaries and working conditions approaching equality that both groups will have in common.

Receiving the outstanding citizen of the year award was Joseph Winston of the Butler Street YMCA. The Omega Man of the Year award went to Professor J. J. Dennis of Clark College.

Those Who Read The Bible

An old Chinese philosopher once said that those who read the Bible cannot be kept in slavery. Such a practice if properly applied, can be most effective in times like these it seems.

The fact that a lot of truth stems from the above statement, becomes more evident when we view the trend and conditions of this country even less than a hundred years ago.

The old Negro preacher, generations ago was barely literate, yet from certain scattered phrases of the Bible, he was able to impart to his audience a message that later set the "world on fire." Although crude and lacking in literary treatment, these messengers left a mark on the minds and souls of men that lasts until this very day. Birmingham, Ala.

The Negro, and millions of other enslaved peoples the world over, have taken as their guiding staff the "Word of God" to beat a pathway to freedom. Sun. 11-23-54

This week, all over the country, people will be observing National Bible Week. Millions of people will, because of tradition, take time out to read a passage or two in that "most sacred book." And this is the way it should be, perhaps with one or two exceptions.

Those of us who keep in mind that the Bible is still the most widely read book in the world, do not err in our thinking. In a period of less than twenty years, an official of the American Bible Society has distributed more than ten million pieces of the Scripture. The fundamental concepts and principles of the Bibles have affected almost every phase and activity of civilized man, the scope of which does not limit itself to any particular socio-economic level. The book has been useful in shaping the lives of people great and small.

A great financier once said, he read the Bible daily and as a result he never entered his automobile, or that of anyone else, without uttering a prayer or reading a line of the Scripture.

Still another business man, who is quite successful, has kept in his possession Bibles that go back to three generations of his family. In all of his dealings he contends, this Book has been the most effective guiding instrument.

This interest goes beyond that of modern times.

George Washington was a great reader of the Bible. Others have been John Quincy Adams, Andrew Jackson and of course Abraham Lincoln. Mr. Lincoln once said:

"I am profitably engaged in reading the Bible. Take all of this book upon reason that you can and balance by faith, and you will live and die a better man."

Woodrow Wilson once said:

"There is no other book so various as the Bible, nor one so full of concentrated wisdom ..... he who seeks guidance, may look inside its covers and find illumination."

The old theory that the Bible is linked only with death and doom is outmoded and has been from the beginning of time. In a society where men must live together for the salvation and preservation of civilization itself, they must adopt the message from the Bible as the basis of guidance. There will be millions responding to its message during National Bible Week. But this practice should be a day by day business for all of those who read the Bible.

Riots, Violence and Bigotry

The great late Indian leader Mahatma Gandhi was praised many times for his non-violent approach toward social and political problems that plagued his country for generations. His reason, according to his associates, was that violence settles nothing, and even those who become involved, go away with wounds that seldom heal. Worcd P.1

This concept about the people of India has become better clarified in my mind, especially after meeting some of them.

Their theory is that violent efforts solve nothing. The method of moving against the law, they believe, points out the ignorance and the bitterness that inherent our emotions. Moreover, it becomes a revelation of the hidden crudeness manifest in a young population and often points up the lack of control evident in an advanced culture. Pres. 10-19-54

It seems that some segments of our American population could take a lesson from the people of India. For unfortunately, much of our pattern of reasoning has been one based on feeling and emotions. But fortunately, we have been able, slowly, but surely, to move against this strain in our society.

More recently, we have been affected with violent movements within our population. I refer to the more recent pranks of student groups in Delaware, Baltimore and Washington, who suddenly found themselves unable to sit down with Negroes in school classrooms. These pranks were clear-cut cases of mob action, and such action never has any basis for justification. Mob action was more evident when some of elected American leadership, along with hired bigots, stepped in and encouraged that youngsters protest in mob fashion against the United States Supreme Court. I doubt that such would have ever happened in India, a country we still call primitive. Birmingham

Truth of the matter is, these students did not act on their own, but on what they were told to do by their elders. The Congressman who stepped out of bounds is to be pitied. His reason for action stems from a condition that he and others in the same category can't break away from.

Like the "Know-Nothing" group of law breakers that emerged on the American scene around 1852, he along with Bryant Bowles belong to a frustrated lot of the past. History hasn't been very kind to these individuals. It's unfortunate for all of us. For these people usually emerge in times of social change. Caught in the grips of the transition, they either encourage violence to gain recognition for themselves or they fall victims to the rip-tide of an advancing age.

The Ku Klux Klan, like the "Know-Nothings", went about trying to protect what they called "white supremacy" and "Americanism." The "Know-Nothings" in particular went about fighting a battle to protect America for "Americans", forgetting the fact that the only "true Americans" at that time were the Indians.

The Klan moved in a more stupid fashion in a effort to maintain tradition. Their's was one of bloodshed, lynchings and police brutality. They all moved against the law. Unlike the people of India, they moved without logic or reason. For mental, regional or traditional reasons, they envisioned social change only through the "rope and faggot." But as a result of this, such hate groups will always be identified with the losing side, because their culture is one of riots, violence and bigotry.

World Birmingham, Ala.

Coming as a decided anti-climax this week was the news that Marian Anderson had been signed to a Metropolitan Opera House contract. This acknowledgement of Miss Anderson's superb artistry is anti-climactic in that it is so long over-due and so greatly over-shadowed by her many previous impressive triumphs before discriminating audiences the world over. P. 6

The Metropolitan Opera House certainly is entitled to no "bravo's" for recognizing Miss Anderson now after having failed to do so for so many years although she is the acknowledged first lady of song in contemporary history. Chron. 10-12-54

Recent troubles, reverses and losses have nibbled away at the formerly awe-inspiring stature of the Met until it no longer commands the prestige it once did. Even the redoubtable Helen Traubel now prefers the attractions of the night-club circuit to the crumbling prestige of the once-mighty Met.

The Met, then, finds itself in the position of "according honor" to someone who, in all reality, has a much superior stature. Consider that the Met, for all its American prestige, has never been the foremost opera company of the world: Italy's La Scala has held that honor for generations. On the other hand, Miss Anderson's supremacy has never been challenged — her world stature endures.

There is no doubt, then, that she can "measure up" to the Met; the Met will have to measure up to her.

If it can measure up, and if it wishes to continue in the direction of reclaiming its prestige in America, Miss Anderson can be a very dynamic and sustaining force.

A still more exciting possibility (still from the standpoint of advantage to the Met and not necessarily to the artist) would be the combination of Marian Anderson and Atlanta's own Mattiwilda Dobbs on the Met staff.

With the combination of two of the best-known and best-loved voices in the world, the Met would have an excellent nucleus around which to form a company that would not only restore it to its old position of prestige but, perhaps project it into a new greater prominence.

So, Rudolf Bing of the Met, you'd better act swiftly; Mattiwilda Dobbs is already "A-1" on La Scala's books.

The United Nations And The Foreigners You Meet

Our guide had taken us through several of the United Nations assembly rooms before she came up with the statement made by an elderly lady. The latter's complaint was, "too many foreigners are seen around here."

No one would dispute the fact that the United Nations building is constantly filled with people of almost every race and nationality. But after all why shouldn't it be? It's the United Nations and would be non-existent without the billions of peoples around the globe being represented here. And one would not have to examine the situation deeply to understand why they are there and why the UN is located in the United States.

To the person who takes the chance to visit the United Nations, the real story does not have to be told. The whole atmosphere of the place is a revelation and exhibit "A" of man's constant struggle for the truth and decency. Here the feeling of the dignity of man and the fellowship of God may be seen in a more clear-cut sense than in any other place I know. And there are reasons of course.

The dinner meeting is still clear in my mind. As we sat there, more than forty of us, listening to a speech by the former Governor of Oregon, my eyes began to shift about until the sound of his voice became almost extinct. Through the huge glass plate window I caught the still waters of the East river and the sight of a boat now and then, plowing up and down the current. The picture was a peaceful one, indicative of UN's purpose and ideals.

I have often, since then, thought how rude I must have been to my companions sitting next to me at dinner. All I can recall from them is that they spoke frequently to me. But what can one expect when his mind begins to drift about and even the soul is rendered unconscious in the dream of the surroundings.

My thoughts went back earlier during the day when the small group of Nieman Fellows sat with Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, listening patiently at this great lady relate her experiences of the far East. She took so much time to explain her mission, all vivid and not without profound feeling. She was talking about people, fellow human beings possessing the same desires, habits and features.

The thought of this great lady brought to mind hundreds of others, great people, dedicated people at the UN whose lives and souls flowed with the blood of freedom and respectability. They all came and worked at the UN with one purpose in mind, to understand other fellow human beings.

While the governor spoke, my friends ate and others chatted while my thoughts continued to ramble. This time they focused on the door of a small room located near one of the entrances of the UN building. It was the room for prayer, put there for all who wished to use it. They were even careful about selecting a rostrum, the guide said. So someone went out and brought in an old tree trunk, wrapped it in simple paper and placed it at the far end of the room. The builders of this great edifice of freedom tried to keep in mind all along that the UN is not alone for any one country, group or race of people, region or political faction, but for all — all mankind still with the tiny spark of respectability left in their hearts for equality and freedom for all. At such a place one is bound to meet a lot of foreigners.

Delaware Court Says Negro Pupils Must Be Readmitted In Milford

WILMINGTON, Del. —(INS)— The Delaware Chancery Court ruled Thursday that ten Negro pupils who were ousted from Milford's high school in face of a boycott by white students should be readmitted. P. 1

Chancellor William Marvel declared that the Negro pupils, "having been accepted and enrolled, are entitled to an order protecting their status as students" at the school. Mon. 10-1954

The Negroes had attended classes during the boycott, but were ousted by the school board to "preserve law and order."

The Court ruling granted a temporary injunction sought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, restraining the school board from barring reinstatement of the Negro pupils.

DELAY ASKED

The school board at a hearing on Tuesday, had pleaded for delay in any action on the question until the U. S. Supreme Court issues instructions and rules for putting racial integration into effect in the schools.

The ruling stated, however:

"A continuing denial of plaintiff's personal and present rights irreparably injures them. Because the years of grade and high school are formative ones, the U. S. Supreme Court held that the need for the equal protection of the laws for students of such ages was more compelling than for graduate students."

Chancellor Marvel added that the Negro pupils "need not wait for decrees in the cases decided by the U. S. Supreme Court in May as a pre-requisite to the relief they seek."

A further hearing will be held before a permanent injunction is granted.

Haile Selassie, The Little Man With A Broad Prospective

The dead silence in the early morning breeze was broken only by the thundering sounds of artillery fire. Every muscle and every fibre stood perfectly at attention. All eyes were focused in one direction—on the little man with the beard who stood between two top-ranking Army officers. The Emperor of Ethiopia, Haile Selassie, was being paid the highest United States tribute to a visiting dignitary, the 21-gun-salute.

Minutes later, when the big guns had completed their mission and their crews stood at attention, only the echoes could be heard in the distance. This was broken by the strains of the Ethiopian National Anthem, played by the Fort Benning Army Post band. Following this was the Star Spangled Banner and the music never sounded better.

Once again silence prevailed while cameramen and news reel men scrambled for choice positions to get shots of the Emperor and his immediate family. Meanwhile, the crowd, gathered about to get a peek at the little man from Africa, continued to watch in silence.

At this point, people were waved to two sides to make room for an army jeep. Driven by a soldier, the vehicle rolled in the direction of the Emperor and the two top-ranking Army officers. Accompanied by the officers, he took a seat in the vehicle and began to inspect the troops.

Within a short span of thirty minutes, a most significant ceremony had taken place on the grounds of Fort Benning, Ga. Respect was paid an African leader, one who is perhaps the one single link between a thriving and awakening continent and the free world.

This tribute may not have been paid this leader twenty years ago, for history had not yet taken the turn it has today. At this time strong feeling of nationalism and self government by nations deprived of the right to freedom, showed only faint sounds in the distance.

But leaders like Emperor Haile Selassie saw further than most leaders of his day, even those in the Western world. When he warned of aggression in the thirties while his country was being invaded by Mussolini's armies, some countries stood by without even moral support. The United States took a different position. It did not take sides with Italy. And as a gesture of fulfillment, the Emperor was invited to the United States and given a welcome that rated second to none.

For those who stood on the sidelines and watched the ceremonies at Fort Benning, I am sure there were deeper implications. Paying respects to the Emperor of Ethiopia was also giving recognition to the fact that this country was a great power when recorded history began. Ethiopia has produced scientists and scholars and the land about it once harbored one of the world's oldest civilizations. Evidence of this exhibits itself even today in the fighting men of Ethiopia who gave their lives in World War II and more recently in the Korean conflict.

Leadership ability reflects itself through its Emperor who looks to the West for additional skill and capital to help exploit his country's abundant natural resources.

The people are proud and they stoop to no faction or bloc. According to the Emperor, they look to the principles of collective security and will go along with nations of the world working in the interest of freedom and respect for all peoples. This might account for the half-century of diplomatic relations it has had with the United States.

I am sure that those who stood on the sidelines and watched with keen interest the tribute paid this little man who is today the symbol of dark peoples the world over, viewed the reception from other angles. The real fact is, this little man with the broad perspective, represents the emergence of colored people everywhere on the scene of leadership and respectibility, a privilege rightfully due all members of the human family.

The Job of Educating White People

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(SNS)—The speaker became worried when some of the people in the audience began to shift about. He became more serious when several, in the back of the auditorium, got up and slowly walked out. It was later when he realized, the demonstration was not necessarily directed against him.

As a Negro, he was telling his audience of the inherent defects in our social structure. He was trying to point up the responsibilities each has to share in order to bring about a remedy. Specifically, he was trying to educate his people as to their duties as American citizens. Unfortunately, he was telling a story as old as the hills, one which is, perhaps more entrenched in the minds and souls of Negroes than that of any other.

The real fact is, Negroes have long realized the significance of their duties and have gone about trying to practice them to the extent of the traditions, and laws of the communities in which they live. And the best answer to this has been brought out, not by a Negro, but by a Southern white man.

The incident is still clear and the gestures he made emphasizing his point are firmly entrenched in my mind.

"Your problem of education lies not with the Negro, but with the men of my race," he said firmly. "White people, more and more, need to be educated on the position of the Negro in America," he continued.

Sitting in his office, high above the streets of a Southern metropolis, the man went on to tell from experience how little white people understand the Negro and how costly it is for them to remain apathetic. He said the best weapon with which to crack this hard wall of misunderstanding is intelligent Negro leadership. He said Negro leaders have spent enough time telling their own people about the fruits of democracy. What they have been telling their own people should be allowed to reach white people on every level and without opposition by those who advocate freedom for all.

The man's talk was not without optimism, for he did touch on some of the obvious changes already brought about through education. In the "old days", he said, the nearest point at which white people got next to Negroes was through the maid or the cook who brought the news to the breakfast and dinner tables. Improved techniques of communications have changed this, he added.

He went back to the radio and mentioned how the turn of buttons brought the voices of Negroes right into the living rooms of even the most fashionable homes of white people. When television came, he said, the impact, had revolutionary effects. The entire household could see Negro Americans competing in performance on an equal basis. This has almost completely destroyed the myth of racial inferiority. But he added, "more is needed to be done."

"First of all your newspapers and magazines should be of such quality that reflect the best within the group. The writings should not be shoddy and tainted with the filth of bigotry. "Your speakers," he continued, should be more factual in their expressions and not use the rambling techniques of the mediocre politician."

The man had been talking with such force that he had to stop, push himself away from his desk and stand up to drive home his final point.

"The real job of your leaders," he continued, "is to keep preaching democracy in every town, city and hamlet. Not so much to Negroes during this period of transition, but to white people, who still remain ignorant to its significance."

The Negro Teacher And Integration

The telephone rang and the voice at the other end of the line echoed in desperation:

"What about the Negro teachers and the Supreme Court decision? Will we lose our jobs when integration becomes a reality?

There was a pause and I could hear the person at the other end of the line doing a bit of throat-clearing. There was also a quaver in the voice as the person tried to calm the emotions.

"Well, I just wanted to know," the voice said and quietly hung up the receiver.

It was obvious that the person was frightened . . . frightened because she thought her job was at stake with this new ruling being in effect. No doubt, she had been told all along that Negro teachers should work to maintain a dual school system, because economically, they would be the first to feel the adverse affects.

What many teachers don't know is that this is only one side of the story and the wrong side at that. Economically, the Negro teacher will not be hurt through integration. Opponents to integration would like for it to happen this way, and usually they are the ones who control the channels of propaganda. And one has only to observe some of our main networks of communications to see how effective this can be.

What teachers should do is sit down and trace a little of the history they have been studying and teaching and draw their own conclusions.

First of all, the American populaiton is definitely on the increase. The National Association of Manufacturers predicts that by 1975 our population will have jumped to near two hundred million souls. This figure represents a lot of babies.

These babies will need homes, clothes, food and naturally school buildings and teachers. There will be millions of jobs for qualified people in the fields of their choice. But the effects of social change often have deeper implications and that which affects the present period is not much different from any other in our history. Deep-rooted factions always argue that changes bring about instability, the consequences of which disturb the status of employment.

The same story was told at the advent of the automobile. The blacksmith, the stable boys and innkeepers were disturbed by the coming of the horseless carriage, believing that their skills would be replaced by auto and electrical mechanics. That may have been true, but today we have far more people employed, making automobiles, digging the iron ore out of the ground, running service stations and managing food shops than perhaps all the industries combined during this period.

There was also a howl when the tractor came on the scene and subsequently the cotton picker. What would the poor Negro farm hands do in the wake of all this mechanization? The answer is clear. Since 1940 more than a million Negroes have migrated from the farms to the cities. And they have not been idle in doing so. They have acquired jobs. Their income and living standards have been higher than at any other time in history of the country.

The tractor and the cotton picker emancipated the Negro farm hand. And the result has been good. Instead of following the line of the shiftless underpaid farm hand, the Negro is gradually becoming a skilled workman with good pay, better housing and better educational opportunities for his children.

For the Negro teacher, there is no reason for fear. Like the Negro farm hand, the future points to better economic status for all and fuller integration into industry at large. For every Negro teacher replaced by integration there will be three jobs available in industry. With the going of segregation goes a disease . . . a disease which has long plagued its victims with the stigma of second-class methods and second-class training. Neither has any place in a democratic society.

Violence: A Changing Pattern

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(SNS)—The train was brought to a stop thirty miles out of Augusta, Georgia, and a farmer, Perry Jeffers and four of his sons were taken off and shot to death. The men who committed the crime, wore no masks. Law officials failed to raise even a finger to apprehend the killers, their reason being, Jeffers and his sons had killed a white man who was a member of the Ku Klux Klan.

A few nights later a group of men made a visit to the small farm of Jeffers. There was a knock at the door of his small cabin. An invalid son was lying in bed while his ill mother sat near the door watching and praying for the safety of her husband and four other sons. She did not know at the time, that they had become victims of a mob.

Thinking friends were calling, the woman walked slowly to the door of the cabin, and opened it. Outside, she saw more than a dozen robed men, on horse-back, standing before the little farm cabin. Their robed figures cast a ghostly shadow about the yard. One man dismounted and walked up to the cabin door.

"Is this the home of Jeffers?", he asked. "Yes", came a weak reply from the ill woman, standing in the door of the cabin.

Without further questioning, she was snatched from the cabin. Her son was dragged from his bed and shot on the spot. He died seconds later. Meanwhile, his mother was hung to a tree in the yard by bed clothing, while a fire was lit over the body of the dead son. Then in the light of the moon and the funeral pyre, the mobsters rode away, their figures losing themselves under the blanket of the early dawn.

The Jeffers family, wiped out by mob violence, was only one of the many episodes in lynching history so prevalent around 1868 and the latter part of the nineteenth century. Much of this spirit of mob violence has haunted us even up to the first half of the twentieth century. Mob violence, which had its inception on the fringes of the American frontier and in the South, rose to its peak around 1895. It played a large part in dictating the pattern of life during this era. Historians say, that regional mentality was at such a low level during this period that lynchings were occuring at the rate of almost one a day. Historians also admit without reservations, that civilized man has gone through few periods less brutal—a period when the hood and robe were in many ways the predominant symbols of justice.

As a people and a nation, we should be thankful that a larger part of our population is taking on maturity. By contrast to the Jeffers type of killing, violence is taking on a changing pattern.

For the second straight year now Tuskegee Institute has reported no lynchings. This is a far cry, even from the type of lynching which occured in Monroe, Georgia in 1946 when four young people were shot down in cold blood by mobsters.

There is still violence of course, but the method is one of a changing pattern. Instead of the lynch mob of the past, small groups conspire to beat and kill their victims.

This new method of violence is not primarily a Southern phenomenon, but one of the growing national pattern. Instead of the mob, we get teen-age gangs in Boston, police brutality in New York and the White Circle League with its brutal methods in Chicago. Yes, we still have hate and bigotry with us, but mostly in a disorganized sense. Today, mob action gets little sympathy from public opinion. Again thanks to our maturity as a region and as a nation. Whether this be a realization that we have too much at stake to be allied with brutality, or that the leadership views such action as inconsistent with our doctrine we are obviously improving our total lot.

One point is certainly apparent. The sane among us fully realize that we cannot continue to point out the wrongs of other nations and countries while our own methods here at home with fellow human beings are nothing short of barbarism. In the area of mob violence, we can see a vast improvement, even over the past ten years. Let's hope that this trend continues, not only in lynching, but in all areas of race relations. Let's say that it must continue, if we are to remain a free and sound nation.

God, The Church And The Negro

When a famous lawyer made the statement a few months ago that the church still barred two people, God and the Negro, the more enlightened and decent element in the church became worried. This was rightfully so.

If there is any place in our democratic society today, left to deal and view conditions and people in light of good Christian ethics, it is the church. For here is the one institution left in human society which can function on its own principles and needs not to adhere or be tied to any particular faction or political apron string. It should be among the freest of our institutions. And there are some recent signs which point in this direction.

The Catholics have led the way in making Christianity available to all without regard to race or color. This practice has not only put them ahead of many church groups, but has likewise netted them almost 30,000,000 human souls in the American church.

Other church groups including the Presbyterians, have similar enlightened attitudes toward God, the Church and the Negro and have without reluctance, opened their doors to all who care to come. But there are even other changes which hit closer to home, during this period of social change.

The North Georgia Methodist Conference, in a recent resolution, suggested that, "in these troublous days Methodists should show greater consideration than ever before toward Negroes."

Aside from stating that it is the duty of all Christians to observe and obey the laws and commands of the government's supreme authority in the country. They also stated that "there is no place in the Methodist Church for racial discrimination or racial segregation."

In view of these recent resolutions and attitudes on the part of churchmen, it makes one wonder what has the church been doing all along in terms of Christianity. I am sure that Christ Himself, while on earth, made no distinction as to the color or pigmentation of human soul. There were no distinctions on earth and I am sure there won't be any in the hereafter.

In light of the attitudes taken by some churchmen, one is mindful of the tale told by the Negro who visited a white church and was asked to become a member. On the first Sunday he told the elders he needed more time to make up his mind, On the next Sunday, he told them he was sorry. His excuse was that he had been praying to the Lord to give him strength to join. But in reply, the Lord was quoted as saying, he had been trying to get into that church himself and had not been successful.

It is inconceivable that Christ and God The Father will make any distinction for his Angels once we become pure enough to ascend into Heaven. And it is equally inconceivable that the demagogues will be on hand to argue the point on integration. It should be quite clear to all that the very basis on which Christianity was founded hinges on equality of respect for all. And wherever good Christian ethics are practiced, bigotry has no place. The fact that the Church is slowly but surely awakening to its responsibility in a free society is indicative of a culture moving toward maturity. The Church has finally got around to admitting one of its greatest sins and the world should be grateful that it is cleaning its hands of the stains. The statement by the lawyer won't hold true any longer now that the climate is being set by the world's most genuine institution. Let's all praise the Lord together, for the Church is opening its doors to God and the Negro

Equality By American Standards

It took only a short while for the French editor to get to the point.

"We are looking for examples of achievement, but we want to evaluate them in terms of American standards," he said.

This Frenchman was determined in his approach. He had only a short while in this country and he didn't want to waste, either his time or mine. He wanted concrete facts, and he wanted them from the shoulder.

"Give me some facts and figures on employment of the Negro in America," he added. "And I want them just as they are," he continued.

It is not a difficult thing to point to the improvements of the Negro in America, especially when you take in such things as employment, health, education, housing and other concrete examples

It is easy to take figures and show where the average Negro worker in 1939 was making ony three hundred dollars a year in contrast to more than twelve hundred dollars today. You can also show where private housing has shown fantastic gains, something like thirty per cent ahead of the nation's average. And then of course, there is income of the Negro worker which rose something like 196 per cent during the past decade. You can also point to where this money went; some into education, housing and into goods and services, the results of which show fantastic improvements over the years.

The mere idea of such achievements by a race of people is not without its dramatic effects. The whole thing sounds very convincing. But not to the Frenchman who had been talking with leaders of both races all over the nation. He wanted to know how these achievements were as compared with American standards. And the questions he asked later during the day caused me to think about a letter appearing in the daily press a few days back. In brief, the content was pathetic, because the writer, it seemed, had little or no grasps of the total economic implications as they affect our social order in America.

Apparently out of ignorance, the writer is still looking at the Negro in America as a special group, set aside to be fed by the wooden-spoon of paternalism. The fact that Negroes in America have made some improvements during the past one or two decades, is no indication that we have achieved the level of the average American citizen in equality. Income alone, which showed fantastic gains during the past decade, puts us up to only fifty-two per cent of that of the average American. So we still have to climb higher to reach an appreciateable level. And this is a factor the Frenchman, like many other foreign leaders, was looking for.

The unfortunate thing is that we have people who try to compare the Negro in America with other colored peoples. This is not only unjust, but inadequate, on the part of those who do so. We must not forget that the Negro is an American, subjected to the laws, traditions and ideals of this country and should not be set aside as a separate group.

Like every other racial and national group, the Negro pays the same taxes, in proportion to income and buys from the same markets at no special or reduced rates on the basis of race. His status is that of an American citizen. When comparisons are made, they should be in terms of what is American. Those who do otherwise are doing so out of stupidity.

BIAS FADING BUT SLOW

NEW YORK (ANP) — Executive Secretary of NAACP Walter White, who wrote on the race problem in Detroit some time ago, contributes in the Saturday Evening Post this week HOW WASHINGTON'S COLOR LINE LOOKS TO ME.

The eminent observer feels barriers are falling but apparently not fast enough for dark-skinned Americans or foreigners of similar hue.

The federal situation is far brighter than that of privately owned establishments in the District of Columbia. Housing is bad and getting worse and Jim Crow still has a tight squeeze in the school system. All in all, White agrees with an observation made by the American Psychological Association, which held its recent meeting in Washington, that segregation is not being erased fast enough in the alleged showcase of democracy.

TRAVEL WISE

Two noted Alpha Kappa Alpha women, both of Tau Omega chapter, are packing their bags travel wise.

Mrs. Fanny Byrd of Tuskegee and Denver, who holds a top public relations post with the Central Branch of the National YWCA and who recently returned from Charleston and Columbia, S.C., will head for Buffalo for the YWCA regional meeting. Mrs. Alma V. John of Philadelphia will go to Kansas City.

Penelope Johnson Ruffin, gifted violinist and partner with her real estate husband, Claude, in Penny's Sightseeing Agency, is slated to head homeward for Columbus in the Buckeye State, Ohio, where she expects to hit Cleveland in time to salute her state mate, Elizabeth Foster, star of "Porgy and Bess," and to greet Editor Carriebell J. Cook of the Cleveland Herald.

THOMAS TURNS BEHEADER

Baritone Fred Thomas, one of the top artists in the East, has turned to drama as the leader of John the Baptist in the New York City Opera Company's first presentation of "Salome," where his role is outstanding. Slated for a concert engagement in Detroit, Thomas will fly back in time for his participation in "Show Boat," along with other artists who are taking curtains in the person of Lucretia West and Bill Smith as Joe.

Those prepared are stepping on new soil (artistically) on which they have never trod without fanfare on either production or participation end. Several were noted in the "Beggars Opera," presented by Columbia Theater Associates at Brander Matthews Hall in the presentations in celebration of the bicentennial year of Columbia university. Prof. Willard Rhodes is director of the Opera Workshop from which many of the artists came.

RECREATION LACKS CAUSE TENSIONS

Lack of adequate recreational facilities in New York City is responsible for tensions among racial and nationality groups, according to findings of the Group Work and Recreation Division of the Welfare and Health Council.

Facilities in these areas where a large population of colored persons and Puerto Ricans live were considered particularly insufficient from the viewpoint of Dr. Nathan T. Cohen of the New York School of Social Work. J. Donald Kinglsey is executive director of the Welfare and Health Council.

BLAME ON PARENTS

Former Mayor Impellitteri, new Special Sessions court judge, placed the problems of juvenile delinquency smack in the laps of parents who he said expected everyone else to take over the reins of rearing their children but themselves.

Some 60,000 New York teachers received their school civil defense manuals which will aid them in their application of instructions with youth. Beatrice Kennedy, graduate of Knoxville college and a member of the staff of Principal Alise Ayers school in Harlem, and Lois Brown, a graduate of the same institution and a former faculty member of Knoxville college, both found the manuals highly informative and stimulating.

Between The Lines

By DEAN GORDON B. HANCOCK for ANP

Over-Anxiety A Hindrance

As an incurable horse-racing fan, the writer has sat through many afternoons of fine horse-racing, and never betting. To observe what fine breeding will do for horses and imagine what it conceivably can do for a man, is all the excitement a sober person needs.

Through many years it has been observed that the horse that gets away first from the post seldom wins the race. They let the fast-starting horse set the pace and the smart jockeys just "lay back" for a final move which oftimes comes on the far turn, where all horses but those of class are shaken off as "also rans.'

The reason the lead horse so invariably fails in the home-stretch is, the anxiety that goes along with pace-setting. The pressure is on the lead horse and the longer this pressure can be evaded the better the chances of coming through in the stretch. Leadership involves killing pressure, which only thoroughbreds, whether horses or men, can withstand. The history of great race horses is the history of horses that could come from behind. and not the history of horses that could hold the lead from post to wire.

The above observation is inspired by the current "craze of Willie Mays." It is difficult not to be crazy about the marvelous Willie. So many good things are being said about him and his baseball exploits are so exciting that the "Willie Mays craze" is a pardonable obsession. Without doubt Willie Mays is the most talked of baseball hero of the times. Just a kid and taking his place among baseball "names." Baseball is proud of Willie.

Negroes are proud of Willie and the world is proud of Willie; and this self-same pride has put upon Willie a peculiar pressure and one that may conceivably handicap him in his chances to equal Babe Ruth's enviable record of home-run hitting. Willie Mays and his 36-home-runs was a sensation once; but since the home run figure has been standing at 36 for several days without an additon, Willie's admirers are becoming deeply concerned as doubtless Willie himself is concerned, and not a little discouraged at this falter in home run production.

The fact is, the great glory that has come to Willie has placed the kid under a great pressure such as that felt by the lead horse in a race. Over-anxiety is hindering Willie and matters are not made better but worse by starting up this Willie Mays Day. Why in the name of high heavens this increased pressure could not have been postponed until later; and certainly until it was found that he would not to be able to equal or excel Ruth's record.

It is difficult to think of a more certain detriment to the ambition of the baseball prodigy than increased pressure that will accompany the increased publicity that will attend "A Willie Mays Day.' Nobody doubts that Willie merits a "Day," but is to be seriously questioned whether the day will not be a detriment-coming as it does in the midst of the excitement and pressure of accomplishing a task that many believed unattainable.

The current slump of "Mays the craze" can in very truth be attributed to pressure stemming over-anxiety to live up to a watchful world's expectation is proving a great handicap and matters are not made better by the proclamation of a Willie May's Day in the midst of his struggle for baseball's immortal crown. It is greatly to be hoped that Willie may overcome the current slump and resume his home run hitting ways.

The way the world has been pulling for the kid is a revelation in human nature. It would have been better if Willie could have been allowed to knock home runs all summer without any reference to Ruth's record; but this was not to be and so the kid has been burdened with pressure stemming from world's of favorable publicity.

The old Reliables Jackie Robinson, Minoso, Doby and Hank Thompson are still doing business at the same old stands for which we all must be grateful. When one is not in the headlines the other is and so the Negro race and the world are being treated daily to examples of Negro excellence in major league baseball. The world has daily suggestions that human excellence is not a matter of color. Over anxiety is a hindrance.

A TROUBLESOME TRICK

By DEAN GORDON B. HANCOCK for ANP

Of all things, a National Association for the Advancement of White People! This writer had always thought that everything, everywhere in this country, worked for the advancement of white people; and that they need something special is a reflection on the white race. With all economic opportunity, with all laws and government, with hundreds of years of free and cheap labor given by lowly millions of Negroes, and with dominion and power in the uttermost parts of the earth, it is certainly a startling revelation to know that whites still need a special organizaion to advance them.

This writer is quite sure that millions of whites will resent the implication that whites need something special in the way of advancement factors, their current factors of advancement being inadequate. No, it is not that the whitse need something special to advance them, but it is a troublesome trick somebody is playing on them.

We have to hand it to Bowles, the organizer of the NAAWP; he knows a bonanza when he sees one. Millions were involved in the exploitation of the ku klux klan idea and millions will be involved before the NAAWP has run its course. Whatever else Bowles may or may not be, he is a shrewd business man and can be counted on to press for the financial advantage involved.

Many years ago, I played checkers with a little grand niece who was about as good as I was and in any particulars better; but she did not know how to set traps and move me into them, and it was on the matter of trapping that I could defeat her. But she began to notice the way I was moving and she set about matching her moves with mine, until the game had been set up.

And when she started this match-moving idea, she gave me no end of trouble. I had to put on my studying cap for sure, once she decided on match-moving. It will be even so in the matter dealing with the NAAWP. It can be made a troublesome organization and may call for summary measures for its ultimate destruction.

This writer has often exhorted readers of this column to expect a counter-attack by opponents of integration. Ever since World War I, segregationists and white supremacists have been under constant fire; and pressures of various kinds have been exerted on their positions with the general result, the segregationists and white supremacists are on the defensive at last. This column has warned Negroes against the ungrounded hope that somehow the great changes and transformations we are seeking to bring about, can be effected without bitter and in some cases—bloody results This warning was, and is, being based upon human nature and upon history.

Powers, however bad, have never been known to evacuate themselves, without a struggle; and the segregationist and white supremacists can be expected to put up a troublesome struggle ere they see the Negro come into his own as an American citizen. The veiled threats that are being continually made in the South and the measures they seek to employ, all indicate, in an unmistakable way, that desperation is a part of the situation which bids fair to loose the Negro and let him go. Pharaoh had to be subdued at the hands of God, ere he let God's people go. The modern pharaohs who would stand at the gates of the paradise of full-fledged citizenship with flaming sword to hinder the Negro's entrance therein, have desperation in their plans; and the organization of an NAAWP is just one of the troublesome tricks to be played upon a gullible public.

Such moves are human nature moves; but they can be dangerous and troublesome notwithstanding. This word is passed along in the hope that Negroes may not be lulled into a state of complacency with Supreme Court decisions; but will gird themselves for the great struggle to be fully free; for there are great obstacles in the way. In the great game of life as in the game of football, over-confidence can be deadly and disasterous. Negroes must not only seize every opportunity to advance their cause, but they must be prepared to deal with situations comparable to the one that the NAAWP made in Delaware. The forces that would thwart integration are alert and resourceful; and above all law-entrenched, in the rule of things. It is going to take great patience and courage and ingenuity, to bring in integration over the protest of the powers tha be. But it can and will be done! A troublesome trick!

In the Last Analysis

The Jew is without doubt the most remarkable people of history. In spite of his smallness of numbers he ranks with the greatest of the great in every field of human endeavor. Among the great names of history, the Jew ranks out of all proportion to his numbers in art, science and literature and the very fact that he gave the world its God and its Bible and its Jesus Christ, places mankind under a great debt of gratitude.

How do we explain the greatness of the Jews? By his performance! His argument has been evermastering in its appeal. The above observation was inspired by the attention being daily directed upon the Negro professional baseball players in the major leagues. Hardly a day passes without reference to some exploit by some Negro in either league or both leagues. If it is not Willie Mays knocking home runs in the National League, it is Minoso knocking home runs in the American League.

As we scan the column of ten great names in the respective leagues, we find Negro names away out of proportion to their numbers, and this goes to show that Negroes must be giving superior performances to warrant such frequent and favorable mention. Negroes in the majors are performing; for in the last analysis, it is performance that counts and is more convincing than a 1,000 arguments.

What is even more important, the press seems quite willing to give the Negro players what they make, and sometimes it is to be feared that they may overplay the exploits of the Negro players, and thus incur the enmity of their white colleagues. The fact that this enmity has not manifested itself, just goes to prove what has long been suspected, and that is, it is in sports that the fair play in matters race relational has its highest manifestation. If the churches of America were as fair-minded, interacially speaking, as are the sports followers throughout the nation, we would not be long making segregation a thing of the sordid past.

It is a shame on the church that it follows, rather than leads, the sports world in interracial fairness. It is a shame that the church must live down, if it is to receive the respect it seeks among the nations. When sports followers accept a player for his performance and the church congregation becomes "nervous" over the question of who will sit where? in the service dedicated to the Son of God, the church is the loser and the sports world the winner. We are living in a world where performance is the only language that can convince and the only that can convert.

The Negro performers are the saviours of the race and the Negro who fails to perform in a critical situation is a tragedy. It is a mighty fine thing to array fine arguments for the Negro's full participation in American life; it is an inspiring thing to find whites wholly prepared to receive the Negro into full citizenship fellowship, but sight must not be lost of the grim fact that in the last analysis, it is not our verbal arguments nor the activities of our friends that determine our status as citizens; in the last analysis it is our performance.

The mere fact that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has waged such a decisive fight for our full citizenship rights is by itself not enough. Unless the magnificent fight that has been made is implemented by Negro performance it is like freezing before a painted fire or dying of thirst before a painted fountain. A thousand Supreme Court decisions cannot atone for a lack of performance; and what we mean is performance all along the line from the topmost to the lowliest echelons of Negro life.

The other day we saw on a common carrier of a certain city a Negro returning home from his work. He was dirty and slouchy and sweaty and smelly, with his shirt-tail hanging out. This writer at first felt not a little ashamed for the fellow; and then it occurred to us that feeling ashamed was not a solution of the problem. Some way must be devised to get the fellow's shirt tail in and responsibility for this desirable consummation rests not so much on the fellow as on those who feel ashamed of him. How the intelligent Negro performs in getting the less fortunate Negro ready for integration is very important.

MORAL COURAGE PAYS OFF

By DEAN GORDON B. HANCOCK For ANP

The place of moral courage in interracial adjustments and solutions cannot be underestimated if we are to arrive at desired goals. For a long time, this column has contended that moral courage was one of the prime essentials in the tedious task of adjustments, under segregation, or solutions, under integration.

In this writer's addresses and discussions before some 25,000 young whites in colleges of the South and North in the last few years, great emphasis has been placed upon moral courage as a major factor in interracial achievement. It has been stubbornly contended that there is today sufficient good will and understanding among intelligent Negroes and whites of the South to save the interracial situation, if sufficient moral courage should be made manifest in the critical premises.

But too often we find whites and Negroes quailing before the challenge of the hour, because of a lack of moral courage.

There are whites who see and understand the dangers and perils of segregation; they understand the corruption and moral torpitudes which stem from segregation and its concomitants; they fully appreciate the disaster inherent in the segregation situation, but they lack the moral courage to say so. There are Negroes who fully appreciate the potency of interracial good will and the Christian approach to race relations; they know that all whites are not our enemies, and that these nobly-inclined whites deserve our highest respect and cooperation; they know that the kingdom of interracial good-will and understanding comes slowly and sometimes without observation; they know that even now after the momentous Supreme court decision, there is before us a long, long road of litigations and struggles, ere the walls of separation are completely torn down; they know that the Supreme court cannot atone for an indifferent appeal to the ballot box;—but they lack the moral courage to say so, lest they be called a gradualist, a term as despicable to Negroes as civil rights is to southern Negrophobes. But the Supreme court decision is but the beginning of the end and not the end itself of segregation.

It was even so with the Emancipation Proclamation; it was the beginning of the end of slavery, but not the end; for even now, human slavery in varied forms is still a factor in the interracial situation. It is well for Negroes to understand that full integration depends in large measure on how they add the might of the ballot to the decision of the Supreme court.

In other words, Negro leadership has come upon a situation where moral courage is the order of the hour. Negroes need to be told that just how fast integration comes depends more largely upon the attitudes of Negroes themselves than upon the dominant whites. Unless the appeal to the courts is paralleled by an appeal to the ballot box, we are still a long way from the Promised Land of full integration. Supreme court decisoins and ballot boxes are interrelated factors in the equation of full-fledged citizenship.

A few days ago, the world took note of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt's 70th birthday. Messages of congratulations and adulations came from the uttermost parts of the earth. Monarchs on their thrones and peasants from their pittance turned their respectful attention to the occasion. Mrs. Roosevelt is without doubt the most majestic moral figure of the 20th century world today.

She has made her life sublime and is leaving behind her indelible footprints upon the sands of time as ten immortal Longfellow was sent to say. How did Mrs. Roosevelt gain this lofty eminence of achievement to command the attention of the civilized world? It was simply her moral courage! And much of this courage involved her relations with Negroes. She did not arrive at the White House scoffing and scorning Negroes. But rather she came with a tender touch for all mankind; and an especially tender touch for the millions of Negroes in this country.

She has been bitterly assailed by the Negrophobes; she has been villified and [illegible] and slaughtered in the press. She has been abused and accused by moral and intellectual Lilliputians; but she has stood her ground and become the most majestic moral figure of the century.

NEGRO(JOHN B. HENDERSON)

Segregated Planning For Pending Desegregation?

By JOHN B. HENDERSON

WHEN THE board of directors of the Virginia Education Association (white) declined the invitation of the Virginia Teachers Association (Negro) to have a joint discussion of the problems of school segregation: stating that, "the interest of the membership of the organization can be served best through the VEA continuing to operate on both local and state levels in its customary and traditional manner," it surprised some and disappointed others.

Norfolk, Va.

It appeared as though the board of directors of the VEA had not heard of the May 17 decision or having heard did not realize its far-reaching significance.

Dr. Henderson

Desegregation is inevitable, there can be no stopping it. All that the Governor, the Attorney General and the powerful machine they lead can do is delay, but not stop. The Governor's commission on education will be losing time and money if it concerns itself only with seeking a way to evade the Court's decision.

With the state officials denouncing the Court and declaring that they intend to perfect an arrangement by which no child of any race will be compelled to attend school with children of another race and with the state board of education advising the local boards to wait until the Court's final decree before addressing themselves to the matter of effecting any change it is understandable why the board of directors of the VEA is of the opinion that "the interest of its members can be served best by continuing to operate in the traditional and customary manner."

WHAT CAME as a surprise though was their failure to think of serving the best interest of the state. It looks as though their only concern was a selfish one: that of serving best their own interest.

All of these petitions to continue segregation are beside the point. The matter of segregation has been settled. That is not before us now. The issue before us now is desegregation. To talk about maintaining traditional and customary procedures reveals an unwillingness to face the fact that something new confronts us which makes that impossible.

Sat. 11-13-54

YOU WOULD expect the teachers to realize that the best interest of all would be served by their addressing themselves now to a consideration of the inevitable. If they are still hoping and praying that the powers that be in Virginia will devise a means for making legal what the Court has said is illegal that is just so much wasted wishful thinking.

Segregated planning for desegregation is what their action amounts to and everyone knows that it is impossible for people to plan separately for something they are going to do jointly.

Two facts stand out in bold relief. Desegregatipn in Virginia is inevitable. The path taken thus far by the political and educational leaders of the state is not the one that will bring Virginia into a glorious and enviable position where she can boast as formerly she did of being the cradle of American democracy.

A Man Gets A Low Blow For Taking A High Stand

By JOHN B. HENDERSON

WHEN THE members of the board of directors of the Petersburg YMCA fired Alfonso McCain from his position as Executive Secretary of the Negro Branch because he was one of the 32 signers of a petition charging that Negroes were unlawfully denied the use of Wilcox Lake they hit him a low blow.

It was way below the belt and the board knew that in the eyes of morally sensitive people it would stand despised and condemned therefore it attempted to cover up its low blow with some high sounding words. It announced a silly and indefensible policy which called for the firing of all who enter into controversial issues. In spite of their high sounding words their foul deeds stand out in bold relief as being unChristian, unAmerican, unfair and unsportsmanlike.

Dr. Henderson

You can't stoop much lower than firing a man because he stands up like a man complies with the laws of his country in an effort to have its fundamental laws applied to a specific situation. That is a man's patriotic and Christian duty. Few thinking Americans will support the thesis that when a man enters the employ of a Christian institution he loses his rights and privileges and duties as a citizen. It is unbelievable that a group of patriotic, Christian gentlemen will see sufficient grounds for firing a man in the fact that he availed himself of a lawfully approved method of seeking redress from a grievous condition under which he and his people were forced to live.

THE WORST part about it is that the matter he complained of was so unfair and unjust and so clearly a violation of the law until there is no doubt in anybody's mind that the court will decide the issue in favor of the petitioners. Now to be fired for taking part in a just and winning battle means that you lose even though you win. If McCain had taken the law in his own hands and defied all constituted authority by forcing his way into the facility that would have been another matter.

But no, he played the game according to the rules; in keeping with accepted American procedure he carried his grievance into court for a just judge to decide the issue. Before he could do that these Christian judges have decided that that was an offense of the worse sort, one deserving the death penalty. Thit is what their action amounts to. When you fire a man you cut off his food supply and the reason you cut off his food supply is because you would starve him to death.

TO THUS FIRE a man is worse than hitting him a death blow. That is the extreme to which race hatred drives men. When you strip the issue of all its trimmings and get down to the bare facts that's all it is: a case of Christian gentlemen being so controlled by prejudice against a Negro who had the courage to expose the unChristian pattern of the community of which they were a part until they denied him the right to earn a livelihood. Rather than rise to the heights of Christian conduct they sank to the lowest depth to which blind and unreasoning prejudice can drag men.

Lest these good men be disappointed in the final outcome of their low blow let them be informed now that getting rid of one of whom they consider a 'smart agitator' who stirred up trouble among Negroes will not end the matter. All Negroes now are stirred up and dissatisfied with a second class status as citizens. They don't need any leader to make them so. The unfair treatment, the unjust arrangement, the illegal restriction you have heaped upon them all through the years is the thing that has aroused them.

You, and not those you consider 'radical leaders,' keep them stirred up and not until you correct the rotten conditions of which they complain, will they be satisfied. Your low blows will only serve to intensify their determination to continue to take high stands.

The Republicans' Bid For The Negro's Vote

By JOHN B. HENDERSON

WITH the pollsters predicting a victory by the Democrats in November it is natural for the Republicans to leave no stone unturned in an effort to remain in power. It was to be expected that their appeal to the Negro for his vote would be based on their record of achievements in the field of civil rights. 10

Dr. Henderson

While they have to their credit a number of new appointments ranging all the way from page boy to the Supreme Court to delegate to the United Nations still the number boasted of is only 164. This is only a very small fraction of the total number of such appointments.

I THINK a much more impressive appeal would have been made by showing that the Negroes appointed to these various jobs in relation to the total number of such appointments was about the same as the ratio of the Negro population is to the total population. I wonder if that was omitted because it was so far out of line until it would have weakened their appeal?

Another comparison that was conspicuous by it's absence was that showing the number of such appointments now as over against the number appointed by Democratic presidents. I, for one, would have been greatly impressed if the release that came to me had revealed an increase on that score. As it is I am left in the dark with only my imagination to fill in the answer as to the reason for that omission.

AS WAS expected the May 17th decision of the Supreme Court is claimed as a Republican achievement although most of the men who made it were appointed by Democratic presidents. What the outcome of that decision will be still remains to be seen. A glance into history will show that the Republicans freed the Negro and supervised a program of Reconstruction that saw the beginning of his integration into American life as a free man.

But before that was completed economic forces drove them to compromise on their stand. To win southern support for high tariff they gave them a free hand to deal with the Negro as as they saw fit. The result was that the Republicans stood by and watched the white South hedge the Negro about with every conceivable restriction which almost amounted to his reenslavement. I wonder how they will follow thru after the Court's final decree on desegregation?

OTHER FEATURES of the release were much more important than the listing of a few plums thrown to 164 Negroes. That Ike had eliminated segregation in the Armed Services, wiped it out in the Nation's capital and issued an executive order that banned racial discrimination on all contracts for government work are real achievements that bring benefits to thousands of Negroes.

Much more significant than a few Negroes being invited to have dinner at the White House is whether the great mass of Negroes have anything for dinner in their own homes. That depends upon the condition of the country's economy in general for as fares America so fares the Negro.

THAT THE Administration has had a difficult time making the adjustment from a war economy to a peace-time one no one will doubt. It is to be credited with bringing us through thus far with only a mild recession which, according to the experts, has spent itself and the trends in industry and business are on the up grade again.

If Ike were running for reelection I would be all for him because most of the things the Republicans are boosting about are things like Ike has done. The record of their accomplishments is not too impressive. When you cast your vote let it be for an individual whose record merits it and not for a party. No matter what the party claims as an accomplishment to boast about, look behind that for the record of the individual and cast your vote accordingly.

Coronado—No Bright Lights Seen At Home

By JOHN B. HENDERSON

ENROUTE TO St. Louis I spent a night in that section of Richmond, Va., where Negroes are moving into what was formerly an all-white community. There have been no acts of violence, few if any unpleasant incidents and no threats or intimidation. Negroes and whites live side by side in a peaceful and friendly manner.

On arriving in St. Louis I found Negroes staying in most of the large downtown hotels and eating in many of the downtown restaurants. The school board there has already begun its program of desegregation by uniting its two teacher training colleges and has plans already made to complete the program by next Fall. There I visited a former Norfolkian who is living in a neighborhood that was formerly all white and has only recently seen Negroes move in. All was calm and peaceful. Pat 9-25-54

I had begun to think that maybe afterall the Kingdom of God is coming. I was rudely awakened out of that dream when I arrived home in Norfolk. The papers were filled with the news of the third bombing in Coronado and with articles telling of the indifference of high local and state officials who turned deaf ears to the pleas of law abiding citizens of color for reinforced police protection. It made me long for a way to make contact with Bland to ask him to call in his "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny." I'm certain that if he were living now he would have long since changed his mind.

TO NATIVE born Virginians; who have been taught something of her glorious past and are proud of the important part great Virginians played in establishing this country on high principles; it is most distressing to see how Virginia has falled and is continuing to fall so that no one anywhere who is seeking to live by the noble ideals of the founding fathers looks at Virginia for leadership.

To members of the Christian church who like to think that religion is one of the most powerful forces in our society it is distressing to see the church impotent in a situation where her influence is needed and silent when her voice should be heard. Coronado is a disgrace to Virginia, the cradle of American democracy and a reflection on every church in the community.

ARE THE GOOD Samaritans they talk about in Sunday school all on the Jericho Road? Some are needed on Widgeon road. Where are those who practice the Golden Rule to which they pay pious lip service? Where are the zealous missionaries who would make Christians of the heathens in foreign lands? Have they forgotten the word that says. "Ye shall be witnesses of me in Jerusalem and in Judea"? Are they thinking only of "the uttermost parts of the earth?" The light shines farthest that shines brightest at home.

Coronado needs something else in addition to adequate police protection. It needs more Christians who are genuine and true and not afraid to practice the principles they preach. Anytime children and adults, during day time, enter a stricken home and destroy the property of another after taking what they want, with an audience of onlookers from the community giving sanction to their lawlessness, that speaks volumes to the world of the low level to which the morality of that community has sunk.

THAT, MORE SO than the bombings, gives insight into the effectiveness of the work and influence of the churches of the community. If Christians are the salt of the earth and the light of the world as Christ, the head of te church, said they would be, then He who expects that of them must be deeply distressed and disappointed with those who claim to be his followers in Coronado. When you pray for Coronado don't just think of the Negroes who live under the threat of death remember also, to pray for the members of the white churches whose lights shine but dimly.

What's Behind Defiance Of The Supreme Court?

Journal & Guide P.10
Sat. 11-6-54 31a

By JOHN B. HENDERSON

IT APPEARS that Virginia's Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, who lost his case before the Supreme Court for the continuation of segregation in Virginia's public schools, has decided to use the influence of his office to arouse public sentiment against the Court and the May 17 decision. He, together with other big wigs of the machine that has run Virginia for years, are repeatedly saying in effect, "to hell with the Supreme Court."

Dr. Henderson

They accept as proof positive that the people of Virginia are against the mixing of children in school the parrot-like repetition of their own words in resolutions passed by various groups from all over the state that are nothing but small segments of the machine they dominate. What else can be expected from the small fry in the machine but approval of the position of the big shots? No court house crowds would dare oppose the party bosses. It would be political suicide.

Norfolk, Va.

IT IS DIFFICULT to understand the purpose behind the course of action now being taken by the politicians in the state. Do they think that this defiance of the Court will intimidate the Court and cause it to retreat from the position taken in its decision? Do they think that this rebellion against the Court which they have inspired will soften the Court into turning over to them this matter when they have openly expressed again and again that their intention is to circumvent the decision?

You would think that if they wanted the matter turned over to them they would now be doing all they could to carry out the intent of the decision and thus convince the Court of their good faith and trustworthiness in working out the details. The purpose behind this campaign of rebellion and denunciation cannot be that they hope thereby to impress or influence the Court.

MAYBE THEIR objective is to intimidate the Negro with the hope that he will retreat and accept humbly and passively a continuation of segregation. It that's what is behind it they are in for a rude awakening. The grandfathers years ago might have been frightened by the "good white folks" to accept humbly and passively, gross injustices but most of the grandfathers are dead now. Their grandchildren are made of different stuff. They do not frighten easily.

The present-day Negro has learned a lot from the "good white folks." He has learned to be just like them. He has carefully studied your record, past and present, and learned your technique. He has seen you take a stand for what you considered to be your inalienable rights and inspite of powerful opposition that came from the majority, the freedom loving minority would not back down. With the fire of a desire for freedom burning in your hearts, with a firm belief in the justice of your own cause planted in your minds you fought to the limits of your ability, praying God and appealing to the conscience of the world for help.

WE LEARNED from you the technique we are now using and we, like you, will not be frightened into abandoning our crusade for freedom. We believe that our cause is just and that God and His people the world over will agree with us and come to our aid.

Can you appeal to world public opinion and the God you claim to serve to help you continue your program of humiliation and discrimination? The decision you now complain of was made by nine white men who interpreted a law passed by white men. The makers of the law and the interpreters of the law were men of honor and integrity who were concerned only with justice and right. We will not be frightened because we too are on the side of right and right one day will win.

NEW YORK — Bumped into Walter White at the Waldorf-Astoria and complimented him on the beautiful tie he was wearing. Walter flipped it over and showed me the label — "Christian Dior!" said Walter, "This was an unusual Christmas — I like every tie I received as a gift."

Incidentally, Walter is easily one of the best dressed men about town.

Walter White calls to mind the NAACP and Police Commissioner Billy Rowe's suggestion that we call it "The National Association for the Advancement of Christian Principles."

I like that name and I'll vote for the change.

The NAACP is helping as many white people as colored to be real Americans. Hardest thing about the job is to try to convince dumb bunnies like Jimmy Byrnes and "Hum-m n'" Talmadge that they need our help!

Followed By FBI

The FBI is quietly investigating public relations counsel John D. Silvera for a spot in the Ike administration. Best guess is that it will be a Mutual Security Post. Johnny, however, has long wanted to be a military attache abroad.

Dr. Ralph Bunche, who is as handsome as he wants to be, showed up at the Waldorf-Astoria Tuesday with a terrible looking haircut. I had to smile when I saw it for I felt I knew exactly what happened.

Dr. Bunche travels about twice as much as I do and I know what it means when your hair gets long on the road. If you don't get it cut you need a dog's license.

If you do get it cut by a strange barber he will invariably cut it according to the style of the local community, no matter how well you caution him.

This can mean anything from a "skinny bean" one finds around the lumber and mining towns, to a set of "bangs," which the school kids wear in the Midwest. Bunche probably got desperate and took the plunge into a strange barber shop.

Wonder what Wilhelmina Adams of Harlem has to say about the appointment of Ann Hedgeman as assistant to the mayor of New York? Wilhelmina, you may recall, is the lassie who told Ann she didn't know the score when Ann dived into NY politics after a stint in Washington.

"New York is different from Washington, darling," said Mrs. Adams. Ann is probably sitting in the mayor's office now saying, "It sure is."

Turned Down Jobs

Incidentally, Ann turned down three jobs belonging to minority people before getting her appointment.

Dottie Fleming of the New Haven Flemings has rejoined the Gay Northeasterners. She was one of the girls who organized it. It originally was composed of doctors' daughters only.

John Thomas is back as manager of the Theresa Bar. When the new management took over, Thomas and the new concessionaire just couldn't agree on things. So Thomas took a walk.

The concessionaire died recently and the first thing his wife did after she buried him was to call Thomas back to the job where he belongs!

Most beautiful dress I saw during the holidays was worn by Ella Stevens, wife of Judge Harold Stevens, at the Gothamettes' matinee dance. Nicest tie I saw (despite Walter White's Christian Dior) was one that Jackie Robinson gave me for Christmas!

When Paul Hoffman was given the George Washington Carver Memorial for "outstanding contributions to race relations," most of the people who attended the luncheon were asking, "What did he do?" Good question!

Studebaker hires thousands of colored workers — but so do hundreds of other industries in this land of ours. What else has Hoffman done besides giving us a fair day's pay for a fair day's work? I think the Carver Fund should answer the question.

One Convincing Car

How about giving the NAACP a Studebaker car to raffle off and make a little loot, Mr. Hoffman? When you give it to the NAACP we KNOW you are on our side!

Put down three and pick up five if Colonel B. O. Davis is not raised to a brigadier general during the next session of Congress! It's already in the works.

Mrs. Hulan Jack, who is now the first lady of the Borough of Manhattan, received a five-foot-tall, 20-year-old poinsettia plant in full bloom as a Christmas gift from a florist, who sent one to the mayor's wife also. It's potted and growing and the most beautiful thing you ever saw.

Oddly enough, the first political casualty in the New York elections was Thelma Berlack Boozer, who worked for four years for winner Bob Wagner, our mayor, but who, up to this point, is being left out as the gravy train rolls around.

Thelma will be replaced by Aretha Brooks in Hulan Jack's office. Aretha earned the title around Wagner headquarters during the campaign as "Our Miss Brooks."

Perhaps Wagner has something better in store for Thelma. If not it's the unkindest cut of them all, and this is not to take any credit away from "Our Miss Brooks."

Marguerite Cartwright, one of the more erudite women byliners has disagreed with us in her New York column concerning some of our opinions on Archibald Carey's work in the UN.

Laughed At Waldorf

We laughed with her about it at the Waldorf Tuesday. Disagreement can be nice when lovelies like Marguerite, agree to disagree with you so agreeably! It's the American way!

Confession is good for the soul department: Last fall Jackie Robinson summoned newsmen to a press conference to complain that colored papers had attacked him on a Birmingham incident without getting his side of the story.

When I reported the story for the AFRO, I wrote that Jackie had said, "No papers called me up to get my side."

AFRO sports editor Sam Lacy took Jackie to task for making such a statement and pointed out to AFRO readers that he had called Jackie and not only got his side, but printed his side in the AFRO.

I checked back with Jackie and Jackie told me he had said "no paper but the AFRO called me to get my side." I have now checked my notes against those of my colleagues who covered the conference and find that Jackie was right. He did say, "No paper but the AFRO" called him.

I hereby admit being wrong in misquoting Jackie and will go sit in a doghouse with my typewriter and eat crow until good friends, Jackie and Sam Lacy, kiss and make up.

Move over Fido!

By James Hicks

(This is the third and last of a series in which the writer explains why he cannot be "friends" with many white people in high places whose idea of friendship to colored people is based on whether colored people agree with their own thinking. The series was based on an interview with E. E. Moore, vice president of U.S. Steel)

Final chapter on Mr. E. E. Moore

AFTER MR. MOORE had told me all about his relations with colored people he began to get more chummy. He seemed to feel that he had established his case as a friend of the colored race and it apparently never occurred to him that I had not avidly accepted him as such.

Mr. Hicks

He talked so much about how well he knew colored people that I began to brace myself for what I figured certainly would come next. I waited for him to tell me he had had a colored "Mammy."

Thinks Of Johnson

As he talked I sat and watched him and thought of what James Weldon Johnson had so adequately pointed out in his great book "Along This Way." This is the book in which Johnson speaks so admirably of the "dual personality" of the colored man.

I said to myself "This is cute. Here is this big man in this high place who is looking at one side of my "dual personality" and convincing himself that he has "snowed me under" as his "friend."

I asked myself: Who is the really smart man in this interview?" I concluded that it was I and not Mr. Moore who was the smarter of the two.

Let Him Talk On

I knew that one word to him on how I really felt would abruptly end the interview and that I would be the loser in more ways than one. So I just sat tight and showed him the "white man's side" of my dual personality and let him talk on.

And as he talked I asked myself "How could this ever be friendship? Here's a man who says to me in effect "I am white, I am big, but I have stooped to bother to learn you and your people and their problems and as long as you are willing to let me help you in the way I want to help you we can be friends.

"I can give you a job as an engineer making good money, but before I give you that job you first must convince me that you know your place by taking a job sweeping the floor in the engineer department."

Bid Rejected

This is the kind of friendship I reject from all white people and I suppose because of it, I and thousands of others like me, will be poor the rest of our lives.

It's a friendship built on sand. A unilateral thing that the white man can strike down the moment the colored man gets "out of place."

Mr. Moore never got around to telling me he had a colored "Mammy." But he told me a joke. It was a joke about a colored man and a colored woman who worked in one of the U.S. Steel plants. It was risque and I like risque jokes. But this one had a racial angle. I won't attempt to repeat the joke.

Suffice it to say that the joke centered around the loose morals of a colored man working in the plant and his conception of the morals or lack of morals of colored women.

Laughs Loudly

Mr. Moore laughed loudly at his own joke. I laughed too. It was "the white man's side" of me that laughed.

The colored man's side of me wondered what his reaction would have been if I had taken the same joke and told it to him with a white woman playing the leading character beside the colored worker who took such a dim view of women's morals.

I knew what would have happened. Moore would have tabbed me in his book as "uppity," not worthy of his friendship. He would have been right. I don't make friends with white people who take a dim view of the morals of the women of my race.

For every colored woman hustler Mr. Moore can point to in U.S. Steel I can point out a white one to him swinging through the revolving doors of the Theresa Hotel in New York.

A Two - Way Street

But this is not important and Mr. Moore should realize it. Friendship is a two way street. Some of my best friends are prostitutes and hustlers who take me for what I am and whom I, in return, take for what they are in sincere friendship.

Mr. Moore is not willing to accept me for what I am. He considers me a "crusader" on the race problem. He does not feel that colored newspapers should crusade on such a problem.

He feels that I should be of the "gradualism" school. That I should sit back and pat his firm on the back in my articles for hiring some colored people rather than pointing out that the firm does not have a fair hiring policy.

In short Mr. Moore feels that I should be "nice" and not embarrass big white people even when I know they are wrong. I should not think for myself. And if I do, I hhould not write what I think if it is contrary to Mr. Moore's thinking.

These are the terms of friendship of a big white man in a high place.

That is why we shook hands and parted in friendship — but can never be friends.

Mrs. Spaulding's job safe, he says

WASHINGTON CIRCLES are asking about the future fate of Mrs. Jane Spaulding, who was gently kicked upstairs by Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby of the Health Education and Welfare Department to a higher paying job in the War Contracts Commission.

Mr. Hicks

The fate of the War Contracts Commission itself is in doubt. Under the regulations which created it, the agency should have been abolished long ago, but there are a number of agencies in Washington today still living on borrowed time from the war days.

From the viewpoint of this column, however, Mrs. Spaulding's job is safer than the agency itself.

By this we mean that even if the agency is abolished, it appears that some other job will be found for Mrs. Spaulding because of the influential friends she has in high places.

When Mrs. Hobby decided to get rid of Mrs. Spaulding she went after her with no holds barred and there was nothing in her plans to find her another job in another agency.

However, this writer happens to know that Senator Lodge and a very influential white woman high in GOP circles in New York, came to Mrs. Spaulding's aid and made it plain that she either would stay where she was, or be given a job paying more money.

The White House supported Senator Lodge in this and it resulted in the second beating Mrs Hobby has taken at the White House level in what appears to be a determined effort to give colored people a rough time.

Against Mixed Schools

The other attempt came when Mrs. Hobby sought to defeat the integration of military schools at the White House level and had her ears pinned back by Defense Secretary Wilson and President Eisenhower.

There seems to be some question as to just why the Texas-born Mrs. Hobby has singled out the colored race as her target, but there is little doubt in Washington circles that colored people will ever get anything thrown their way through her.

At the present time there are widely circulated reports that Mrs. Hobby will seriously cut down on money and other government aid to Howard university.

This cannot be confirmed at present but there have been signs indicating that she is moving in that direction.

Curt At Howard

Howard professors are still talking about her high - handed visit to the university. She left everyone speechless with her curt remarks.

This reporter has actually seen a copy of the letter which Mrs. Hobby is said to have drafted and asked Mrs. Spaulding to sign and issue to the press, attacking Representative Adam C. Powell, for attacking Mrs. Hobby.

You may recall that Mr. Powell openly charged that Mrs. Hobby was blocking integration attempts by the Federal government both in military schools and federal hospitals in her native state of Texas.

The letter for Mrs. Spaulding's signature was supposed to be an effort to take the heat off Mrs. Hobby when the colored press picked up the charges made against her by Mr. Powell. Mrs. Hobby had denied writing the statement. One thing is certain Mrs. Spaulding refused to sign it.

Refuses To Sign

Anyone reading the statement can see why. Even the most flannel - mouthed person would have refused to sign the statement.

It was strictly the statement of an Uncle Tom and if Mrs. Spaulding had been inept enough to sign it she would have been crucified by her people.

To her credit she refused to sign it and it cost her her job. But fortunately she had friends and is still working.

It all adds up to one thing. Mrs. Hobby is the person to watch in the Eisenhower cabinet when it comes to civil rights.

Lautier corrects White House error

NEWSMAN LOUIS LAUTIER, ably supported by fiery Judge James Cobb, can claim a victory over the White House, the Justice Department, the Labor Department, and all the rest of the government's fact finding agencies.

MR. HICKS

Louis, who is too modest to say so, has now been officially declared the winner in a battle of historical facts.

The White House said first that J. Ernest Wilkins' new job as assistant secretary of Labor placed him in the highest position ever held by a colored man in the United States government.

White House correspondents, ever those to be sticklers for facts, disputed the high authorities from the very first and this week saw their high level surrender.

GOP Blows It Up

This is how it all started.

The Republicans in their eagerness to make Wilkins' big appointment even bigger than it was, announced at a White House press conference that his subcabinet position was a "first" for the colored race.

The reporters who covered the White House when the announcement was made immediately came over to the Labor Department for a press conference with Wilkins and his new boss, Secretary James Mitchell.

On the way over, Louis, who had been at the White House, told a white reporter that the announcement as to the "first" was not exactly according to fact.

Story Put On Wires

Meanwhile as Mr. Hicks rushed from the White House to the Labor Department, the White House correspondent for the Associated Press sent his "lead."

When Louis and the others arrived at the Department the story was already on the wires.

At the press conference Louis sat beside the white reporter to whom he had expressed doubts about the appointment being a first.

Secretary Mitchell had just announced the "first" and introduced Mr. Wilkins when the white reporter spoke up.

"My friend, Louis here" he said, "tells me that this is not the first time a colored man has held such a position."

Mitchell Frowns

Secretary Mitchell frowned. "According to our researchers," he said, "Mr. Wilkins is the first of his race to hold such a high post." He said it with a finality that made it appear that the matter was closed.

But he didn't reckon with the fact-finding reporters, and most of all he didn't reckon the fact-finding Louis Lautier.

With his reputation as a finder of fact thus challenged, Lautier rose in his quiet manner and said:

"Mr. Secretary, during the Taft administration William H. Lewis served as an assistant attorney general to the attorney general."

Then Lautier, who probably knew Wilkins better than any man in the room (they are fraternity brothers) added, "I think that now that Mr. Wilkins memory has been refreshed that he, too, will recall Mr. Lewis."

Mr. Wilkins, the new appointee thought a minute and said he wasn't sure but what Mr. Lewis had not been a "special" assistant (a position which would be of less stature than the one Wilkins now has).

When it appeared that neither the Labor Secretary or anyone else present in an official capacity was going to press for the facts further, the conference finally ended with the situation still up in the air.

But the reporters did not stop digging.

When I reached the downstairs offices of Herb Little, press secretary of the Labor Department, a reporter was on the phone with the Justice Department and the Department had just informed him that Lewis had been a special assistant.

No Proof Offered

But the Justice Department did not offer any proof except the word of the Department That might be enough for some people but not a group of Washington correspondents.

I got on the phone and called Judge Cobb, who had served as a special assistant himself in the Justice Department.

I told Judge Cobb what the hassle was all about.

"Lautier is right" said the fiery Justice.

"I don't care who says so, Lewis was not a special assistant. He was an assistant attorney general and he sat down there with an office full of folks working under him."

Lists 12 things we need to do

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Pardon me. This may start a fight—but if it does I think we both can live through it—and it may do both of us a lot of good.

Mr. Hicks

What would you say if I asked you to to list the 12 most important things which you feel we as a race should do in order to better ourselves?

Sure, I know it's a tender subject which might bring out some tough answers. But let's face it. We're adults' aren't we? We should be able to look each other in the eye and talk about ourselves.

In order to get you to thinking about it before you answer, I'll give you a list of the 12 things which a prominent church leader has written up as a guide.

Lists 12 Things

The lady I'm referring to is Mrs. Nannie R. Burroughs, able president of the Women's Auxiliary of the National Baptist Convention, Inc.

Mrs. Burroughs says these are the 12 things that we must do for ourselves. Here they are:

1. We must learn to put first things first. (Mrs. Burroughs says these "first things" are education, development of character traits; a trade, and home ownership.)

2. We must stop expecting God and white people to do for us what we can do ourselves.

3. We must keep ourselves, our children, and our homes clean, and make the surroundings in which we live comfortable and attractive.

4. We must learn to dress more appropriately for work and leisure.

5. We must make our religion an everyday practice and not just "a Sunday go to meeting" emotional affair.

Must Wipe Out Ignorance

6. We must resolve to wipe out mass ignorance.

7. We must stop charging our failure up to our color, and to the attitude of white people.

8. We must overcome our bad job habits.

9. We must improve our conduct in public places.

10 We must learn to operate business for people—not for colored people only.

11. The average so-called educated person will have to come down out of the air. Mrs. Burroughs says he is too inflated over nothing. He needs an experience similar to the one Ezekiel had. And he must do what Ezekiel did (Ezekiel 3:14-19), and

12. He must stop forgetting his friends. He must learn to remember.

Not His Words

There you are. Those are not my words. They belong to a person of far greater experience and wisdom than this writer. The name Nannie Burroughs behind any statement is food for plenty of thought.

But Nannie Burroughs, wise woman that she is, will be the first to admit that she does not know everything, and that everybody will not agree with her on everthing.

So we're laying it out before you. First, do you agree with Mrs. Nannie Burroughs?

Do you accept her 12 items as listed above? If not what 12 things would you suggest that colored people do to help themselves progress.

Wants Your Answers

Send your answers to the AFRO-AMERICAN Newspapers, 628 N. Eutaw st., Baltimore 1, Md. and mark them "Attention Jimmy Hicks." We're going to publish those you send.

If you agree with all of Mrs. Burroughs' 12, just send a note saying, "I agree with all 12," and sign your name and address.

That makes it easy on you. If you can't buy all 12, just write "I agree with all but numbers so and so," and then substitute your own for the ones with which you disagree.

Of course if you don't agree with any of them—sit down and grab your pen and give me 12 new ones.

Wants Some Replies

In any case let me hear from you, will you?

Incidentally, do you know what Mrs. Burroughs was talking about in item No. 11 when she said some of these educated people need to have an experience like Ezekiel had—and do like Ezekiel did?

You mean you don't know? You mean you haven't read Ezekiel 3:14-19?

Well look, man, don't sit there looking stupid waiting for ME to tell you what it says! Stop asking me if I know—and get your own Bible out!

Frankly—I'm going out and borrow somebody's Bible right now!

AFRO's Hicks Twice Honored

U.S. Steel expose cited

Reporter gives 'little man' credit

PHILADELPHIA

James L. Hicks, AFRO-AMERICAN columnist, Wednesday night, lauded "those Americans, who even in this day and time, are not afraid to stand up and be quoted on what is right and just and decent."

He was speaking as the recipient of an award from the Philadelphia Fellowship Commission, at its annual dinner in the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

Referring to Hicks' series of articles on the segregated hiring policy of U.S. Steel in Bucks County, under the heading, "Delaware, U.S.A.," Dr. Tanner G. Duckrey, who introduced him, said his "courageous exposes of discrimination have materially advanced social justice."

Job, Housing Democracy

Hicks wound up his short remarks by saying that U.S. Steel "should have one hiring policy and that policy should be based only on the qualifications of the man to fit the job."

"When William Levitt and sons build a new house anywhere in America," Hicks said, "the doors to that house should swing open to any American, regardless of his race, who is qualified to move into it and make it a good American home."

Hicks was one of four publicists receiving citations from the Fellowship Commission.

Others Are Cited

Edward R. Murrow, CBS radio and TV commentator, rereceived the 1954 commission award, and was the principal speaker at the dinner.

Others cited were Yaroslav J. Chyz, director of the foreign language press division of the Common Council for American Unity; John Cogley, executive editor of the Commonwealth magazine; and Morton Wishengard, writer of NBC's "Eternal Light" (radio) and "Frontiers of Faith" (TV) programs.

Philadelphia's Mayor Joseph Clark presented Murrow the Fellowship's award.

Murrow's talk was on the theme, "Today, The Best Time in Which to Live," at the Press For Freedom dinner.

In his address he declared that "America must desist from the idea that our faith must be protected from other faiths and acts" which differ from ours.

Hicks' Citation

The citation to Jimmy Hicks read as follows:

"To James Hicks
Whose courageous exposes of discrimination and segregation in public life, employment, housing, education and the armed forces have materially advanced social justice.

Whose faith in the democratic process and the [illegible] ness of the American p[illegible] brings nearer the day when America will enjoy the blessings of a clear conscience, the full creative contributions of all of its citizens and the unity so essential to a better tomorrow, The Philadelphia Fellowship Commission presents its National Citation as an abiding expression of appreciation and hope for continued success."

Reporter gets league award

Presented Monday in Theresa Hotel

NEW YORK — The Urban League of Greater New York's second annual award "to a newsman who has made an outstanding contribution to the welfare of the community" was presented Monday to James L. Hicks.

The award to Mr. Hicks, New York correspondent for the AFRO - AMERICAN Newspapers, was made during the league's "send off" luncheon in Theresa Hotel, marking the 127th anniversary of the founding of the colored press.

Mr. Hicks was especially cited for his series of articles on employment and housing conditions of colored people in Bucks county, Pa., where U.S. Steel Co. has opened its giant new Fairless plant.

Editor Presents Award

Whitelaw Reid, president and editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, presented the award to Mr. Hicks, and Henry L. Moon, NAACP public relations director, spoke on "Leadership and the Press."

Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the league, in announcing the luncheon, said:

"The Urban League is proud to present these annual press anniversary luncheons to honor newspaper reporters who have carried on the crusading tradition begun in 1827 by John Russwurm and the Rev. Samuel Cornish."

Private Lives Of The Famous Is Everybody's Business

Great artists of whatever race or field often are acts of God, not creations of the human will or intelligence. Many exceptional artists are not very intelligent, except in their own particular field. Outside of their art, their names could be published without injury, insult, or libel, it would be quite clear what I mean. For example, So-And-So, famous and contemporary, sings a popular song in a way to break your heart, hold your attention and sell a million records. But So-And-So's personal life is a disgrace and a shambles.

Another very famous SoAndSo, whose name has a big box office value in the theatre is in person soulscarred, disreputable, and uncrowd. People will be moved, held spelbound, and stirred to applause. But folks who know the star often say bad words when they mention the name. Fame, yes, and artistic discipline — but a personal life lived without wisdom or self-control.

Sat. 12-4-54

But I think that the old saying, "More to be pitied than damned," might be changed to "More to be PRAISED than damned" in the case of artists who, in spite of their personal problems have enough artistic discipline and grit to battle their way to fame. It is not easy to be famous in any field, and is is even less easy when personal weaknesses tie their chains about the feet. For that reason, I have little sympathy for the kind of contemporary journalism that seeks to pry into the personal lives of famous living people and expose their sins and failings to the public gaze. Keyhole journalism is reprehensible, and, to my mind, especially so when applied to artists who give pleasure and beauty and fun to a wide public. Theatre and motion picture stars, singers and dancers, painters and poets, playwrights and novelists, are human beings like anyone else subject to the same kinds of temptations and pitfalls and human weaknesses as are less famous people.

A butcher or baker may sin without the whole world becoming aware of it, or discussing it over their chops and bread. But let a well-known artist miss'ep a little —every gossip columnist in the country will mention it from coast to coast. It might even make front page headlines, and the second rate magaines will have a field day. Just let a well-known young jazz musicians get caught with a couple of reefers — front page news! But a grocer boy may stand on the corner smoking reefers all day and nobody pays him any mind. Just let a movie star be caught making love without marriage! Scandal! But the man next door to you may have fathered seven kids out of wedlock. It never gets in print.

"Famous people should behave themselves," you say.

The answer is "Everybody should behave themselves." But not many human beings behave very well. Famous folks should no more be condemned for their misdeameanors than others. Walking the tight rope of publicity, as they do, it is a marvel that they don't fall off more often. High tensions and high pressures are a daily problem for big career people. Almost superhuman wisdom, tact and self-control are needed to walk in the spotlight of fame in these days of radio and TV and newsprint everywhere. A motion picture, a painting, a book, a play a record used to be all that reached the world — the artist was known by his or her art the work that was done, the thing created. Now, waking or sleeping, EVERYTHING the artist does is considered grist for the public mill. Almost anybody is liable to do something wrong something unconventional, something somebody else might not agree with or approve of, once in awhile. But the old song "It ain't nobody's business if I do," no longer covers the contemporary celebrity. The famous today live in completely glass houses.

As a columnist I don't believe it is right to use printed words to expose to public gaze the personal lives of living people who are not criminals. Opinions about art may legitimately differ. Therefore, criticism of books, paintings, musical or dramatic performances are in order no matter how sharp the critics may be. But the exposure of human weaknesses--APART FROM THE ART OF THE ARTIST off the screen, out of the concert hall, or theatre, or outside the covers of the book is another field — a personal and private field — that should be respected. Celebrities like anyone else, deserve to have a private life. "Invasion of privacy" is a basis for libel suits. It is also the basis for shame, a blot on decent journalism and a sticky, ugly kind of word mongering which only God can forgive. And I doubt if He does.

The 1954 Book Harvest Of Negro Themes For Christmas Giving

Good books help to create awareness and understanding, add to one's knowledge, broaden one's horizons, and entertain while informing. There is nothing better to give at Christmas than a carefully selected book. This year there are many new books by or about Negroes.

Here are some of the current books which I think might, for profit or provocation, amusement or interest, delight or delectation, be hung under almost any reader's Christmas tree:

NOVELS

SOUTH STREET by William Gardner Smith, the story of three brothers in Philadelphia, and their street that is like Lenox avenue in New York or U Street in Washington or South Parkway in Chicago or Vine Street in Washington or South Central avenue in Los Angeles. 312 pages. $3.50.

YOUNGBLOOD by John O. Killens, a big first novel by a new young writer, a study of family life in the Deep South with all the trials and tribulations that beset the race in a small community there. 566, $3.95.

To The Colored Teachers Of The South — A Salute

Rose Leary Love, a teacher in the primary grades in Charlotte, N. C., sent this little anecdote about a child in her classes to the "NEA Journal" where it was published under the title of "The Little Teacher."

Now that the new school terms are beginning, it might help us to appreciate the worth of our teachers and our schools, so I reprint it for us:

"He was a little brown boy, just six years old. This was his first year at school, but he had proved to be a most interesting, dependable child. He had progressed to the point where he was able to read in easy primers.

"One day I asked, 'Who can help you with your reading at home, son?'

"'No one, ma'am,' he answered. 'My grandma can't read.' Then his little face seemed to light up as she said, 'But I'm teaching her.'

"'Oh, are you?' I said with surprise. 'How are you doing it?'

"'Well, we read together,' he replied. 'Every night I take her over the lesson, and I tell her the words. We're reading my book together.' His eyes were glowing.

"'Maybe I can help you with Grandma,' I said. Then, we began making plans. From our first-grade library came an easy reader and some weekly-reader papers.

"But before he carried his material home, he stood by my side and went over the hard words that he might be able to tell his grandmother correctly. Copies of her name, the city and an easy letter were sent to her. Diligently, he brought in her copies for approval.

Not being able to see Grandma, I was unable to evaluate her real progress, but I was able to evaluate the love and interest of this child. He had demonstrated the truly great attributes of a teacher. He had given me a shining example of true and unselfish service."

There are many touching stories in Negro history about learning to read and write, and about children helping parents. While doing research at the Schomburg collection of the Countee Cullen Library in Harlem for my recent book, "Famous American Negroes," I came across several such incidents.

One concerned the poet, Paul Laurence Dunbar, whose mother had been a slave and who could not read or write when Paul was born in Dayton, Ohio, in 1872. But when her son was big enough, she sent him to school, and she learned as he learned.

But the son made faster progress than the mother and, although she learned to read, she never did learn to write very well or rapidly. Years later when her son was famous as a writer and away in the East, a friend passed her house very early one day.

Mrs. Dunbar was already hanging out clothes. She told the friend she wanted to get through washing early that morning because she had a hard day's work yet ahead of her. The friend asked, "What have you got to do that will take all day?"

"Write a letter to my son," answered Mrs. Dunbar.

Booker T. Washington and his mother studied together, too, when after working from dawn to dusk in the salt pits of West Virginia, young Booker would come home at night and get out his second-hand blue-backed speller. Mother and son would "test" each other.

There was then not even a teacher for Negroes in the town where they lived, so they had to puzzle out the words as best they could. But finally the Negroes of the town raised enough money to send for a teacher.

Then men, women and children all went to school, the children by day and the grown-ups at night. The paths to learning for the freedmen were not easy in the years just after the Civil War. And, in some parts of our country, they are not easy yet.

For Negroes, until very recently, schooling has usually been most inadequate in small Southern communities and in "the rurals." In Harlem today I know many young Negroes from the South who never learned to read or write well — and some, not at all.

Sporadic school attendance, truancy laws that did not operate for colored children, poverty, continual moving from pillar to post, all operated against them — and against teachers trying to teach them.

I have always had great admiration for southern Negro school teachers battling against the greatest odds to impart knowledge to their charges.

Now that integration is coming (so the papers say) and no school will any longer get the dirty end of the stick, as the colored schools used to — short supplies, old books, no gymns, no truant officers — let's pay tribute to all the wonderful teachers who, in less than a century since freedom, managed to almost entirely tear away from the eyes of our people the veil of illiteracy which slavery left us.

To grown-up teachers like Rose Leary Love, and to "little teachers" like the child in her story, a salute of remembrance, and gratitude, and hope that the hardest days are gone.

Simple Says Jazz, Jive And Jam Could Help Integration Along

"In my opinion," said Simple, "jazz, jive, and jam would be better for race relations than all this gab, gaff, and gas they put out. All this talking that white folks do, and big Negroes, too, about how to get along together — just a little jam session would have everybody getting along without having to listen to so many speeches."

"What has brought to you such a brilliant thought this evening?" I demanded.

"Joyce took me to a Race Relations Seminar which her club and twenty others gave and man, it lasted three days! It started on a Friday night and it were not over until Sunday afternoon. They had sessions' mammy!"

"And you sat through all that?" I asked.

"I did not set," said Simple. "I stood. I walked in and out. I smoked on the corner, and snuck two drinks at the bar. But I had to wait for Joyce, and I thought them speeches would never get over! Joyce were a delegate from her club, so she had to stay, although I think she got tired her own self. But she would not admit it. Joyce said, 'Dr. Thingabod was certainly brilliant, were he not?'

"I said, 'He were not.'

"Joyce said, 'What did you want the man to say?'

"I said, 'I wish he had sung, instead of said. That program needed some music to keep the folks awake.'

"Joyce said, 'That meeting was not intended for a musical. It was intended to see how we can work out integration.'

"I said, 'With a jazz band, they could work out integration in ten minutes. Everybody would have been dancing together like they do at the Savoy — colored and white — or down on the East Side at them casinos on a Friday night where jam holds forth —and you would have been integrated.'

"Joyce said, 'This was a serious seminar, aiming at facts, not fun.'

" 'Baby,' I said, 'what is more facts than acts? Jazz makes people get into action — move! Didn't nobody much move in that hall where you were, except to jerk their head up when they went to sleep to keep anybody from seeing that they was nodding. Why, Mrs. Maxwell-Reeves almost lost her glasses off her nose, she jerked her head up so quick one time when that man what was so brilliant were speaking.' so!' yelled Joyce. 'Mrs. Maxwell-Reeves were just lost in thought. And if you think you saw me sleeping — '

" 'You was too busy trying to look around and see where I was,' I said. 'Thank God, I did not have to set up there with the delegations like you. I would not be a delegate to no such gab-fest for nothing on earth.'

" 'I thought you was so interested in saving the race,' said Joyce. 'Next time I will not ask you to accompany me to no cultural events, Jesse B., because I can see you do not appreciate them. That were a discussion of ways and means. And you are talking about jazz bands!'

" 'There's more ways than one to skin a cat,' I said. 'A jazz band sure would of helped that meeting. At least on Saturday afternoon, they could have used a little music to put some pep into the proceedings. Now, just say for instance, baby, they was to open with jazz and close with jam — and do the talking in between. Start out, for example, with The St. Louis Blues, which is a kind of colored national anthem, anyhow. That would put every human, colored and white, in a good humor.

"Then play, Why Don't You Do Right?, which could be addressed to the white folks. They could really pat their feet to that. Then for a third number before introducing the speaker, let some guest star like Willie Bryant sing, There'll Be Some Changes Made— which, as I understand it, were the theme of the meeting, anyhow — and all the Negroes could s[illegible] Amen! Joyce, I wish you wo[illegible] let me plan them interracial se[illegible]naries next time.

"After the music, let the spe[illegible] making roll. Then long about fi[illegible] o'clock bring on the jam session. ing to figure can I get to the bar before the resolutions get voted on. Resolved — that we solve the race problem! Strike up the band! Hit it, men! Aw, play that thing! How High The Moon! How high! Whee-ee-e!' "

"What did Joyce say to all that?" I demanded.

"Joyce thought I was high," said Simple.

"Joyce, you would not have to beg for a crowd to come out and support your efforts. Jam—and the hall would be jammed! Even I would stick around, and not be outside sneaking a smoke, or trying to get extra-special. And you could start serving tea to Tea For Two, played real cool. Whilst drinking tea and dancing, the race relations could relate and the intergraters could intergrate.

How A Play Was Born: The "Emperor Of Haiti"

In my childhood it was a sort of family legend, the story of how Haiti became the first Negro republic in the world, and the second free nation in the Western Hemisphere our own United States being the first. From babyhood, because my great-uncle had been connected with its story, I heard in our house the word HAITI. John Mercer Langston, after whom I was named, had been in the late 1880's appointed, by the President of the United States, the American Minister to Haiti. In that day, when Negroes were new to the diplomatic service, it was a somewhat unusual appointment — so unusual, in fact, that children were named after John M. Langston. Even if I had not been related, I might have been named Langston — as is the town and the university at Langston, Oklahoma.

I grew up on stories about Haiti. Toussaint L'Ouverture was one of my childhood heroes. FREEDOM early became to me a wonderful word. And I learned that the Haitians, on their little island in the West Indies, had fought for their freedom. To fight for freedom, I was taught, was a noble thing, as the United States had fought against the British, and the Haitians against the French. The American Revolution, the Haitian Revolution, the word revolution, was a good word in our house when I was a child. Years later — quite recently, in fact, when I have been questioned as to what I meant by the word REVOLUTION in my early poems, I tried to explain in terms of the birth of the United States and Haiti, and of the right in America to elect one's own representatives, to live without domination, and to be one's self, black or white, in freedom.

When the French Revolution came in France in 1789, Negroes in Haiti were slaves of the French. But soon they learned away down in the West Indies about the great revolution in Europe, and how the people of Paris had rebelled against the king, set up their own government, and elected their own representatives. Freedom is catching. The Haitians wanted to be free, too. An old coachman named Toussaint L'Ouverture took it upon himself to guide them to freedom. He became a great general leading armies of former slaves against the well-trained troops of Napoleon. This Negro general in the West Indies defeated the Napoleonic soldiers, and set up the first Negro government in the American hemisphere. Among his assistants were Jean Jacques Dessalines and Henri Christophe, great leaders, too. When Toussaint L'Ouverture was deceived onto a French gunboat in the harbor of Port-au-Prince, and carried off in chains to France to die in a dungeon, Dessalines took over the government of Haiti, and began to try to create the basis of permanent freedom there.

Because the freed men who had worked all their lives for white masters, did not want to work hard now that they were free, nobody much wished to till the fields or harvest the crops. So Dessalines, in his zeal to build a great country, became a tyrant. He decided to force the people to work — for their own good, so he thought, and for the good of Haiti. The people rebelled against Dessalines, and he died a victim of his own desires to help them. Then Henri Christophe took over, and completed the great fortress overlooking the harbor of Cape Haiti, the Citadel, that remains today one of the majestic wonders of the Western World.

After Christophe's death, the nation became a republic. Its history is a heoroic one and its story is glorious — that of the free republic of Haiti.

So, when I was searching my mind for the great subjects of Negro history that might be turned into material for the theatre, the story of Haiti came to me. Of the three great men in the early days of its history — Toussaint, Dessalines, and Christophe — I chose Dessaline for my play because to me he seemed the most dramatic, and the most tragic of all, in the greatness of his hopes and the sadness of his failures. For purposes of the theatre, I took the general outline of his life from history, but treated his story imaginatively in adapting it to the stage. The Gilpin Plapers of Karamu House in Cleveland first presented my play, "Emperor of Haiti." Later it became an opera, set to music by William Grant Still, and performed by the company of the New York City Center Opera. At the Wendell Phillips Auditorium in Chicago on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 24, the Hampton Club is again presenting "Emperor of Haiti" depicting the thrilling rise and fall of Dessalines. An excellent group of Negro actors, the Richard B. Harrison Players, will bring alive on the stage one of the heroic figures of Negro history and the stirring events of his time, a time when freedom was a flag and a flame.

Simple Says It's Hard To Be Above What You're Underneath

"Sometimes I wonder," said Simple, "who made this earth — and me?"

"Then you wonder about the Mystery," I said, "God."

"I don't wonder about God," said Simple, "but I do wonder about who made me. Not me myself exactly, because I know. But I mean my grandfolks, and their folks before them, and them folks before them, and them before those."

"In other words, you mean the human race."

"Yes," said Simple, "why is the human race what they is"

"What do you mean, why is the human race what it is?" I asked.

"I mean," said Simple, "why is some folks sluefooted, some knock-kneed, some blockheaded, some black, and some white? If everybody was the same color, they would get along so much better."

"I knew you couldn't speak ten words without bringing race into the argument," I said. "Colored people certainly are race concious."

"That's me," said Simple, "conscientious as I can be. I love my race. But I do wish my feet pointed straight instead of sideways, also that I were not slightly bowlegged. But even that is better than being knock-kneed. And, thank God, I do not have freckles— or if I do, I'm too dark for freckles to show. Also, why did nature make some folk meriney?"

"Inscrupable are the ways of nature," I said.

"Screwed up and unscrewable is right," said Simple. "Why, in Africa they got pygmies three feet tall, and in Arkansas they got white folks that eat mud."

"Dirtdobbers, they call them."

"Yes," said Simple. "And they tell me Italians eat snails."

"They do," I said.

"There is some strange things in this world," declared Simple, "which makes me wonder. For instant, why do the human race like to fight so much? Russia, Russia, Russia, Communism, Communism, Communism is all you can hear these days! It looks like our white folks want to fight all of them. Now, why? We just got through one war, yet they want to start another one!

"Ever since I were a wee, small boy, I been hearing about Russia. Russia must of been here a long time. It looks like our white folks would be used to Russia being in the world by now, also Communists. But come to think of it. Negroes have been here much longer, and they ain't used to us being here yet.

"We been in America ten times as long as some of these foreigners that come here. But they get used to foreigners quicker. Even a Russian foreigner can move into a housing project and nobody throws rocks through his windows like they do through our windows. A Pole, a Turk, a Hungary, a German, anything can come over here and eat in any restaurant anywhere from New Orleans to Newark. But just let me peep in and it's liable to be: 'We don't serve colored!'

"Puerto Ricans and Spanish come here and go downtown and go in and rent an apartment any place the minute they get off the plane. Me, I go outside of Harlem and see a FOR RENT sign-up and go in and ask about it. "sorry, but this is a white building." As long as I have been in this U.S.A., they are not used to me being here yet! No wonder Americans can't get used to Communists being in the world, too. Americans is not very adjustable to different kinds of folk, I don't believe."

"Why pick on Americans?" I asked. "Human beings in general are not very adjustable to each other. If they were, there would not have been throughout history so many wars."

"I am adjustable to white folks," said Simple. "I do not throw rocks through their windows. I do not Jim Crow them. I do not tell them they cannot live next do[illegible] to me. I do not treat them like varmints."

"Why don't you?" I asked.

"Because I can't," said Simple.

"You mean, you would if you could." I said.

"I'm human, ain't I?" asked Simple.

"But I thought you deplored such traits in the human race," I said. "Now it looks as if you would behave just as badly as the rest of humanity."

"I told you in the beginning I wondered what makes us humans what we is," said Simple. "You have not heard me say I am not human."

"No, but such pettiness as you ascribe to whites, you should be above."

"Above?" cried Simple. "When I'm underneath, how can I be above?"

"In spirit," I said.

"Not as long as I'm sluefooted," said Simple.

Nassau --- A Flower Garden Island Just For Tourists

I had never been to Nassau before. So when the afternoon plane from Miami went winging over a blue-green sea to land there within the hour, it was all new to me.

Nassau is a British island near Florida, so I had hardly unloosened my seat belt before it was time to fasten it again for the landing.

As we taxied down the runway, I could see a long, tall dark boy shaking a cocktail shaker to welcome the passengers with the traditional rum cocktail of the West Indies—free.

My three-day tour had been arranged by the North Travel Bureau in Miami — my first guided tour — and it was very pleasant indeed. I did not have to worry about a thing.

A most courteous chauffeur-guide, whose name is Willie Miller (ask for him if you go there), met me at the airport and drove me around the island. Mr. Miller was born in Nassau, has never been away, and knows all about its history and its lore.

Just about the first thing he told me was that the island is not called Nassau at all, but New Providence. Nassau is the town itself, but most people call the whole island by that name.

It is a little island, sixteen miles long and seven miles wide at its widest point. So one can easily see it all in a day. I had seen most of it by sundown.

Driving back to the hotel in the sunset, past old forts and pastel villas, rows of palm trees and long beaches of white sand and purple sea, Nassau is beautiful indeed. It is a flower garden of an island, all bougainvillias and poinettias, wistaria and palm trees, bright colors and tropial greens, blue sea and blue sky and sun.

There are a few native whites, and a number of wealthy foreigners who like it so well they stay imagine a prettier place to live.

There is a color line — very much, so I hear, like that of Bermuda — since it is so near our American South. The deluxe hotels, restaurants, and beeches are not open to Negro patronage.

But there are no WHITE or COLORED signs such as Florida has, only an hour away, and no Jim Crow buses or taxis, and none of the red-necked rudeness in public services common to our mainland.

There is no segregation at the racetrack where child jockeys ride tiny West Indian horses and the betting windows are crowded. Negroes live all over the place, and wealthy colored people have lovely homes in outlying sections.

But most of the colored people live "over the hill" for miles, starting just a few blocks from the main shopping section, Bay Street, and the colorful waterfront where the small yachts and fishing boats dock.

Outside the shopping section there are no sidewalks. But the speed limit is only twenty miles an hour, and motor drivers all seem very considerate and careful for the streets are full of children.

Almost everybody, men and women, boys and girls, ride bicycles that seem to go much faster than the cars.

The bus drivers do not mind turning off their route to carry somebody right to the door they are seeking. Transportation is all very friendly and informal in Nassau — except for the new meter cabs that recently someone has started, which the old timers do not like very much.

The only place people seem to be in a hurry to get to is the race track twice a week. Otherwise, folks walk or ride leisurely along, the cars going so slow a person on foot can almost keep up with them.

But it is not inexpensive. Prices for almost everything are as high, if not higher, than in Miami.

Perhaps that is because the island is purely a tourist resort with no farming or industry of its own—nothing but hotels, clubs, flower gardens and beaches — for a livelihood. And its standard of living approaches the American for everybody.

This is much higher than that of any other West Indian islands that I have visited. Everywhere else I have been in the Caribbean or near-Caribbean, one sees beggars and hustlers, panhandlers and prostitutes on almost every corner.

In Nassau nobody begged me for a cent, nobody mooched a drink, no crowds of ragged little boys dogged my heels for pennies, no hungry faces pressed at restaurant window panes, nobody seemed desperate for a dime.

Maybe because of the lushness of palm trees and flowers everywhere, not even the poorest neighborhood looked like a slum.

And the people — I mean the colored people (I did not meet a single white soul) — are very nice people. I want to go back to Nassau.

Simple Says, 'What's So Wonderful About Doing Right'

"Don't you think that it's wonderful that the Supreme Court has banned segregation in the public schools?" I asked.

"It's about time," said Simple.

"You don't sound very enthused," I said. "Of course the time is long overdue. But now that it's done, it IS something of which American democracy can be proud.'

"White folks are proud," said Simple, "But I don't see nothing for them to be proud of just doing what they ought to do. If they was doing something extra yes, then be proud. But Negroes have a right to go to decent schools just like everybody else So what's there to be proud of in that they are just now letting us in? They ought to be ashamed of themselves for keeping us out so long. I might have had a good education myself had it not been for white folks. If they want something to be proud of let them pay me for all the education I ain't got."

"You certainly expect a lot out of people," I said. "I thought you would be happy about the Court's decision."

"I am happy," said Simple, "for all the colored kids still going to school. But what about the folks as old as me, who went to them ramshackle old shacks they had for colored schools down South all this time? Them schools should of BEEN gone! I see nothing to be proud about in that they are just now going to start TO START getting rid of them."

"Maybe 'proud' was the wrong word to use," I said.

"No, it wasn't," said Simple. "Them white folks downtown where I work are just as proud of themselves as they can be this week, talking about 'There now! You see what democracy can do! We are not so bad in this country after all.'

"'You are bad enough,' I said, 'waiting until I am mighty nigh forty years old to do something you should have done before I was born. And, now that you've done it, going around talking about how wonderful it is that colored children will be going to school with white children in Alabama. What's so wonderful about that? They should have been going to school together all these years.'

"Whereupon, one of the guys says to me that I am just an old sorehead. Whereupon, I says, 'What did YOU do to bring this change about? Did you give any money to the NAACP to pay for all this Supreme Court business which cost way up in the thousands when it should have been for nothing?'

"He says, 'I didn't know it cost all that money.'

"Well, it did,' I says. 'Also it took a whole lot of arguing to persuade them judges to make up their minds to do right. That lawyer named Marshall near about spoke himself hoarse. I see nothing to be so proud about when it is so hard and so expensive for you-all to do right. And once you start doing right, the more you blow your own horn. the less good what you are doing sounds to me. There is nothing worse than a conceited Christian.'

"'I am not a Christian, I am Jewish,' says the guy. 'And you must admit this Supreme Court decision is a big step forward.'

"'Sure, it's a step forward for people who was so far back,' I says. 'But to be proud of something, you have got to move far ahead. And they have not moved ahead of anything down South. All they done is START to catch up — and they're putting that off until sometime in the future when they can work out how to carry out the decision — which should have been both decided and worked out long ago when my grandma was a baby.'

"'It's obvious you have no regard for historical determination,' says the guy.

"'That's just it,' I says, 'white folks have been determined to keep me down for so long, that now that they are turning me loose it's just like you have had your foot on a man's head. You finally take your foot off and say, AIN'T I WONDERFUL! DON TOOK MY FOOT OFF YOUR HEAD! I'll be dogged if I see anything wonderful about that!'

"Most decent people feel that a great victory has been won," I said.

"Do you mean to say I ain't decent?" asked Simple.

"I don't know what to say about you," I said. "I really don't know what to say."

"Who asked you to say any thing?" asked Simple.

Hughes Wonders What Prevents People From Getting Where They Are Going

I am not much given to making predictions but, just for the record, I will make one.

The young Negro actor, Clayton Smeltz, who came to New York recently by way of the Pasadena Playhouse and the Gilpin Players at Karamu House in Cleveland, bids fair to become our next Ira Aldridge, Charles Gilpin, Paul Robeson, Canada Lee and Frank Silvera rolled into one on other the American theatre.

That is, if he does not fall by the wayside. There are a lot of things that cause young artists to fall by the wayside: women, men, alcohol, dope, a weak stomach, a weak heart, a weak will, a weak mind, conceit, a lack of judgment, or a shortage of just plain common sense.

I hope none of these things impede young Mr. Smeltz who recently played Lennie in an all-Negro revival of "Mice and Men" at the Open Door in Greenwich Village.

He has that intangible thing called personality, a speaking voice with a wide range, and a face that can look like anything — good or evil, handsome or ugly, young or old. Clayton Smeltz is already quite a thespian.

Having lived a half century, I have seen many young men and women start toward a career in the arts. Some of them have been very talented. Some have been much more talented than others who've become famous.

Why did a number of those very talented ones fail? Some failed because they fell in love, got married, got saddled with a family, and did not know how to cope with both a mate and a career. Children further complicated the problem.

Others, however, managed both marriage and a career. Lena Horne is an outstanding example — she's been both wife, mother and a famous artist.

Arna Bontemps is another, a fine writer, and a fine husband and father.

Gwendolyn Brooks has two children. She got the Pulitzer Prize for poetry.

Conceit kills some people in the field of the arts. Being good, they begin to think they are wonderful. Maybe they are wonderful, but when they think so, they almost never get any better.

All successful people must believe in themselves. But no one who hopes to be really great, should think that he or she is beyond improvement. Even the greatest man or woman may become better.

Lack of attention to health can ruin a potential career. Talented people are likely to be recognized as talented early in life. Their gifts and potentialties attract others to them.

It is easy to become surrounded by a coterie of camp followers, poor or rich. It is easy to get into the habit of eating too much, drinking too much, balling too much, loving too much, and living on the generosity of others until you form the habit of living beyond your means.

Most careerists have to be careful, behave themselves, get their rest, and not mix their drinks. It is not wise to count on having an iron constitution. Yours may turn out to be of tin.

Lack of common sense may also greatly impede an artist, or even bring about defeat and ruin. I reckon only God can give a person common sense. Sometimes geniuses do not have any common sense at all. But then, THEY ARE GENIUSES — and geniuses are few and far between.

I once heard Mary McLeod Bethune tell an audience of college people that in her youth she had no opportunity — being colored in the Deep South and poor — to acquire an A. B. or a B. S. or a Ph. D. or a Phi Beta Kappa key.

Instead, she said, what brought her to where she is today was "just good common sense."

Some talented young people feel that they have to act like geniuses, behave erratically, dress strangely, and out-clown and out-drink everybody else. Watch out! Such behavior may cut you down in your prime — before your time.

One of the things, I think, essential to making a career is not to be afraid. If you have only a little talent, don't be afraid of using it, developing it, and trying to sell it.

Lots of folks with a great deal of talent never get anywhere because they are frightened and unwilling to use their talent, lest it be imperfect.

Whatever you have, use it. Through use, talent will develop (let's hope!). Anyhow, without use, talent will die. A light under a bushel usually goes out.

This little sermon I am writing here is not intended for the young actor, Clayton Smeltz. I have only seen Mr. Smeltz three times in my life. He does not appear to have, and I hope he does not have, any of the defects I have mentioned.

Newspapers Record History Much Better Than Books

History in school books, I must admit, may often seem very dull. At least, it used to seem so when I went to school. But now from day to day in the daily papers, I find history fascinating. I like to follow it while it is happening. In recent years, I have been particularly intrigued by the historic passing of colonialism in Asia —which really means the end of white rule there. The emergence of India as an independent state has been thrilling. The rise of China to a world power is thrilling, too.

When you remember that it has been only a short time ago that white people ran both India and China — outsiders, unwanted and unloved—we realize that we have seen history in the making through the changes that have taken place within the last ten years. And it is much easier to read it on the front pages of our papers than it is in school.

The younger generation growing up now will have to read it in high school or college, it won't be nearly as exciting as it is in today's news. One reason it won't be as exciting will be that there won't be as much truth in the history books as there is in the newspapers, nor as much detail, and the reasons why things happen as they do won't be as clear.

Most of Nehru's speeches won't be there, nor Chiu En-lai's. And history will be boiled down and reduced to mostly dates and bare happenings — as told from the viewpoint of the historian. Of course, an Indian history or Chinese history will tell things one way, American or British history will tell things another. Young Americans will, of course, be reading histories written in English. These histories, just like those written by most whites about the Civil War and Reconstruction, will not contain "the half of it." The Indians and Chinese and Malayns and Indo-Chinese will be pictured as ungrateful people, villians and dopes for running the white overlords out.

The histories probably will not recount how the British and French investors bled Asia. They probably won't tell of the color lines they set up there — of the all-white hotels and clubs, whites had the gall to establish right in the middle of Chinese and Indian cities. (Or of the all-white American YMCA there used to be in Shanghai.) And they probably won't tell about one system of laws and trials for white folks and another for "natives," with white judges for whites, naturally, —and a quite separate kind of justice such as we have had in most of our American South for God knows how long — until just yesterday — and until right now in some of it.

Tomorrow's histories probably will skip over very lightly the sins and crimes and slurs and snubs of the white world in Asia, and stress instead the ignorance of the colored peoples there, their poverty and dirt, and their ingratitude toward the handful of whites who did try to do right and bring the "light" of Western civilization to them.

That there were in Asia (and still are) dedicated white men and women — teachers, preachers, medical missionaries and journalists — is well known. But these truly good people only scratched the surface of the blanket of greed and ugliness that the Jim Crow money-grubbers spread from the Suez Canal to Hong Kong — smothering the good white folks and their decency, just as they smothered the decency and aspirations of the Asiatics themselves.

The story of the gentle Gandhi and his Christian passive resistance movement that did so much to win freedom for India will be pictured in the history books of tomorrow as a revolt against British benevolence and kindness on the part of an ignorant rabble.

The ejection of the Green Gang and Chiang Kai-shek from China the people who were tired of gangsters and Chinese Uncle Toms will be pictured in the history books as mob madness turned against a good Baptist ruler whose wife was educated in the United States and loved democracy.

Probably no student will ever read in the big thick books on the library shelves how, right up to our own decade, the rulers of China let little boys and girls be sold into child slavery in foreign-owned factories to work from dawn to dusk and die before they had a chance to grow up. It won't be in the history books how a white man could spit in a coolie's face in Singapore and a native police dare not arrest the white man. The history books won't tell Malan's South Africa and some parts of white America were. And they probably won't quote from article by Margaret O'Higgins or Chester Bowles or other honest travellers who have written of some of these white abuses as clearly as they could in our newspapers and magazines where today's living history appears.

Newspapers face the facts of history books. Maybe that is because the papers scoop history up while it is still hot—and don't quite know what they are handling.

In Racial Matters In St. Louis 'De Sun Do Move'

The Reverend John Jasper, born in slavery, was almost a hundred years old when he died in 1901. He had been preaching for over 50 years and those who heard his sermons never forgot them.

As pastor of the Sixth Mount Zion church in Richmond, Virginia, his congregations overflowed into the street every Sunday. One of his great sermons was called "De Sun Do Move".

I thought about this sermon when I was in St. Louis the other day.

My first memory of St. Louis is as a little boy. My mother and my grandmother were taking me to Mexico City to visit my father. We rode in a coach with other people, white and colored, as far as St. Louis.

But when we changed trains there to go into Arkansas and Texas, we were put into a car with only colored people — my first segregated car, and from that time on, in my mind, St. Louis and Jim Crow were connected.

Once, years later, as a teenager, coming up from Mexico and getting off the train at St. Louis on a very hot summer day, I went up to the soft-drink stand in the center of the station.

I asked for a malted-milk. The clerk looked at me and said, "Are you colored or Mexican?" I said, "I'm colored." He said, "Then I can't serve you."

Again St. Louis and Jim Crow.

Many more years passed. I became a writer with two or three books published. I was invited to give a talk in St. Louis. On that trip I remember a little cubby of a lunch counter hidden away at the far end of the station which was the only place there where Negro travelers might eat.

And the Negro hotels — rather bad ones in those days — were the only public places where one might sleep. But this Spring of our Lord, 1954, when I was invited to speak at the Pine Street Branch YMCA Forum, and I wrote ahead asking the committee to arrange lodgings for me, I was informed that I might make a reservation at any of the downtown hotels.

I made a reservation at the Statler. When I got off "The Spirit of St. Louis" from New York and went to the Statler, I was never more courteously received nor more politely served at any hotel where I've stopped anywhere in the world. All I could say to myself was, 'De sun do move!"

At the Statler I found a message from Miss Edith Wilson, the charming Aunt Jemima of the Quaker Oats radio and TV shows, asking me to call her at the Sheraton Hotel, another formerly all-white hostelery nearby. I learned that Miss Eartha Kitt of "New Faces" was also stopping there.

When I went out into the streets, I saw Negro conductors on the street cars, and learned that there were about to be Negro bus drivers. And later on a tour about the city, I saw lovely Negro homes in what had formerly been all white sections of the town.

And before I left, just to see if it were true, I asked for a malted-milk at the station soda fountain, and was served without question. So I departed from St. Louis still saying, "De sun do move!"

St. Louis! The town where Scott Joplin and Tom Turpin used to play ragtime. The town that W. C. Handy made famous in his great song, "The St. Louis Blues." The town where Josephine Baker started out as a $15.00 a week waitress, and ended up in Paris as one of the most glamorous stars of the international threatre.

St. Louis, the town that gave a laugh-hungry world the joy of E. Simms Campbell and his rib-tickling cartoons of "Esquire" and King Features fame. The town where the river boats used to run from New Orleans with Louis Armstrong's horn blasting the night away.

St. Louis, where T. S. Elliot and Marrianne Moore came from — and another century sported his money away on Targee Street — whose shades and shadows gave birth to Arna Bontemps' beautiful little novel, "God Sends Sunday" which in turn became the Bontemps—Cullen Broadway musical, "St. Louis Woman" that is now about to become a Hollywood movie.

St. Louis, that old city of river boats and ragtime, jockeys and blues, diamond rings and glamorous women, Josephine Baker and T. S. Elliot, Old Man River and old Jim Crow, and a sun that 'do move.'

I swear it do!

A Sentimental Journey To Cairo, Illinois

I have always been a blues fan.

Last year in its series of Americans, Audio Archives brought out a fascinating long-playing record of some of the compositions of W. C. Handy. With the "Father of the Blues" himself acting as narrator, playing both guitar and cornet, and singing parts of the songs, this record is a valuable addition to the history of American music, as well as being both informative and entertaining.

In telling how he became interested in Negro folk music, Mr. Handy says that when he was a little boy in a rock quarry in the Deep South, he used to hear the workmen singing a song that went something like this:

I wouldn't live in Cairo!

And this song made him wonder what was wrong with Cairo. Was it too far up North to be down South — or too far down South to be up North?

Years later when Handy wrote his greatest blues, he mentioned Cairo in that song. I first heard its name in "The St. Louis Blues" which the Negroes in Kansas City were singing when I was a little boy.

Cairo is a levee town three hundred and sixty miles south of Chicago, on the Mississippi, at the extreme southern tip of Illinois. Several months ago it was in the news a great deal when the legal battle to integrate the schools there was at its height. Then it was reported that mob violence was feared. When I told a friend of mine that I intended to visit Cairo, he told me a joke about a Negro who once got off a train in a strange Southern city. No sooner had the train departed than a group of white men walked up to him. One of them said, "Say, Negro, don't you knew we don't allow no colored folks to light here?"

The Negro replied, "No, sir, I didn't know."

"The last Negro that lit in this town, we hung him," the white man said. "But since you declare that you didn't know that we don't allow Negroes here, we will give you a chance — providing you catch the next train out of town."

The Negro said, "Since you'll give me a chance, boss, I won't wait for the next train. I'll catch the one that's just gone!"

Of course, nothing like that happened to me in Cairo. In fact, nothing untoward at all — until I was about to leave town. I had a very pleasant afternoon and evening there, and satisfied my curiosity about the place. Everyone I met kept asking me how come I had stopped over in Cairo. So I kept explaining that I was making a sentimental journey to a town I had always wanted to see ever since I first heard that line in "The St. Louis Blues" which goes, "If I get to Cairo, make St. Louis by myself."

On the train to Cairo was a Negro student from the university who introduced himself and, when we got to his home town, he took me to the high school to meet his former teachers and the principal.

I also met the principals and some of the teachers from the other colored schools — which are no longer segregated schools, since colored pupils say now, thanks to the NAACP go to any school in the neighborhoods in which they live. Some of the teachers drove me about the city, another invited me to dinner with her family and saw that I got my train that night.

Just before catching the Panama Limited south, I was driven past the house of the white lawyer for the NAACP to see that now famous neon sign pictured in "Life" and "Jet" which his neighbor to the rear has put atop his garage, to flash off and on a night pointing to the home of the man who had the nerve to aid Negroes in breaking down the school barriers.

I had thought the sign was gone by the time of my visit. But, no, it was still there, pointing its red arrow of bigotry at this man's house. As we drove by, another car pulled up just behind us and slowed down. We continued to the corner where we turned to come back. The other car went by us picking up speed.

As we again passed the house, a white man ran out straight toward our car, in his shirt sleeves, one hand in his pocket and an angry look on his face. We stopped. Fortunately, he recognized the Negroes in the car as teachers whom he knew, and they recognized him as the lawyer who lived there. We were startled, naturally, at the wrath in his face, until he told us that someone had just thrown a rock through his front window — evidently an occupant of the car that had slowed down behind us.

This lawyer said that almost every week people drove by at night and threw rocks at his windows. But he said, "No one will drive me out of town!"

Meanwhile, as we talked, the beautiful red sign flashed off and on, off and on, atop his neighbor's garage, its arrow pointing to him. It was there in the dark street a moment after a stone crashed through his window, that I met David Lansden, a courageous white man in Southern Illinois who believes in democracy, equality, and racial decency. It was my privilege to tell him how much I admire his courage and his integrity. Having seen Cairo, I can now never forget it — nor the stones that are still being thrown there at democracy.

Lincoln University Celebrates 100 Years Of Existence And Service

My alma mater, Lincoln university, is one hundred years old.

Just across the Maryland border from slavery, at the southern edge of Pennsylvania, it was founded in 1854 by John Miller Dickey, a white Presbyterian minister, partly because a young colored friend of his, John R. Amos, could not find an institution anywhere in the region that would admit him to study.

Lincoln was the first college established anywhere in the world especially to provide higher education for Negroes. Lincoln's one hundred years have proven it a great institution whose alumni are scattered all over the world today, and whose influences for good have been felt in many walks of life.

Thurgood Marshall, who has argued more cases before the United States Supreme Court than any other living Negro lawyer, is a Lincoln graduate.

Rev. James H. Robinson, distinguished humanitarian and pastor of New York's Church of the Master, is a Lincoln graduate.

Melvin B. Tolson, famous teacher and poet, whose recent book, "Libretto for the Republic of Liberia," is receiving high critical praise, is a Lincoln graduate.

Dr. William H. Sinkler, director of America's largest medical center for the post-graduate training of Negro physicians, the Homer G. Phillips hospital in St. Louis, is a Lincoln graduate.

Joseph F. Makel, one of the nation's top salesmen, is a Lincoln graduate. Ben Nnamdi Azikiwe, foremost African publisher and political leader of Nigeria, is a Lincoln graduate.

Dr. J. Oscar Lee, an executive director of the National Council of Churches of Christ, is a Lincoln graduate. The late great Dr. George Cleveland Hall of Chicago, founder of 10 hospitals, was a Lincoln graduate.

The present president of Lincoln university, Dr. Horace Mann Bond, is himself a Lincoln graduate.

These names are often in the newspapers. But there have been hundreds of other graduates of Lincoln, some highly publicized, some not, whose contributions to society and the general welfare of America and the world have been of inestimable value.

In a study of outstanding Negro ministers made by Dr. Charles S. Johnson in his survey of colored college graduates, of the 409 ministers listed, 227 of them were from Lincoln.

Almost 500 Negro medical men have been graduates of Lincoln. In 1949 one out of six of the Lincoln graduates for that year were admitted to medical schools.

Besides Attorney Marshall, several of the leading lawyers across the country active in the recent NAACP civil rights victories, are Lincoln men.

Distinguished Negro writers who have attended or have been graduated from Lincoln, besides Tolson, include J. Saunders Redding, Waring Cuney and Bruce McM. Wright.

My own writing developed a great deal at Lincoln. I wrote my first novel, "Not Without Laughter," on the campus there, and many of my poems were written at Lincoln.

When I graduated in 1929, I had had two volumes published, and another contracted for publication. During the years that I attended Lincoln there was about the campus a freedom of action and of thought that gave ample room for the development of individual personalities. There were some excellent teachers in the classrooms. And, outside the classrooms, complete freedom.

In those days, all the faculty lived across the road and went to bed early. The dormitories constituted a self-governing student city.

Lincoln men learned to be self-controlled and self-reliant through the natural checks and balances of their own human relationships.

The first three graduates of Lincoln (then called Ashmun Institute) went to Africa as missionaries. From the very beginning, the hand of Lincoln stretched out in friendship and helpfulness to our ancestral homeland.

It was not long before students came from Africa. Today the influence of Lincoln university is felt in many parts of that vast continent.

Lincoln's president, Dr. Bond, by frequent trips to Africa, personally keeps in force the institution's contacts there. Hundreds of young Africans dream of coming to Lincoln to study.

And, now, in line with the current trend toward complete integration, Lincoln is opening its doors to students of any race from any country in the world. The university never drew the color line.

Being in the North, no legal restrictions prevented Lincoln from admitting white students. During the years there have usually been some in attendance. Their number is growing.

Now, with the need for colleges "especially for Negroes" rapidly decreasing, Lincoln, one hundred years old, is well on the way to becoming a center of learning for any student who qualifies.

On College Campuses, In A Taxicab And Elsewhere Hughes Finds South's Sore Spots Stranger's Paradise

Every year I go on a lecture tour and almost always, nearly everywhere, pleasant things happen. This Spring when I was invited to begin my tour with a program of my poems at Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, I was delighted because, among other reasons, I knew that I would be not far from Cairo, Ill., a town I have always wanted to visit.

Both Cairo and Carbondale are away down at the very tail end of Illinois at the Kentucky border, and not far from Tennessee. According to the press, this has been a prejudiced part of the state where race relations have not been too good. And recently there has been trouble there about the opening of the schools to all pupils equally, since until lately there had been segregated schools. Just before I went to Carbondale, I heard that one of the Negroes involved in the legal fight for non-segregated schools there, in fear of mob violence, felt that he had better send his family away to his mother-in-law for safe keeping. So he sent them to Mississippi.

But I was never more hospitably received anywhere than I was on the campus of Southern Illinois university. An interracial group of faculty and students met me at the station. I was lodged in one of the university guest houses. My assembly audiences received me most cordially. And, following the program, there was an interracial luncheon in my honor in a campus dining room. The university has about two hundred Negroes in the student body. Some live in the dormitories. They take part in all the college activities, so I was told, and none reported to me any racial difficulties. It seemed to be a happy campus.

From there I went to Cairo. Cairo deserves a whole column by itself, so I will tell you about it next week.

From Cairo I went to Florida Normal and Industrial Memorial college at St. Augustine. There my gracious hosts and a warm-hearted student body made my visit happy. And my sponsors, the Student Christian Union, paid not only my books but my sons a compliment by having three of them on the program.

Miss Estella Matthews sang the Margaret Bonds setting of "The Negro Speaks of Rivers," and the "At The Feet of Jesus," by Toy Harper and Hall Johnson. Miss Christine Morris sang Jobe Huntley's "As I Go."

St. Augustine is the oldest town in the United States. Reverend Storrs took me on a sightseeing tour through its quaint streets, along the waterfront, and past the Fountain of Youth. And from there I went down to Daytona for the Fiftieth Anniversary of Bethune-Cookman college, whose distinguished founder and President-Emeritus welcomed me to her busy home on one of her busiest days, and invited me to dinner that evening with Ralph Bunche of the United Nations, and a half dozen other interesting guests from all over the country.

Dr. Bunche made a simple but fascinating talk to an overflown audience. And Mrs. Bethune herself topped the ceremonies with a brief resume of her fifty years in education, filling the huge new gymnasium with the warmth of her personality, paying tribute to her co-workers through the years, and to the young president of Bethune-Cookman today, Dr. Richard V. Moore, who has taken over her work. It was a stirring program.

Immediately after I had to catch a night train for Miami, so I secured a taxi. In going to the station a most gracious thing happened. The young Negro taxi driver recognized me, although he had seen only my picture. He told me that he knew my books. And when he had gotten me safely into my coach, carrying my bags the whole length of the train since the redcaps were all busy, he would not accept a cent in payment. So I left Daytona with a feeling that all the people in the orbit of Mrs. Bethune's presence must be as gracious and as generous as she is.

Negro History Week: The Unsung But Not Unswung

Now that Negro History Week, founded by the late great Carter G. Woodson, is here again, it is time to remember those who have made history. Fortunately, the Week has grown in scope and importance over the years.

Today many white or mixed schools and colleges recognize it, as do almost all the Negro institutions. And the great names in our history from Phillis Wheatley to Ralph Bunche, Frederick Douglass to Dr. DuBois, Richard Allen to Howard Thurman, Harriet Tubman to Mary McLeod Bethune, will be spoken of with honor.

Their life stories will be recounted in classrooms, their pictures on bulletin boards, their biographies looked up by hundreds of students in libraries.

But there are some that I am afraid will be neglected, as they have long been neglected in the history books and in the schools. And they have made a very great contribution to American life, world culture, and international enjoyment.

They are the creators and performers of American jazz. The greatest of them were—and still are—Negroes.

Jazz is the one kind of music loved everywhere by almost everybody. It began in the United States. But it is played today from Boston to Bankok, Memphis to Melburne, San Francisco to San Sebastian, Topeka to Tokyo. It is the basis of the immense radio industry, of the musical radio commercials, and a basic part of our musical comedy theatre.

Most of the ears in the world listen to jazz almost every day. And where did jazz come from? Out of the Negro folk songs of the Deep South, the drums of New Orleans' Congo Square, Negro ways of syncopating music long ago, and the development given this old music by such great players as Buddy Bolden and Jelly Roll Morton to Dizzy Gillespie and Duke Ellington. Not to mention Louis Armstrong, who might be called Mister Jazz himself. Negroes made jazz, play jazz, and should be very proud of jazz. It is one of the happiest gifts of any group to mankind during this century.

There have been dozens of good books written on jazz in recent years, both here and abroad.

Two of the best books on jazz are, "Jazzmen," a selection of articles edited by Frederic Ramsey and Charles Edward Smith, and "Jazz, Hot and Hybrid" by Winthrop Sargeant. Rudi Blesh has also written two excellent books, Shining Trumpets, A History of Jazz," and "They All Played Ragtime."

Mezz Mezzrow with Bernard Wolfe has written "Really The Blues" and, with Arna Bontemps, our own great W. C. Handy has written his autobiography, "Father of the Blues." Another most readable book is Sidney Finkelstein's "Jazz, A People's Music" which is the most recent of the studies of the world's most popular music.

Jazz, of course, grew out of the annonymous work songs, field cries, spirituals, and blues of the long-ago South. Out of the plantation jigs and ring-shouts, the Spasm Bands and marching bands of New Orleans, the Mississippi River boat players' music, and from the lips and instruments of thousands of unknown people.

Not all of those contributing to the creation of jazz were always Negro, for the white minstrel men, using material from Negro sources, helped to develope jazz.

With Buddy Bolden, King Oliver, Baby Dodds, and other famous New Orleans names, the personal records of jazz terms of composers players begin. And the earliest makers of ragtime, Scott Joplin and Jelly Roll Morton figure greatly in those turn-of-the-century days, too,

So, if I were a teacher, during Negro History Week, while considering the other distinguished contributions Negroes have made to American life, I would also turn the attention of my students to that of jazz.

And if time and books are limited, let them at least read about Louis Armstrong, and hear his famous old records, and feel some of the strength and greatness and beauty of this happy music we have given to the world.

Frederick Douglass: A Name To Remember Ever

Always, but especially during the month of February when Negro History Week is celebrated, Frederick Douglass is a name to remember and a life to be studied.

He is one of the great Americans of all time, and the outstanding Negro leader during and after slavery.

No more thrilling autobiography has been written in our country than his own book, the "Life and Times of Frederick Douglass", in which he tells how he fought with a slave-breaker, escaped to freedom, spoke for the abolitionists and once had to flee for his own safety to England.

But he returned to continue his battle for the liberty and dignity of the Negro people, recruiting troops for the Union Army, sending his own two sons to fight for freedom, and after the Civil War, becoming an important figure in the Republican Party.

Douglass, in many ways, was far ahead of his times. At an early convention for woman suffrage, he was the only man, white or colored, to stand up on the floor and speak in favor of the ballot and of equal rights for women.

After the Civil War, in regard to Negroes, he did not demand any special rights or privileges. He simply felt that we should have same rights as any other citizens of the United States, and be able to do the same things, no more and no less.

"All I ask is, give him a chance

But Frederick Douglass did not bite his tongue in relation to the responsibilities of our government in removing prejudice and segregation along with slavery, from the land.

Det. 2-20-54

In another speech he said, "I, too, would invoke the spirit of patroitism, not in a narrow and restricted sense but, I trust, with a broad and manly significaton; not to cover up our natonal sins, but to inspise with sincere repentence; not to hide our shame from the world' gaze, but utterly to abolish the cause of that shame; not to explain away our gross inconsistencies as a nation, but to remove the hateful, jarring and incongruous element from the land; not to sustain an egregious wrong, but to unite all our energies in the grand effort to remedy that wrong . . . I would warn the American people and the American government, to be wise in their day and generation.

"I exhort them to remember the history of other nations. And I remind them that America cannot always sit "as a queen" in peace and repose; that prouder and stronger governments than this have been shattered by the bolts of a just God that the time may come when those whom they now despise and hate may be needed, when those whom they now compel, by oppression, to be enemies, may be wanted as friends, what has been may be again. there is a point beyond which human endurance cannot go.

When Frederick Douglass was criticised for bringing up the race problem in party politics, he replied, "If the Republican Party cannot stand a demand for justice and fair play, it ought to go down. We were men before that party was born, and our manhood is more sacred than any party can be. Parties were made for men —not men for parties."

And then there is among his recorded speeches that great passage in which, addressing himself to the Negro people, Fredrick Douglass said,

"Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow. We do not believe, as we are often told, that the Negro is the ugly child of the national family, and the more he is kept out of sight the better it will be for him. You know that liberty given is never so precious as liberty sought for and fought for. The man outraged is the man to make the outcry. Depend upon it—men will not care much for a people who do not care for themselves."

Those are the words to remember during Negro History Week.

When The Atom Comes, Negroes Goes Out, Says Simple

"You know what the cotton gin did to the Negro race, don't you?" asked Simple.

"No, what?" I replied.

"When the cotton gin were invented, nine million Negroes were thrown out of work," said Simple. "All them Negroes that stripped the fields from North Carolina to Texas, had to weigh in their sacks and go to town looking for jobs. That is why Harlem is so full of Negroes now, the overflow from Richmond, Atlanta, Charlotte, and points South, which cities were already full. A machine can do the work of forty mens. Which is why I dreads what is coming for colored folks."

"What do you mean by that?" I demanded.

"The Atomic Age," said Simple. "I read in the papers where President Eisenhower done issued a statement that it won't be long now until them atoms will be doing the work of men. They gonna stop making bombs and start making all kinds of little old machines that will do more work than a thousand big machines like we got now. And all you will have to put in them machines will be just a little old grain of an atom. A handful of mens can run them. They won't need hardly anybody much no more to work. So who do you think will be the first to be throwed out of work? Negroes!"

"You're always looking on the dark side," I said.

"I am dark," said Simple, "and you know as well as I do, when the atom comes in, Negroes goes out. 'Last to be hired, first to be fired.'

And, man, such another firing as there will be when the atom comes to power! Imagine taking one little old grain of atom, about the size of a pinhead, and heating a great big whole apartment house. Won't need nobody to shovel coal in no furnace, neither deliver coal, neither mine it then. What are Negroes gonna do what mines coal, shovels coal, drives coal trucks, and stokes furnaces, huh? You don't think they are going to hire them colored folks, just to lift a pinhead of an atom into a cupsized furnace? You know they ain't! That will be skilled labor—and one white man can do that. So far as I know, they don't let no Negroes touch no atoms nohow, nowhere, no place. Leastwise, I have not read about none in the U.S.A. And I have not seen the picture of nary a colored atom scientist being investigated by no committees. The atom belongs to white folks. I have not seen no Negro with an atom nowhere in his possession, not even a speck of an atom—not even atom dust. Have you? Have you ever met any colored atom-makers? Do you know any Negro with an atom? So all I can think is, when that Atom Age do come in, Negroes will be so far behind the atom-ball that it ain't funny."

"My dear fellow," I said, "the Atom Age is intended to benefit mankind enormously. People will only have to work a few hours a day."

"White people," said Simple, "because Negroes will not be working at all. They will be laid off. When the man starts cutting down, who does he cut down first? Me! And when that atom starts doing the cutting, watch out, Jack, if you're black! You're gone! Why? Because an atom does not even make ashes, so they won't even need nobody to clean up after it. An atom does not make soot, so they won't need no soot-wipers. An atom don't weigh an ounce, so they won't need no lifters to lift it, nor haulers to haul it, nor shovelers to shovel it. So what will there be for a black man to do?"

"You have expressed the dilemma so direfully that I cannot answer," I said. "I am flabbergasted. What will we do?"

"I know what I will do," said Simple. "I will get on relief. I will let the government take care of me. I will say, '...u-all made this atom. I had nothing to do with it. But God made me. Now, you-all take care of me until God gets ready to take me to His bosum again."

"But suppose the government refuses to take care of you. What will you do then?"

"Raise so much sand that they would be glad to look after me, my wife, my relatives and also my in-laws. They would not want no parts of me when I got through with that Relief Office. I would sound off like Bikini. I would blast like Arnette Cobb. I would make them relief people think I had a loudspeaker in my throat. I would also claim discrimination."

"In other words, you would be a trouble-maker?"

"If I couldn't be an atom-maker," said Simple.

How Jim Crow Will Jim Crow Air Raid Shelters Be, Asks Simple

"I haven't read anything about air raid shelters in the papers lately," said Simple.

"So?"

"So I want to know are they still marked WHITE and COLORED?"

"What do you mean?"

"Down South," said Simple.

"I don't know," I said. 'Why?"

"Because it wouldn't make no difference how they are marked nohow," said Simple. "White folks take whatever they want to from Negroes anyway. So if they wanted to get in a COLORED air raid shelter in a hurry, they would come on in there, no matter what it was marked, WHITE or COLORED, when the bombs fall."

"So?"

"But me, Colored," said Simple, "no matter how many bombs was falling, they wouldn't let me in no WHITE air raid shelter. They would have guards there. Naturally, the COLORED shelters would not have no guards. And if they did, they would not keep white folks out. Also, mine would be a JIM CROW shelter — there would not be no toilet paper in the toilets, neither would it be air-cooled. But the white shelters would have everything — nice toilets, telephones, newsstands, Coco Cola machines — like the railroad stations down South — everything a man needs in the WHITE waiting room, nothing in COLORED."

"Do you figure such drastic discrimination extends even to the atom bomb shelters?"

"I do," said Simple, "if they are down South. They is made by white folks."

"Well," I said, "if the bombs start falling, white folks probably will forget all about segregation."

"That is what I am afraid of," said Simple. "If I get caught in Birmingham, I don't want to be crowded out of my one and only air raid shelter by white folks."

"How could you be crowded out?" I asked.

"I might be late getting there," said Simple, "and the COLORED shelter is liable to be full of white folks when I arrive. In which case, you know in Atlanta, or New Orleans, or Dallas, they will not let me in their nice aircooled WHITE air raid shelters, dark as I am. That would be against the law. I would have to appeal all the way to Walter White and the Supreme Court to get in one of their shelters. And I would not have the time. By the time I phoned the NAACP, I would be blowed up.

"Maybe there will be no atomic war, after all," I said.

"Huh!" said Simple. "Maybe there will be no tomorrow."

"Well, perhaps, white people will not behave so badly then," I said.

"They will, unless the atom bomb roasts them black," said Simple. "in which case, then, they will get Jim Crowed right along with me."

Change is creeping up on us, from behind and in front. Another foreshadowing of it can be seen in a speech made recently by State Superintendent of Education W J. Terry before the AEA-NEA leadership conference held at Alabama College for Women.

He advocated the doubling of the "R's: Reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic, rights, responsibilities and human relations."

He advocated the doubling of the "R's" to bring them up to a half dozen. "Today," he asserted, "we really have six R's: Reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic, -rights, responsibilities and human relations."

Mr. Terry added: "A great deal of emphasis is being placed on citizenship education. We believe that if we are to have better world, we must do something about training our boys and girls to fit into the community that they will live in.

Each person who reads Dr. Terry's message may get a different meaning. He may have spoken more than he really meant or stands for in practical life. But the words of his are there just the same.

The world today is bigger than the Alabama Black Belt or the Mississippi Delta, or the Louisiana cane fields. Today's world includes all of the people who are connected by transportation, communication and other things. We live in a fluid world where populations are constantly on the move. A new world is at hand, a product of many things.

On May 17, the United States Supreme Court in its decision degalizing the Separate but Equal doctrine in public education, illuminated and dramatized these changes. It outlined new lessons for all of us in group and human relations. The Supreme Court said that in the field of public education the Separate but Equal doctrine has no place.

Rights and responsibilities should go hand in hand. Yet a number of responsibilities are enforced and rights ensnarled One is forced to bear arms, pay taxes, and obey the laws. But some rights, like those of voting, are often unfairly curbed. Lowndes and Wilcox counties with more Negro than white persons have no Negro voters. Bullock County has only 7 Negro voters Token Negro voting is typical of Black Belt counties.

"Citizenship education" is needed for both the school going population and some of the adults. Voting stimulates one in the direction of the finest citizenship. One who bebecause of his power andz position denies another the right to vote solely because of his race and color is lacking both good citizenship and patriotism, it seems to me.

August 15, Joe Azbellz, city editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, published in his "City Limits" column which appeared in the combined Sunday Advertiser-Journal an interview of Mrs. Agnes Baggett, Democratic nominee for state auditor, who in January will become a member of the three-person board which appoints the boards of registrars in the 67 counties of this state The Governor and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Industry make up the other two members of the appoint board.

Here are some o fthe views of Mrs. Baggett on registration of voters as revealed by the Azbell column:

.."Every person should be able to vote and have a part in government if he is qualified. .. ..

"But I am opposed to the wanton registration of white or colored. A person should be interested in his government and qualified to vote before being registered.

"I am not for opening the floodgates to any groups unless those groups are qualified.

"There would be no reason to have a board of registrars if the qualifications were ignored.

"The law sets up those qualifications and I take the view that the law should be followed in the registration of every person without regard to race, creed or color."

"I will cooperate with anyone and everyone so long as that cooperation does not hinder my principles and desire to serve the best interests of the State of Alabama."

"Considering herself as a representative of the people and "not a representative of any faction, force or authority," Mrs Baggett said she intends to make her appointments on the basis of honesty and integrity and obedience to the letter of the law and "not in any instance on the basis of personality or personal considerations."

"I intend to do my job according to the law and do it with honesty and integrity for the state as a whole. If after I have done my job in this manner, I am defeated at the polls, I will then find myself a job doing something else. I never intend to compromise my principles to perpetuate myself in any post or position," she said.

"The duty, power and influence of the appointing board end when the appointments are made," she said

"There is nothing the statutes which provide survellance by the appointing authority. As the law now stands, no report is required to be made by these boards to the appointing authority or anyone else other than sending a list of names of the registered persons to the secretary of state and probate judge," she added

"I thing my attitude is summed up this way: The functioning af a government is not intended to be by favoritism to any particular group but a strict performance of duties to the best interest of the people in hat government. That the way I intend to make the appointments which come under my hands, she declared.

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

In a two-part series, beginning today, I am presenting in complete text, a section of the resolutions adopted by the Alabama State Conference of NAACP in its ninth annual convention November 13 in Selma, Ala.

The solely purpose of this undertaking is to give the readers of this column information. The goal of the NAACP is to make democracy work. It is an interracial organization which depends upon volunteers chiefly to carry on its program.

Democracy has been fought by some ever since it became the political doctrine and mechanism of this nation Hence it is not strange that as late as 1954 there is opposition to democracy by a few who say they believe in it. In that light it was significant that the NAACP held its 1954 statewide convention in Dallas County, the pivot of the Black Belt Here is the first part of those adopted resolutions

PART II POLICY

"The Alabama State Conference of NAACP Branches reiterates its commitment to the "principle of first-class citizenship for all citizens. It does not believe in the 'separate but equal' doctrine, and will oppose vigorously any and all forms of compulsory segregation on the basis of race, color, or creed."

"This conference commends all persons who are vigorously working for the elimination of legalized segregation, and calls upon all branches in the Conference to urge their members to refrain from patronizing all recreational agencies which segregate Negroes and as many as possible of other commercial firms such as filling stations, stores, etc. which discriminate against Negroes."

REGISTRATION

"In those counties in which it is easy to register, local branches are urged to stimulate non-voters to qualify; in those counties in which registration is difficult, local branches are instructed to develop a program of civic action which will be effective in overcoming the difficulty This Conference urges, also, the public exposure and, if expedient the legal prosecution of Registrars and other public officials citizens. This Conference calls upon the Governor Elect, Auditor Elect, and Commissioner of Agriculture and Industries Elect (1) to appoint to the County Board of Registrars only citizens who will permit qualified applicants to register, and (2) to remove from membership on the Boards of Registrars those members who discriminate on the basis of race against applicants who are otherwise qualified."

VOTING

"Because this Conference believes that voting intelligently is a significant function of the first-class citizen, it urges all of its branches to provide for their members and other citizens, at appropriate time, such political information as will enable them to vote intelligently.'

"This Conference commends all delegates and other citizens who voted in the general election on' Tuesday, November 2, 1954. It urges the voters in municipalities and counties to study the structure or organization of the government therein, and to plan and work for the election of the best possible candidates to office, and to offer as candidates for municipal and county officers wherever possible and feasible qualified Negro citizens"

"Negro voters who feel qualified to hold public office are urged to offer themselves as candidates."

"WHITE SUPREMACY"

"This Conference appeals to all branches and to voters to petition the Alabama State Democratic Committee to remove from the symbol of the State Democratic Party the words "White Supremacy."

OFFICE-HOLDING AND HONORS

"In as much as this Conference believes that intelligent political action is an important instrument for use in striving for first-class citizenship, it urges that neither this Conference nor any branch elect to office any member who is not a voter, or who has not made an effort to become registered. It further urges that neither this Conference nor any branch bestow any honor upon any citizen who is not a voter.

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

In his continued reporting of "additional facts and figures pointing to alleged irregularities in connection with the May 4 primary, Staff Writer Hugh Sparrow of The Birmingham News, November 7 apparently was unconcerned about the whole situation.

He suggested that 1950 census figures fewer white persons 21 years of age and above than the number of white persons listed on the registration lists of Nine Black Belt and border counties. In three of the nine counties which Reporter Sparrow checked (Bullock, Cleburne, Lowndes) "There were no Negroes at all on the voting list."

However, in a recent registration denial suit heard before U. S. Judge C. B. Kennamer, there was testimony to indicate that Bullock had 7 (one has since died) Negro Voters. There is also information available to indicate that while there has been a decrease in population in a number of counties there has not at the same time been a corresponding purging of the voter-registration lists.

Overlooked apparently by Reporters Sparrow is the whole Black Belt picture of irregularities in the political suffrage process. In the Bullock County vote denial case, as the court found, the three-man board of registrars seemingly had been playing "hide and seek" in preventing Negro citizens from getting on the voters list. Things of this kind have been, and in many instances currently, approved and considered regularities so long as they kept the number of Negro voters small or not at all.

July 5 I went into Lowndes County to get an on-the-scene view of the more than 50-year denial of voting opportunities to Negro citizens. There is not only hostility to Negro voting in this county but open war against any effort of any Negro, be he landowner, war veteran, schoolteacher, minister, good Negro or "Uncle Tom" to register to vote. I heard stories of terror against those Negroes who let it be known that they were even interested in voting and of advising Negro "leaders" that the "time is not ripe" and if "you want to get along well don't bother about voting." Irregularities of the foregoing kind, for worse than any others, are passed over excusingly, it seems to me. When you allow irregularities in one direction they also break out in the opposite direction, it seems to me.

It seems that in Cleburne County it is generally known that the powers that we have let Negro citizens know that they are not expected to be interested in voting, and thats it, buddy. But this is a reflection on Cleburne Negro leaders themselves, a blame which must be partly borne by such organizations as the Alabama State Teachers Association, the Prince Hall Masons, the Alabama Association of Women's Clubs, to name a few. For wrongful vote denials can be overcome where there is a determination by those who are racially denied that they intend to vote at wherever cost in money, suffering and toil.

One Negro vote in Lowndes County is worth 100 in Jefferson County. For that one Negro vote when cast becomes a political bullet fired at the enemy from close range. Lowndes is in the Second Congressional District and adjoining Montgomery County. A number of persons with good ASTA connections and Prince Hall hand-shakes live in this county but neglect to offer themselves as applicants for the ballot because of fear and intimidation. Those who are afraid can never enter the vineyards of political suffrage.

The four hounds of low-figures Negro voting in Alabama may be identified as: (1) the Negro ballot blackout counties; (2) the Negro token vote counties; (3) the Negro quota-system counties and (4) the Negro apathy counties. On-the scene leadership is the only leadership that can do anything about these conditions. But the top state-level leaders can encourage, inspire and influence.

In a series of Negro-vote survey essays dealing with the Alabama situation I pointed out that in most of the Black Belt counties nearly every voting-age white person was listed on the voter-registration rolls. Second, that despite the handicaps in getting registered to vote. the total Negro vote in Alabama was able to almost match the total white Black Belt vote. Third, that the Black Belt politicians would likely become the victims of the scheme they devised to hold down the Negro politically. For because of the thinness of the Black Belt vote any politican for statewide office from this section begins with a handicap if he is opposed by one from a non-Black Belt county.

Therefore in self-defense the Black Belt, it it leaders are wise, would relax the vicious restrictions on Negro voting. Negro leaders on the state level seem duty bound to become political missionaries and move through Wilcox, Lowndes, Bullock, Marshall, Cleburne, awakening Negro citizens to their responsibility in a democracy.

It should be said that the counties mentioned by Reporter Sparrow were Lowndes, Maronge, Perry, Choctaw, Clay, Cooosa, Clarke, Elmore, Bullock, Macon, Butler, Chilton, Cleburne and Hale.

New signs in Alabama hint that some of the status quo forces see the crumbling of any legal defense of compulsory segregation.

From the Black Belt comes one hateful signal in the form of the "White Citizens Councils." In certain areas of the Methodist Church in Alabama a few old voices are seeking to arouse hostility against the position of the General Methodist Conference and that of its bench of bishops. Both stand for a gift, for "God so loved that He gave . . ." It is a gift unmerited. I didn't earn it. This gift is a personal, endless, intimate and transforming friendship. All people who accept this friendship will have soft manners, gentile hearts, sweet tenderness and infectious goodness. It is easy to be good in their presence.

If you would have God's gift, the transforming friendship of Jesus Christ, simply leave the door of your life ajar. Just as you breathe in the air, breathe in the spirit of this friendship. Open the very pores of your skin for this, His loving and healing friendship. Live in the presence of this friendship, and you will become a new being.

Jesus comes to us not only in His church house, or in the room when the door is shut, but as He came to Mary and Martha, busy cooking and washing dishes . . . and as He came to Peter mending His Nets, Jesus comes to us in our household duties and on our jobs with God's gift . . . The transforming friendship of Jesus Christ.

In our temptations Jesus comes to us. In our sorrows and joys the transforming friendship of Christ comes to us. Simply leave the door ajar.

Let us keep this friendship fresh and green by prayer, by worship, by ministering to others. It is an eternal friendship. It is God's great Christmas gift to the world. It is glorified by the meaning of the cross. God so loved men that He gave us Jesus. Jesus so loved men that He gave His life. Christ loves men and women, boys and girls, not only when they are lovable, but at all times.

God's purpose is to win people. God's purpose is to win people by love . . . a superiority of love over hate. And God, through Jesus Christ's friendship, will keep on keeping on until men give up hating and are overtaken by love.

"What a Friend we have in Jesus!
All our sins and griefs to bear . . ."
Can we find a friend so faithful?

living within the law and the teachings of Jesus Christ.

Bigotry is seeking a place to stand and spout. Public opinion is beginning to melt segregation. Hence the strident voices of restricted rights are trying desperately to halt the trend, to reverse the changes and to contaminate the new waters of liberty. Too many everywhere now know that racial segregation is wrong. The public debate on the issue is bringing the truth to light.

Check the history of education. Public education in Alabama and especially in the Black Belt, was fought as hard or harder, than desegregated education is being fought today in that section. Under the fraudulent "separate but equal" rule the Black Belt never provided more than the "separate" and at times it wasn't even that much for the members of the Negro race. The old-line finishing schools are still existent for members of the white group in the Black Belt. The rulers of the Black Belt are opposed to members of the Negro group getting a good education in good local schools.

Negro leaders were in the fight for public schools. They had to fight alone to try to level up the schools under the old dual school system and never achieved equality of educational opportunity. They are going to have to fight to desegregate public education all over Alabama.

The NAACP has recommended a six-point program for compliance with the May 17 school segregation abolition decision. But much more than recommendations are necessary. Local leadership is going to be needed to put over this program. First thing then, it seems to me, is for the association to begin to build, develop and recruit grass-roots leaders who are not in the clutches of those forces seeking to evade, overturn or eliminate the meaning of that great court ruling.

The Federal Government has a number of already-established operations which can serve as pilot projects in the public education for desegregation work. Among them are the military installations, one being in Selma. A second is the VA hospitals of which three are located in this state and a third are federal contracts. A close look should be made in the Black Belt to determine what persons and firms are getting federal money.

Is one who invokes the "boycott" in trying to defy the highest court's decision patriotically any higher than one who invokes the "Fifth Amendment" to defy security to this country? This is an angle which might well be considered by those interested in the preservation of democracy.

Publicly-financed schools cannot rationally nor democratically be split up into "White" or "Negro" schools. But we have reacted emotionally about this issue for over a half-century. The court gave a validity to this "separate but equal" fallacy but a later court discovered this error and boldly and unanimously sought to correct it.

Here are the six ideas advanced by the NAACP in the field of desegregation.

TUES. 12-14-54

1. That NAACP branches continue the stimulation of discussion by such responsible groups as churched, civic organizations and trade unions in order to prepare the community for acceptance of desegregation by September, 1955.

2. That school boards be encouraged to take a firm and positive position for early compliance with the unanimous decision of the United States Supreme Court on May 17, 1954 holding segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

3. That active support be given to individuals and groups who seek to implement the Supreme Court ruling.

4. That, in the absence of organized Negro civic units in a community, state units of the NAACP assist the local people.

5. That efforts of outside groups to prevent integration and the role of bigoted elements in defiance of the Supreme Court decision be exposed.

6. That the total resources of the NAACP, including legal action where necessary, be utilized to achieve integration.

The Governor's Office, Montgomery, Ala.—(SNS—There were two dramatic dissents, both on separate issues, at the meeting of the State Board of Education here Friday, July 9 where a college president was fired and a declaration adopted to ignore the May 17 Supreme Court decision outlawing the segregated school system.

Dr. S. S. Seay, secretary of the Department of Home Missions, Pension and Relief of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, lifted a clear, calm courageous voice against adoption of a three-legged resolution offered by Gordon Persons, president of the board spelling out the views of the present administration on the controversial and unconstitutional school segregation issue.

Editor Charles G. Dobbins of the Montgomery Examiner, a weekly general newspaper, stood alone in opposing the dismissal of Dr. W. W. Hill as president of Livingston State Teachers College. He knew he was alone but felt that no case had been made for taking Dr. Hill's job away from him.

Neither Dr. Seay nor Editor Dobbins saw fit to support each other's dissent. Both made equally brilliant representations of the ideas they espoused. Theirs were both fair play dissents. . . . . .

The Persons preserve school segregation resolution said that (1) the U. S. Supreme Court has yet to state the time and when of its anti-segregation pronouncement; (2) that the state constitution requires separation of the racial groups in schools and that (3) unless ordered by the courts, no unit of the Alabama public school system will be permitted to de-segregate voluntarily. There is to be the status quo at least until 1955.

However, Gov. Persons said that the public was urged to continue to work together to make the school system the best. He said that school officials were to act in exact accordance with the constitution of Alabama. There was no discussion and the resolution was adopted unanimously by roll call.

None of those attending the special board meeting chose to have anything to say at this point. Although it had been widely published in the newspapers that the school segregation question would be discussed, other than Dr. Seay there was no spokesman for the Supreme Court's view present to raise a voice. The militant Montgomery minister learned of the hearing less than two hours before it was to be held. Bishop James Clair Taylor of the AME Zion Church wanted to attend it but had another engagement. He suggested that the Alabama-born, Talladega College trained Dr. Seay speak in the name of the powerful AME Zion Church.

There was lively discussion of the resolution to remove the tenure of Dr. Hill after charges against him were withdrawn. It is not clear to me what is really behind the removal of Dr. Hill. The flimsy budget over-sepnding or irregularities charges do not appear to be the real reasons behind the action. Mr. Dobbins did not speculate or suggest motives but argued the issue on its merit. To me what happened to Dr. Hill is far more serious than the attention currently given to it.

Board members commented on what a fine, friendly, competent man Dr. Hill was and that nobody had anything personal against him. There was nothing professional against him. However, there were the admitted technical mis-doings in which he misused no money nor wasted any. Does this mean that if a college president is friendly, he is not worthy of heading a public institution? The firing of Dr. Hill needs to be searched into further, it seems to me.

It was at the close of the debate on the Hill dismissal resolution that Dr. Seay spoke up. Although the agenda had moved from the school continuation of school segregation resolution, Gov. Person said nothing as the minister spoke up for integration. No one uttered a word after Dr. Seay's warning counsel. He spoke deliberately, eloquently and with a feeling of cosmic backing. He had in a way saved the day for the Negro group by placing in the record a rejection of the board ideas in handling boldly and rightly the problem of change implied and declared in the May 17 Supreme Court decision.

In substance Dr. Seay divided his challenging plea into two parts: (1 do what you ought do and can do now—lower the racial bars in higher education and integrate the teachers and (2 make plans now to integrate in the below college schools. In the subtlety, he told the board members that they could have made a better out preparing for the changeover than trying to block the workings of God.

"H i s was an extemporaneous speech that bubbled from the heart of man full of freedom and faith. He was careful to point out that his was a message from a man of God who earnestly believed that decent men who see the light will change and do what is right.

He told the story of his daughter who desired to attend the Medical School of the University of Alabama but ended up in an Eastern institution where a number of her classmates are white Southerners, the latter able to attend the Alabama medical school. In other words white youth are leaving Alabama for school where it is known that Negro students are accepted.

Each of the nine Congressional Districts is represented on the 11-men State Board of Education. They are Myron R. Rubey of Mobile (1); C G Dobbins of Montgomery (2); H L Upshaw of Eufaula (3) Col Harry M Ayers of Anniston (4); William Hodo of Alex City (5); C A Montgomery of Eutaw (6); T A Robinson of Cullman (7); W Van Gilbert of Athens (8) and Marvin Hawkins of Birmingham (9). The Governor is president of the board and the State Superintendent of Education is its secretary and executive officer.

Too few citizens know the workings of their government and the relation of the cast ballot to its operation. When the governor, the state superintendent of education and the legislative delegation are elected the voters determine who will look after public education of every level in this state. Minorities are not fairly represented on this board. The Negro group which constitutes approximately 34 per cent of the Alabama population is without any direct voice on this board.

This is likely to continue until the authenic leaders of the Negro group go into the rural areas and build up the poll list on a county by county basis. So long as there is a total blackout of the Negro vote in Lowndes and Wilcox merely token voting in Hale and Monroe, bewildering in Jefferson and indifference in other counties, the Negro

Two-party politics depend upon something more than talk. Its built upon a clash of ideas, competitive leadership and sides-taking followship.

Political parties take their identies from contending philosophies more than they do personalities. Sometimes the personality and the philosophy blend.

Writing in the August 21 issue of The Saturday Evening Post, Hodding Carter gives six reasons of how "The Republicans Muffed the Ball in Dixie." He lists them as "long habit" of one-way voting; (2) the fightless conduct of President Eisenhower; (3) the smart strategy of the Democratic high command; (4) Senator McCarthy's unchecked national role which involved the religious issue; (5) civil rights issue and (6) a conglomeration of Southern objections to presidential or party pronouncements.

A Birmingham News editorial added a seventh observation for Alabama the failure of state GOPers to conduct a primary and forward new leadership and wider participation. It also made no vigorous efforts to induce to its ranks a number of those upcoming Republicans who wanted to see the Alabama Republican Party stand for the "Abraham Lincoln" principles."

One of the most vocal of the newly-converted Alabama Republicans is Publisher Tom Abernethy who is running for the governship of Alabama. He is scheduled to address a statewide Republican rally at Temple Theater Monday night, Sept. 13. He is a former member of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, was a delegate at the 1950 National Dem-cratic Convention in Philadelphia in 1948, supported the States' Rights in the 1948 presidential election.

Mr Abernethy, publisher of the Talladega Daily Home, expouses the Dixiecrat theology. When he spoke at Camden in Wilcox County, his advertisement listed his objectives as (1) driving gangsters from government; (2) maintaining racial segregation and (fighting) the evils of one party-politics."

He was speaking in the Black Belt which apparently believes in one-race politics which is partly the blame for one-partyism in the South. None of the reports coming from his speech-making mentions anything he is saying about racial discranchisement. The Black Belt is beginning to feel the pinch of denying the vote to a majority of its citizens for no better reason than prejudice.

Wilcox County has 2.900 voters but not a single one of them is a Negro person. It has 18.566 Negro persons in contrast with 4,910 white persons.

The Republican Party was founded on civil rights and the ballot is the finest symbol of such rights.

It seems to me that the Dixiecrats have not seriously wanted to establish a two-party political system in the South. It appears that they want to have veto power over both parties. This is a type of political amalgam by which they seek to function in both parties or as a balance-of-power force between the two major parties.

Hodding Carter points out in his article:

"To the race-conscious white Southerner, determined to retain political and economic controls, the Republican Party, from the Civil War until the New Deal, was the party of the Negro, and the Democratic Party the refuge of the white man in the South. Under Roosevelt and Truman, the party wooed and won the bulk of the Negro vote, with little regard for Southern feelings, and with a resultant Southern frustration that was climaxed by the Unavailing States' Rights rebellion of 1948, when four Southern states supported a Southern third-party presidential ticket."

"During this period of change in the Negro's political affections some Southerners began to see, perhaps wishfully, certain States' Rights tinges in the Republican Party; and there is no doubt that considerable Southern support of Eisenhower stemmed from the belief that while he sought racial justice, he believed that the primary job of bringing it about belonged to the states."

"The disenchantment in this respect has been complete. It is possibly provable that in the past two years the Negro has gained more advantages, and with more governmental spearheading of his progress, than he had in the previous twenty years. Anyway, that's what the Gop is telling the Negro voter. A good many Southerners believe that Mr Eisenhower was unnecessarily active-and acted contrary to what they had been led to expect-when, for example, he ordered his Attorney General to take part in the school-segregation cases when they reached the Supreme Court."

"This, and other incidents-notably the prompt action to end segregation in Washingtonhas left the South nowhere to take its racial mores, politically speaking. So why not, the argument runs, stick to the party wherein lies our traditional strength and where our spokesmen have an impregnable position?"

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

THE COLLIRENE COMMUNITY, LOWNDES COUNTY, Ala.—SNS—Picnic-time perhaps is the most pleasant time to unroll one's first-hand observations of this ballot-denyng, freedom-restricting, education-stifling county.

On July 5, a group of kinfolk and friends staged a home-returning barbecue spread on the grounds of the Collirene School, which is more of a hazard than a school building. From places like Chicago, Detroit, and Birmingham they came to spend the celebration of July Fourth. One day is enough for me in Lowndes County which has a record of political suppression, brutality, violence and social persecution as notorious as the vice and gambling record of Russell County.

I have reported by use of statistics on some of these conditions but numerical facts are weak escorts when placed against on-the-spot observations.

No one could have convinced me without my seeing it that anywhere in Alabama are to be found school buildings in the horrible shape of some of those I saw as I rode through Lowndes county.

The federal-state school building survey revealed that the white schools did not need any money to bring them up to standard but that the Negro schools needed $3,052,500 to advance them to acceptable rating. I knew that the 195 Negro teachers, all of them non-voters who live in Lowndes, had paid $2 apiece to honor their lady superintendent for "15 years of service."

Often these honor-your boss affairs are the means by which the fearful seeks to ask for things they need and lack the courage to put into words. After reading the account of the "15 years of service" for which Miss Hulda Coleman, superntendent of Lowndes County Public Schools was honored as published in The Lowndes County Informer, I should have caught on. The account lists nothing concrete or suggestively to indicate that the service citation was really earned.

"For having served Lowndes County fifteen years as superintendent, the association (Lowndes County Teachers' Associaton) honored Mss Hulda Coleman, superintendent of education on May 13th."

Of course, this could have been incomplete reporting by this school organ. Or it could have been based upon some of the fine impressions made by the superintendent who I understand served on some of the committees which went around checking schools which were announcing readiness for the approved list. I heard her praised for her work on such committees and this may have gotten back to the LCTA. It could be that my eyes are failing me. Maybe, as I hinted, it could be a method of prodding her to do something, believing that she is fair minded and concerned.

Lowndes County has 2,200 white voters but not a single Negro voter. The Lowndes County Board of Education allows non-voters to teach in its public schools at a time when we in America are being challenge to actually prove that democracy works for all everywhere in this country. There are 14,790 Negro persons living in this county. Yet persons living in this country. Yet since 1901 ths country as tightly and totally denied the ballot to the Negro group.

Here is a county which has sent forth native sons like Bishop Bertram Wilbur Doyle of the Seventh Episcopal District of the CME Church and Dr. E. W. Williams, president of the Alabama State Baptist Convention. Should they return to Lowndes to make their home likely they too would be deprived of their right to vote. To be black is to be denied the ballot in Lowndes. Do you call this democracy?

Top leaders in the nine-county Second Congressional District are scheduled to meet at the Elks Club, 907 Cleveland Avenue, Montgomery at 1 p. m., Saturday, July 24 to discuss a What-the-Alabama Negro Wants program and to formulate plans to either open up Negro voting or expanding it. However, it is usually impossible to find persons in these counties where Negro citizens are voteless to attend such meetings. A workshop for Jeanes Supervisors is scheduled for July 19—23 at Alabama State College at Montgomery.

Mr. E. D. Nixon is serving as chairman of district meeting. He is familiar with the problems facing the Negro group all over Alabama. But none can help those who are unwilling to make the first step themselves.

A number of Negro families are doing fine in Lowndes. They own beautful homes, long automobiles, and fertile lands. They pay tax on their homes, land and cars but have no voice in the selection of those who levy and collect the taxes. They barbecue but they can't ballot.

Only to an outsider perhaps are these agonizing discriminations discernible. To live where there is a blackout of the ballot dims one ability to see the political darkness. Ballot denying disables democracy.

What I have written is about conditions rather than about people. Had I closed my eyes to the school buildings and shut-off-my minds to historical facts, I could have done a gay column. For never have I before seen a group which appeared happier. Many of them also came to stay only a day back home.

Some high-placed resignations from the board of directors of the National Urban League, have set off some healthy discussion on the organization's activities policies, operations, structure and relationship to the changing needs of the Negro group.

Among the resignations is that of Judge Irvin G. Mollison of the United States Customs Court, New York City. He outlined his sharp views on NUL in a letter of June 21 to NUL President Robert W. Dowling. Mr. Mollison subsequently released his critical letter to the press. The judge is a sincere, scholarly, and passionately devoted man with a long and useful record of service to the Urban League on the local and national level.

Speaking before the 15th annual session of the National Newspaper Publishers Association, the erudite and polished Lester B. Granger took occasion to answer the charges made by Mr. Mollison against the league. He said (1) Judge Mollison misappropriated the truth when he asserted the NUL would not cooperate with the N. A. A. C. P. in the campaign to destroy racial segregation and discrimination: (2) that contrary to the view given by the Customs Judge, the Urban League has and continued to oppose the alleged biased employment policies of U. S. Steel; (3) that it is absolutely false to say that the league has "one-man rule" and that Judge Mollison helped to draft the constitution he now sees fit to criticize.

In a place like Birmingham, certain forces which claim they desire to help the Negro group, think the Urban League is too radical and hard-hitting in its approach. Instead of it, the Birmingham group created an interracial committee. Alabama has no NUL unit.

Here is Judge Mollison's resignation letter:

"Mr. Robert W. Dowling
President of the National Urban League
1133 Broadway
New York 10. N. Y."

"Dear Mr. Dowling:

"Certain events have transpired at the National Urban League which have caused me to come to the decision that I can no longer continue to serve as a member of the Board of Trustees.

"The National Urban League has no program of any consequence or any real benefit to Negroes. The League, its officers, and its staff are completely out of touch with Negroes and their desires to participate as full fledged American citizens in our American democracy. The National Urban League has failed to meet the challenge of the times in the important areas of housing, employment, and education.

"The National Urban League and its executive staff have refused to cooperate with the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other reputable organizations in the achievement and fulfillment of worthwhile objectives for the benefit of Negroes generally. No programs have been devised to combat openly and forthrightly discrimination in housing against Negroes. No effective steps have been taken to protest openly against the housing discrimination practiced against Negroes by Levittown in Bucks County, Pa. and Long Island, N. Y., or by Fairless Hills Village in Bucks County, or by the insurance-company-owned housing projects in New York City. The League has likewise failed to pursue with vigor all remedies available to it in connection with employment discrimination against Negroes in Bucks County. Moreover for years the League has failed to manifest any real and genuine interest in the education of Negro pupils and students upon an equal and non-discriminatory basis."

"One fundamental cause of the lack of a program of benefit and value to Negroes is the detachment and isolation of the Board of Trustees as a board from Negroes generally and the membership of the local leagues. The Board of Trustees is unrepresentative not only of Negroes generally but also of the local league membership; as a consequence it is not responsive to the needs of Negroes whom the organization is supposed to serve."

"Happenings at the Annual Meeting of the National Urban League on June 10th have brought into sharp focus not only the undemocratic, arbitrary and autocratic election procedures of the League but also the oligarchic governmental structure which permits ONE MAN RULE and domination. The National Urban League Constitution and By-Laws do not provide that members of the LOCAL Urban Leagues by virtue of local League membership are members of the National Urban League The NUL constitution merely provides that a person who contributes money in a certain stated amount is a member. However something further must be done before a contributor can constitutionally become a member — the contributor must be selected and recommended by the Membership Committee of the NUL and thereafter elected by the Board of Trustees.

"Because of these undemocratic and unrepresentative constitutional provisions a member of the Cleveland Urban League was informed that he was not a member of the National Urban League and therefore could not participate in the Annual Meeting. Susequently as a matter of courtesy and grace he was given the right to speak. Membership in a local League does not make anyone a member of the National Urban League."

"In essence and substance the only members of the National Urban League are the members of the Board of Trustees which at will elects to and drops from, its Board various persons either at its regular meetings or in the Annual Meeting of the League. The National Urban League is thus a self perpetuating oligarchy which is entirely removed from the membership of the local Leagues and the general public."

"Although there are many fine and sincere board members, the Board of Trustees as a board has not exercised any real control over the program policies of the League; nor has the Board exercised active control over the financial affairs of the League. As a nentity the Board of Trustees allows itself to be used as a "rubber stamp" by the executive director, who stiffled freedom of speech i nthe board as policies and program or the lack of program. And moreover the Board of Trustees has allowed the so-called Urban League Fund to usurp the authority of the Board over program and financial affairs and thus make all the real policy decisions for the League."

"At the Annual Meeting I noticed with considerable regret the ruling of the chair that only the names of those contained in the nominating committee's report could be voted on, and that nominations could not be made from the floor. I regarded with dismay the efforts of two staff members to prevent the nomination made by petition signed by five Board members from being voted on by the body."

"I observed that the Annual Meeting was packed with all the paid professional and clerical employees of the agency. It seems to me that allowing them to vote for and against the election of board members, as was done at the Annual Meeting, was not only extraordinary but wholly unprecedented in a social welfare agency."

"The matters set forth above are some of the reasons which have brought me to the decision that I can no longer serve as a board member. I therefore submit my resignation as a member of the Board of Trustees of the National Urban League effective immediately."

"(Signed)

Irvin C. Mollison."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Only 14 days had passed since I had made a pop call on Bishop James Clair Taylor at his at 111 1-2 Monroe Street. But this time, July 24, I knew that death had left "Room 3" vacant.

For a long time I had been trying to get Prof J. E. Pierce of Alabama State College to meet Bishop Taylor Since I wanted to drop by his office July 9, Mr Pierce decided he would go along.

When I related to Bishop Taylor that my mission was to cover the public hearing of the State Board of Education at which there was to be considered the question of school segregation and the proposed dismissal of Dr. W. W. Hill as president of Livingston State College he expressed interest in attending but had another engagement. He then suggested that Dr. S. S. Seay attend the public hearing and voice the opposition of the A. M. E. Zion Church to segregated schools.

I am here exclusively as a newspaper but in stating my mission and seeing that the board meeting was going to be open, Bishop Taylor was anxious to have a spokesman for de-segregation in the meeting. It happened that Dr Seay was the lone representative of the group at this hearing, with the exception of your correspondent.

While we were in the office of Bishop Taylor he brough up the subject with Prof. Pierce about some names he was trying to secure for the purpose of organizing a civic discussion or perhaps he was going to build it around the framework of the Birmingham Hungry Club. He didn't go that far.

In 1953, Bishop Taylor delivered the Emancipation Day address in Montgomery at which he made a glorious impression because of the sharpness of his scholarship, the penetration of his thinking, and the felicity of spirit.

He was serving in New Jersey at prelate when this state cast off segregation and enacted equal job opportunities legislation. His testimony in behalf of civil rights, from what I can gather was one of the classic presentations. Because of his soft-like personality, easy competency, and tendency to pull away from the spotlight, he probably has never been given full credit for his efforts.

Bishop Taylor, from what I can learn, was waging a stubborn uphill and popular fight to get bishops to live in the district over which they supervise. Many of them are assigned to districts but make their homes far away from those who feed them He had served, I am told, as secretary of the A M E Zion Bishop Council, having been upped from assistant Here again his high principles he would not sacrifice to seniority and selfishness.

Looking for a site to buy or build a home for episcopal residence, Bishop Taylor reportedly had difficulties finding a suitable site. Public officials are said to have been disturbed over this after it had been brought to their attention.

Zion Church when Bishop Taylor delivered the "Men's Day" sermon It was one of the most challenging messages I have heard. He cited figures, examples and observations of the waning influence of men in the church He directed his ideas at trying to awaken the men of the church as to their responsibility. He had come to Tuscaloosa by bus, preferring this mode of travel to driving his automobile. He rode back to Birmingham together with Presiding Elder Merriweather Along the way he talked, and I listened His whole talk was about improving things, of elevating people and serving in the community ql everwhich H R A T A T THTR

One evening I was dinner guest, along with Bishop Taylor and his wife, Mrs. Anne Taylor, and some others at the home of the Rev. and Mrs. G. W. McMurray of Birmingham. Rev. McMurray is minister of the Metropolitan A. M. E. Zion Church. At the table I mentioned to him the suggested "Spotswood Day" which the NAACP desired to sponsor in Montgomery. He readily gave his consent. He had on a financial drive for Lomax-Hannon College, sponsored by the AME Zion Church, but went along with the project the association had for raising money. However, it was strictly an NAACP promotion.

Coincidentally, he was stricken at the home of Rev. McMurray He had tried to get the episcopate to set up the episcopal residence in Birmingham But Bishop Taylor thought that Montgomery was more centrally located.

I didn't know Bishop Taylor was sick until I received the call Friday, July 23, that he had expired in a local hospital.

Sixty-one, Bishop Taylor was born in Boston, Mass He is survived by a son and his widow

It is possible that Bishop Taylor was not too well known in these parts except among his church folk and a few new friends he had made. I understand he had recently discussed with a minister some ideas for a five-year plan. He had been able to get some people to come and work in the rurals as missionaries. He knew the problems and needs of the rural church and was trying to do something about them.

These were something which could not be said in a newstory and therefore I decided to make my column available for haul these items out into the open so that you can in a way measure the big loss his passing represents

NASHVILLE, Tenn. —(SNS)— For the past 15 years Alabama educators have played a significant role in the American Teachers Association.

Through enormous memberships it has poured money into the A. T A. In turn, this organization has invested in war bonds, in the NAACP, in research in services which have benefited the teaching profession specifically, the Negro group generally and America imperceptibly.

It has furnished leadership as presndents, regional leaders, convention workers and in the person of Dr. H. Council Trenholm, its executive secretary.

Still Alabama in many respects lags behind many of the states represented in the ATA. It is one of the five states which has failed to lower the racial barriers in higher education. Georgia, Florida, South Carolina and Mississippi are bunched with Alabama in this respect

Alabama has disadvantages in other aspects with its other laggard companions, Georgia has a teamwork formula by which Prof. C. L. Harper as executive secretary of the teachers association can muster strength. Mississippi has an independence in its association which allows its leadership slugging space. South Carolina teachers and NAACP leaders work on a number of joint projects. Florida teachers made room in its organization for Noah Griffin when he led a teacher salary fight.

I have made no observation as to how well the state associations are carrying out the basic program, projects and promotions of the ATA This is an area which deserves attention in the light of the desegregation objectives of the ATA.

It is hardly enough to merely help finance a good program without functioning with it. Otherwise it is a type of buying your way when a little servicing of the objective would go much further.

In my opinion the ATA has a program that its members should appreciate. Those who work with it seem to be sincere. In the acceptance speech made Mrs. Lillian R Johnson, president-elect, there was something spiritual which flowed out with her words.

The delegates who had begun to show restlessness, came back to life when she started to speak. Throughout her message that was the asking of help from God. She had suffered an accident a few days before but came on to the convention. I set there and listen to her, taking no notes. Her message was the kind one takes down in his heart instead of on paper. She impressed me as being in earnest, determined to advance the association's program.

ATA works in an unserved field. It still has to prod the NEA in areas where the prestige of this larger teacher organization could make a contribution to the profession For it should bear in mind always that the teaching profession is one profession

I gather that the ATA has a few white members. However, the NEA has more Negro members than the ATA has white members. This is due to a number of factors of which none would reflect unkindly on either organization. ATA and NEA are working together on some projects.

School teachers are the custodians of democracy Through them, the currents of civilization run Every school in a free country is a tool house of democracy As teachers of democracy and with the May 17 decision on the open school a part of democracy the adjustment should not be hard among human beings The good teacher is an example of democracy and goodwill in action.

One thing should be kept before the politicians and the public is that the scholars, all of them school teachers, furnished much of the information upon which rested the court's memorable decision. They dug up new information which show the absurdity of the separate but equal doctrine. They were to catalogue the changes which have taken place that makes it look silly among intelligent men.

This is to say nothing of the moral grounds which could be argued.

A democratic people, unliked those under dicatorship, are flexiable. Human beings are distinguishabel from the lower animals because of their adaptability. The ATA has plenty of fresh material along this line. As teachers and scholars they know that human beings can learn together without hurting each other.

By what can one measure race relations in Macon County? This question has been raised, obliquely and challengingly, by Mr. W. P. Mitchell, an executive of the Tuskegee Civic Association, the Tuskegee Branch NAACP and the director of civil liberties for the Alabama Association of Elks. He is Alabama born and a graduate of Tuskegee Institute.

It should be interposed here too, that the Tuskegee Institute Department of Records and Research, has revised its formula for testing progress in the South. Gone is the lynching index as the guide to improvement in human relations. Jobs, voting, barrier-breaking are among the new concepts.

Mr. Mitchell has come up with a dissent on an editorial in The Alabama Journal, Montgomery, Ala., August 11, titled "I Want To Go Back Home, which attempts see in the voluntary return to Tuskegee of a man charged with a serious crime a sign of improved race relations in Macon County.

Before presenting the Mitchell dissent, it should be noted that Macon County has a population of 26,228 Negro persons and 4,900 white persons. It has 3,007 white voters and only 855 Negro voters. All but about 74 of the voting age white citizens are qualified to vote while there are 13,684 non-voter Negro citizens.

Mr. Mitchell did not seem to feel that the comment that "nowhere in Alabama are race relations better than in Macon County" was justified by the facts, although the newspaper had admitted the incident it cited was an "isolated exception."

It appears that what prompted the comment was "a Negro who waived extradition in Philadelphia because of a nostalgic urge to return to Tuskegee presumably to be booked on murder."

Wrote Mr. Mitchell " ..... The present chief law enforcement officer for the (Macon) county seems to put forth determined efforts to deal fairly with all persons. During his four years as sheriff of Macon County, on instance of brutality or maladministration has come to my attention."

Then Mr. Mitchell asserts that no publicity was given by the newspapers to the alleged "beating of Willie Horn" by Tuskegee city police men. He said the Negro boy had committed the crime of "assisting a white boy home with some gasoline."

There are many gruesome details presented by Mr. Mitchell on the alleged treatment this Negro boy received allegedly at the hands of the "policeman and his aides" who "severely" beat "this helpless boy."

Then Mr. Mitchell moves into another area which he seems to feel can cast light on race relations.

He writes: "Suppose one takes a look at the voter registration situation. The hundred of Negroes making applications for registration certificates must wait for long hours in hallways and stairways of the courthouse to get into the Prisoner Room (approximately 8 x 10) which is used to register Negroes."

"In addition to waiting long hours to get into the room to make application, hundreds must go back two to five times before they are finally passed by the Macon County Board of Registrars. White persons who are out-numbered by Negroes in this county five to one, make application in a much larger room in another section of the courthouse."

"During 1953, 195 Negro applications were made but only 27 received certificates of registration. Our records for 1954 show that 391 applications were made by Negroes, but only 135 certificates have been issued through the last registration day, Monday, August 2, 1954."

"There is an absence of violence in Tuskegee and Macon County."

Yes, oh yes, many factors should be considered in measuring citizenship relationships among community people. The ballot is one of the foremost barometers of race relations. Racial disfranchisement is a sign of unabalanced group relations.

The ballot illuminates and illustrates this point better than anything else in Macon County. For here in this county one finds the vast spending power concentrated at the VA Hospital and Tuskegee Institute. But this dollar power cannot be submitted for ballot power. There are things to be obtained through the ballot which money cannot buy.

Democracy in public carriers is a continuing struggle. Subtle and crude devices are often used to deny to one segment of the riding population the equal, exact and same accommodations as the other riders. Now and then there comes a first-hand report of how discrimination is conducted on public carriers in areas forbidden by federal court decisions.

No names will be used in connection with this report but the observations are being presented to bring before the spotlight of healthy public opinion practices which seem to be wrong and unconstitutional. Unless such practices are exposed, protested and fought, they are likely to go on and on. The riding public can break them up. Here is that report:

"On Friday morning, August 13th, three other persons and I boarded the Piedmont at Chehaw, Alabama. It was due in Chehaw at 3:07 but came at 3:35. On getting on the train, as the conductor stood on the ground and checked our tickets as we stepped into the train, he said "go to your right." Being on to this tactic we went to our left and found comfortable seats. As soon as the train pulled out of Chehaw Station, the conductor came to me and asked me to move into the next car where he told me to go. I told him I was quite comfortable and did not care to move. He then told me to move because he said so and I answered him that I was comfortable and did not care to move and would only do so if he insisted and then my moving would be under protest because the Supreme Court had said that I might sit wherever I wanted to as long as I had paid for the accommodation. I still refused to move letting him know that the insistence would have to come from him. He finally walked away mumbling, and was later heard to utter "this damn Supreme Court." Knowing I had no intention of moving unless actually forced I rode quietly on into Atlanta."

"Upon arriving in Atlanta the train crew changed and as soon as some car changes had been made in Atlanta, the new conductor came into the car where I was and touched each white person and asked that they move into the next car. As he told each white person when he came to the person nearest to me he said "move into the next car because you are going into New York. Whereupon, one of the young women who had boarded the train and sat next to me, who was going into New York got up and got her bags to move into the next cars since the conductor had given that as the reason for moving. At this point, the conductor blated out that he had asked the people to move that he wanted to move. I said, this young woman is going into New York and since you said for those going into New York to move then she should move. He then told me that he was running this train, he was boss and he would run it like he wanted to. I said, I shall certainly let Mr. Thurgood Marshall know about this."

"Later on, we had an opportunity to learn the conductor's name. He is on the run from Atlanta, Ga. to Salisbury, N. C. I was further told that this conductor was doing everything possible to keep the cars segregated. They had heard this conductor and the one who got off in Atlanta talking together but did not know what was being said, so after the incident of moving all the white people they wanted to know what had happened before we had reached Atlanta. Incidentally, the car into which he herded all the white passengers was crowded and some of the white persons were without seats. One white man who got on later asked the colored porter if he might sit in the car with us and the porter told him to sit wherever he wanted to. He sat in the car with us and got off at Tocca, Ga."

"I am simply relating this to you because I want you to know some more actions and reactions in our experiences of getting about here in this South land. Out of this NAACP gained a membership and I believe a prospective good worker. This person is from Seneca, S. C. and he told me about their having tried to get a chapter in Seneca and how some of our "accommodators" had thrown a road block. The gentleman promised to put forth a greater effort to get an active NAACP in his home town."

THREE NOTCH, Ala—(SNS) —Moving through the rurals where you talk with the rank and file leadership in the branchheads, you catch a reflection of the need for a new type of service.

Despite the valuable work done in the field of de-segregation literature by the Southern Regional Council of Atlanta and the American Teachers Association with headquarters in Montgomery and the Public Affairs Committee of New York City, little or none of this information is available to the non-urban people.

There are no centers of information such as public or private libraries where such information is accessible. No one seems to be interested in distributing it. It has to be grapevined and bootlegged into these sections, it seems.

Just as slaves heard the Emancipation Proclamation issued by Abraham Lincoln, the rural peole know about the unanimous decision outlawing classroom segregation read on May 17 by Justice Earl Warren of the United States Supreme Court. It reads in part:

"Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater, when it has the sanction of the law. For the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore, has a tendency to retard the educational and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system."

Perhaps there is no better exhibit o fthe wickedness of the separate but equal doctrine than the public school system of Bullock and Barbour counties. These counties are politically and economically poor because they are educationally poor. Its citizens have reduced per capita income because of reduction in education growing out of the wasteful dual educational system.

Segregated schools are now illegal schools. They are as illegal as the slave system. Who defends them defends lawlessness. Regardless to one's personal opinion. his racial theories, his sectional notions, these must take an inoperative place in the face of the law. The Supreme Court is striking down the separate but equal doctrine merely corrected an error of a previous era. These things for both the Negro and white groups to bear in mind

The cross-over is going to require able, sober, enlightened and God-touched leadership. In a recent column in the California Eagle, Lester B. Granger, executive secretary of the National Urban League, commented upon this aspect of the challenge. He suggested:

"Booker T. Washington, W. E. B. DuBois, Marcus Garvey, James Weldon Johnson, Eugene Kinkle Jones—all of these made their contribution to the revolution in American thinking, and they all passed off the stage while history changed the setting and got ready for the next phase. That phase is now upon us."

"Now the fight is for integration, and has been for a couple of decades, without the awareness of some of us. The fact that the fight itself has changed form does not mean that the struggle is any less intense. In some ways it will be more intense than ever."

The scenery of the struggle for implementing the constitution of the United States has shifted. It has moved South. It has spread to the rurals. Clarendon County supplied one of the testing grounds for the false doctrine of separate but equal schools. This brought to battle the rural leader and thrust the minister into the thick of the fight.

One of the important factors in this shifting scenery and reenforcement from church leadership is the stand taken by the Southern Baptist Convention. Max K. Gilstrap, staff writer for The Christian Science Monitor, did a splendid article on this angle July 29. He quotes A. C. Miller, executive secretary of the Christian Life Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, as saying: "Chief Justice Warren is correct in his statement that by his decision our position in the United Nations will be stronger, and by it we have made it easier for nations whose citizens are colored to join with us in our battle for peace."

"The political blasts which accompany the court's decision will so ease to be heard, and the citizens of our country will march together in unity to build a great nation and a better world on the recognition of the dignity and worth of every individual."

Mr. W. C. Patton, president of the Alabama State Conference of NAACP Branches, is making trips to the rurals, talking with the people. In two speeches where I heard him, the audience wanted information about school de-segregation. Some Baptist ministers present on these occasions gave strong voice to the new ferment for freedom.

The freedom spirit is in the air like the scent from the pine trees. The drouth which is withering Alabama crops cannot dry up this flood-tide of the democratic hope.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (SNS) — Two-party politics depend upon something more than talk. Its built upon a clash of ideas, competitive leadership and sides-taking followship.

Political parties take their identies from contending philosophies more than they do personalities Sometimes the personality and the philosophy blend.

Writing in the August 21 issue of The Saturday Evening Post, Hodding Carter gives six reasons of how "The Republicans Muffed the Ball in Dixie." He lists them as "long habit" of one-way voting; (2) the fightless conduct of President Eisenhower; (3) the smart strategy of the Democratic high command; (4) Senator McCarthy's unchecked national role which involved the religious issue; (5) civil rights issue and (6) a conglomeration of Southern objections to presidential or party pronouncements.

A Birmingham News editorial added a seventh observation for Alabama the failure of state GOPers to conduct a primary and forward new leadership and wider participation. It also made no vigorous efforts to induce to its ranks a number of those upcoming Republicans who wanted to see the Alabama Republican Party stand for the "Abraham Lincoln" principles."

One of the most vocal of the newly-converted Alabama Republicans is Publisher Tom Abernethy who is running for the governship of Alabama. He is scheduled to address a statewide Republican rally at Temple Theater Monday night, Sept. 13. He is a former member of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee, was a walkout delegate at the 1950 National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia in 1948, supported the States' Righters in the 1948 presidential election.

Mr Abernethy, publisher of the Talladega Daily Home, expouses the Dixiecrat Ideology. When he spoke at Camden in Wilcox County, his advertisement listed his objectives as (1) driving gangsters from government; (2) maintaining racial segregation and (fighting) the evils of one party-politics."

He was speaking in the Black Belt which apparently believes in one-race politics which is partly the blame for one-partyism in the South. None of the reports coming from his speech-making mentions anything he is saying about racial discranchisement. The Black Belt is beginning to feel the pinch of denying the vote to a majority of its citizens for no better reason than prejudice.

Wilcox County has 2,900 voters but not a single one of them is a Negro person. It has 18,566 Negro persons in contrast with 4,910 white persons.

The Republican Party was founded on civil rights and the ballot is the finest symbol of such rights.

It seems to me that the Dixiecrats have not seriously wanted to establish a two-party political system in the South. It appears that they want to have veto power over both parties. This is a type of political amalgam by which they seek to function in both parties or as a balance-of-power force between the two major parties.

Hodding Carter points out in his article:

"To the race-conscious white Southerner, determined to retain political and economic controls, the Republican Party, from the Civil War until the New Deal, was the party of the Negro, and the Democratic Party the refuge of the white man in the South. Under Roosevelt and Truman, the party wooed and won the bulk of the Negro vote, with little regard for Southern feelings, and with a resultant Southern frustration that was climaxed by the Unavailing States' Rights rebellion of 1948, when four Southern states supported a Southern third-party presidential ticket."

"During this period of change in the Negro's political affections, some Southerners began to see, perhaps wishfully, certain States' Rights tinges in the Republican Party; and there is no doubt that considerable Southern support of Eisenhower stemmed from the belief that while he sought racial justice, he believed that the primary job of bringing it about belonged to the states."

"The disenchantment in this respect has been complete. It is possibly provable that in the past two years the Negro has gained more advantages, and with more governmental spearheading of his progress, than he had in the previous twenty years. Anyway, that's what the Gop is telling the Negro voter. A good many Southerners believe that Mr. Eisenhower was unnecessarily active-and acted contrary to what they had been led to expect-when, for example, he ordered his Attorney General to take part in the school-segregation cases when they reached the Supreme Court."

"This, and other incidents-notably the prompt action to end segregation in Washingtonhas left the South nowhere to take its racial mores, politically speaking. So why not, the argument runs, stick to the party wherein lies our traditional strength and where our spokesmen have an impregnable position?"

HARTFORD, Ala. — (SNS) — Whether in the Black Belt or in the Wiregrass Sector, of which Geneva County, is one of the eight counties, the picture of public education in respect to the two racial groups, has some features in common.

However, there is some overlap in what is known as the tier of Black Belt counties and the cluster of Wiregrass counties.

Geneva County has 22,490 white persons and only 3,409 Negro persons. About 150 of its 11,820 voters are Negro electors. No difficulties reportedly are experienced by Negro applicants seeking to register to vote. But the stiff poll tax had kept most of the registered voters off the qualified list.

This is the home county of Atty. W. C. Boswell who in 1946 introduced a voter-qualification formula in the Alabama State Legislature when he was State Senator which took on his name, the now court-invalidated Boswell Amendment. At that time there were no Negro voters in Geneva County. In January, 1949, the federal courts ruled that the 'Boswell Amendment' was unconstitutional.

Out of the campaigning against the "Boswell Amendment" was born the Geneva Branch NAACP under the leadership of the late Rev. Lang. With his death the branch went down. It was the rural leadership in those rough and tough years that provided much of the inspiration, drive and morale necessary to carry on a campaign for the restoration of political suffrage among the Negro group.

It has been about 13 years since I was in Henry County. Bishop E. C. Hatcher, then presiding elder of the Ozark District of the African Methodist Episcopal Church permitted me to make some trips with him through this section to observe, to learn, to store away information.

School buildings in this county look about the same as they do in Marengo County which has 20,478 Negro persons and only 9,016 white persons. In other words the racial ratios are reversed. Usually the white schools in the heavily Negro populated areas are better than the white schools in the sparsely Negro populated sections.

The federal-state educational survey reveals that $1,632,000 is needed to bring the white schools up to desirable quality while $870,000 is needed to pull the Negro schools up to standard. The Negro population represents approximately 12 per cent of the total while the Negro school building needs represent about 40 per cent of the suggested over-all layout.

In one town in Geneva County the Negro high school uses the gym of the white school. In another town, Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune addressed a Negro-sponsored meeting held in the auditorium of the white school. It was attended by white and Negro citizens but on a traditional seating pattern. Leaders of the white group reportedly brag about the fine relations existing between the two groups. However, no one is seeking to change the status of the Negro group nor narrow the gap between two-class citizenship.

Some of the school leaders talk freely about what they think are the shortcomings of the Alabama State Teachers Association. I understand that some of their criticisms or suggestions for improvement have been presented at the district ASTA meetings. Unless the ASTA leadership puts its ears to the ground it is likely to find itself unpopular and unsupported.

For whatever its implication, some of the school people call attention to the fact that Geneva County has no Jeanes supervisor. To a large extent, the influence of these supervisors is formidable in the ASTA and in the State PTA. They also cite recent events in Marengo County, as a case in point, where the ASTA could have proved its worth a teacher service organization.

I have unconfirmed reports that since the dismissal charges against Prof. George P. Austin, for 33 years principal of Linden Academy were dropped, that 11 other teachers have been notified that their employment with the Marengo County Board of Education is at an end. Most of these are said to be tenure teachers who have been notified that they were being cut off because of reduction in teaching units. Some others were non-tenure teachers.

When you travel over the state looking at the white and Negro schools, you see how the physical facts back up the memorable words of Chief Justice Earl Warren, who observed: "In the field of public education the doctrine of 'separate but equal' has no place. Separate educational facilities are inherently equal."

Or as the California Eagle observed in an editorial: "Worse than that, the kept-apart, shoved-aside Negro children were branded as inferior—in their own eyes and in the eyes of the white children."

The double duty facing our educators, community leaders and business men is to see that all of the schools are put on the highest level and to widen the educational opportunities so that all may learn from all. The human being is capable of adjusting to change and meeting its challenge in the spirit of goodwill.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS)— The "Boutwell Plan" for meeting the U. S. Supreme Court's May 17 school-case decision and the N. A. A. C. P.-sponsored desegregation petitions made top news the past week.

Alabama's method for adjusting to the new situation induced by the Supreme Court's history-making and democracy-enriching decision needs more than ideas suggested in the proposal recommended by the Boutwell study group.

The proposal if adopted as a constitutional amendment would be merely an empowering act. As such the Legislature would have final say on tearing down the public school system even if the compulsory clause were removed. Just how many lawmakers, in the name of saving the segregated school system, would be willing to go through with breaking up the public school system in which generations have invested?

Other forces are at work in Alabama seeking to preserve the public school system and to undertake a large-scale campaign of understanding the decision, democracy, Christianity and the change which is in the making. One thing will be made clear as the campaign of non-school popular education moves along is that the decision is enforceable. Politicians who talk to the contrary mislead.

A young college professor here has written an essay on a phase of this adjustment which I am passing on to you. Here it is:

MENTAL REVOLUTION—TEST OF MEN'S SOULS

"Our nation is undergoing a mental revolution. It is a revolution written in the hearts and minds of men, and a direct product of long-accumulated forces which has been set in motion by the Supreme Court's pronouncement on segregation May 17, 1954. It is a revolution of ideas and moods; a humanitarian and liberal revolution. Men are being asked to change traditions and folkways of long standing, and which are so deeply embodied in American life—particularly the Southern way of life."

"For almost a hundred years men have been taught to love, honor and protect the status quo. The whites in the South, because they were taught and many believed, the biological and intellectual superiority of whites over Negroes. The Negroes, strange as it seems, because they felt the "Negro World" provided economic security and also for the comfort that came from the philosophy of "God's love for the oppressed people." To this end both races have protected and supported this dichotomous scheme against nature. Thus much that is being said, while so obviously irreconcilable, is none the less entirely sincere and reasonable to them; for these statements voice convictions that have for generations grown and gathered force within them in the course of their experiences."

"It has been timely stated that 'men convinced against their will are of the same opinion still,' thus it is of supreme importance that the minds and hearts of men are made over before the true meaning of integration can take place. It is an age of 'wholesale brainwashing.'

"Strangely enough this mental revolution is taking place and most of us, fortunately, are not aware of it. There are more than 5,000 Negro students attending white colleges in the South. Moreover, Virginia, Kansas, West Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas, Tennessee, and Washington, D. C. are taking steps to comply with the Supreme Court's decision. Even in the South the revolution is crystalizing."

"Of course there is little over evidence but it is witnessing 'looking and thinking' stage. People are becoming cognizant of each other. Instances where Negroes and whites have taken each other for granted, on the busses, on the street, in the stores and wherever they come in contact, now demand a second look. Perhaps on a small degree, it is a struggle for a 'meeting of the minds.' "

"Throughout the South the hearts of men are changing. The total reaction to the Harrison School incident in Montgomery, Alabama gives evidence that people are thinking and changing. Even the die-hards show signs of weakening. Gov. James Bynes of South Carolina might have been 'misquoted.' Herman Talmadge, who declares that Negroes would not mix in the schools of Georgia, as long as he was governor, is leaving office. Mississippi has moved from a 'go to hell" attitude of the court's decision to an attitude of finding some constitutional way to circumvent it."

"Yes, the mental revolution is upon us—in the nation, as well as the South. We can no more prevent integration than we can 'hold back the dawn.' Let us, in the name of mankind, abandon prejudice, distrust and intrigue and unite for the good of ALL men. These are indeed times that try men's souls."

TUSCUMBIA, Ala. —(SNS)— American Nurses' Association, Inc., is cooperating in sponsoring 'National Nurse Week," Oct. 11-16.

This is project is intended "to dramatize and interpret the services and requirements necessary to provide adequate nursing care to the public " It also intends to provide ANA members with "an opportunity to go to the general public with an interpretation of (ANA) needs and programs and to acquaint nonmembers with the aims, goals and work of the organization."

I have examined some of the promotional literature and find some 12 other organizations listed among the sponsoring groups.

Theme of the observance is: "Progress in Nursing Means Better Health for the Nation."

This event should provide also the occasion to scan the nurse training scene in Alabama. None of the purely tax provided nurse-training schools in Alabama are open to the Negro group. Most of the hospitals built partly with money from the Hill -Burton Hospital Act deny such training to members of the Negro group.

Some hospital in Alabama prior to receiving federal aid trained Negro nurse but after getting these public funds dropped such training. Negro leaders let out not even a whimper about it at the time. Nor have they until now lifed a finger to win back such nurse-training on the basis of the anti-discrimination clause in the Hill-Burton Act.

Public and semi-public hospitals with nurse-training courses are scattered through this state. Yet so far as I can learn none of them accept Negro students. Two years ago when I attended a career conference of a high school in certain Alabama city over a hundred girls signed up for nursing as their major interest. In this city there was a tax-supported nursing schools but none of the consultants called this to tre attention of these future nurses.

When the nursing school of the University of Alabama first opened in the Birmingham Medical Center there were Negro nurses in it. However protests from bigoted persons forced the officials to drop the Negro nurses. Not a single howl was raised by Negro leaders. Almost everybody expected a fuss to be raised by them. The NAACP has at this time already won a legal precedent by which re-admission could have been assured for these dropped nurses. One of the Negro nurses in the class was the daughter of a members of the executive committee of the Birmingham Branch of the NAACP.

The Alabama Nurse Association has taken a number of progressive steps. Like the Alabama Dental Association, it draws no color line.

With all of the emphasis on nurses from the military as well as the civilian standpoint, one would that some action would have been taken in several directions to increase the number. But this is not the case. Numbers of young women would like to make nursing a career but the opportunity for getting training in Alabama is not bright.

What rankles me is the fact that some women organizations ostensibly interested in seeing that nurse training is available to Negro girls are doing nothing about breaking down the racial barriers at the tax supported schools.

National Nurse Week should provide us with an opportunity to check into opportunities for members of the Negro group to get nurse training in public and in private institutions. The Alabama Association of Women's Clubs, the women's Auxiliary o fthe Alabama State Medical Association and women's auxiliary of the Alabama State Dental Association should be in a position to conduct a survey and campaign along this line.

Realy I don't know just what kind of attention will be given to National Nurse Week by our group. Maybe one day some of us will wake up and catch on. But the catch-up is going to require that we make up for the time when we were doing little of nothing.

SHEFFIELD, Ala.—(SNS) — For a long time some of the aggressive leadership of the Negro group in Alabama came from this section of the state.

Evidence of such is found in the activities of the Alabama State Teachers Association, in trade unions, in the NAACP and in political action. That doesn't seem to be true any more.

Norman Thomas, now in Cleveland, Ohio, was serving as president of the Tri-Cities Branch of the N. A. A. C. P.; P. B. Swoope was a moving figure in political action; James Hampton, currently out of the state, was a booming leader, and organized labor, to name only a few.

Sheffield is second in size among the Tri-Cities with a population of 10,767. Colbert County has 32,220 white persons and 8,565 Negro persons. Tuscumbia has a population of 6,712, being the smallest of the three cites.

Colbert, Franklin and Marion counties compose the 31st Senatorial District of Alabama. State Senator A. W. Todd, Democratic nominee for Commissioner of Agriculture and Industry formerly served from this district. U. S. Representative R. E. (Bob) Jones, Jr., is the Congressman from the Eighth District. Lauderdale, Limestone, Madison, Jackson, Colbert, Lawrence and Morgan make up this district.

W. E. King of Courtland is serving as district chairman of the Alabama State Coordinating Committe for Registration and Voting of which W. C. Patton of Birmingham is state chairman. Under this agreement it is the task of King to furnish leadership for stimulating voter-registration. In some of these counties, it has been difficult to find out the number of Negro voters. There are no reports of which I know which show difficulties in seeking to become voters.

Whether Mr. King has called a district meeting is something I have been unable to learn. Perhaps all of this will be revealed at the state conference of leaders scheduled to be held in Montgomery, Alabama on Sunday, Oct. 24.

At one time there were at least three active branches of the N. A. A. C. P. in the Eighth District Tri-Cities, Huntsville, Decatur. They are all inactive now, although they may still be listed. Not active in the sense of working toward the realization of the N. A. A. C. P. objectives. One of the finest N. A. A. C. P youth councils in the state used to be in the Tri-Cities

Situated in this district are three major and several minor colleges. Among the major colleges are Florence State College, Alabama A. and M. College and Oakwood College. Obviously no Negro student has sought enrollment in the all-white state-sponsored college located at Florence. Leaders assert that there has been little apparent concern among either population segment about the school desegregation issue in these parts.

Likely some effort will be made to revive the Tri-Cities NAACP Branch. It appears that the need is interested leadership. Leaders have manifested casual interest, it is said, in activating the branch but fail to carry through on it. Rank-and-file leadership seems to be absent from the present scene. There is only a small number of Negro-managed business operations in these three cities.

North Alabama boasts of enlightened race relations. Yet the same kind of signs you find in Black Belt courthouses you see in those in this section. It is a matter of degree, perhaps, rather than dimensions. This is not to say that the Black Belt can be given as high rating as this section of the state.

Yet there is one incident that has been related which tends to confuse the picture of "fine race relations existing here which civic leaders like to impress upon a visitor to these parts. An Emancipation Day program was planned, I am told, and for some reason cooperation was withheld by persons who nominally, and free to do so, would have otherwise supported it wholeheartedly. Another incident is where pressure was tried in an area having to do more with imprudent passions than an imperfected profession.

Yet there are those who are looking forward hopefully, not willing to rest upon the glorious past. The Rev. S. M. Davis, presiding elder of the Florence-Huntsville District of the AME Church is a candidate for the bishopric. This would tend to reflect the spirit of moving ahead, setting the pace, building on higher grounds which leaders of North Alabama stood for in other days. A newcomer to this district is the Rev. H. D. Anderson, Jr., formerly of Birmingham, who has been installed as pastor of St. Paul Metropolitan AME Church in Tuscumbia.

Little attention seems to have been given by our group to the observance of National Nurses Week (Oct. 11-16).

In this space October 5, I rambled through a number of problems related to the nursing profession which should be of burning concern to the leaders of our group However, it is the objective of National Nurses Week to sharpen public appreciation of the work of nurses, to encourage nurses to support their organizations better and to improve their profession.

Training opportunities for Negro girls who desire it is not available to them at the tax-supported institutions. Whether it is a state-supported nurse-training school such as the one in the Birmingham Medical Center, or the one at the city-sponsored hospital in Tuscaloosa, or the nurse-training schools built party or wholly with federal funds, the color barriers are there.

The teaching profession can't absorb all of our girls who need and want to work. Other lines of employment are usually closed to them by public, semi-public and private concerns However there are increasing opening in the nursing field but the bottleneck is training.

Here are a few things which might be done to get the ball rolling toward removing some of the color bars. Make a survey of all tax-supported nursing schools in Alabama at every level of government. Catalogue prospective students. Raise a scholarship fund to support a legal and public opinion fight to get them admitted to the public-sponsored nurse-training schools.

It might be a productive idea to make a look-see of the status of Negro nurse. Registered nurses are in one professional organization in some of the counties. But that is not the case of the Licensed Practical Nurses. The professional is divided along racial lines in this locality. There are nurse's aides, mails and related descriptions working in hospitals What relations do they bear one to the other?

Trying to find out some idea which could be used in a column on observance of National Nurse Week, I came into some frightening information, which if true, would shock one. Some of it deals with alleged racial differentials in pay, improper classifications, and irregularities. Fear of job reprisals is obviously keeping much of this information hidden from the public.

Racial discrimination in job opportunities is a kind of economic torture To deny one training for his profession because of his race, religion or national origin is the denial of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Some weeks back I was cheered in reading that the Iota Phi Lambda Sorority was going to work in the field of widening doors of job opportunities. I realize that there are many approaches and level and areas at which this can be undertaken. Members of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority for a number of years was interested in health projects.

Meantime to day there is a reported shortage of registered nurses. There are reports that a number of girls are on the waiting lists of many of the nursing schools because they are overcrowded. However, I cannot vouch for the information upon which this comment is made Yet I think that the figures will show that one could get nurse training more economically at the near home nurse schools.

Two public-supported classes in LPN training are offered in the Birmingham area. Nurse aides are trained by the hospitals. Yet in this same area where public funds are expended for sponsoring training for RN's the bars are up against the Negro girl.

Through the NAACP numerous precedents have been won by which all racial bars can be pushed off the doors of public training. There are more than 31 branches of the NAACP in Alabama Yet nothing has been done to crack this field of job-training.

What have the nurses themselves done about it? Have not they an opportunity to see the advantages in being able to receive training, if you want it, in your own state, of city, or community? Are they playing any part in National Nurse Week observance?

Questions like these came to me I pounded out this column. No answer to them do I have. Anybody can raise questions which nobody can answer. Foolish question, may be.

There isn't anybody on the scene, no organization; not even a leader with sight to lead this fight for opening nurse-training opportunities for the Negro girl in the tax-supported institutions.

Change is creeping up on us, from behind and in front. Another foreshadowing of it can be seen in a speech made recently by State Superintendent of Education W. Terry before the AEA-NEA leadership conference held at Alabama College for Women.

He advocated the doubling of the "R's: Reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic, rights, responsibilities and human relations."

He advocated the doubling of the "R's" to bring them up to a half dozen. "Today," he asserted, "we really have six R's: Reading, 'riting, 'rithmetic, -rights, responsibilities and human relations."

Mr. Terry added: "A great deal of emphasis is being placed on citizenship education. We believe that if we are to have better world, we must do something about training our boys and girls to fit into the community that they will live in."

Each person who reads Dr. Terry's message may get a different meaning. He may have spoken more than he really meant or stands for in practical life. But the words of his are there just the same.

The world today is bigger than the Alabama Black Belt or the Mississippi Delta, or the Louisiana cane fields. Today's world includes all of the people who are connected by transportation, communication and other things. We live in a fluid world where populations are constantly on the move. A new world is at hand, a product of many things.

On May 17, the United States Supreme Court in its decision delegalizing the Separate but Equal doctrine in public education, illuminated and dramatized these changes. It outlined new lessons for all of us in group and human relations. The Supreme Court said that in the field of public education the Separate but Equal doctrine has no place.

Rights and responsibilities should go hand in hand. Yet a number of responsibilities are enforced and rights ensnarled. One is forced to bear arms, pay taxes, and obey the laws. But some rights, like those of voting, are often unfairly curbed. Lowndes and Wilcox counties with more Negro than white persons have no Negro voters. Bullock County has only 7 Negro voters. Token Negro voting is typical of Black Belt counties.

"Citizenship education" is needed for both the school going population and some of the adults. Voting stimulates one in the direction of the finest citizenship. One who be-because of his power andz position denies another the right to vote solely because of his race and color is lacking both good citizenship and patriotism, it seems to me.

August 15, Joe Azbellz, city editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, published in his "City Limits" column which appeared in the combined Sunday Advertiser-Journal an interview of Mrs. Agnes Baggett, Democratic nominee for state auditor, who in January will become a member of the three-person board which appoints the boards of registrars in the 67 counties of this state. The Governor and the Commissioner of Agriculture and Industry make up the other two members of the appoint board.

Here are some o fthe views of Mrs. Baggett on registration of voters as revealed by the Azbell column:

"Every person should be able to vote and have a part in government if he is qualified. .. ..

"But I am opposed to the wanton registration of white or colored. A person should be interested in his government and qualified to vote before being registered.

"I am not for opening the floodgates to any groups unless those groups are qualified.

"There would be no reason to have a board of registrars if the qualifications were ignored.

"The law sets up those qualifications and I take the view that the law should be followed in the registration of every person without regard to race, creed or color."

"I will cooperate with anyone and everyone so long as that cooperation does not hinder my principles and desire to serve the best interests of the State of Alabama."

"Considering herself as a representative of the people and "not a representative of any faction, force or authority," Mrs. Baggett said she intends to make her appointments on the basis of honesty and integrity and obedience to the letter of the law and "not in any instance on the basis of personality or personal considerations."

"I intend to do my job according to the law and do it with honesty and integrity for the state as a whole. If after I have done my job in this manner, I am defeated at the polls, I will then find myself a job doing something else. I never intend to compromise my principles to perpetuate myself in any post or position," she said.

"The duty, power and influence of the appointing board end when the appointments are made," she said.

"There is nothing the statutes which provide survellance by the appointing authority. As the law now stands, no report is required to be made by these boards to the appointing authority or anyone else other than sending a list of names of the registered persons to the secretary of state and probate judge." she added.

"I thing my attitude is summed up this way: The functioning af a government is not intended to be by favoritism to any particular group but a strict performance of duties to the best interest of the people in hat government. Tha's the way I intend to make the appointments which come under my hands, she declared.

SELMA, Ala. —(SNS)— Two meetings scheduled for November in this pre-Civil War, densely-Negro, heart-of-the Black Belt city could have telling influence on the group's democratic advancement program.

The 31-unit Alabama State Conference of NAACP Branches is holding its ninth annual convention here Nov. 11-15. Walter White of New York City, the top voice for civil rights in America, will be the feature convention speaker. The NAACP is holding one of its biggest interest-making events in the tough area of the battle for liberty and dignity for all Americans, equally and alike.

A week or two later, in November, the powerful Alabama Baptist State Convention, will hold its 87th annual meeting here. There are some 300,000 Negro Baptists in this state. More and more Baptist ministers, its lay leaders and others in responsible places, are manifesting interest in the restoration of full democracy to the least of them among us.

In other days, Selma represented the capital of Negro leadership and to a degree, an educational center. Payne College sponsored by the A. M. E. Church was here but moved to Birmingham. There was Knox Academy. This was the focal point of Negro aristoracy, culture, refinement and quality. It appears that the city is going to try for a comeback.

But the comeback will have to become a part of the change which is going on all over America. The Catholic Church has set up here, thus breaking new ground religiously. Public high school education has just about supplanted private education on this level for the group.

Craig Air Base here is serving in a sense as a lighthouse to new relationships among men who may not have known before that good Americans, or those who respect law and authority, can dwell together as human beings and persons of mutual worth. This post could have clinical affect on life and help to make easier the change which is crowding in on us whether or not we think we are ready for it. For my part, human beings born in democracy by the very nature of that birth are ready. Democracy should give to both the ready and the unready man an equal chance, regardless of what either does with it. Equality of the individual is what makes democracy.

For as Secretary of the Navy Charles S. Thomas says, "There is only one type of citizen." It seems to me that two-type citizenship is offensive to the Constitution of the United States and at war with Christian ethics. Color-type citizenship is a denial of full citizenship.

Getting back to the Baptist group, it should be said in their favor that slowly, and often stubbornly, a few of the white leaders among them have shown a tendency toward constructive change. Two years ago the white Baptists of Alabama adopted resolutions urging the use of Negro policemen in cities, and also encouraged persons to become voters. Among the Negro Baptists the strongest voices yet raised for de-segregation has come from among their leaders.

June 2-5, the Southern Baptist Convention, meeting in St. Louis, setforth its views on the May 17 Supreme Court decision banning public school segregation. Not all went along with the proposal which came from the Christian Life Commission, but the opposition was small. This is the most important sign of change which one can offer at this time.

Here is that statement:

"We recommend:

"1. That we recognize the fact that this Supreme Court decision is in harmony with the constitutional guarantee of equal freedom to all citizens, and with the Christian principles of equal justice and love for all men.

"2. That we commend the Supreme Court for deferring the application of the principle both as to time and procedure until the nation shall have had time to work out methods by which transistion from the present practice may be effected.

.."3. That we urge our people and all Christians to conduct themselves in this period of adjustment in the spirit of Christ.

"4. That we express our belief in the public school system of our nation, and we express hope that in the working out of necessary adjustments, its place in our education program shall not be impaired.

"5. That we urge Christian statesmen and leaders in our churches to use their leadership in positive thought and planning to the end that this crisis in our national history shall not be made the occasion for new and bitter prejudices, but a movement toward a united nation embodying and proclaiming a democracy that will commend freedom to all peoples.'

By what can one measure race relations in Macon County? This question has been raised, oblique-ly and challengingly, by Mr. W. P. Mitchell, an executive of the Tuskegee Civic Association, the Tuskegee Branch NAACP and the director of civil liberties for the Alabama Association of Elks. He is Alabama born and a graduate of Tuskegee Institute.

It should be interposed here too, that the Tuskegee Institute Department of Records and Research, has revised its formula for testing progress in the South. Gone is the lynching index as the guide to improvement in human relations. Jobs, voting, barrier-breaking are among the new concepts.

Mr. Mitchell has come up with a dissent on an editorial in The Alabama Journal, Montgomery, Ala., August 11, titled "I Want To Go Back Home, which attempts see in the voluntary return to Tuskegee of a man charged with a serious crime a sign of improved race relations in Macon County.

Before presenting the Mitchell dissent, it should be noted that Macon County has a population of 26,228 Negro persons and 4,900 white persons. It has 3,007 white voters and only 855 Negro voters. All but about 74 of the voting age white citizens are qualified to vote while there are 13,684 non-voter Negro citizens.

Mr. Mitchell did not seem to feel that the comment that "nowhere in Alabama are race relations better than in Macon County" was justified by the facts, although the newspaper had admitted the incident it cited was an "isolated exception."

It appears that what prompted the comment was "a Negro who waived extradition in Philadelphia because of a nostalgic urge to return to Tuskegee presumably to be booked on murder."

Wrote Mr. Mitchell "..... The present chief law enforcement officer for the (Macon) county seems to put forth determined efforts to deal fairly with all persons. During his four years as sheriff of Macon County, on instance of brutality or maladministration has come to my attention."

Then Mr. Mitchell asserts that no publicity was given by the newspapers to the alleged "beating of Willie Horn" by Tuskegee city police men. He said the Negro boy had committed the crime of "assisting a white boy home with some gasoline."

There are many gruesome details presented by Mr. Mitchell on the alleged treatment this Negro boy received allegedly at the hands of the "policeman and his aides" who "severely" beat "this helpless boy."

Then Mr. Mitchell moves into another area which he seems to feel can cast light on race relations.

He writes: "Suppose one takes a look at the voter registration situation. The hundred of Negroes making applications for registration certificates must wait for long hours in hallways and stairways of the courthouse to get into the Prisoner Room (approximately 8 x 10) which is used to register Negroes."

"In addition to waiting long hours to get into the room to make application, hundreds must go back two to five times before they are finally passed by the Macon County Board of Registrars. White persons who are out-numbered by Negroes in this county five to one, make application in a much larger room in another section of the courthouse."

"During 1953, 195 Negro applications were made but only 27 received certificates of registration. Our records for 1954 show that 361 applications were made by Negroes, but only 135 certificates have been issued through the last registration day, Monday, August 2, 1954."

"There is an absence of violence in Tuskegee and Macon County."

Yes, oh yes, many factors should be considered in measuring citizenship relationships among community people. The ballot is one of the foremost barometers of race relations. Racial disfranchisement is a sign of unabalanced group relations.

The ballot illuminates and illustrates this point better than anything else in Macon County. For here in this county one finds the vast spending power concentrated at the VA Hospital and Tuskegee Institute. But this dollar power cannot be submitted for ballot power. There are things to be obtained through the ballot which money cannot buy.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(SNS)— A look might be taken by some of our ledaers at some of the new points of operation in the favorable change which is working its way over America.

There are two military operations here at Maxwell Field and Gunter Field .A VA hospital is also situated here. All are within the presidential directives which declare the national policy of our country They cover both the civilian and the non-civilian employees.

But apparently our leaders are overlooking an opportunity to explore ways and means to utilize these operations as pilot projects in the field of goodwill and dignified relationships a mong all of God's children. This could be done in the field of education, employment ,religious, recreation and elsewhere.

These federal installations and agencies could be made the vehicles of not only our national policy but of the finer human relationships Through them paths could be choped out for wider and richer understanding. This seems to be too little opportunity among us for a decent understanding of one another.

The National Jewish Monthly for April, 1953, commenting upon and reprinting an editorial in this vein from the Catholic Herald pointed out this. It said in part: "Many Americans do not fully understand others for sheer lack of opportunity For example, there is a great Jewish press, consisting of more than a hundred weeklies, several monthly and quarterly magazines, and of course a few Yiddish and Hebrew publications. This press is not read by many non-jews, just as few Jewis read the great Catholic Protestant papers, of which there are also many hundreds. In this way, both groups miss fresh insights into thinking of their neighbor."

The foregoing observation made by the National Jewish Monthly could be routed in other directions. There are over 200 Negro produced weeklies. They are located in almost every one of the 48 states and many of them which are published outside of the South have Dixie-born editors. These newsmen know of conditions back home because they visit each other and write each other. Travelers from back home relay to them reports. Bad things about cities often travel faster and further than the good ones.

In his column Aug. 5 in the California Eagle, Lester B Granger, executive director of the National Urban League relates a true story of the experiences of two social workers in Pennsylvania where they ran into Jim Crow practices despite the state's civil rights laws. He related numerous efforts made by the visitors who knew the law and wanted to get relief from the unlawful impositions. Mr. Granger points out this:

"Every state has its ugly pockets of resistance against the march of progress. They remain mainly because home folks avoid them and visitors can't stick around long enough to clean them. But the clean up job is really ours and we can't consider ourselves clean until we do our jobs."

Usually in my travels, I pick up comment on conditions back home which trouble and shock me. Here a number of persons ask when will Birmingham hire Negro policemen? Montgomery and Mobile have them They want to know how long will Birmingham resist the tide of change sweeping Negro and white baseball players into competition together? These are the kind of things one doesn't have to tell anybody about Birmingham. One shouldn't have to be a Negro minority to know about them He could become familiar with things like this by becoming a constant reader of the Negro-directed section of the press.

Montgomery citizens seem to be developing an interest in trying to become Alabama's best city from the standpoint of group relations. An outstanding Negro leader served on a citizens committee which settled the City Lines bus strike. The Negro group is represented on the board of directors of the United Appeal, which is similar to Birmingham's Community Chest. An Atlanta sports promoting group cited a member of the sports staff of The Montgomery Advertiser for his contributions to sports journalism.

Montgomery has 50,000 Negro persons. There are no segregation boards on the city buses Yet Birmingham has such sign, which are the symbols of disturbed race relations, it seems to me. Montgomery served as the first capital of Old Confederacy Birmingham came into being after the Civil War.

This observation is not intended to represent the "Cradle of the Old Confederacy" as having arrived at the point it could be described as a city full enlightened on citizenship relations. It has not and must travel far to do so. It is ahead of Birminghm in his area, however, and some Birmingham folk seem to become irritated at the mentioning of the Birmingham record. It seems to me that Birmingham civic leaders should strive earnestly to make the Magic City the South's chief city in favorable race relations.

SELMA, Ala. — (SNS) — The season for picking political candidates approaches as the deadline for the list should be complete. qualifying nears. By Tuesday, March 2

Candidates for statewide public office from the Black Belt, of which Dallas County is a part, labor under handicaps which are by-products of restrictive thinking. In 14 of these counties the Negro population is even to or in excess of the white population. Negro citizens in these counties either are barred from voting or permitted only token voting. Office-seekers from these racial disfranchisement counties lack the suffrage base of those coming from other sections.

Dallas County has an approximately two-to-one Negro ratio of population. But Negro citizens are a frightfully small fraction of the electorate. Meantime, Black Belt politicians often have a blind spot in their thinking when it comes to civil rights, which belongs to all, and are individual rights. Civil rights are implied in the Bill of Rights and have been extended by other amendments to the United States constitution.

Some politicians try to make bogey words out of civil rights. They confuse the issue. They advocate spurious notions and resort to specious arguments. They becloud the issue by dredging up discredited theories. A small group of old and devilish men are trying to stage a comeback by distorting the meaning of civil rights. Voting is one of the vital civil rights which is grounded in both the United States constitution and the various state constitutions.

Voting rights are not new civil rights. The point is on the exercise of this right, or privilege. It is a privilege as a citizen, maybe, but when it is denied on account of race it becomes a right. In 1900, the Negro group in Alabama was deprived of the opportunity to register and vote as persons, or citizens. This denial has trapped Black Belt politicians behind a wall of non-voters. If the situation were different, any candidate from the Black Belt could start with a big push.

There is the case of Mr. Bruce Henderson who is making another try for the governorship. He comes from Wilcox County where the Negro population ratio is about four-to-one. Negro citizens are voteless in Wilcox. In his own County, Mr. Henderson, a highly respected conservative, has to over come this obstacle. The story of the long denial of voting to Negro citizens in Wilcox has circulated around the state.

Task before our political action leaders is many-fold. They need to establish some political scales on which to weigh the candidates in the May 4 primary. In most of the cases it will be the choice between the lesser of terrible evils. In still other cases it will be a meaningless choice between office-seekers standing for the same things. Meantime in several of the campaigns issues will be given secondary consideration to emotional appeals.

Some unfriendly interests will not care a hoot about the personality of a candidate. How he thinks is all they want to know. His appeals to folly; his cheap entertainment; how he smiles, handshakes, or clowns will not matter with them. Issues are hidden from the voters behind the fury of emotion. Voters should check those who inject the frivilous notions into the campaign as a cover up for failing to face issues crying for discussion.

With the political scales set up, then the questions arises of grapevining this information to the interested voters. Communication plans will have to be worked out. A conference of the authentic and reliable political action leaders should be held to determine the yardstick for sizing up candidates and developing ways and means of circulating the decisions made. All of this will be ineffective unless it is backed up by a campaign to get out the voters.

One test by which statewide candidates may be appraised is on the status of Negro voting in the counties in which the candidates live. Check-the-candidate leaders should also consult the political rating sheets of the Alabama Chamber of Commerce, the Associate Industries, the Alabama Medical Association, organized labor, and disadvantaged groups, if they prepare such. This would provide a good balance, it seems to me for trying to be sound, broad and fair in formulating a run-down on the candidates. Only the candidates with the best ideas, program, and record, deserve support.

Narrow interests sometimes would like to know how a candidate can be influenced, used and handled. But the better approach, I think, is to encourage candidates to support good government and to be passionately concerned about the whole people. He should have a love for humanity and faith in people. He should carry the good lessons of Brotherhood Week into his campaign, and if successful, into his administration.

UNION SPRINGS, Ala. — (SNS) —Tides of changes are whipping through this politically slavery belt.

Bullock is one of the Wiregrass counties, or Black Belt counties. Since 1901 only seven Negro persons have been successful in gaining the ballot although there are, according to census figures, 5,423 Negro residents of voting age in this county.

W. C. Patton, president of the Alabama State Conference of N. A. A. C. P. Branches; Cornelius Maiden, vice-president of the Alabama State Federation of Labor and representative for the International Chemical Workers Union (AFL) and Joseph Bowman, operator of the Groceteria, all of Birmingham were in this county last Sunday, making speeches, inspiring the leaders, and helping them to plan a way to restore their privilege of voting.

Mr. Patton who is city-bred, talked the farmers' language in speeches at Midway and Clayton where he rallied the civic leaders in more than hour-long speeches. He spoke for about 45 minutes at Eufaula.

At Oak Grove Baptist Church, over $500 was raised. One of the win-the-vote leaders said that the money came from plowmen and preachers. Several ministers were present. Strong support was given by the Prince Hall Masons from whom much is going to be heard before 1954 dies. You feel an awakening as you chat with men of the rurals who have become dissatisfied with racial disinfranchisement.

One farmer told me that about 25 to 35 Negro applicants appeared at the Bullock County Courthouse trying to register to vote but were chased away. Having made the decision, to seek legal action against the alleged wrongful denials, they said they sought to get their statements notarized but were refused by a high-placed Negro leader. The allegedly rejected vote applicants, this farmer said, had to travel all the way to Montgomery to get the statements sworn.

Bullock has 11,815 Negro persons as against 4,239 white persons. Yet there are only seven Negro voters in Bullock. According to the school needs survey conducted by the Alabama State Department of Education, Bullock needs $2,940,000 to bring its Negro-serving schools up to acceptable standards while only $850,00 is needed to elevate the white schools to such standards. This is an exhibit of the wickedness of the mythical Separate but Equal doctrine.

Across the street from the Oak Grove Church stood in ugly mockery of equality of educational opportunity a delapidated "school for Negroes."

It ran to my mind that I had heard that Miss Tessie M. Oliver the Jeanes Supervisor of Bullock County was a candidate for the presidency of the Alabama Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers. No one can blame her for these conditions but it raises the question of how effective one could be as head of an organization like the State PTA, who has to work in a county where Negro citizens are allegedly run out of the courthouse for seeking to enjoy their constitutional right to vote?

Barbour County, the sister of Bullock, has 63 Negro voters out of 7,150 Negro persons of voting age, according to the vote survey made by Prof. J. E. Pierce of Alabama State College. However, civic leaders at Eufaula said that the number had increased since that study was made. Eufaula has approximately 15,000 voters but the Negro leaders would not venture an estimation of the number of Negro voters were included in this figure.

According to the state survey, Barbour County needs $2,770,000 to bring its Negro public school up to qualify level and only $875,000 to likewise rate up its white schools. Non-voting and poor schools seem to run hand in hand.

Less than 15 years ago Negroes were totally denied the ballot in the eight Wiregrass Counties. Today they vote in all of them, even though on a token basis in most. In the 10-county Third Congressional District Negro citizens vote in all of them. Approximately 700 Negro persons will be voting in Henry County this Spring.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) - Comparisons in race relations between Montgomery and Birmingham crackle in conversations these days.

Montgomery, dubbed the "Cradle of the Old Confederacy" served as the Capital City to the Rebel Government at one time during the Civil War. Birmingham, the Magic City, flushed up after the War Between the States, or some historian like to label the hostilities.

March 20, some of the leading citizens here of mixed occupations, opened a grocery store known as Farm and City, Enterprises, Inc. which is located in the residential area known as Washington Park. Shares were bought in lots of one to 65.

The incorporated store is one of the projects initiated by the Rev. Vernon Johns when he was pastor of aristocratic Dexter Avenue Baptist Church. The report is given that Dr. Johns always leaves a contribution in the way of enterprises in every city where he serves as minister. Leaders here asked me whether "Bad Birmingham" as they now describe our city has anything to match this store in the off pointed investment. (This is a question which I should like to pass on to the sponsor of the Fifth Annual Business Clinic scheduled for Miles College in April 1).

Ten Negro applicants have reportedly passed the Montgomery civil service examination for policemen with five of them due to be placed on duty in April. Montgomery is doing this without an increase in money for the Police Department. Vacancies are being filled by Negro policemen until the some agreed on are employed. Here is a plan which might be reviewed by the members of the Birmingham Interracial Committee which has announced its interest in the employment of Negro policemen.

Negro leaders are members of the Citizen Committee promoting the Montgomery Rebels Baseball Club which will have three Negro players on it. In Birmingham, a citizens segregation committee has placed before the Probate Judge a petition seeking to have the City Commission tighten its city law to bar Negro and white players on visiting barnstorming clubs from competing against each other. The question is asked: what are the big, decent, fair-minded leaders in Birmingham doing to meet this situation? I am upping the question to the public.

The Montgomery Advertiser-Alabama Journal in its March 21 issue carried a feature article on E. D. Nixon, candidate for membership on the Montgomery County Democratic Executive Committee. The feature is competently and friendly done by Geoffrey Birt, staff writer. The interview is not a story with trap questions propounded by some shrewd reporter looking for pitfalls to throw in the pathway of one. The good reporter tries to set his teeth in the truth.

The spirit of the story on the 54-year-old, Lowndes County born civic leaders in best observed in its final paragraph, which says: "But if Beat 2, Montgomery decides Nixon is the best qualified candidate to represent them on this small local committee, news that the Cradle of the Confederacy has so placed its stamp of approval on a Negro citizen, will be a story in Detroit, New York and across the nation."

In Birmingham, Atty. Arthur D. Shores is a candidate for the Alabama State Legislature. It should be pointed out that in 1868 Alabama has a total of 26 Negro political leaders in the State Legislature. Today, approximately 34 per cent of Alabama's population is Negro.

Up spoke a lad coming out of Hornet Gym, 'Bama State College, saying Montgomery is even better in basketball than Birmingham. Read Marcel Hopson's account of the state basketball tournament.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. -(SNS)- So important, I think, is the speech made by retiring President J. D. Thompson to the seventy-first annual session of the Alabama State Teachers Association, that I plan to base a series of columns upon.

It was a frank report of facts trapped in a bold spirit of idealism, of democratic impulses. In a way he detailed some of the methods used to block, derail, batter, and mess up the fine program he outlined in his inaugural address, repeted in his 1953 presidential statement and came back contending for this time.

Whether it knew it or not, the old guard has seen to it, that for the time being, there will be no one to pick up his program and keep it alive. Almost anyone can predict with certainty what ASTA officials will be elected this afternoon. This election, I think, means the end of the Thompson program.

In his speech, Mr. Thompson, said that the State Department of Education sought to set up offices presumably for its Negro staff workers in the ASTA Headquarters Building but that "your president vigorously objected" He explained "When disapproval was found in other sources the matter was dropped ,at least for the time being. In this case your president felt that an important principle was involved. In brief, he felt that if the offices of the State Department downtown are too good for some of its personel, why should ASTA furnish offices for the State Department of (Education)? Furthermore, the president feels that the Department of Education and ASTA should be separated so we can [illegible] which."

In leading up to the airing of this situation by which the State Department sought shelter under the roof paid for by teachers discriminated against in salaries, Mr. Thompson said that on "routine matters and details" there had been 'harmonious" relationship between the president and executive committee." However, he said that he and the committee have differed in several instances involving matters of policy."

As an example he cited that in all matters relating to the headquarters building "we had complete agreement until efforts were made to set up certain offices of the State Department of Education in this building."

Meantime he praised "our executive secretary" (Dr. R. C. Hatch) and "Our research secretary" (Dr. H. Councill Trenholm "who held the guiding hand" in erecting the building which 'is a credit to our association."

He said that he feels like "the building should be used as an instrument in helping to carry out a program which will mean greater educational opportunities for our boys and girls, more jobs for our people, and better salaries for us."

Mr. Thompson asserted further: "During these two years my experience has been revealing. The stand which I have taken has caused me to be snubbed by many in our circle. But this has not at all been surprising. In a number of educational meetings over the state, many of them statewide, your president has not only not been invited, he has not even known about such meetings until he has read in the papers that such meetings were held and that great things were accomplished. If any of you have wondered why I did not attend some of these meetings, the reason is that I did not know about them."

It should be pointed out that coincident with the re-argument of the school cases before the U. S. Supreme Court, varied "leadership" conferences were promoted in the Black Belt and other places. But from reports from these meetings nothing was ever said about voter-registration. One such meeting, I think, was held in Marengo County, where some high-placed Negro teachers reportedly intimidated their fellow teachers who sought to become qualified voters.

Going on with the shunning of him by teachers for whom he was fighting, Mr. Thompson said in his "Presidential Address," "Today I have educational friends who would rather talk the weather than discuss educational problems. This sort of thing is the result of not grinning in faces and patting on backs. This is the result of having convictions and standing up for those convictions.'

I plan to pick up on this speech and give you the report on how Mr. Thompson said that the State Department factotum allegedly tried to get him fired; how it used teachers to sabotage his program. I heard something this in traveling over the state but was unable to get the document. Teachers were afraid to turn them loose but talked about the letters of instructions allegedly given to supervisors, principals and others to "go to the ASTA convention" and kill "Thompson's program."

TROY, Ala.—(SNS)—Pike county held out until a few years ago against the return of Negro citizens to the rolls of eligible voters.

This reflects to some extent the change which is going on in this state.

When I was researching in labor economics at Atlanta University some years ago my attention was directed to a book written by Dr. Charles H. Wesley on the Negro and organized labor. Perhaps not exactly titled that way but treating generally on the subject, it was showing the Negro as a worker in the textile mills in this county shortly after slavery.

E. O. Jackson

Traveling through these Wiregrass counties you pick up bits of information regarding the employment policies of the new industries moving into the South. This problem is tied up closely with education and change as Dr. Charles S. Johnson points out in an important article in the magazine Phylon, First Quarter, 1954. It is entitled "Next Steps in Education."

"The economy of the southern region has been geared to custom even more constructing than the schools", he says. He adds that "it is increasingly difficult for industry to absorb poorly educated people, even though this has not been fully recognized by southern industry."

To bring this up is to point up something significant, I think. The matter of how the change over will affect the jobs of Negro teachers is often brought up as one of the problems of shedding the inferior school system. Yet inferior education which these sub-standard schools typified hurt the whole group instead of the profession.

Dr. Johnson writes in his Phylon article: "No great new levels of social advance have come without a break with custom, especially when custom has lagged cripplingly behind acknowledged principles of a soundly functioning social order."

Part of the ailment of public schools in Alabama grows out of a lack of money to support a two-parts school system. Should the money be there democracy wouldn't be present so long as everyone be resent the basis of belonging to the human family could not be there.

Teachers have more to lose a two-parts public education system than a single one, it seems to me. Because in some of the poorer counties, such as Marengo County, where there are insufficient funds to support a two-group school system, it is reportedly hard for teachers to gain tenure. Eleven teachers allegedly have been dropped this year even the school authorities have issued no statement of reason for it, so far as I know.

In cases like this, teachers who belong to the Alabama State Teachers Association apparently get no help. To a large extent, the ASTA has benefited from the efforts of the Jeanes supervisors in the way of association memberships. Usually, I am told, it is the estimate made by the supervisor which determines whether a teacher sticks. In a single school system, the Negro teacher would have the services of the professional organization to which they pay their dues.

Influence of the Jeanes supervisors sink through the State P-TA. In the changeover the good supervisor like the good college would survive. That will likely be true of the good teacher. Many of the products of the inferior schools are crippled. Mix this with the injury of Jim Crow and you see the fix it puts them in.

The Rev. E. O. Baxter, an A. M. E. pastor, is living in Troy. He is president of the recently organized voters' league. While living in Birmingham, he challenged the Boswell amendment in the first test suit filed. Once denied the ballot, he is now leader of a group which finds no difficulties in registering to vote.

Some years ago some retarded politicians in Pike county were predicting dire things should the Negro group restore its once lost political power. Things have changed and those living in the new change are proud of it, it seems to me.

"The current of change", Dr. Johnson writes, "seems to have swept up all the reform movements of American history into one vast program for the betterment of the life of the common man." Mr. Johnson, president of Fisk University, was not talking about Pike county but the South.

Winds of change are blowing over Alabama. Out of the winds one seems to hear a voice crying out "Change or perish."

THE TIP OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

First, what role is the Jeanes supervisors playing in some of these counties? Has the Jeanes program become an investigative service, something of a T. B. I. (Teacher Bureau of Investigation) for the boards of education or the superintendents? Supervisors are supposed to be helping teachers. They help to make valuable teachers of new teachers, help to improve the others and offer assistance in many ways.

Second, what role is the Alabama State Teachers Association playing in these dismissal hearings and related troubles in which teachers find themselves involved? This is no question raised to try to bring the ASTA into a controversy between teacher and board but an effort to bring to the front what seems to be an area of new service needed. Whether the ASTA had an observer at the hearing is unknown. Whether it keeps tab on the number and result of these dismissals is not known either by this pillar.

Third, what does the board of trustees of the schools do and has the ASTA provided leadership in this field? From what I can pick up the school trustees in the county system can be powerful and certainly have a legal status of such a nature as to make an understanding of them and their power imperative.

Fourth, how does the ASTA's get-the-ballot program tie in with the P-T. A., the Jeanes teachers and community groups? In Marengo County there were heard reports, all of them heatedly denied, that some high-placed individuals were trying to discourage teachers from seeking to vote, which probably is an interference with one's civil rights.

Marengo County is in the seven-county First Congressional District. It was in a county of this district, Mobile County, where Alex L Herman, an insurance executive and Clarence H. Montgomery, president of Mobile BranchNAACP were elected to the county Democratic Executive Committee. The recently elected prsidnt of th ASTA, Prof. J. T. Gaines, lives in Mobile. This is the only district where all eight members elected to the State Democratic Executive Committee are Dixiecrats. In six of the counties of this district the Negro populations is close to, equal to or more than that of the white group.

Despite the fact that in Wilcox there are no Negro voters, the First District has more Negro voters than the Ninth Congressional District. Birfmingham has only 18 more Negro voters than Mobile. No Negro candidates were elected to office in Birmingnam. Notwithstanding the Birmingham Interracial Committee, which has advocated Negro policemen, there are none in Birmingham although Mobile has added them.

Today Wilcox, is the only county in the First District which prevents Negro voting. Yet Senator J. Miller Bonner, of Wilcox ,author of the present Alabama voter-qualification law, often dubbed 'Boswell Amendment, Jr., was defeated in his bid for re-election. He suffered something like election shock, or a heart attack in reading the returns from the May 4 primary at which he was rejected. Mr. Bonner on one ocassion has been quoted as saying that he did not believe any Negro person, including Dr. F. D. Patterson, then president of Tuskegee Institute, was fit to vote.

What can be done to break through the ballot blackout in Wilcox? It will have to be done by the qualified potential applicants in that county. Which raises the questions: What about the teachers, the ministers, war veterans, Prince Hall Masons and well-to-do farmers in Wilcox? Have they been disfranchised so long that it doesn't worry them? Nearly every white person of voting age in Wilcox is on the voters list. Only work left for the Wilcox Board of Registrars to do is process Negro applicants, unless they are merely going to sit instead of serving the first and third Mondays of the month, and the other registration periods.

Counties	Total	Negro
Mobile	50000.	5,232
Choctaw	5,325	75
Marengo	6,050	110
Clarke	7,821	100
Monroe	6,000	25
Washington	5,617	350
Wilcox	2,900	None

The church is coming to the aid of the courts, or better, assuming leadership in this battle for the survival of freedom.

From the May 17 decision of the United States Supreme Court deals with the freedom of the child to learn. He learns from both his classmates and from his teachers. If he is to be a part of the community of democracy, of civilization, he must not be set apart because of his race or color.

Chief Justice Earl Warren, in speaking for a unanimous Supreme Court in the school segregation cases, went over the opinion of a lower court in connection with the Kansas Court and quoted from it: "Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children. The impact is greater when it has the sanction of law; for the policy of separating the races is usually interpreted as denoting the inferiority of the Negro group. A sense of inferiority affects the motivation of a child to learn. Segregation with the sanction of law, therefore has a tendency to retard the education and mental development of Negro children and to deprive them of some of the benefits they would receive in a racially integrated school system."

Attention is called especially to the fact that the court was concerned about "the children." This is important because from the quarters of fear some discussion has come about the teachers, who are adults and prepared. Some seem to fear that in losing Jim Crow a teacher also might lose his job? Of course, change has its casualties. Yet in the adjustment things often equal out or balance up.

ed at Mobile, in a commencement address May 25 put himself on record in support of the Supreme Court's overturning the Separate but equal doctrine. This college has in a restricted manner set up machinery for being an example of the new doctrine enunciated by the Supreme Court.

A Methodist minister, the Rev. Robert E. Hughes of Rockford, in Coosa County, believes that the churches should assume bold leadership in helping to usher in the switchover. He says that some change in race relationships is inevitable.

The church, it seems to me, has the duty of pulling the community ways up to the Christ teaching rather than let the community drag His teachings down to the ways of the community. To argue against change is to assert against the creative process of civilization. Civilization is change.

To so help bring about change, solidly and successfully, the decent forces must become active, bold and ready. These forces must have the tact and toughness to fight forward and not be intimated by the negative leaders of emotion, bitterness and blindness.

Church leaders must stand up to be counted, as they are doing. The Christian teachings must be their guide. Use of the ballot, the buck, and the book can be useful.

Take a look at the First Congressional district. The figures in parentheses represent the number of delegates who attended the May 30 leadership conference in Montgomery.

First District	Total Voters		Negro Voters
Mobile	50,000	(8)	5,232
Choctaw	5,325	(1)	75
Marengo	6,050	(3)	110
Clarke	7,821	(6)	100
Monroe	6,000	(3)	25

C. D. Stalworth of Hilery, Ala., was elected to the "Committee of 11" by delegates from the First District who attended the conference of leaders on the aspirations of the Alabama Negro group in Montgomery, May 30. All of the seven counties which comprises this district with the exception of Negro voteless Wilcox county was represented. (There are reports that some teachers applied for registration recently in Wilcox but were told they could not be registered. A member of the ASTA vote commission has expressed hope off-record that something was in the making. Hush-hush was asked to be kept until the plan had been tried. But there has been no further reports on the success or failure of the quiet, tell-nobody, easy-a-few-in plan.)

In this district two sheriffs who have been involved in alleged civil rights violation were either defeated in the run-off or withdrew. A third incumbent was beaten. In Choctaw Conuty the sheriff lost by a margin of two votes. There is an alleged unreported lynching in Monroe County. Eleven teachers allegedly were either dismissed or not reappointed in Marengo County.

Macon County Negro teachers, many of them disfranchised, recently honored retiring Supt. B. L. Balch, who defeated Mrs. Jessie P. Guzman, director, Department of Records and Research, Tuskegee Institute, for a spot on the Macon County Board of Education in the May 4 Democratic Primary.

According to a story in The Tuskegee Herald, the Jim Crow twin of The Tuskegee News, published May 25, 1954. Mr. Balch 'was honored for 'outstanding leadership." The honor was bestowed "at a meeting of the Principals' Association held last Friday (May 21) at Chambliss Children's House."

However, reports which are trotting around say that the 196 teachers and principals unpocketed a dollar or more to buy "a gold plaque . . . silver pitcher and goblet set and a handsome basket of flowers" in tribute to the "outstanding leadership" of Mr. Balch, who defeated Mrs. Guzman, the first Negro woman to run for public office in Macon County.

The Herald went on to say: "Members of the association who attended the testimonial were L. E. Carter, M. K. Frazier, J. M. Johnson, L N Jones, W E. Lightfoot, U. G Upshaw and K. B. Young." (A check indicates that some of the names are women but no courtesy titles are published with them.)

Usually in the counties where gift parties are arranged by Negro teachers for the school superintendent and other school-related higher-ups, there are Jeanes or other supervisors. Knowing this, I consulted the Educational Directory for 1953 54 authorized by the State Board of Education and found on page 31 a "L. A. Jones - B. S., M. S. Tuskegee Institute" listed on the section labeled 'Jeanes Teachers and Special Supervisors (Negro)."

According to a Negro vote survey made in Macon County by the Tuskegee Civic Association, only 78 of the 196 Negro teachers are qualified voters. Returns from the June 1 run-off reveals that G. S. Rogers, a member of the Macon County Board of Registrars, defeated by a 50-vote margin G. O. Bush for a seat in the State Legislature. Rejection of Negro applicants by the registrars has been abnormally high in this county.

What is behind this sudden flurry of gifts by Negro teachers to county school superintendents? In Negro voteless Lowndes County a group of teachers under the leadership of Principal Robert Pierce gave some presents to Miss Hula Coleman for her "15 years of service." In Dothan there is the story of the $200 cedar chest gift. However the latter I understand was an individual gift.

Here is the vote survey in the Third Congressional District:

THIRD DISTRICT	TOTAL VOTERS	NEGRO VOTERS
Lee (0)	8,000	550
Macon (7)	3,862	855
Russell (4)	8,259	300
Bullock (1)	2,250	7
Barbour (4)	5,000	250
Coffee (12)	9,750	420
Dale (0)	7,633	250?
Henry (3)	4,881	402
Geneva (5)	11,000	150?
Houston (3)	10,230	1,186
TOTAL 36	71,685	4,370

The figures in parentheses opposite the counties represented the number of delegates from the particular county who attended the conference in Montgomery May 30 on "What the Alabama Negro Group Wants." Lee and Dale counties were not represented. The exact number of Negro voters in Dale and Geneva counties has not been learned.

Tuskegee Institute is the only Negro serving institution of higher learning in the Third Congressional District. Half of these counties have branches of the NAACP. Three others once had branches. Two others have never organized branches but have had a knuckle of members in them.

Lodges of the Elks, posts of the American Legion, Prince Hall Masons, Knights of Pythians are located in these counties. They are among the resources at the disposal of the true-to-mission leadership.

Job opportunities in the Post Office, industries with government contracts, new industries are influenced in many instances by the ballot. Negro citizens in Macon County have tremendous purchasing power from employment at the VA Hospital and Tuskegee Institute. This purse power should be made a weapon in the fight for first-class citizenship.

The Third Congressional District has fewer Negro voters than any of the nine districts, the figures indicate. This can be overcome by discovering leadership which will work unselfishly and untiringly for increased political suffrage. Leadership is the answer. Too often the humble people in the rurals had nothing better than absentee leadership. The new leadership must come if there is to be any worthwhile, from the non-professional ranks. It is there only to be observed rather than overlooked.

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

MONTGOMERY, ALA.— (SNS) — History is no better than those who write it. It's a record of man's effort to live.

Another observance of Negro History Week swings around. Text book history is not always the truest history. There is neither city nor state proclamation designating February 7-14 as Negro History Week in Alabama. This could be true of a number of other Southern States.

JACKSON

Negro History Week observance is an integral part of the unceasing struggle to win full acceptance of the Negro group as a part of humanity, of history, or the path-makers. Without a record no group has any reference.

The opportunity to learn about the Negro group has not always been easy for the members of this group. Material found in the textbooks and in the libraries is often inadequate. City and community libraries are often closed to non-whites.

A young high school girl this week who lives in a community where there is no 'stocked 'for white only' library related to me how she was in need of a book to prepare an assignment. She was not able to find the book in the library where she was admitted. Yet that book was in the community library from which she was barred although she is an American citizen and the library is operated out of public funds.

Do you call this democracy? Do you say that this is equality of opportunity? It's like asking one to make biscuits without dough.

Theme of the observance this year is "Negro History-Foundation for Integration." Negro History is merely an implementation of human history. Some sections of our country have tampered with history and with textbooks. Alabama used the textbook, "Challenge of Democracy" revised to suit its traditions rather than substantiate the truth.

Tomorrow's history likely will be unable to omit the glorious achievements of Negro individuals. New communication, fairer recording of deeds, and the improvement of scholarship among the the Negro group will bring this about.

Charles H. Wesley, president of the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, will deliver an important speech in Los Angeles, California on the observance. His address will be entitled, "A New Freedom." Dr. Wesley is president of Central State College and a renowned historian in his own right. He has moved up to the place left when death grabbed off Dr. Carter Woodson, founder and dubbed the "Father of Negro History Week."

Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State College, is vice president of the association. Most of the work in this association is done by volunteer scholars and researchers whose only pay is the truth they dig up. Truth will set one free. Yet truth-bearing is a rough and rugged task.

The association is located at 1538 Ninth Stret, N. W., Washington, D. C. It issues a Negro History Week kit which can be had for $2.75. For $6 annually the Journal of Negro History and the Negro History Bulletin. (I am subscriber to both and know what a bargain it is.) The association is in need of money to promote this work. Churches, schools, and business concerns could help. You'll find things in the literature that would call for years of digging to obtain otherwise.

Traveling over the state I have found that some school folk say they did not know where to obtain material on the Negro History Week celebration. Why couldn't the Alabama State Teachers Association have promotion of this observance as one of its projects? Why couldn't district, county and city units of the ASTA do likewise?

Exhibits of the works of Negro art could be sponsored by some of the cultural clubs. Youth Night programs might be sponsored in churches in which orations are given based on Negro History. Musical Achievements of Negro persons should be spotlighted by singing and other groups.

Courses in human relations cannot handily ignore the story of ethnic minorities. Brotherhood Sunday and Race Relations Sunday must connect with human history of which Negro life is a part. History is of two parts-included and excluded. Excluded American history is the bedrock of Negro history in America. Yet this not the beginning of the history of the so-called Negro men.

Social segregation, an issue presently under study by the United States Supreme Court, is protruding itself as the new hot political issue in some Southern states.

Admittedly, the politicians have found no satisfactory circumvention solution should the courts declare the Separate but Equal doctrine invalid. "No answer yet," they cry. In South Carolina, Gov. Jimmy Byrnes, father of the idea of abolishing the public school system, in his recent message to the Legislature hinted that some other ideas should be considered should the court decide that the 14th amendment is really a freedom act.

In Georgia, Charles L. Gowen, in his "Boston (Ga.) Speech" opening his campaign to succeed Gov. Herman Talmadge, teed off by suggesting a plan to save both the public school system and also segregation. He is against dissolving the public schools.

His plan is to get the General Assembly of Georgia to pass legislation (should the court abolish segregation) "authorizing each county school superintendent to designate the school and classroom each child in the public school will attend." It would give him "wide discretion in designating the schools and classes so as to serve the best interests of the child and the best interest of the entire public school system."

Schools are dear to the hearts of people and usually the people do not like for them to be tampered with in a way to either lower their standards or cancel them out. So now there seems to be a moving away from the notion of destroying the public schools in a frenzy of anger.

Little discussed is the fact that racial differentials in education are tied up with taxation. The denials forced upon the Negro group reduced its per capita earnings; reduced their buying power; often kept them without much property. Much of the new revenue for education comes from the sales tax. The sales tax is a tax on purchasing power. Those with little to spend have little to tax. Hence economic differentials are coming back to haunt those who must find new money for education.

One educator has pointed out that either way the court rules means that the lawmakers will have to worry over the best new source of the money. The school segregation issue cuts deeper than the emotional flub-dub created by the politicans.

Taxation and segregation float to the surface like a pair of shoes into the river

Educators are making surveys to show what is being accomplished and the politicans are citing the figures. The so-called "progress figures" often fail to show the racial gap. Nor do they deal with those intangibles for which no measurement has been found. Freedom and equality cannot be measured in pie pans.

Some educational leaders suggest that "the initial presumption would be in Alabama that facilities are equal until Negroes take formal action alleging they are not." Therefore "wait and see" what the court says and what the Negro leaders do. Politicans aren't waiting because emotion, steam, and verbal thunder have always been useful weapons in campaigns. Yet such campaigns will not solve the issue at hand.

One of the wire services reported this observation from one of the school officials: "In Sylacauga, for example, the weekly Sylacuage News says facilities there are equal now and that both white and Negro residents are content with segregation under those conditions."

The weekly quoted gave no source for its information and cited no survey of the opinions of either group. However, the state school survey indicates that it would take $3,457.500 to bring the Negro schools and $2,142.500 the white schools up to acceptable standards. This says nothing about making Negro and white schools equal-to-equal. Sylacauga is in Talladega County, but in the city school system. No figures were cited to show the relationship between the Negro and white schools.

Carl T. Rowan, prize-winning journalist and author of "South of Freedom" has written a new series of articles, "Jim Crow's Last Stand," in which he has made an on-the-spot study of the feelings of some of those in the five states in which the end-segregation suits originated. He makes this important observation: "The issue (of racial segregation) becomes woefully complex and complicated because all colored people do not want to see segregation ended; nor do all whites want to see it maintained."

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS)— None of the progress noted in the surrounding counties, notably Montgomery County, seems to have reached neighboring Lowndes County.

The Montgomery Rebels, the baseball club, is expected to field four or more Negro players this season. A Negro athlete in Rebel or Confederate uniform will be newsmaking with historic curiosity. An interracial boost-baseball club has been organized. Come April about a half dozen Negro policemen are due to be employed.

At last interest in voting among the top-crust has arrived. Rufus Lewis, a former 'Bama Hornet coach and now a businessman; E. D. Nixon, president of the Montgomery Progressive Democratic Association and Jesse Cook, coach of the Washington High basketball team are among those pumping fire into the qualify-to-vote drive.

The man-of-the-street is waking up, catching on, watching things. When the 1954 voters' list is published this followship man will have his eyes on that list. He'll be checking for the names of the society leaders; the teachers; the begging leaders, ministers and businessmen, and the well-to-do. A good place to begin scanning the new voters list should be the directory of the colleges.

Young Charles D. Langley has set up a law office here; Aubrey Williams' Southern Farm and Home; Charles Dobbins' liberal weekly, the Montgomery Examiner; E. G. Jackson's bold Alabama Tribune and the Pre-Civil War Montgomery Advertiser and its afternoon sister, The Montgomery Journal give the city a variety of newspapers.

Lowndes County is without a single Negro voter. Neither the weeklies nor the dailies are pointing this up. The Advertiser was courageous enough to break with tradition to support the Republican presidential candidate, now President Dwight D. Eisenhower. Lowndes County polled a record number of votes for the GOP presidential candidate. Yet Negro citizens are held in what amounts to political slavery.

On the amendment to ease the poll tax load, in Lowndes County some 94 votes were cast for it and 300 against it. The total vote cast was 394. There are an estimated 1,456 white voters in Lowndes County. Population census indicates that there are 2,057 whites and 6,514 Negro persons 21 or over. There are 3,220 white persons and 14,798 Negro persons living in this county.

Montgomery County has only 1,300 Negro voters. In the 9-county Second Congressional District there is a total of 2,073. Crenshaw County has only 36 Negro voters. So it would seem that any Negro who can register, pay his poll tax and vote, and does not, tighten the chains of the Negro group in awful Lowndes County.

Recent figures released by the State Department of Education say that $3,052,500 is needed to bring the Negro public schools up to acceptable standard. The white schools are up to quality. No wonder some of those with guilt on their hands are disturbed over whatever decision the United States Supreme Court hands down in the pending Jim Crow School Cases. Where Negro citizens do not vote the degree of racial disparity appears to be largest.

Some keep-the-masses-quiet leaders talk of self-help. Interestingly enough is their failure to mention this in connection with the ballot. They even talk about harmony, apparently being unnoticing of the fact that usually where there is fair voting opportunities are to be found enlightened human relations. The ballot is the barometer of democracy working.

Yet it should be said that achievement of political suffrage has to start as a self-effort project which picks support.

Reports reveal that in a number of counties the old folk who had been weighted down by poll tax are marching to the office of the boards of registrars. Mostly they are women.

Yet the turnout of Negro citizens for voter-registration, based upon the reports I have seen, is discouragingly small. More talking than walking, it seems.

From Marengo County comes a distrubing report. It says that some Negro teachers undertook to enjoy their precious privilege to register to vote but were discouraged from some doing so by a Negro who has high responsibility. The discourager reportedly went about intimidating the teachers who had the civic interes to prove themselves worhy of the great American heritage. Seeing this, the report says, some other teachers who had been heard ot say they intended to register changed their minds and stay away from the board of registrars.

"Teachers are afraid to do anything; they are intimidated and made fearful," the report says. "An unwholesome situation exists," it adds.

District VIII of the Alabama State Teachers Association is holding a meeting in Marengo, Saturday, Jan. 9. Prof. Henry J. Williams, chairman of the ASTA vote commission is scheduled to attend this meeting. This should provide a handsome opportunity to investigate such reports and expose any unlawful or unethical interference with the most precious civil right, the right to vote.

Counties in which the ballot is denied to Negro citizen put their fine Negro leaders to a humiliating disadvantages. One who is known to be a non-voter finds it hard to get eleced to office in state, regional and national organizations. Some social club, fraternities and sororities have rules against non-voters being eligible to run or serve in major offices.

An important leader like Prof. Robert Pierce, principal of the Lowndes County Training School must labor under such a handicap simply because in Lowndes the ballot appears to be completely withheld from all of the Negro group no matter what their standing, the size of their bank deposits, the number of plantations they own, the beauty of the automobiles they drive.

Next Spring the ASTA will elect officers and Principal Pierce, should the people desire to run, would have the heavy handicap of the non-voting tag on him, through no fault, may be of his. And yet one night say that some, if not all, of the fault lies on the non-voter who has never tried to join the ranks of voters.

Principal Pierce is a man of tact; he has the confidence and goodwill of the people of Lowndes County, and certainly the powers that he should be proud of him as somebody to point to as having made a mark in life and this planted a contribution in the community. Lowndes County could brighten its name over the state by relaxing its voter-registration practices to permit all of hose who can qualify by a fairly administered law to qualify for the ballot.

Lowndes is the only one of the nine-counties making up the Second Congressional District which is handing all o fthe way back against Negro voting. It could win a better name by softening up a little, it seems to me.

SECOND CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT

Counties	Voters	21 And Over
Baldwin	225	4,473
Butler	250	6,119
Conecuh	32	4,427
Covington	100	3,155
Crenshaw	No Report	2,789
Escambia	200	5,072
Lawndes	None	6,514
Montgomery	1,300	34,065

The above date was taking from "A Report of Negro Voting in Alabama by Counties," prepared by Prof. J. E. Pierce, head of the Division of Political Science at Alabama State College. A school principal in Crenshaw County and other sources were sent inquires about the number of Negro voters in that County. It is known that there are a few in Crenshaw County. Montgomery has a total of 23,440 voters. However in a recent special election for a city official only 6,642 took the time to go to the polls.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — (SNS) — I am glad that Atty. Charles Fisher Anderson wrote to The Birmingham News last Wednesday, Oct. 20 in regard to an editorial which, among other things, suggested a plan to "responsible" Negro leaders for setting aside the hard-won May 17 decision outlawing racial segregation. On the same day, the Rev. U. J. Fields of Montgomery was writing an equally significant letter to The Montgomery Advertiser answering another letter by a "pose as being a friend of the Negro" white person in which the latter suggested "preserving racial identity."

Atlanta, Ga. Dec. 10-22-54

Perhaps in a few days I can devote a series of columns to the "Boutwell Plan" Which is being advocated as a method of nullifying the Supreme Court's ruling. Here in this plan is a new doctrine of tri-school system in a section unable to support one-school system. The plan is unsound financially, wrong morally and legally invalid, it seems to me.

What has disturbed me deeply is not the attitude of "responsible Negro leadership" on the question of racial segregation, compulsory and otherwise, but the lack of action on problems of denials where positive achievements are attainable almost immediately.

1. Only one of the 13 accredited schools of nursing in Alabama accepts Negro students. Four schools of nursing are located in Birmingham. They have received some public money in some form or other. Years ago Negro students attended most of the nurse training schools. "Responsible Negro leaders" have voluntarily watched this situation develop.

2. Last year some 129 Negro persons accepted "Jim Crow Scholarships" to study outside of Alabama instead of seeking admission to the tax-supported professional, graduate, technical and related institutions. Alabama is one of the five states which has not yet lowered the racial bars in the field of higher education. "Responsible Negro leaders" have apparently done little about this. The handout scholarships are accepted "voluntarily" and hence aid and abet the scheme to circumvent the U. S. Supreme Court ruling in the Sweatt and the McLaurin cases.

3. Almost every fraternity, sorority, social club, and other organizations has a scholarship fund. But how many of them are designated to assist students who would like to attend the University of Alabama, Auburn, the Medical College and other similar public insitutions which ban Negro students? "Responsible Negro leaders" are "voluntarily" doing these things. Yet, they oppose school segregation.

Some Negro persons obviously have been sold the "voluntary segregation" plan as noted in the observations I have made. Could it be that these foregoing observations have given The News its idea of what would be acceptable to the "responsible Negro leaders? Or it is that some of us do not have the same conception of "responsible leaders," which is a point I think Atty. Anderson sought to make. Who are our responsible leaders? Let them take a bow.

Some time back in Birmingham a movement to establish a chapter of the National Urban League in this city came to naught. As all of us should know the NUL is one of our foremost social service organizations. It has an excellent record in the job-opening field, and especially in pioneering new fields of employment for Negro girls. Yet in this city we blocked out the establishment of an Urban League.

Business Week magazine, commenting on the work of NUL, made this contrast: "Where NAACP relies on direct action to advance the Negro, the league's tactics are study and persuasion, and its main weapon is public opinion. One is militant; one is not."

The magazine points out further: "The problem that faces the more than 15 million Negroes in the U. S. today is not one of simply getting jobs. It is one of getting jobs outside the traditional Negro work classifications. In the North, the Negro has had success in moving into skilled manufacturing jobs, but the doors are still closed to him in most white-collar jobs and in almost all supervisory and management posts."

It adds: "Despite some notable achievements in the South, the color line is still solid in most of Southern industry."

Unless new training opportunities are provided one will not likely come into new employment opportunities, it seems to me.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Two women-led organizations here are given considerable credit for the employment of the three Negro policewomen by the city of Montgomery.

Constant and persistent effort by the City Federation of Colored Women's Clubs headed by Mrs. Sadie Brooks and the Women's Political Council piloted by Mrs. Jo Ann Robinson helped to bring this about. This raises in me the suggestion that the two leaders look into the nurse training opportunities for members of the Negro group.

Information about this subject can be obtained for the asking from the Alabama State Nurses' Association, 334 Professional Center, Montgomery. It has edited a 24-page booklet entitled, "State Approved Schools of Nursing Alabama."

It contains data about admission requirements and related material. Persons ranging from 17 to 35 who are graduates from accredited high school meet most of the standards. Provided, of course, one has good physical health and other academic qualifications.

Birmingham, Ala.

Here is a list and location of accredited schools of nursing: Anniston Memorial Hospital, Anniston; Birmingham Baptist Hospital, Birmingham; Carraway Methodist Hospital, Ins, Birmingham; City Hospital School of Nursing, Mobile; Druid City Hospital, Tuscaloosa; Holy Name Hospital, Gadsden; Jefferson-Hillman Hospital, Birmingham; Mobile Infirmary, Mobile; Providence Hospital, Mobile; St. Margaret's Hospital, Montgomery.

St. Vincent's Hospital, Birmingham; Sylacauga Hospital, Sylacauga; Tuskegee Institute School of Nursing, Tuskegee; University of Alabama, University.

Only one of these 13 schools of nursing currently is admitting Negro persons. Birmingham has four of the total number. Of course, three are sponsored by different denominational groups — Baptist, Catholic, Methodist. The other one is tax-supported. Whether by church or by state, the restrictive ban is the same. What and how much Negro members of these denominations might do to influence favorable change in admission policy? The NAACP has fashioned a legal key that could be used to open the doors of the public-supported school of nursing.

Montgomery, Anniston, Sylacauga, Gadsden and Tuskegee each has one school of nursing. One of these seems to be public-supported, three have religious sponsorship and one is independently operated Only Tuskegee among the five inthis group accepts Negro students. Conversely it bars white students. This is racial discrimination in the reverse and is therefore on the sample plane as restriction directed solely at Negro persons.

Mobile has three and Tuscaloosa has two schools of nursing. Both of the two in Tuscaloosa bar Negro students and both are tax-supported. One is city-sponsored and the other state-promoted. It appears that one of the Mobile schools is publicly-financed and three are church-related.

In all but one of the seven cities where these schools of nursing are located there are branches of the NAACP. Sylacauga does not have a chapter of this association. Despite NAACP leadership being on the scene, there is the barring of Negro students to the church-related and the state-provided schools of nursing. That is one of the big observations.

While various groups seek to expand job opportunities they should look around at the roadblocks on the path of job-training. Something can be done about it. Members of the nursing profession can play a vital part in this undertaking. The Alabama Association of prospective applicants to enroll in the state-financed or the municipally-operated schools of nursing. The NAACP leaders could supply the legal action that might become necessary for completing admission of qualified applicants without racial considerations.

An assembly of leaders is scheduled to meet here Sunday, Oct. 24 for a workshop and rally. The conference of leaders is a project of the Alabama State Coordinating Committee for Registration of Voting headed by W. C. Patton of Birmingham. Nine major leaders representing the Alabama Congressional Districts will be among this group. Whether this conference will tackle the problem of widening nurse-training opportunities is unknown.

Leadership is needed in this area to devote itself unreservedly to the task of melting the racial bars presently fencing Negro girls out of the state-maintained and the church-sponoserd nurse - training institutions. One would expect the Catholic Church to lead the way because of its position. It could set the pace and the example instead of jogging along with those who have not felt the winds of change sweeping over the world. Let the Christian spirit make itself felt and heard.

In recent columnar comment, Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, has observed:

"In every field there seems to be a shortage of able men and women. Certainly among Negroes there is a tremendous shortage in medicine, law, nursing and dentistry."

"If there is a need for a first-class stenographer or secretary she can hardly be found. You can find many who have taken secretarial courses and graduated, but few who are graduated."

Why is this true? In the first place, most of the Negro students were trained in non-rated and inferior primary and secondary schools. In the occupational schools, they can never overcome the handicaps of their early training. Others in the South who might have had the advantage of going to better schools are denied training in technical, professional and related schools exclusively because of their color.

When their formal job-training is completed, they do not always have a good opportunity to gain experience under master's of their craft, trade or occupation. Apprentice training in many instances clogs them out. Little assistance is available to enable them to become efficient and competent.

Not many first-rate jobs for first-rate trained workers at first-rate pay are open to the Southern Negro group. This is not likely to be true much longer. Hence the emphasis needs to be placed on (1) making available the opportunities for training and for future workers (2) to exhaust every effort to become competent and efficient

The segregated schools system stands as the number one barrier to competent training in the South. It influences the policies of the private schools. It affects the economy of the region which permits it. Training for the members of the Negro group will remain unsatisfactory as long as segregation is tolerated in any level of public education.

The "Boutwell plan" is a method by which the Alabama Legislature would try to create a state substitute for the May 17 ruling of the United States Supreme Court This insidious scheme would continue the racial denials in training However, no state can legally make any laws which conflict with the 14th amendment Segregation whether dual school or tri-school, has no place in the field of public education.

As to "public opinion" in the readjustment which is with us and ahead of us this can be said: It has usually supported law and order. Healthy public opinion is a product of healthy communication. If the moulders of public opinion do their duty in support of law and order, the task will be easier. Public opinion is more than published opinion. I cannot conceive of the constructive builders of public opinion supporting a plan designed to destroy a democratic system of government in an attempt to save racial segregation.

When the separate but equal rule was the law, the segment it hit hardest did not revolt Now that it is out, I do not believe any other segment will be lesser sports, reveal themselves less law abiding. Nor do I believe they will put skin above science; tradition ahead of truth or more Southern desires beyond the Supreme Court decision

Segregation by consent is as offensive to those civil rights amendments as slavery by consent would be. No "responsible leader" or irresponible one, nor other being could legally accept a school segregation plan that would be binding on any other citizen entitled to the fruits of the May 17 Supreme Court ruling overthrowing the separate but equal doctrine. Racial segregation standing by itself is an intolerable classification in a democracy.

Public education was conceived as a method of preserving democracy Everybody makes up the public in a democracy American democracy is a fusions of persons into American citizens

But segregation gums up this process of making Americans. Certainly this country cannot keep its strength by breaking up its "Americans" into racial camps in which any group could develop the feeling that because of race, color and national orgin they are not good enough to be full Americans. Full citizens are full Americans with all of the privileges and responsibilities of an American citizen.

When schools are divided on the basis of race you set up ugly spots in democracy which look good neither from the inside nor the outside Segregation is itself conflict one of conscience and one of the constitution. It is a clash between preachment and practice and of deology and experience

Alan Paton in his Collier's magazine piece observed, in part:

"To me there is one inescapable implication of the end of segregation. For if by maintaining segregation, America was declaring that she was a white nation with some colored citizens, then by removing segregation she is declaring something else. If a man with one drop of colored blood is a colored man, then what is a nation with

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

As we rode into Dallas County for the funeral service of the late Dr David Vivian Jemison, 81 year old Black Belter and titular leader of the 300,000 Negro-identified Baptists of Alabama, tonight drizzled through my mind of what I had been told of the improvements in public education in Dallas County.

I kept thinking that Payne College had pulled away from Selma to Birmingham and old Knox Academy had quit operating. Selma University had weathered the storm, although weakened. In the heydey of Negro leadership in Alabama, before the 1901 debacle when political suffrage was stripped from Negro citizens, privately-sponsored education flourished in this city.

There were Dr. Sandy Ray in the automobile, a Brooklyn pastor whom I knew during the Depression Days at Morehouse College; Dr. W. H. Jernagin of Washington, D. C., president of the National Sunday School and B. T. U. Congress, Mrs. Bessie Estell, secretary of the Congress and city school principal, and the Rev. William Prince Vaughn, pastor of Tabernacle Baptist Church, and general arrangements chairman for the 1954 Congress to be held June 21-27 in Birmingham, in whose car we were riding. It was my first meeting Dr. Jernigan, militant civil rights leaders and world traveler.

The conversation dealt with pleasantries, friendships, and the beautiful country-side where we watched the cattle grazing, marvelled at the beauty of the scenery and the perfectness of the weather. This was the Black Belt of scenery, landscape but not of people. As the talk crackled on I kept thinking

Some of the more decent-minded functionaries who are sincerely interested in seing improvements in Negro-related public education, not equalization, had suggested that I take a look at Hudson High School when visiting Selma. We passed the stately white high school and later observed Hudson from a ride-by. Hudson, while an improvement, rates no match with the white high school. Selma has approximaately an equal distribution of white and Negro persons.

Recent figures show that in Dallas County there are 36,722 Negro citizens and 19,774 white citizens. There are 18,145 Negro citizens in this county of voting age with only 112 qualified voters, according to the Negro Vote Survey made by Prof. J. E. Pierce of Alabama State College. Dallas has 12,597 white citizens of voting age, although I do not have handy the number of white voters.

An educational survey conducted by the Alabama State Department of Education reveals that some $5,277,500 is needed bring the Negro-serving public schools in Dallas County up to acceptable standards while only $769,500 is needed for the schools for similiar purposes.

One has to consider the life and works of Dr. Jemison against this awful background to understand his services. When he was nine years old, he had to walk seven miles to school at Loveless Quarters, Loveless Beat, Perry County, Ala. He was 16 when he attended Lincoln Normal at Marion, having to walk 15 miles. This school haas now matured into what is Alabama State College at Montgomery.

At Selma University Dr. Jemison earned the B. D. degree in 1904. The university bestowed the D. D. degree upon him in 1915 and honored him with the L. L. D. degree in 1937.

When Dr. Jemison ascended to the presidency of the National Baptist Convention, U. S. A., Inc., which represents and estimated 4,445,605 Negro-affiliated Baptists, one of his first programs was designed to provide more scholarships at the National Baptist Seminary at Nashville.

In one of his presidential messages to the NBC messengers he observed that the "Negro preachers are the freest in the world." He pointed out that "Negro preachers are not bound by the cord of prejudice and the fearfulness of their jobs because of telling the truth." Yet in the Alabama Black Belt where located the vast Negro population is there any evidence of "the freest" preachers "telling the truth" about conditions bringing light, cheer and goodwill?

In his 1948 convention message in Dallas, Tex., Dr. Jemison said: "We want our ourselves, our wives and our children everything that any other man wants for himself and his children. We do not want anything which does not belong to us as human beings."

Those who lack words of their own can pick up those of Dr. Jemison to answer any who ask, "what do your people want?"

Dr. E. Paul Jones, director of the Division of Negro Education, Jefferson County Public Schools; Prof. B. M. Montgomery, principal of Rosedale High School and a member of the Birmingham Interracial Committee and Mrs. Minnie E. Chambliss, teacher at the Lincoln School were among the invited guests at a meeting last Saturday, July 17, of the executive committee of Alabama Council for Improving Leadership held at the home of Prof and Mrs Leon Kennedy, 511 First Street North, principal of Wenonah High School and a ACIL executive member.

This executive committee meeting came on the heels of a five-day "Institute on Educational leadership" held July 12-16 at Alabama A and M. College. ACIL is an independent and voluntary organization in the sense that it has no formal ties with any other group However, it appears that it has an extremely friendly and cooperative relationship with certain public forces in education. It is a three-year leadership project which can be continued after this period should the members see fit to do so.

Dr. R. C. Hatch of the State Department of Education and executive secretary of the Alabama State Teachers Association is coordinator; Prof W J. Carroll, principal of the Baldwin County Training School and former ASTA president is president; J. H. Wier, vice president; A. R. Stickney, principal of the Calhoun School in Lowndes County; P. H. Wesley, principal of Trenholm High, Tuscumbia, treasurer.

Dr. R. C. Hatch, supervisor of instruction, State Department of Education and executive secretary of the Alabama State Teachers Association is coordinator; Prof. W. J. Carroll of Daphne, principal of Baldwin County Training School, president; J. H. Wier of Carrollton, Jeanes supervisor of Pickens County, vice president; A. R. Stickney, principal of the Calhoun School in Lowndes County and P. H. Wesley of Tuscumbia, principal of Trenholm High, treasurer.

Proceedings and activities of the institute have been neatly edited into a mimeographed 88 page booklet. I have read rushingly some of the material and passed over some other portions of it by thumping through the pages. Some of the leaders listed on the institute program and in the council membership are non-voters. One who lacks the interest to vote also lacks one of the imperatives of educational and civic leadership, it seems to me.

"Organization gives one voice," Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State Teachers Association said, as recorded in the official report as he discussed "The Role of Professional Organizations in Educational Leadership." He raised, according to the report, this question, "What should be the scope and type of participation for Negro members in these (ATA and NEA) organizations?" Miss P E Thigpen who made the report on this speech did not elaborate.

Dr Charles W. Orr who served as program chairman in giving his impression of the highlights of the institute observed, in part: "Participants included representatives from Alabama's Chief Educational Body, college presidents, college deans, principals, Jeanes supervisors, college and public school teachers." There were "the eleven college students (who) tested the techniques, the methods, the philosophy and strategy" of those who "had experience in the field of leadership—They (the enlightened eleven) are to be on the cutting edge of newer frontiers."

This "educational leader—must be a scholar, a student and a status person," according to the findings and emphases of the institute. It adds "The leadership in education which is his task must not be relegated to leadership in other fields."

In his annual report on the ACIL, Prof. Carroll restates the origin and gloas of the council. It grew out of "the need for prepared and improved professional leadership." He writes: "Professional growth and leadership development were accepted as general council goals."

There are approximately 67 members of the council who pay $10 annually. The council collects and distributes information. Next year it plans to establish an information center in the ASTA Headquarters Building at Montgomery and organize youth council. It will also prepare or collect information helpful to leadership building. Its Mid-Winter meeting is scheduled for December at Brighton High School.

Among those attending the executive committee and sharing the Kennedy courtesies were C B. Fanchers, principal of Lincoln High School, Marion; J. Solomon Abrams of Bessemer; Abraham Jones, Charles Allen Brown; Richard E. Moore, Auburn; Robert R Pierce, Haynesville; Mr. and Mrs O. L. Sheffield, Decatur; Mr. and Mrs E D Sledge; A J. Rowser, Montgomery and B N Mabra, Talladega.

This week in Montgomery there are some other important events on the calendar. The Jeanes supervisors are holding a five day work shop at Ala State College; the Federal District Court is scheduled to hear a motion Thursday morning seeking to dismiss a vote denial suit arising in Bullock County and Saturday leaders from the nine counties of the Second Congressional District are scheduled to meet Saturday.

Mr E. D. Nixon, a leader with the action scars on his record and success marks written in the progress of the group is chairman of the district. He represents a type of folk leader in contrast to the "educational leader." The folk in Alabama are crying for a leadership with the guts to try to move them them out of the foggy bottom of second class citizenship

It will be interesting to check the leadership roster of the Alabama Council for Improved Leadership to see how many of its members attend the district meeting and help to supply some of the mechanics of applied leadership in the field of group service and community action. Of course, the council is not a political group, a status group. Grass roots leaders and the status leaders need to join hands in the big pull toward a full freedom, status, it seems to me.

The night of July 2, the five-man Lamar County Board of Education met at Vernon, Ala., to hear a protest from Mrs. Druella Williams, a 10-year tenure teacher, over the proposed termination of her teaching contract. A report of this hearing was published under my signature in the Tuesday, July 6 issue of this newspaper.

July 15, The Lamar Democrat, carried a story on "Contract on Teacher Cancelled After Hearing Before Board July 2 "July 22 it published another story assorting that Supt A. A. Chandler, who has a five year tenure, was "falsely accused by a Negro newspaper."

Except for the principals and Witnesses in the case, there were few spectators at the hearing. When this reporter experienced difficulty in trying to cover the hearing. Atty. Arthur D. Shores, chief counsel for the teacher, called attention to the superintendent of the law governing public hearing requested by the contesting teacher. Atty. O. E. Young, Sr., counsel for the board, asserted that the complaining teacher determined the kind of hearing and that she had requested that it be public. He suggested moving the hearing to the courtroom, where it was conducted.

Since the hearing, I have had an opportunity to carefully read the full transcript of the hearing, as recorded by Mrs Annie White Gunter, official court reporter I want to call attention to only a small portion of it

Atty. Shores: "Then, as a matter of fact, your enrollment and average attendance increased during the past year, didn't it?" Supt. Chandler: "That might have been true for the county as a whole, but are you familiar with how teacher units are calculated."

This seems to me to be as much of the testimony cite in observation to some injections creping into the story published by the Lamar Democrat

It seems to me that the executive members of the Alabama Education Association, the Alabama State Teachers Association and the chief officials of the State Department of Education should read the transcript in this case.

Here is my letter to the editor-publisher of the weekly in Lamar County:

July 30, 1954

Mr. Jack Hankins, Editor-Publisher
THE LAMAR DEMOCRAT

Vernon, Alabama

Dear Mr. Hankins,

On the front page of the Thursday, July 22, 1954 issue of THE LAMAR DEMOCRAT, there appears a story, captioned "Lamar County Accused by A Negro Newspaper."

This material is neither quoted not attributed in the four-column head over the story. However, this is unimportant to me, but merely an observaion.

Your story says, in part: "Emory O. Jackson, reporter for the 'Birmingham Wolrd,' stated that Supt. (A. A.) Chandler (of the Lamar County Public Schools) attempted to bar newspaper reporter from the hearing in the above case. The statement was untrue. The truth was that Supt. Chandler told the newspaper reporter, who was Emory O. Jackson, where to sit and Jackson did not like it. Supt. Chandler would not allow negroes to take over the hearing as it seemed to it had been planned to do. Therefore, Jackson, who is a negro, makes untrue statements about Supt. Chandler."

The handling of the story leads me to believe that you did not have a reporter on the scene. It appears that you relied upon the distorted version apparently made available to you by Mr. Chandler. It is hard for me to see how any cometent observer could have swung so wide of the mark.

As to the story itself, there are these observations I should like to present:

1. As a newspaper reporter my only and prime interest is trying to get the story. There was no question of seating, so far as I know, in regard to my effort to cover the teacher dismissal case in Lamar County. I have covered such cases all over Alabama and in the office of Governor Persons. The only question was an opportunity to be in a position where I could hear the proceedings.

The original place of the hearing was a library office. Outside of this office there were some seats on which sat some of the witnesses in the case. Inside of the library office were the lawyer for the teachers. I sought to go inside this library office where the hearing was to be conducted. Meantime, I tried to present my press credentials. At no time, so far, I can remember, did the question of seating come up. It was solely the question of my being in a position to observe and hear the teacher dismissal proceedings.

2. The most important thing here, I think, is the whole question of freedom of access to the news. The Alabama Press Association to which your newspaper belongs, and other similar bodies, have been concerned about keeping the flow and sources of news open. The right to know involves the right to report the acivities of public agencies.

3. Teacher tenure and its operation is a major concern of the general teaching profession in Alabama. We have tried to get a first hand picture of the operation of this law. The Lamar County Dismissal Case involved some features which I believe have wide implications. For this reason we decided to cover the hearing.

4. The record of the testimony in the case is available for anyone to check and read it for himself. I am willing for my story to be placed against that official record.

Yours truly,
EMORY O. JACKSON.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (SNS) — Two basic types of leadership are contrasted by Dr. R. D. Crockett of Alabama State College in his "Analysis of Leadership" which appears in the annual report of the Alabama Council for Improving Leadership as presented by Prof. Walker J. Carroll, president and principal of Baldwin County Training School, Daphne, Ala.

Dr. Crockett writes: "Authoritarian leaders accomplish the work which they set out to do, but they destroy the morale of the group and create so much tension among their followers that they have been classified as undesirable leaders in a democratic society."

In contrast, he points out: 'Democratic leadership not only gets things done but in the leadership process it stimulates personal social growth. Democratic leadership is desirable and it is more congenial to human nature than any other type of leadership."

He tears the subject into parts so that the readers may see clearly the operations of the two general classifications of leadership. However, he apparently did not see any need for giving in flesh and blood examples of his picture of leaders.

It is important in these critical days, as in all trying times, that vital attention be paid to leadership. ACIL has performed no less service than getting this issue before a limited public. Leadership is needed in the South today, at this very hour, for the changeover. Let's call it leadership for desegregation or goodwill or responsible leadership.

Another group of leaders, the Frontiers of America which meets July 30-31 in Washington, D. C., seems to be concerned about the new change facing the rising and also the surviving leadership. It plans a panel discussion on "Techniques of School Integration.'

Unlike the "Institute on Educational Leadership" sponsored by ACIL at Alabama A. & M. College, Normal, a 10-day "Workshop on School Integration" held this month at Howard University, Washington, D. C. tackled the biggest problem facing "democratic leadership.... which gets things done." It was an interracial group. So was the program feature of the "Institute on Educational Leadership."

Novelist Ralph Ellison in his recent speech at Tuskegee Institute defined the new role of the teacher-leaders, it seems, when he observed "In this period of transition from segregated to non-segregated schools the Negro teachers' responsibility is to seriously explore those areas of American life which have been denied Negroes and evaluate them for the younger generation which will inherit an unsegregated way of American life. He must instill his students with the spirit of curiosity and encourage an attitude of aggressive social and political responsibility toward the total society."

ACIL in its works has provided materials for its members, collected and distributed information. It made available four of the May 17 school case decision. One could symbolize in this an awareness of the need of leadership for the change-over, it seems to me.

Leadership is education applied. All education is not formal. Schooling by itself is not education. Neither is postionship leadership. Leadership is often sponsored, sometimes sheltered, and at times unearthed. It sometimes come forward and in a few instances, is a creature of crisis. Elected leadership is not always natural leadership. And the idea of leaders being born is rejected in learned circles. One is born, they said with leadership tendencies on qualities which must be developed.

What do you do to tell that one is a successful leader?

Judge Denies Summary Judgement In Medical Center Project Case

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

U. S. Judge Seybourn H. Lynne last Friday Oct. 15, had under advisement a motion by lawyers for the Birmingham Housing Authority to dismi a NAACP-ponored legal attack upon the Medical Center Area Relocation Project.

He denied a motion by both sides for summary judgement. He suggested from the bench that he was inclined to grant the defense motion because of a technical defect in the complaint. However he said he could consider leaving the way open for amendment.

Atty. Constance Baker Motley of New York, a member of the national NAACP legal staff, after being introduced to the court by Atty. Peter A. Hall, local counsel for certain relocation area tenants and homeowners, urged the court to overrule the motion to dismiss.

In a brilliant courtroom performance, she defended the complaint, citing court decision after court decision in support of her position. She argued that a serious constitutional question was at stake and that the housing authority was violating the housing act, federal laws and the 14th amendment by its alleged policy of racial segregation and failure to relocate the owners in accordance with the redevelopment act.

Judge Lynne in his bench comment said he had 'grave doubt" that the case was 'ripe for decision" and that it appeared to him that the complaint was asking for "an advisory opinion course to take."

Atty. Motley insisted that the "case is ripe for judical action" because she asserted that the BHA had entered into a contract with the federal government, was clearing the area out and had begun condemnation proceedings. "Must they wait until some one backs up to their doors and throw them (tenants and homeowners) into the streets" before taking action?

"Separate but equal rights have never applied in the field of property rights," argued Mrs. Motely. She cited a long series of court decisions in support of her position. She also cited a federal law which has never been disturbed by the courts which gives Negro citizens "the same rights" for others in property and in housing.

In opposition to the position taken by Atty. Motley, BHA lawyers, Atty. S. R. Staerns and John Ansley, attacked the complaint, the class action feature and the "ripeness." Atty. Staerns who appeared to have had painful difficulty trying to pronounce the word "Negro," argued that the "separate but equal doctrine" does apply in this case.

He insisted that it was not shown in the complaint that an applyication or request was made for admittance to the all-white housing projects, that the owners had asked for assistance and that the plaintiffs had "no fear or danger of having to move." The complaint, he ndded in his attack, "is not clear at what it is pointing."

In her rebuttal, Atty. Motley says that the "burden is not on the tenants to apply but its the duty of the city to admit displaced tenants to vacancies in any housing project."

Judge Lynee said that he was reluctant to hear a case where one tried to "speculate" or forecast alleged injury that might result from an act.

This is ont of three different cases attacking alleged segregation in housing, challenging the adminstration of the housing, and seeking to test the constutionality of the redevelopment act as administered by BHA.

Apparently witnesses from both sides were on hand. BHA lawyers announced that they had them.

Among those present in the courtroom during the hearing who were identified as connected with the housing authority were B. W. Moore, who is working out of the branch relocation office; A. B. White, manager of Smithfield Court; Newton C. Ward, manager of Loveman Village, Mrs. Frances Rosser, manager of the relocation sub-office.

Other spectators included Mrs. Ruby Hurley, NAACP regional secretary; W. C. Patton, president of the Birmingham NAACP; Lewis Ford, a member of the Protective Property Owners Association; the Rev. T. L. Lane, minister of Union Bethel Independent Methodist Church.

As Publisher Tom Abernethy, continues to inject the race issue into his campaign for the governorship of Alabama on the Republican ticket, two important news items come to attention.

In New York City six religious leader September 6 signed a 'Fair Election Practices Declaration" which asks political candidates in the November 2 election to spurn religious and racial bias in their campaigns. This suggestion was forwarded to Leonard W. Hall, Republican National Committee Chairman and to Stephen P. Mitchell who holds a similar spot with the National Democratic Party.

Here is the text of the declaration:

With the free world looking to American democracy for leadership and inspiration in the struggle against totalitarianism all eyes are focused on our election campaigns. Nothing is healthier for self-government than outspoken political discussion, but nothing is more harmful to a self-governing people than confusion of the issues by base appeals to racial and religious bigotry.

"In the light of the preminent role which the United States is playing, it is incumbent upon us to prove that in our democracy men of all races, creeds and national origins participate in our government as free and equal brothers under God.

"We, therefore, urge all candidates to take all necessary measures to prevent any expression of racial or religious bias by their adherents and to condemn publicly and emphatically every occurence thereof.

"We urge all citizens to reject political arguments based on racial or religious prejudices and to rebuke those who make such appeals. We suggest that in every community a non-partisan and non-sectarian committee under take to keep a watchful eye on campaign activities and to call to the attention of political leaders any instances of appeals based on religious or racial prejudice.

"Let us make certain that our election campaigns are in every sense free and worthy of a nation founded on the principles of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God."

President Eisenhower and Vice-President Nixon this week made a plea to employer groups to use all of the available manpower without regard to artifical discriminations. The President strengthened his executive order banning hiring bias in contracts with the federal government this year.

In their joint appeal to labor unions and hiring groups, President Eisenhower and Vice-President Nixon stressed two points:

1. "The growing industrial might of this country requires the largest possible reserve of skilled manpower."

2. "In the world struggle for the minds of men, America's position of leadership makes it mandatory that we not be subject to the charge of racial prejudice which is being hurled at us every day by the Communists."

Commending the work of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, the President in a leter said: "Quietly but persistently the members of this committee have been at work, with heartening success, on employment problems which over the years have become charged with emotion and distorted by prejudice."

"The efforts will, I am sure," the president said, continue to bring far-reaching results of enduring value."

A former member of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee and a 1948 walkout delegate to the National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia.. Publisher Abernethey the Dixiecrat. is campaigning on emotional issues. The "States' Right" Republican gubernational nominee has been campaigning hard in the Black Belt. However he seems to disregard the fact that the Republican Party claims that it is the party of civil rights.

Instead of following the lead of President Eisenhower, leader of the Republican Party, with regard to the May 17 decision by the U. S Supreme Court in the school segregation cases, he seems to be doing just the opposite. Mr. Abernethy seems to be the policy orator of the Alabama Republican Party He talks two-party politics but not Republican principles True two-party politics must be based on one-standard citizenship it seems to me.

World 31a Birmingham Ala. Post

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

It has been about 19 years since the NAACP established the legal precedent that Negro students were entitled to training in higher education in the state supported schools. About seven years ago the association won the ruling from the top court that in higher education the doctrine of separate but equal was out. On May 17, 1954 the U. S. Supreme Court strengthened its previous rulings in the field of public education.

Birmingham Ala. World 11-12-54

Almost 19 years after winning for the Negro group the declaration of law giving them the privilege of attending the state-supported schools that precedent remains unimplemented in Alabama. In a way it has been nullified by Negro persons themselves.

Last year 129 Negro students, many of them the sons and daughters of prominent citizens, accepted Alabama's Jim Crow Scholarships. Of the 13 accredited school of nursing in this state (public and private) only one accepts Negro students.

Since this is the 100th anniversary of the YWCA I might as well pull a bit of its history in at this point to give drama to the situation. Florence Nightingale in 1855 set up the "YW" as a residence for nurses returning home from the Crimean War. With that kind of history and with the legal precedents won by the NAACP for opening up the public educational institutions to all could one believe that in Alabama Negro women would permit the doors of the nurse training schools supported by taxes to remain closed to Negro girls?

In an interesting article in the [illegible] of America, [illegible] Catholic Weekly Review, [illegible] Davis discussing the subject, "Are Too Many Going to College?", says "For the next few years there will be a shortage of engineers, scientists, school teachers, doctors and nurses."

Yet in Birmingham a Negro person is barred from studying at the tax-supported Medical Center. A Negro dentist who would like to study under some of the experts giving advise on fluoridation at the Dental College would be barred unless he used the NAACP-designed legal key for opening the door. This is one of the ideas I hurled into the controversy when the tooth-decay issue was raging. That the racial barriers stand means that of big-name leaders have done little positively to demolish these walls.

Davis in his article also points out: "Our system of public education, more and more powerfully supported each year by our State teachers colleges and the growing National Education Association, was becoming a national symbol of man's right to educational opportunity in a free society." He was trying, however, the mounting interest in education in connection with the "warning against a surplus of intellectuals." He rejects the doctrine of "surplus of graduates."

He adds: "Education is its own reward, and society expects her college trained men and women to have such spiritual and intellectual resources that they can weather periods of economic stress without immediately regarding themselves as part of a proletariat of embittered intellectuals."

Training is the gateway to jobs. Let's look at the situation on a district-by-district basis of training opportunities for Negro persons.

In the First Congregational District there are three accredited schools of nursing and the all-white State Vocational Training School. All are located at Mobile. However, some of the nurse training school are private.

The Second Congregational District has one nurse-training school (at Montgomery), all-white Troy State Teachers College, Troy and all-Negro Alabama State College at Montgomery.

In the Third District you find all-white A. P. I. (Auburn) in Lee County, the all-Negro nurse-training school at Tuskegee and the all-white State Vocational Trade School Napier Field, Dothan.

The Fourth District has nurse-training schools at Anniston and Sylacauge, all-white Jacksonville State Teachers College in Calhoun County and the Alabama Institute for Deaf and Blind at Talladega.

In the fifth district there is a nurse training school and the Alabama School of Trades at Gadsden. Both are all-white.

In the Sixth district are two nurse training schools, Livingston State Teachers College, Sumter County; the State College for Women, Shelby County; University of Alabama and the State Vocational Trade School, Tuscaloosa. All of these are all-white.

The Seventh Congregational District has no tax-supported institutions of higher education.

In the Eighth District are all-Negro Alabama A. and M. College, all-white Florence State College, Lawerence County; the all-white State Vocational Trade School at Decatur.

In the Ninth District you have four nurse schools, all-white Alabama Vocational School for Girls, the all-Negro State Vocational Trade School and the all-white Medical Center.

This is a multiple observance of weeks, Omega Psi Phi Fraternity's Achievement Week, American Education Week and National Book Week, to name three. All three of these weeks seem to have something in common. A book is the symbol of both education and achievement.

Birmingham Ala.

Recently book reviewers were praising Arnold Toynbee's 10-volume "A Study of History." One reviewer observed "Incidentally, Toynbee foresees the imminent unification of the world as a consequence of our very recent technical and politcal revolutions. The tasks, says he, is to keep our society spiritually vigorous and politically adaptable, so that we become the master of this unification rather than its victims."

Birm. 11-9-54

This week-end, two contemporary scholars who are among the social mechanics trying to help, "keep our society spiritually vigorous and politically adaptable" are scheduled to deliver messages in Birmingham. One is Dr. Ira de A. Reid, sociologist of Haverford College in Pennsylvania and the other is Dr. Charles W. Orr, director of instruction at Alabama A. and M. College. Both are Ph. Ds.

The Virginia-born Dr. Reid is scheduled to speak at the second annual forum sponsored by the Jefferson County Education Association Friday night at Sixteenth Street Baptist Church. The program obviously is the peak event in the association's celebration of American Education Week. Dr. Orr is scheduled to speak at the climax feature of Omega's Achievement Week at 11 o'clock Sunday morning at First Congregational Christian Church.

Both of the triple-degree scholars are Southern born. Dr. Orr breathed to being in Mississippi. Dr. Reid is a teacher in an interracial college and Dr. Orr is a teacher in an all-Negro college. Dr. Reid is an authority on desegregation. Dr. Orr is an authority in the field of education. Public education is the vehicle for preserving democracy and desegregation is the machinery for strengthening democracy.

Earning a Ph. D. in a way is achieving Years ago the Negro group could boast of only a handful of scholars with three-decked degree. There are now over 19 Alabama-born Ph. Ds.

Among them are Dr. Percy Julian (also Phi Beta Kappa man and industrial chemist); Dr. Victor Tulane, Dr. C. T. Simpson, Dr. T. A. Love, Dr. J. Garrick Hardy, Dr. B. F. Smith (my old classmate at Morehouse College); Dr. J. Van Catledge, Dr. Alfred Nixon, all born in Montgomery; Dr. Bertram Wilbur Doyle (presiding bishop of the Seventh Episcopal District of the C. M. E. Church); Dr. R. C. Hatch, Dr. Reva Allman, Dr. Herman Long. Dr. J. F. Drake, president of Alabama A. and M. College; Dr. Charles Nilon, Dr. N. B. Rivers; Dr. A. Heninburg, Dr. Augustus Blanks, Dr. James Payne and Mrs. Zelia Stephens Evans.

Some of those mentioned are local products and of recent three-depth crowning. Others have made distinguished contributions in their specialized fields of learning. Five or more at one time attended public schools in the Jefferson County area.

In spite of inferior schools and other educational barriers, economic restrictions based on bigotry, differential pay scales, job denials and heart-breaking humiliations, members of the Negro group seem to break-through. A white person can study for the Ph. D. degree at the University of Alabama, a white chemist can get job in industrial research, but a Negro who is a full American by every measurement. is denied such opportunites in Alabama.

Yet the fault is not all on one side The NAACP has established the precedent by which any person with qualifications may battle his way into any upper-level branch of public education in this state which presently has racial bars. But last year 129 students, among them sons and daughters of respectable leaders of the finest polish and highest social rank, accepted Jim Crow Scholarships and thereby assisted in tightening the bars which hold the group down.

In this ever-toughening fight for first-class citizenship is often found those who become dispirited. But it should be kept in mind that struggle is often the mother of strides.

Norman Cousin in an essay on Dr. Schweitzer who built a hospital in French Equatorial Africa observed: "The tragedy of life is in what dies inside a man while he lives - the death of genuine feeling, the death of inspired response, the death of the awareness that makes it possible to feel the pain or the glory of other men in oneself. Schweitzer's aim is not to dazzle an age but to awaken it, to make it comprehend that moral splendor is part of the gift of life, and that each man has unlimited strength to feel human oneness and act upon it. He has proved that although a man has no jurisdiction over the fact of his existence, he can hold command over the meaning of existence for him. Thus, no man need death: he need fear only that he may die without having known his greatest power - the power of his free will to give his life for others."

THE TIP-OFF

In the interest of discussion on the various plans suggested for meeting soundly and decently the implications and chillenges of the May 17 United States Supreme Court decision which declares segregated schools unconstitutional, the text of a statement by the 'Conference on Public School Integration in Maryland." The statement was adopted June 19, 1954. Here it is:

"The Supreme Court of the United States has rendered the decision that segregation in public education is in violation of our national constitution. The principals, supervisors and presidents of Negro schools in Maryland recognize that no other decision was possible if the enduring and universal principles enunciated in our constitution were followed to the ultimate. And because we believe that this is the beginning of a new era of human relations in this state, citizens of Maryland have had their faith and belief in democracy strengthened. Each in his own way, Negro and white, will now have the opportunity to contribute to the good of society in terms of individual qualifications."

"We recognize that the transfer from a dual system to a democratically organized system may give rise to many problems of adjustment. This conference goes on record as pledging Negro educational leaders to unstinted effort to make democracy work at this time. We believe that the leaders represented at this conference wil take immediate steps to prepare the general public ,teachers, administrators and pupils for integrated schools. We believe, further, that all the other educational leaders of the state will want us to stand shoulder to shoulder with them in a cooperative effort to meet this situation in a democratic way. We ask only an opportunity to serve the common good."

This conference commends the educational leaders of our state for the forthrigh position taken looking toward implementation of the Court's decision."

"We commend the educational leaders of Baltimore City for their immediate implementation of the Supreme Court's decision. We likewise commend the State Superintendent of Schools and the State Board of Education for the unequivocal statement of intent to conform to the mandate of the Supreme Court."

"Excerpts from the statement of the State Superintendent and the State Board of Education follow."

"The Supreme Court of the land has spoken. It is the duty and responsibility of the State Board of Education to do all within its power to work out the problem 'seemingly and in order" and in such manner that the rights and privileges of no individual are impaired by arbitrary or capricious methods."

"The detailed problem in respect to implementing the decision of the Supreme Court will rest primarily upon the local boards of education. The problems involved in any program of integration will vary among the different school systems of State, but we are confident that they will be solved in a fair, decent, and legal manner and with good common sense. Furthermore, we are confident that the local school boards, the local school officials, and the parents will settle this problem without resorting to chicanery or devious methods and with due regard for the rights of all parties concerned. Any program of implementation will be based upon professional and human considerations and not with coercive designs or methods. The public school system of Maryland has always been known for its high professional attitude and for its unbiased and unprejudiced treatment of all children.

"The role of the State Board of Education is not to set the detailed pattern of operation but to take an official position that the decision will be implemented with fairness and justice to all, and with due regard for the professional aspects of the program. Further its responsibility is to act in a general overall supervisory nature to insure that standard, equitable practices are followed throughout the State.

"In view of expressed positions of the highest governing boards in the public schools of the State, this conference enunciates several assumptions which we believe will underly any and all decisions made in any and all educational subdivisions of the state."

"1. We assume the Board of Education of each county will adopt and announce a policy with respect to the integration of public schools which will make clear the determination that the schools shall be organized and administered without regard to race of pupils, teachers and administrative officers and non teaching personnel."

2. We assume and believe that Negro citizens will be called to committee work designed to lay plans for the integration of schools. We believe that Negro leaders should participate in planning from the outset and to assist in formulating calm, logical approaches which may be made at this time."

"3. We assume that in each county specific plans will be made for preparing teachers and administrative personnel, both white and Negro, for integrated schools. We believe there are many negative factors, emotional and attitudinal which can be eliminated through careful planning and preparation."

"4. We assume that there will be specific plans for preparing pupils, both Negro and white, for integrated schools. Childen reflect in their personalities the mores of the community in which they live. Planning and preparation will pay large dividends in Americanism."

"5. The school children are but one population of many concerned with this problem. We assume that each county will make specific plans to enlist the cooperation of parents, community leaders and community agencies, both Negro and white, in the development of positive attitudes for integrated schools."

The June issue of 'Steel Labor,' organ of the United Steelworkers of America (CIO), carries a story of a one-day conference on human relations conducted in Birmingham in which 'Some [illegible] leaders from USA local unions participated.'

The conference, sponsored by the United Steelworkers District 38 discussed the 'positive side of human relations—the posibilities as well as the problems.' It was 'led by a team of specialists from the union's headquarters in Pittsburgh in conjunction with a panel of well-qualified speakers,' according to the publication.

Francis C. Shane, secretary of the Steelworkers' Committee on Civil Rights, served as permanent chairman of the conference. He was introduced by District Director R. E. Farr.

Mr. Shane reminded the union leaders, according to Steel Labor that 'our union can remain strong and effective only if we do not let ourselves be divided by misunderstanding that spring from prejudice and the' state that breeds on discrimination.'

Then a Baptist minister, Rev. L. B. Moseley, who was born in Selma, Alabama, but currently lives in Pittsburgh, pointed out, according to the publication, 'It's impossible to believe in the broad current of truth in the Bible and still discriminate against any man, any where in the world, no matter what his race, color or creed. How can anybody look at Jesus Christ and still discriminate against his fellow man?"

Herbert Hill, of New York, NAACP labor secretary, told the conference according to 'Steel Labor,' that 'The key to a more democratic life for all rests in democratic trade unionism.'

Judge Homer S. Brown of Pittsburgh told the group, the publication said that 'There will be no peace anywhere unit there is respect to one man for another'

This human relations conference was interracial in its approach. It was a workshop on the meaning of civil rights which are no more than according to others, the dignity and respect to human mutuality. Here were wage-earners seeking to help themselves by understanding the other fellow whose skin might be a different hue, whose bringing up not the same. Understanding is the central force of good will.

The Joint Labor Committee has projected the functionality of the human relations program of organized labor into frontier. Labor is in a strategic position to perform a sound educational job on human relations in the classroom as it has on the job. It has demonstrated its ability as an adult educational force in the field of politics and economics

It could have been further along the way in some of the Southern states had there been better rank-and-file leadership, more interest shown by the lay leaders in issues and programs as they came up in their local meetings. Civic and business leaders often passed up the opportunity to examine and observe labor's community service program.

Yet organized labor is far out front ahead of some other occupational groups. Teachers for instances in some states are passing up the opportunity to hold interracial meetings to study the coming changover. Business men who ought to be in the lead in holding interracial groups to acquaint themselves with the new things in the making are letting this slide.

Here is the article from the Joint Labor Committee:

LABOR HAS THE KNOW-HOW

'The recent Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the schools is being widely hailed as a historic and revoluntionary event. Yet, not too many of us realize that this decision itself is substantially the result of a silent revolution that has been going on in the lives of millions of Americans in thousands of communities for the past 70 years.'

'Back in the 1880's when American labor started to organize into union and to set up a nation-wide federation, one of the first principles established by this pioneer group was the fact that equality, dignity and human welfare are rights to which all men and women—regardless of race, creed or national origin—are entitled. The decades that followed were one long, patient and resolute campaign to give every American an equal chance. One industry after another slowly gave way in the face of organized labor's constant onslaught against inequality and discrimination.'

'The labor movement had many obstacles to overcome. It had to contend with the habits, customs and attitudes of the community which was often hostile to labor. It had to overcome the obstinacy of employers who all too often viciously exploited racial antagonisms as a means of destroying unions. It fought fear and ignorance within its own ranks. It did all of this around the bargaining table, at the employment gate, at the bench, in the factory locker room, in the union hall, in its press and at annual conventions. And in the process it gained a wealth of practical experience in human relations second to no other group in the American community.'

'Today the labor movement is a living demonstration that human beings can work and think and plan together in dignity and equality regardless of creed or color. Of course, someone could well remind us that here and there a union local acts in a manner inconsistent with the policy of organized labor. While this cannot be denied, it remains a fact, however, that the overwhelming majority of workers in the AFL and CIO have over the years helped change the face of America by demonstrating that people of different racial and religious backgrounds can work together. The major exceptions to this rule are in the areas where organied labor has not penetrated to any extent—among white collar and professional workers.'

'And now the Supreme Court has decreed that our boys and girls should learn together as they will work together when they grow up. The Court is cautious; it knows that it deals with a complex and deep-rooted pattern of community behavior. But the Court can well take heart and proceed with firmness and courage. For there are millions of people in nearly every community who have learned how to solve this problem with tact, know-how and patient education. In the field of human relations labor is indeed America's outstanding pioneer and leader. Our shirt-sleeve diplomats have shown the way before and can do it again—in education as in the shops and factories. Our communities would do well to make use of this know-how.'

As Publisher Tom Abernethy, continues to inject the race issue into his campaign for the governorship of Alabama on the Republican ticket, two important news items come to attention.

In New York City six religious leader September 6 signed a 'Fair Election Practices Declaration" which asks political candidates in the November 2 election to spurn religious and racial bias in their campaigns. This suggestion was forwarded to Leonard W. Hall, Republican National Committee Chairman and to Stephen P. Mitchell who holds a similar spot with the National Democratic Party.

Here is the text of the declaration:

With the free world looking to American democracy for leadership and inspiration in the struggle against totalitarianism all eyes are focused on our election campaigns. Nothing is healthier for self-government than outspoken political discussion, but nothing is more harmful to a self-governing people than confusion of the issues by base appeals to racial and religious bigotry.

"In the light of the preminent role which the United States is playing, it is incumbent upon us to prove that in our democracy men of all races, creeds and national origins participate in our government as free and equal brothers under God.

"We, therefore, urge all candidates to take all necessary measures to prevent any expression of racial or religious bias by their adherents and to condemn publicly and emphatically every occurence thereof.

"We urge all citizens to reject political arguments based on racial or religious prejudices and to rebuke those who make such appeals. We suggest that in every community a non-partisan and non-sectarian committee under take to keep a watchful eye on campaign activities and to call to the attention of political leaders any instances of appeals based on religious or racial prejudice.

"Let us make certain that our election campaigns are in every sense free and worthy of a nation founded on the principles of the brotherhood of man and the Fatherhood of God."

President Eisenhower and Vice-President Nixon this week made a plea to employer groups to use all of the available manpower without regard to artifical discriminations. The Presilent strenghtened his executive order banning hiring bias in contracts with the federal government this year.

In their joint appeal to labor unions and hiring groups, President Eisenhower and Vice-President Nixon stressed two points:

1. "The growing industrial might of this country requires the largest possible reserve of skilled manpower."

2. "In the world struggle for the minds of men, America's position of leadership makes it mandatory that we not be subject to the charge of racial prejudice which is being hurled at us every day by the Communists."

Commending the work of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, the President in a leter said: "Quietly but persistently the members of this committee have been at work, with heartening success, on employment problems which over the years have become charged with emotion and distorted by prejudice."

"The efforts will, I am sure," the president said, continue to bring far-reaching results of enduring value."

A former member of the Alabama Democratic Executive Committee and a 1948 walkout delegate to the National Democratic Convention in Philadelphia, Publisher Abernethey, the Dixiecrat, is campaigning on emotional issues. The "States' Right" Republican gubernational nominee has been campaigning hard in the Black Belt. However he seems to disregard the fact that the Republican Party claims that it is the party of civil rights.

Instead of following the lead of President Eisenhower, leader of the Republican Party, with regard to the May 17 decision by the U. S. Supreme Court in the school segregation cases, he seems to be doing just the opposite. Mr. Abernethy seems to be the policy orator of the Alabama Republican Party. He talks two-party politics but not Republican principles. True two-party politics must be based on one-standard citizenship it seems to me.

Because the school desegregation document mailed by the Montgomery Branch NAACP to Dr. C. M. Dannelly, superintendent of the Montgomery County Board of Education, contains some interesting ideas, I am passing it on to you.

In a cover letter E. D. Nixon, chairman of the Branch's educational committee, saidthat around the middle of September the Montgomery N. A. A. C. P "filed -a petition" with the superintendent "requesting an audience" to discuss school desegregation.

Birmingham, Ala.

He suggested that "in the light of these facts" the Branch had "drawn up" a "set of resolutions" which he thought represented "the opinions of the citizenry of Montgomery."

Mr. Nixon, a former president of the Alabama State Conference of NAACP Branches, asserted in his letter: "We are ready and willing to work with you in making and facilitating plans for compliance with the historic (May 17) decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is our desire that this can be done with as little friction as possible, and that every effort will be put forth to the end that the Democratic process will be followed in achieving the full effect of this decision."

Fri. 11-5-54

Here is that desegregation document:

"We the undersigned representatives of the Citizenry of Montgomery beg to submit our observations relative to Educational Opportunities for all pupils of school age. It is the opinion of this group that no child should be denied an opportunity to secure the training and experiences which will fit him to live competently in a democratic society. For over ninety years we have tried a dual system which has proved to be woefully inadequate. Repeated requests for adequate school facilities have been ignored or failed to get the desired consideration in improving the schools which would insure proper education for many of the children."

"In the allocation of money a large segment of the pupils attending school has been compelled to use the most inadequate buildings with little or none of the facilities needed to make for comfortable learning. They have often been compelled to walk long distances to school and in many cases the schools were poorly heated, lighted and maintained in a very unsanitary condition."

"Now that the Supreme Court of the United States has ruled that separate schools are contrary to the provision of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and that separate School building likewise offend this provision, we are convinced that immediate steps should be taken to comply with this historic decision."

"To meet the mandate of the Decision of the Supreme Court of the United States every effort should be made. Therefore we are offering the following:

"1. That every citizen of Montgomery County should be appraised of this decision and urged to comply forthwith;

"2. That the leaders — those elected to public office or appointed, should bend every effort and the influence of their office to educate and direct the people in accepting the decision in good faith. Especially do we feel that school Boards, Administrators and teachers should take the lead in this development of human relations;

"3. That the school, of all institutions, can ill afford to lead and formulate public opinion contrary to the Supreme law of the land;

"4. That efforts on the part of any group to flaunt the laws of the land; to attempt to subvert it by any maneuver is un-American and un-Christian;

"5. That pronouncements hostile to the ruling of the Supreme Court tend to instill disrespect for the law and encourage mob violence and anarchy;

"6. That we call upon this Board to utilize every organization — Luncheon Clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, Civic and religious Organizations, to support this change in our school policy so that the change from the dual system of education to unitary system can be achieved with the least friction and disturbance.

"7. That the Announcement by the Board of Duplicating facilities is not feasible and a waste of the taxpayers' money. The school gerrymandering for the sole purpose of segregation will be opposed by this group and every resource at our disposal will be used to prevent the same;

"8. That proposed school building should follow needs rather than racial segregation;

"9. That our experience with segregated schools has convinced us that equality of education opportunity is impossible. Therefore we insist on school experiences which leave no doubt as to the fact that each child is getting the same opportunities as every other child;

"10. That hundreds of children are in the streets during school hours in spite of the fact that we have on the Statute books a compulsory School attendance law;

"11. That we feel it unnecessary to enumerate the shortcoming of those public school serving Negro children. The course of study, Laboratory facilities, Auditoriums, Locations, Floors, Schoolgrounds, and safety of the pupils are too well known to every citizen of this city;

"12. That the School Officials should take the lead in calling groups of citizens composed of both races to sit down and formulate plans for complying with the decision of the Supreme Court.

"13. Finally, the position we take here will increase or decrease the influence of the United States in its role of world leadership and make us hypocrits or the champions of democracy and Christianity.

There we submit our case to you with every hope and assurance that you will lend your influence to achieve the integration which will make us one United in the cause of freedom. No longer can we sit supinely by and justify our acts on tradition and habits or custom. We live in juridicial society based on the principles that we shall be governed by laws and not by men. No human desired can transcend the law of the land. We are all bound by its command. We achieve justice under it and make our most lasting achievement by its direction.

Signed: E. D. NIXON, Chairman, NAACP Educational Committee.

The letter-writer from Mobile who allegedly sent his ideas to the Talladega candidate for the governorship perhaps could have made better use of his pen by writing to some of the racially denied voters in Wilcox County urging them to register to vote. It is hard to see how any alleged leader could think of accomplishing anything by expressing his feelings to an unreconstructed Dixiecrat. It is not a good enough explanation to say that he wrote as a private citizen while permitting his identification with an organization.

Birmingham, Ala.

Sun. 11-2-54

Birmingham and Mobile which boast the most powerful NAACP leadership have not announced any school desegregation action Perhaps no other city in the South can boast as many big NAACP-identified leaders as Birmingham. This is what will make the election of officers interesting. Birmingham is the only one of the three major cities in Alabama without Negro policemen. Birmingham has an interracial committee, top political action leaders, powerful money-bag leaders yet they do not seem to get much done.

******

Lester B. Granger, executive director of the National Urban League observed: "In the race between white and blue-collar workers, the blue-collars (wage earners) have forged to the front recently ..... Blue-collar workers no waverage $69.24 a week: white collar workers average $66.63." He was trying to point out the "ever-widening improvements in industrial employment" brought on by trade unions. White-collar workers are not as well organized.

He adds: "The unions are strong in the industrial field; usually weak- or non-existent in the white collar field."

A recent quotation published in this column was gobbled. Here is it from Alan Paton's article in Collier's for Oct. 29: "To me there is one inescapable implication of the end of segregation. For it by maintaining segregation America was declaring that she was a white nation with some colored citizens, then by removing segregation she is declaring something else. If a man with one drop of colored blood is a colored man, then what is a nation with one colored citizen?"

******

This is election day. What a great privilege it is to be a voter. In Lowndes County and Wilcox County, both with more Negro than white persons, no Negro is able to vote.

In other sections of this newspaper today are opinions and ideas on the controversial fluoridation issue. Most of those who devote themselves to the discussion seem to consider only the scientific issues involved.

But there are economic and political issues involved. The cost-factor is being minimized. Water rates in this city are already painfully high. Job opportunities are restricted for members of the Negro group in the water supply industry. There isn't a single Negro meter reader, for instance in the city.

For me the fluoridation issues provides me with an opportunity to protest against these job restrictions. Our political action leaders have apparently failed to take this into account. What good is the ballot if you cannot use it to try to correct long-standing economic wrongs and injustices?

Birm. 10-29-56

No matter how many new jobs that would be created by the treatment of our drinking water supply the Negro worker is not likely to move up the employment scale.

There is not a single member of the Negro group on the Water Works Board.

Birmingham Ala.

It seems to me that with better health should also be tied up the problem of better job opportunities. Are we to wait until our ballot is useless before we use it for our advancement?

I have read material on both sides of the issue. I have read the endorsements. The claims made by those who favor fortifying our water are attractive. Here again, however, is the handy use being made of the little children. But when they grow up, and are members of the Negro group, where can they work?

It matters not what progressive label is placed on the fluoridation issue and how much is made of other measures for public good that were blindly fought, maybe, I cannot go along with the proposal when on the other side—the job side—the record in the health services, in municipal water, in health education, in employment opportunities, is just the opposite.

But the promoters of the proposal do not address themselves to this side of the question at all. They tell us not to fall for the propaganda on those who oppose fluoridation. I am not falling for the claims made by either side. The pivotal issue with me is the total welfare of all.

As it now stands the fluoridation issue is controversial. It is true that against it are some of those who usually oppose just about any kind of change. Against this measure are some of those who have bitterly fought every advancement proposal suggested for the benefit of the Negro group. For varying reasons persons are for and against the proposal.

But the great and inspiring thing is to have a vote to cast as you please on November 2. In this remarkable country you can think what you want to and vote as you desire. Those who vote their honest convictions on all of the issues before the voters will serve democracy as first-class citizens, it seems to me.

As we rode into Dallas County for the funeral service of the late Dr. [illegible] Vivian Jemison, 81 year old [illegible] Belter and titular leader of the 300,000 Negro-identified Baptists of Alabama, toughts drizzled through my mind of what I had heard of the improvements in public education in Dallas County. I was thinking that Payne College had passed away from Selma to Birmingham and old Knox Academy had quit operating. Selma University had weathered the storm, although weekend. In the heydey of Negro leadership in Alabama, before the 1901 debacle when political suffrage was stripped from Negro citizens, privately-sponsored education flourished in this city.

There were Dr. Sandy Ray in the automobile, a Brooklyn native whom I met during the Depression Days at Morehouse College, Dr. W. H. Brazeale of Washington, D. C., president of the National Sunday School and B. T. U. Congress, Mrs. [illegible] Bethell, secretary of the Congress and city school principal, and the Rev. Willie Vaughn, pastor of Tabernacle Baptist Church, and general arrangements chairman for the session to be held June 21-27 in Birmingham, in whose car we were riding. It was my first meeting with this militant civil rights leader and world traveler.

Our conversation dealt with friendships, and the country-side where we saw cattle grazing, marvelled at the beauty of the scenery and the perfectness of the weather. We passed the Black Belt of scenery, but not of people. As the miles rolled on I kept thinking of the more decent-minded people who are sincerely interested in seeing improvements in race-related public education, not segregation, had suggested that I look at Hudson High School in Selma. We passed the white high school and later Hudson from a ride-by. While an improvement, it pales with the white high school. Selma has approximaately an equal distribution of white and Negro persons.

Recent figures show that in Dallas County there are 36,722 Negro citizens and 19,774 white citizens. There are 18,145 Negro citizens in this county of voting age with only 112 qualified voters, according to the Negro Vote Survey made by Prof. J. E. Pierce of Alabama State College. Dallas has 12,597 white citizens of voting age, although I do not have handy the number of white voters.

An educational survey conducted by the Alabama State Department of Education reveals that some $5,327,500 is needed bring the Negro-enrolling public schools in Dallas County up to acceptable standards while only $769,500 is needed for the schools for similiar purposes.

One has to consider the life and works of Dr. Jemison against this awful background to understand his services. When he was nine years old, he had to walk seven miles to school at Loveless Quarters, Loveless Beat, Perry County, Ala. He was 16 when he attended Lincoln Normal at Marion, having to walk 15 miles. This school haas now matured into what is Alabama State College at Montgomery.

At Selma University Dr. Jemison earned the B. D. degree in 1904. The university bestowed the D. D. degree upon him in 1915 and honored him with the L. L. D. degree in 1937.

When Dr. Jemison ascended to the presidency of the National Baptist Convention, U. S. A., Inc., which represents and estimated 4,445,605 Negro-affiliated Baptists, one of his first programs was designed to provide more scholarships at the National Baptist Seminary at Nashville.

In one of his presidential messages to the NBC messengers he observed that the "Negro preachers are the freest in the world." He pointed out that "Negro preachers are not bound by the cord of prejudice and the fearfulness of their jobs because of telling the truth." Yet in the Alabama Black Belt where located the vast Negro population is there any evidence of "the freest" preachers "telling the truth" about conditions, bringing light, cheer and goodwill?

In his 1948 convention message in Dallas, Tex., Dr Jemison said: "We want our ourselves, our wives and our children everything that any other man wants for himself and his children. We do not want anything which does not belong to us as human beings."

Those who lack words of their own can pick up those of Dr. Jemison to answer any who ask, "what do your people want?"

Until something is done to retrieve the full right of all qualified persons to vote in the Black Belt, Alabama will drag behind, watch its resources drained off and let its human talent sour and ruin. Doing this should be the challenge of the Baptist leadership in this state. Dr. Jemison has left behind the inspirational words to spur them on.

In two installments, I am presenting an essay by Prof. N. W. Walton of Alabama State College whih was prepared as a Negro History Week feature. It seems to fit in with the current scholarship at work to determine the constitutional status of the Negro-identified American citizens and the aspirations of this group. Here is installment 1.

It is significant that the Negro himself in his search for recognition and leadership cast the die for segregation. In the churches, schools, and lodges, the Negroes were the first to pull away from the whites. And he did it on his own volition. In the school it began in Boston in 1798. The record shows that the Negroes of Boston asked for a separate school, but the whites refused. Then the Negroes started a school in the basement of the newly constructed African Baptist church. They hired two white teachers from Harvard and maintained, in fact, a Negro school against the will of the city.

In 1815 Abiel Smith, a sympathizer of the school, died and left the school $4,000. A few years later the city gave aid to the school and the Smith Grammer School, a Negro school, was operating. Meanwhile the Boston Negroes had been growing to political maturity and began to fight against the separate school system. Benjamin Roberts a militant Negro, brought suit against the city, for the admission of his daughter Sarah to a white school. He charged Sarah passed five good primary schools every morning enroute to the inferior Negro school. Charles Summer fought the case and he put up a good fight. He argued "the equality of men before the law." "Birth does not differ from birth." The city must give all inhabitants equal privileges for the education of their children.

Chief Justice Shaw expressed the opinion "that all individuals did not possess the same legal rights." Well-what he said stripped of its rhetoric set forth two contradictory propositions which were expressed by that favored class, the pigs of George Orwell's novel "Animal Farm." It states "All animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others." This laid the ground work for the doctrine of "separate but equal."

In 1896, in the case of Plessy VS. Ferguson the court turned to Shaw's opinion as a leading precedent for the validity of state legislation which required segregation of the whites and colored races where ever they were brought together. The Plessy case then became the leading authority of the constitutionality of the Seperate but Equal doctrine.

Thus by 1900 the civil rights campaign was at a standstill. Mississippi, South Carolina, and Louisiana had constitutions which defranchised the Negro. There was a general feeling among the white leaders, of laissie faire toward the Negro problem. Race riots were everywhere. The Negro decided he must hlp himself if he were to advance.

The violence that spread through out the country around the turn of the century gave rise to the Niagara movement, a Negro organization of protest. About the same time some liberal whites started the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Dr. W. B. DuBose served on the executive committee of the original organization as chairman of the Publicity and Research Committee. This organization soon found out that the most effective way to secure civil rights was through the courts. Thus, down through the year the major victories in civil rights for the Negroes have been won through the courts. In the case Guinn VS. United States, the supreme court declared the grand father clauses of the Oklahoma constitution a violation of the Federal Constitution. In Smith VS. Allright, the primaries of the South were opened to Negroes. Advancement was made for better living conditions for Negroes when the courts declared in Buchanan VS. Warley that Negroes could move in city blocks which were predominantly white blocks. Down through the years in the cases Gaines VS. Missouri and Sweatt VS Pamter, the Negro strides toward more complete civil rights in education. Moreover, the Henderson case destroyed the second most talked about curtain of the 20th century. The degrading green curtain which separated the colored and white passengers throughout the South was moved, leaving only the famous iron curtain to reign supreme.

It seems that in the three centuriest that the Negro has been a part of the evolving American civilization he has been compelled to live in two worlds which are commonly called the Negro world and the other larger world. In his search for leadership, self-expression and recognition he has come to love his world. He has his own churches, schools, newspapers, in fact a complete Negro life. The Negro child is born to a Negro mother and father. He attends a Negro school, grows up and marries a Negro. When he needs spiritual uplifts he goes to a Negro church, and when he is ill he goes to a Negro doctor. When he dies, his funeral is preached by a Negro minister and he is buried in a Negro cemetery. It is indeed a Negro world.

TALLADEGA, Ala. -(SNS)- It's grand to be the guest of the Press Club of Talladega College during the observance of National Negro Newspaper Week.

Such was my pleasure Tuesday, March 16. The kind invitation had come through Miss Lou Virginia Graves, former president of the club but lattered succeeded by Miss Andrews Hawkins. Miss Graves was away from the campus practice teaching at the time of my visit.

Arriving on the campus by foot (I did this because I wanted to walk through the City of Talladega and pick up conversation from the townspeople), I went to the publicity office which is under the supervision of Miss Peggie Montgomery, also an instructor in English. From there I went on a stroll of the campus and almost was late for chapel because of a bull session in the College Grill on the subject of the Negro-produced newspaper, its defects, alleged sensationalist and alleged failure to present international news.

These things are presented because they represent the typical criticisms one rams into when he hits the college campus and elbows with the intellectuals who perhaps hardly find the time to read and to know the Negro-directed press. The newspaper seeks to be newsy rather than literary. Its prime function is news and often the setting in which the Negro person makes news is of itself sensational.

The Negro-owned press has a mission of not only presenting news about and of interest to the Negro group but of battling for his acceptance as a full and equal American citizen. When the Negro person is shorn of his rights in a democracy and fatally denied his rights and these outrages presented in bold display there is a tendency of the enemies of the black man to call this sensationalism.

Talladega College, like a number of other church-related, Negro-directed liberal arts colleges, has contributed outstanding graduates to the Negro-promoted press. Off hand I can list such double-jointed journalists as John McCray of the Lighthouse and Informer, Columbia, S. C. and C. C. Dejoie of the Louisana Weekly, New Orleans, La. come to mind. The life and works of Editor McCray should be required research of Talladega students who are working in the social sciences.

Dr. Rayford W. Logan in his recently-off-thepress book, "The Negro in American Life and Thought (The Nadir 1877-1901), published by The Dial Press, Inc., New York, devotes two chapters to the treatment of the Negro group in the Northern press (white) and the portrayal of this group in the literary magazines. Those who read this book will likely see how the enemies of Negro advancement distorted the news about the Negro group and maliciously misrepresented their cause. The charge of sensationalism falsely leveled against the Negro press hardly originated among Negro students but was picked up by them unconsciously from hostile but unsuspected sources. This charge of sensationalism was obviously designed to weak the Negro-interest press because it was loud, if often crude, in the presentation of the just claims of the group it came into being to serve, slug for, and speak for. Truth is often sensational in the company of lies.

When John B. Russwurm's "Freedom's Journal" first appeared March 17, 1827 ,it said, "The civil rights of a people being the greatest voice, it shall ever be our duty to vindidicate our brethern, when oppressed; and to la ythe case before the public." That is essential the task of the Negro-assisting press of today and of tomorrow, if need be.

One of the delegates to the Alabama Constitutional Convention of 1867 was John Caraway, editor of the Negro-produced Mobile Nationalist of Mobile, Ala. This newspaper carried on the same cry for freedom as did Russwurm's "Freedom Journal." Since its beginning there have been varying efforts to shackle and silence the Negro-inspired press.

At the chapel program sponsored by the Press Club, I was introduced by Miss Iola Taylor of Bessemer, Ala., who is a sophomore. After dinner, the group had a discussion meeting at which we went over a number of questions about both the campus press and the commercial press. The students reflected a sincere interest in the newspaper and flung in my direction many question on which I gave a point of view. They were more inquisitive than challenging. This was in contrast to the press workshop I attended at Southern University last March.

Back in the community I chatted with R. E. Strickland, the under taker and Rev. O. W. Holmes, minister. Talladega Co. is considering setting up 2 all-Negro boxes to be manned by Negro leaders. I am not clear on the plan and for that reason I am unable to report whether it is an attempt to place all of the Negro voters in this box regardless of where they live.

Talladega is in the eight-county Fourth Congressional District. There are 9,310 Negro persons of voting age in this county with an estimated 1,500 of them voters. Census figures reveal that there are 45,400 white persons and 20,877 Negro persons living in this county.

The Alabama State Department tof Education survey shows that it would take $3,457,500 to hike the Negro-enrolling public schools up to minimum acceptable standards in contrast to $2,142,500 for the white-enrolling similar schools. In a democracy, don't these figures disclose a sensational shortage of equality? On the other side of the press isn't there a sensational silence on the shocking racial gaps in Negro-white education under the Separate but Equal doctrine?

The question goes round and round on what to do when the Supreme Court rules in the school segregation cases.

One fraternal leader of my acquaintance finds answer easy. He says "do what the Supreme Court says do" and "apply the teachings of Jesus Christ."

"Do what is right and the results will be right," he said.

Too many leaders, he asserted, are more concerned about the outcome than what is right. He thinks that more reliance should be placed on the spiritual instead of the material.

Yet some of our political leaders in the South are advocating a defy—and—disobey solution. The civic textbooks used in our schools teach us to obey the law. A few of our politicians are advocating the circumvention of the law. What to do?

Another attitude is the "regardless of how the courts rule we aren't going to change." Are such leaders teaching disrespect for the courts, for the law, for democracy?

Politicians devoid of new ideas for meeting the new situations are trying to check change by whipping up emotion because they cannot shed any enlightenment.

It is encouraging to note that among the young generation some fresh thinking is going on.

Bob Ewing, a student at the University of Tennessee, writing February 27, 1953 in "The Orange and White," official student organ of U. of T., has an interesting article on "What Can We Do About Segregation." Opinions by him, the O. and W. editor noted were those of the particular writer rather than the staff. Mr Ewing is a junior in the U. of T. law school. Here is his piece:

Following a report given to the ASC Governing Council concerning a Southern interracial conference held in Columbia, S C., I was asked to offer suggestions as to how intergration could be brought about on our campus. My remarks will be confined to those areas where students have at least some say-so as to what the policies will be.

These ideas relate to what can be done by us (the students) in co-operation with the administration to pave the way for the realization of an intergrated university open to all qualified citizens of the state

One of the first steps toward the elimination of segregation could be the admittance of Negroes on an intergrated basis to all University functions of a public nature such as U-T Concerts, athletic events, and religious services (Convocation and the Community Thanksgiving Service). The Knoxville Symphony has already set the pace at the auditorium by admitting Negroes on an intergrated basis.

Outstanding Negro leaders in their respective fields could be brought to our campus to speak and to entertain .The ice has been broken here also; there was a Negro singer with the Horace Heidt show.

With Knoxville College in our vicinity, similar organizations of the two schools could meet together perhaps every fourth meeting to share their programs, activities, and fellowship. We could have their choir sing at the "Y" and send our choir to KC for a program. There are at least two U-T groups (Channing Club and Philosophy Society) in which KC students already participate.

It will be asked, "What groups are to take the lead if any such program of intergration is to be brought about?" "Y" groups, the student centers of the various churches and International Club would take the lead. All of these are representative groups which exert influence on our campus.

These suggestions (one man's opinion) are presented with the sincere hope that they will arouse different, more adequate, and better ideas that might help solve one of the most important problems that we of the U S., face today As long as segregation and discrimination exist within our country, we shall never be an effective leader in a world three-fifths of whose people do not have white skins.

We, the students on this campus, can, if we desire, do our share in bringing about a more just social system-a democracy with equal opportunity for all.

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—(SNS)—Leaders here have organized the Citizens Educational Steering Committee with Rufus Lewis, former Alabama State College Hornet coach as the chairman.

This group has been working in the field of civil education A weekly radio program is being sponsored. A county-wide how-to-register to vote campaign has been organized with the ministers of the city, business leaders and school teachers participating.

Last Thursday night, the group had among its guests Dr. C. A. Parrish, professor of sociology at Louisville University, A. L. Thompson, of Atlanta, regional FHA representative and W. C. Patton, of Birmingham, state NAACP leader, were among the guests.

Mr. Parrish talked briefly about his change-over to an integrated educational institution. He finds differences in situations and climates of opinion rather than of people. He mentioned that in moving into his new job he was thrust into a situation and acted like he had been used to it. He asserted that these things can happen suddenly. He meant conversion to situation of open competition.

He thinks that as things stand some of the leaders are not wholly convinced of man's ability to adjust himself to change but that they are coming around. Man has the power, if the will is there, to improve himself and adjust to new situations.

"You have to think in terms of what is possible," Dr. Parrish said in considering the adjustment to change and at the same time "keep in mind the ideal." He is conducting a pilot project in human adjustment. He says that his work is "experimental" but you wouldn't describe it as such after listening to him talk. Soft-spoken, he knows how to teach by talking.

From many of the comments made and questions asked Mr Thompson it seems that something needs to be done to help the people understand the various programs of government-assisted housing FHA, slum clearance, public housing, etc., did not seem to be clear in the minds of some of those present. Mr. Thompson in a few minutes tried to point up these various fields. The NAACP, civic leagues, business clubs and related organizations need to get busy. All of this reflects the need of some units of the National Urban League which has done an excellent job in the housing field. There isn't a single chapter of this great organization in Alabama.

Mr. Patton, who is carrying the message of voter-registration to the people, took the occasion to plead with the leaders to conduct voter-registration campaigns. He suggested that in Birmingham the NAACP would challenge the constitutionality of the entire housing act, particularly certain features dealing with the Medical Center development project. The federal government last week gave final approval of $4,058,000 for slum clearance. Mr. Paton did not reveal the legal formula the association would use.

There were also echoes at the meeting of the impromptu speech Grand Master Charles V. Hendley of Alabama Prince Hall Masons made at the annual meeting of the Alabama Division of the Southern Regional Council. an of spiritual values, Mr. Hendley believes in bringing God into the picture. It boils down to (1) How to do what is right; (2) Will what's right work?; (3) Is doing what's right good for all—or any?

Certainly, Mr. Hendley seems to think so. It maybe another way of saying what Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga. calls the will to do what is fair or right. The Christian teachings have the solution of human problems in the Golden Rule.

Change is upon us. You see it by moving around listening to the people talk. The pre-atomic era is over even where the tight-minds have failed to expand to comprehend it. Talk always precedes the turnover.

One can mark this change by the brief speech by which Attorney Hendley has moved to the scene in the role of an interpreter of the spiritual essence of man against the material. You see it when business men halt their money-making to listen to a scholar like Dr. Parrish, ask questions of Mr. Thompson about building better homes, and invite a hard-working, close-to-the-people spokesman like Mr. Patton in for inspiration.

One gets the feeling that the people have the courage and the common sense to live, let live, and grow with change.

You take a look back during Boy Scout Week. Your mind sinks away to the 1920's when Negro boys in this city didn't have the privilege of scouting. Today you not only have Negro Boy Scouts but you can call off the names of adult workers in the field who have been given highest scout awards like the Silver Beaver.

President H Councill Trenholm, Dr. F. D. Patterson, President J. F. Drake, Retired County Agent Hill of Athens, Prof. E. R. Johnson, Dr. D. V. Jemison, Jr., of Dothan, L. C Hood of Fairfield, Dr. Benny Baker of Mobile, are names among them from Alabama.

You look at the political scene today in this state. In 1901, the Negro electorate was wiped out, just about, by the new state constitution. At late as the 1940s, Negro voters were denied an opportunity to cast ballots in the so-called Alabama "white primary."

The Republican Party between 1926 and 1952 closed its conventions to Negro leaders Negro candidates in elections were not heard of in Alabama over a long lapse, until 1952.

Six Negro leaders have already qualified for the May 4, 1954 Alabama Democratic primary from four different counties. This year might also see the Republican Party put some new faces in the "New Look."

Not a big vote, the Negro vote is neverthless a bold, progressive, uncontrolled vote in this state. It's actual size is unknown. However the black man's vote is frequently described as a "block vote." A small number of voters lacks striking power unless it swings together, it seems to me. It's hard to bundle a big vote. It's even harder to bloc the black man's vote because of his individualism. Except where common fate bands them together to soften the blow, Negro voters act about like other segments in making decisions at the polls.

Then you hear a panel discussion at which three lawyers trace the civil rights progress of the Negro group from the Civil War up to the "New Look." Community leaders like Ersey Goins of Zion City, A. J. Jordan of North Birmingham and Sam Holloway of Ensley were at Parker High School Tuesday to hear this discussion by Attys. Orzell Billingsley, Jr., Peter A. Hall and Arthur D. Shores. Those of us who were Parker (Industrial) High students in 1925-28 could not even dream of the time when three Negro lawyers would be guest speakers at an assembly program.

Change demands its place in civilization. Time cries out, "change or perish." Vice-President Nixon on his return from his world tour sounded this warning. Race prejudice is the enemy's new column.

Prof. Henry J. Williams in his introductory remarks at the Negro History Week panel pointed out that "We (the Negro group) have the know-how to carry our just load." Racial discrimination is an unfair burden that hurts all and helps nobody in a democracy. That is why it is so difficult to understand how those who come of religious parents, who taught and preached the Golden Rule, could open a campaign for public office as an enemy of human rights and equality of job opportunity. Civil rights are merely human rights spelled out. The color line poisons democracy.

No wonder Atty. Billingsley argued that the Emancipation turned Negro persons loose in fredom but not fully free. No man is fully free who is lawfully segregated because of his race and color, it seems to me. As Atty. Hall put it, the national government enacted laws (13, 14, 15th amendments) to try to protect the emancipated man's freedom but the South sought to evade these laws.

Too many of the leaders today are men of the past rather than men of history. Often they burden more than they serve the people. Can do and desire to do (those fair and decent things) should yoke themselves up as team mates. Change is crying for acceptance, knowing that the alternative is crumble.

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

JASPER, ALA.—(SNS)— In this coal-mining city, where there is a "readjustment" or fall off in employment, one finds the evidence of change on the favorable side.

Some leaders take exception to the implications of a statement attributed to an educator as quoted January 14th in The Mountain Eagle, Walker County weekly published at Jasper. This "leader" who said, as quoted by this newspaper, "I think I speak for our teachers and parents" seems to fear that in the change to come Negro teachers will lose their jobs. No supporting evidence is given by either the quoted "leader" or the weekly to back up this fear.

Similar lose-your-jobs fear stories have been circulated in other places, often by a few school principals of little faith and supervisors who conveniently necer poll the teachers nor interview parents as such. In Alabama, there is a shortage of white teachers. The Negro-serving schools, for most part, are overcrowded, understaffed, unaccredited and inferior.

It should be pointed out that the dual school system in Alabama is facing a serious challenge other than the Supreme Court. In Birmingham, a Citizens Advisory Committee is prospecting for new sources of money to meet a financial emergency and to pull the public Schools system over the long haul. A committee of educational leaders met in Montgomery and recommended that loopholes in the sales tax exemptions be plugged so that additional money needed to operate the schools could be produced. Alabama doesn't have enough money, it would seem, to operate its duplicating schools on a standard of acceptable quality.

With a slump in employment will come a limp in purchasing power The sales tax which produces considerable school revenue is a tax on purchasing power, much of it supplied by the masses. So Separate But Equal schools face still another threat. Employmeut and taxation are two factors which will likely determine the seriousness of the clouds of a crisis directon other than the federal courts which is no bigger than the size of a man's hand at the money.

A survey conducted by the State Department of Education reveals that in Walker County $5,035,000 is needed to bring the white schools up to par and $1,350,000 to bring the Negro-enrolling schools up to acceptance. The figures are disturbing and reflect the general conditions of things in this county. Walker County has 56,922 white persons and only 6,847 Negro persons. The ratio of school needs is in line with the population percentages with the racial disparities undisclosed. Yet racial discrimination cannot be measured exclusively on a money basis because of its infliction of hurt, humiliation and injury.

This period has its historical parallel. Writing in The Negro History Bulletin, February, 1954, Geneva C. Turner does a treatment on William Lloyd Garrison, the anti-slavery leader who used "The Liberator" for 35 years in the fight to remove the blot and blight of slavery. Mr. Garrison, the story says asserted: "I go for the pepole, the whole people." In this change which is moving in on us the wise leaders, it seems to me, must "go for the people."

Public schools were never intended as employment bureaus. Teachers gain their importance only as instruments necessary to prepare human beings to function successfully, usefully and productively for the perpetuation of democracy. Racial discrimination tends to weaken democracy and sour the souls of men. Competent teachers do not necessarily have to lose their jobs as democracy loses itself from discriminatin. Admittedly, however, some hostile powers will seek to retaliate. Faith, not fear, is needed.

Those in education, public and private, who are clothed with the responsibility of the molders and leaders of thought," should consult the literature prepared by the Southern Regional Council, of Atlanta, on how to meet the change which is rolling in on us. As Chester Bowles, former Governor of Connecticut and Ambassador to India put it in survey in the American scene, "Looking back the changes and achievements are breath-taking."

Walker County Training School is in a new building. A low-cost housing project squats across the dusty street from it. The number of Negro voters has climbed from zero to a size of coming impottance. An American Legion post here is promoting voter-registration. New blood has been pumped into the veins of the N. A. A. C. P leadership. Except in business one secs the improvements despite the heavy load yet to be borne

One hears a voice saying that there is no such thing as equalized segregation no more than there is divided equality, half-love and a dual God. However, there is an unwilling few who has not yet matured enough to catch the spirit of Him who taught to do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., believes that "When the law is changed, people will change." Could it be that the law is playing catch up with the decent-hearted, reasonable and justice-loving people?

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

Counter moves designed to halt any progressive action favorable to the bulk of the population seem to be in the making in Alabama.

Piece together a few unnoticed or untalked events and the evidence shows up. School problems were shoved into the political spot light. Up went the cry for a special session of the Legislature when the U. S. Supreme Court took under advisement the pending challenge to segregation cases. Office holders blurted indignantly when the Eisenhower administration declared its position in the controversy.

For the moment the political leaders seem to be awaiting further developments in the educational cases. None has come up with a plan to correct the inequalities. A survey of school needs discloses that in the Black Belt where the biggest hoot is heard there is also the widest racial disparities. Racial disfranchisement and educational differentials have a way of running like buddies.

Wilcox County which doesn't have a single Negro voter is a typical example. State Senator J. Miller Bonner who represents this county in Upper Chamber is author of the state's stiff voter-qualification law. He piloted the legislation designed to preserve the traditional dual and unequal school system. Look at this: Only $70,000 is needed to bring the white schools up to par in contrast with the $3,305,000 needed to level up the Negro-serving schools. These are not my figures but those gathered by the research experts in the Alabama State Department of Education.

Check another item. Wilcox voted 389 to 83 against the poll tax modification proposal. There are 18,566 Negro and only 4,910 white persons living in this county. There are 8,212 Negro citizens 21 years of age or above in contrast with 3,066 white persons of voting age. Which means that of 11,274 citizens of suffrage age in Wilcox only 486 voted on the $3 back poll tax amendment.

A candidate from Wilcox County Mr. Bruce Henderson, former State Senator, is seeking the state's highest office. Where he should have a good starting base he is weak. Schools for a majority of the population suffer from failure to get enough money to bring them up to standard. Wilcox has few voters because its Negro citizens are voteless.

Where does school money come? From taxes. You can't tax poverty. Bigotry is untaxable. Poor education whittles down the per capita value of the citizen. Wealth is taxable. So is income. The sales power makes buying power taxable. But those who have little to spend can pay only a little tax. Family income is meager in the Black Belt among the Negro group.

A Black Belt spokesman has pointed out that he is just as opposed to equalizing educational opportunities between the two racial groups as he is to the easing away of segregated schools. To pull the inferior schools up to the better ones would cost money. To get more money means that new sources of taxes must be found. More tax or less duplication is the dilemma which must be faced.

When campaign time comes around you are likely to hear furious and bitter debate over the suggestion of a constitutional amendment to preserve the dual school system. In effect, it would be a proposal to nullify the 14th Amendment. This will be a smoke screen to cover up other objectives. Keep an eye on financing the school system and the fact that many who advocate the traditional school system or also against looking for money where it is.

Finding money for the public schools is a thorny problem even when you look at the situation without racial colorations. The emotional issue surrounding the question of good schools for all is likely to be injected into the local campaign to confuse, inflame, and enrage. That would be hurtful. It would be low politics, it seems to me.

Lines are shaping up for the campaign battle with there apparently being skilful maneuvering to try to keep the educational issue within bounds. Abolition of the public school system as a way out has not won acceptance. Resort to the proposed ("private public school") has been frowned upon. Study of the situation is seriously considered. Help has been asked of the public in looking for a formula which to meet the issue—meaning saving the segregated school system.

Is the rock crying out "no hiding place" to those who are looking for a solution to that which is on its way out? Thus you see the counter moves bristling in the face of inevitable change.

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON 31a

Social segregation, an issue presently under study by the United States Supreme Court, is protruding itself as the new hot political issue in some Southern states.

Admittedly, the politicians have found no satisfactory circumvention solution should the courts declare the Separate but Equal doctrine invalid. "No answer yet," they cry. In South Carolina, Gov. Jimmy Byrnes, father of the idea of abolishing the public school system, in his recent message to the Legislature hinted that some other ideas should be considered should the court decide that the 14th amendment is really a freedom act.

In Georgia, Charles L. Gowen, in his "Boston (Ga.) Speech" opening his campaign to succeed Gov. Herman Talmadge, teed off by suggesting a plan to save both the public school system and also segregation. He is against dissolving the public schools.

His plan is to get the General Assembly of Georgia to pass legislation (should the court abolish segregation) "authorizing each county school superintendent to designate the school and classroom each child in the public school will attend." It would give him "wide discretion in designating the schools and classes so as to serve the best interests of the child and the best interest of the entire public school system."

Schools are dear to the hearts of people and usually the people do not like for them to be tampered with in a way to either lower their standards or cancel them out. So now there seems to be a moving away from the notion of destroying the public schools in a frenzy of anger.

Little discussed is the fact that racial differentials in education are tied up with taxation. The denials forced upon the Negro group reduced its per capita earnings; reduced their buying power; often kept them without much property. Much of the new revenue for education comes from the sales tax. The sales tax is a tax on purchasing power. Those with little to spend have little to tax. Hence economic differentials are coming back to haunt those who must find new money for education.

One educator has pointed out that either way the court rules means that the lawmakers will have to worry over the best new source of the money. The school segregation issue cuts deeper than the emotional flub-dub created by the politicans.

Taxation and segregation float to the surface like a pair of shoes into the river

Educators are making surveys to show what is being accomplished and the politicans are citing the figures. The so-called "progress figures" often fail to show the racial gap. Nor do they deal with those intangibles for which no measurement has been found. Freedom and equality cannot be measured in pie pans.

Some educational leaders suggest that "the initial presumption would be in Alabama that facilities are equal until Negroes take formal action alleging they are not." Therefore "wait and see" what the court says and what the Negro leaders do. Politicans aren't waiting because emotion, steam, and verbal thunder have always been useful weapons.

In campaigns, Y'all with campaigns will not [illegible] the issue at hand.

One of the wire services reported this observation from one of the school officials: "In Sylacauga, for example, the weekly Sylacauga News says facilities there are equal now and that both white and Negro residents are content with segregation under those conditions."

The weekly quoted gave no source for its information and cited no survey of the opinions of either group. However, the state school survey indicates that it would take $3,457,500 to bring the Negro schools and $2,142,500 the white schools up to acceptable standards. This says nothing about making Negro and white schools equal-to-equal. Sylacauga is in Talladega County, but in the city school system. No figures were cited to show the relationship between the Negro and white schools.

Carl T. Rowan, prize-winning journalist and author of "South of Freedom" has written a new series of articles, "Jim Crow's Last Stand," in which he has made an on-the-spot study of the feelings of some of those in the five states in which the end-segregation suits originated. He makes this important observation: "The issue (of racial segregation) becomes woefully complex and complicated because all colored people do not want to see segregation ended; nor do all whites want to see it maintained."

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

Because Separate but Equal is a fraud and myth a number of political leaders are ghost-chasing, battling at shadows.

The Alabama Legislative Council is scheduled to meet Jan. 8 to search for a way to meet the issue. A six-man legislative committee is meeting jointly with the council to study the ideas and suggestions contained in some advisory letters mailed out by Gov. Gordon Persons to legislator, educators, journalists and radioists. One such letter came to me.

Charles M. Cooper, director of the Legislative Reference Service, has been gathering information on what other states propose to do to meet the ununknown decision.

For those who are interested Guy B. Johnson, eminent sociologist of the South, writes on the school segregation subject in the current issue of Crisis magazine, organ of the NAACP, Morehouse College President Benjamin E. Mays has written brillantly on the subject in his national newspaper column.

A decision outlawing classroom segregation will not bring a revolution in the South. The South will accept such a decision cannot finance equally duplicated white and Negro schools. The force of world opinion and national interest will compel the United States to get rid of legal segregation.

Some Alabama politicans have talked about "a solution" to the question of equality of educational opportunities without coming up with anything concrete and sensible. Equality cannot be weighed on the scales of bigotry. Too many are playing on the fears of the people rather than concerning themselves with helping to prepare the people to live with change, it seems to me. This letter comes to this spot:

"I have been concerned about the action of the leadership there in Birmingham. What has been done relative to the request of Governor Persons for suggestions on segregation relative to the anticipated Supreme Court decision? It appears to me that the state leadership there should have presented something from the Negro's viewpoint.'

"My thinking on the matter is that two or more approaches should be made. First, a board of 15 or more composed of leaders from both races should be appointed to work out a satisfactory solution and pattern of human relations. The second is that the top leaders Alabama Progressive Democratic Association, the Alabama State Conference of NAACP Branches, the Alabama State Teachers Association, the Prince Hall Masons, plus the three Methodist Churches and the president or some representative of the Baptist-be invited with personalities in public life, and those who have demonstrated lesser leadership sit in, and draft a blueprint anticipating at least three possible decision of the Supreme Court. Thus this inqury is made to ascertain if anything along this line was done at the request of the governor."

"I do not think that it is too late and I trust that you will take the initiative, if this has not been done, to let these leaders know we expect some action."

That is the .memorandum addressed to the big timber leadership and to little me. I have sketched notes on what I should like to put in answer to Gov. Persons' letter. Change is coming and we should prepare to meet it as bold, Christian, descent human beings.

Can questions raised in Gov. Persons letter be really answered? He says that abolition of the dual school system would be "unthinkable." Some other politicans say that the segregated school plan must not be abolished. Still others point to the state inability to pay for levelling up Negro schools to those of white schools. So what plan?

Can the politicans solve the problem? The more simple problem of finding enough money for the schools as they now are hasn't been solved by the lawmakers School financing are the school segregation issue both come up to plague the lawmakers.

As Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution puts it: "Segregation is on its way out, and he who tries to tell the people otherwise does them great disservice. The problem the future is how to live with change."

In his Crisis article Guy Johnson suggests the roles which citizens and organizations will have to play in the coming change.

But Senator Albert Boutwell of Jefferson County says: "We will not accept abolition of segregation in our public schools in Alabama. I think we will find a solution and take necessary steps to preserve our Southern traditions and our way of life."

Alabama is a part of the changing South.

THE TIP-OFF

BY EMORY O. JACKSON

The question goes round and round on what to do when the Supreme Court rules in the school segregation cases.

One fraternal leader of my acquaintance finds answer easy. He says "do what the Supreme Court says do" and "apply the teachings of Jesus Christ."

"Do what is right and the results will be right,' he said.

Too many leaders, he asserted, are more concerned about the outcome than what is right. He thinks that more reliance should be placed on the spiritual instead of the material.

Yet some of our political leaders in the South are advocating a defy—and—disobey solution. The civic textbooks used in our schools teach us to obey the law. A few of our politicians are advocating the circumvention of the law. What to do?

Another attitude is the "regardless of how the courts rule we aren't going to change." Are such leaders teaching disrespect for the courts, for the law, for democracy?

Politicians devoid of new ideas for meeting the new situations are trying to check change. They stir up emotions because they cannot shed any enlightenment.

It is encouraging to note that among the younger generation some fresh thinking is going on.

Bob Ewing, a student at the University of Tennessee, writing February 27, 1953 in "The Orange and White, official student organ of U. of T., has an interesting article on "What Can We Do About Segregation." Opinions by him, the O. and W. editor noted were those of the particular writer rather than the staff. Mr Ewing is a junior in the U. of T. law school. Here is his piece:

Following a report given to the ASC Governing Council concerning a Southern interracial conference held in Columbia, S C., I was asked to offer suggestions as to how intergration could be brought about on our campus. My remarks will be confined to those areas where students have at least some say-so as to what the policies will be.

These ideas relate to what can be done by us (the students) in co-operation with the administration to pave the way for the realization of an intergrated university open to all qualified citizens of the state

One of the first steps toward the elimination of segregation could be the admittance of Negroes on an intergrated basis to all University functions of a public nature such as U-T Concerts, athletic events, and religious services (Convocation and the Community Thanksgiving Service). The Knoxville Symphony has already set the pace at the auditorium by admitting Negroes on an intergrated basis.

Outstanding Negro leaders in their respective fields could be brought to our campus to speak and to entertain .The ice has been broken here also; there was a Negro singer with the Horace Heidt show.

With Knoxville College in our vicinity, similar organizations of the two schools could meet together perhaps every fourth meeting to share their programs, activities, and fellowship. We could have their choir sing at the "Y" and send our choir to KC for a program. There are at least two U-T groups (Channing Club and Philosophy Society) in which KC students already participate.

It will be asked, "What groups are to take the lead if any such program of intergration is to be brought about?" "Y" groups, the student centers of the various churches and International Club would take the lead. All of these are representative groups which exert influence on our campus.

These suggestions (one man's opinion) are presented with the sincere hope that they will arouse different, more adequate, and better ideas that might help solve one of the most important problems that we of the U S., face today As long as segregation and discrimination exist within our country, we shall never be an effective leader in a world three-fifths of whose people do not have white skins.

We, the students on this campus, can, if we desire, do our share in bringing about a more just social system-a democracy with equal opportunity for all.

—Bob Ewing

THE TIP-OFF

By EMORY O. JACKSON

Since the political suffrage statistics for Jefferson (Birmingham) County appear to be shockingly out of balance, in respect to the number of Negro voters in relation to the total, this column is passing along to the readers some pointers suggested in "The Railway Clerk," organ of the Brotherhood of Railway Clerks. For what this article discusses is in line with what civic, community action, and related groups might discuss and do.

Out of an estimated 102,000 voters for Jefferson County, no more than approximately 7,000 are listed as Negro voters. Whether this is an accurate figure is yet to be established or challenged. Thus far none of the local political action leaders has come up with confirmation or denunication.

What makes this showing poor, it seems to me, is the fact that there are about 108,000 Negro persons of voting age in Jefferson County of which approximately 25,000 are war veterans who are relieved of paying even the stripped down poll tax. Nor has there been any widespread complaints about rejections although mutterings have been occasionally heard. Naturally one would expect every kind of corrective action where questionable registration denials were evident in a place like Birmingham which boasts of so many persons who wear the label of leaders.

For that reason the following message is being reproduced with the hope that it will arouse some of those who neither want nor claim the leadership label to be inspired to go to work. Here it is:

YOUR VOTE won't register if you don't. Primary campaigns begin this month for the general elections in November when 35 states will elect Senators and all states will elect a new House of Representatives.

Each state, county, and city, has election laws which govern registration. These include length of residence, how absentee ballots are cast and how often registration is required to make the voter eligible.

Legislative Representatives of each lodge in the country have been instructed how to set up a Register and Vote Committee. Detailed procedures have been outlined to them about how to make sure that every member of every Brotherhood lodge is registered to vote. But no amount of planning or urging can accomplish the task unless every individual member cooperates.

WE JUST DON'T VOTE

The voting records in our nation indicate that too many eligible voters fail to cast a ballot. That is a direct threat to preservation of our democratic privilege to express political opinions on election day, but to wage earners it is also a direct threat to preservation of hard-won gains and the freedom to seek new objectives.

Card files of each lodge member, follow-up phone calls, letters, and personal visits are part of the machinery which an active Register and Vote Committee should use. And the campaign should be aimed at making sure that each qualified member of the family is included in the drive to register voters. But there is one phase that even a hard working committee cannot accomplish.

That is the personal recognition by each member of our Brotherhood that to register and vote is to designate yourself as an active citizen who regards voting as an opportunity to participate in our democratic process of electing public representatives. Voting requires the smallest investment of time and offers the greatest return of personal satisfaction.

VOTE — OR KEEP QUIET

There is little point for members of labor organizations to complain of anti-labor proposals made by Congressmen or any other public official if individual wage earners fail to register and vote for their friends and against their enemies.

It wil make little difference what political opinions you support, or how much you hope that a friendly Congress will be elected next November, there is no possible way of making your opinion count unless your vote is counted.

And remember, you can be sure that your vote won't register, if you don't.

THE TIP-OFF

By EMORY O. JACKSON

Today we vote.

Every voter who thinks anything of his vote should cast it in the primary election today.

Today we register decisions.

When you cast a ballot you report a decision. Your decision is your own. The you have made. important thing is that you make the decision. The cast ballot is the essence of a decision which counts.

Everyone's ballot cast is important to the final decision made by the voters. The outcome of an election is the story written by those who went to the polls. One's ballot counts for as much as he counts. Let nobody tell you that your vote won't make any difference. Your vote put with the other person's vote rolls into a powerful total.

Here are a few observations of columnar variety. The Fifth Congressional District which includes some of the counties in the liberal TVA section has among its eight counties three in which there reportedly are no Negro voters. Those counties are listed as Marshall, DeKalb and Cleburne.

There is a Negro-directed newspaper in this district but no Negro-serving college.

There are two counties in the Seventh Congressional District which reportedly do not have any Negro voters—Cullman (495 Negro persons) and Winston (102 Negro persons). There are no available reports, so far as I know, of any Negro citizens applying for voter-registration in these two counties. There is neither a Negro-produced newspaper nor a Negro-enrolling college located in this district.

In the nine-county Second-District there are Negro voters in all but Lowndes County. Alabama State College at Montgomery and Lomax-Hannon College at Greenville are located in this district.

Only Wilcox County in the seven-county First Congressional District is without Negro voters. A Branch of Alabama State College is located at Mobile, the pivotal city of this district.

With all of the important resources, Jefferson County has the poorest Negro vote showing among the big-population Alabama pivotal centers. There are four Negro-manned colleges, three Negro-interest newspapers, approximately 5,000 Prince Hall Masons, three Elk lodges, three posts of the American Legion, four branches of the NAACP, the headquarters of the State NAACP and the regional office of the NAACP, the Grand Lodge office of the Knights of Pythias, two daily newspapers which have encouraged and battled for fair voter-registration practices, several units of the Alabama State Federation of Civic Leagues, six of the nine Negro lawyers, states headquarters of the AFL, CIO and UMWA, the Birmingham Council of the National Council of Negro Women, the City Federation of Colored Women's Clubs, the Birmingham Council of Colored Parents and Teachers, to name a few. There are listed almost as many "Negro leaders" in this district as there are Negro voters.

With exception of the school teachers, this is small evidence of effective work among our civic leaders. Credit of the showing made among the teachers is due in large part to the activities of Professor Henry J. Williams of the Birmingham Negro Teachers Association and Mrs. Lucille Douglass of the Jefferson County Negro Teachers Association. Of course, they had the backing of the leaders of their association and the cooperation of the school principals.

The immediate goal of our political action leaders today should be to get every qualified voter to the polls. The Jefferson County Progressive Democratic Council through its get-out-the vote committee headed by Prof. Williams made elaborate plans for such a service. E. W. Priestly, chairman of the transportation division as asked those who desire transportation service to call him at 7-9553 and that it will be provided.

Each community, it seems to me, should have set up voters service center where first-time voters could have been given demonstrations on how to use the voting machine, and on pooling automobiles for carrying the voters to the polls. The vote center, skimpy bus service, the long ballot, and the swollen list of new voters have brought the need for fresh services.

....Each voter should make his

Each voter should make his vote count today by casting it, it seems to me.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. -(SNS)- Here in another capital city of a Southern state, this time the 'Cradle of the Old Confederacy," a group of NAACP leaders met to formulate a program of action to implement the recent decision by the United States Supreme Court that segregated schools are unconstitutional.

This is a part of a series of historical events. Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia is a guest of the United States. In October of 1935 he carried the fight for freedom to the League of Nations where he was turned down cold. To them he said: "Apart from the Kingdom of the Lord, there is not on this earth any nation that is superior to any other. It is international morality that is at stake . . . God and history will remember your judgment."

Italian Fascist had driven him from his throne. He was a leader in exile at the time but a spokesman against aggression. Powerful nations rolled in their fat, ignoring their faith which freedom instills. The diminutive Emperor is in the united States speaking again. Chief Justice Earl Warren spoke on May 17 against a type of social aggression, segregation.

He spoke to his countrymen. Social bigotry has standing no higher than religious, political and economic bigotry. He pointed out in his non-segregation decision: "Segregation of white and colored children in public schools has a detrimental effect upon the colored children."

Last Saturday, Pope Pius X (Guiseppe Sarto) was made a saint by the Roman Catholic Church. He worked himself up from peasant to priest ,to pope, and in death he still moves up. The story is told of his naming as bishop in a wealthy town a man of humble birth. The high-pitched people kicked on the appointment because they wanted a high-born bishop.

Pope Pius X replied: "Am I to understand you also reject me if I had been appointed here-instead of Pope."

History is a witness against those who reject the humble. Science has testified against segregation. Experience has shown that integration does work. The latter observation is backed up by the fresh research unearthed by the great scholars as reported in The Journal of Social Issues (Vol. Ix, No. 4, 1953), New York City. The study is written by Kenneth B. Clark, entitled "Desegregation: An Appraisal of the Evidence."

The Supreme Court decision is bedded in law, good law. Read the brief built by the NAACP lawyers. It cost $40,000 together, marshall and refine the material which went into that immortal document. It consists of 256 pages and 80,000 words. Carl Murphy of the Baltimore Afro-American newspaper wrote a feature story showing what was in the brief. It became a prize-winning feature.

Jim Crow is dying.The doctors of hate are trying to give it a shot in the arm. The medicine men of bigotry are serving their evil brew. Too many know its poison to consume much of it any more. Goodwill is winning. The humble people are catching on to those who try to exploit and capitalize on their fears, suspicions and lack of closeness with those who are anxious to live as good children of God. Faith is winning out over fear.

Those who accept the teaching of Jesus Christ of moral necessity must reject Jim Crow. Just as the South is changing from the one-crop system it can change from the dual-citizenship system. Painful in spots it maybe but we have the strength to bear it. It doesn't have to be painful because we have the know how on de-segregation or can get it.

Does the Negro group want segregation? Let Dr. Charles S. Johnson, writing in the current issue of Phylon magazine answer. He says: "Negroes have never believed that compulsory segregation could even permit full equality, self-respect or absence of discrimination; but they have not been in control of the school system, and they have not been in a favorable position for influence them seriously. Meanwhile, they have wanted the maximum educational advantages obtainable under any possible arrangement."

The war is on in the U. S. between justice and injustice. Justice is one of God's leading attributes. It always has and always will stand the test. Pharroh, Nero, and Hitler and many of them tried to destroy justice in the highes governments but met their fate. Linburg and wife tried it here but they recently were just in the electric chair. Let us pray that every man be meek and obedient and be governed by the powers that be.

President Eisenhower is able and equipped to preserve the country. I Timothy 3, 4 one that rule well his own house.

Let everybody pray that love, peace and justice may ever abide in the U. S. God bless sweet Atlanta and sweet Georgia. The Atlanta Daily World is one of the U. S.'s strong friends.

TUSCALOOSA, Ala. — The so called "white voucher only" system at the voter-registration level is merely a method of shifting the disfranchisement technique of the "White Only Primary," the latter outlawed by the United State Supreme Court in a case arising in Texas.

Even when the requirement is not for "white only" vouchers, the "voucher system" has the effect of holding down the size of the electorate. Likely in any well presented case the federal courts would frown upon this voucher system. For it is, by all examination I can find, a handy tool in the hands of prejudiced boards of registrars to keep those they do not like off the voter roster.

Green County, which has six times more Negro than white persons, reportedly is one of those Black Belt counties in the registration authorities demand that a Negro applicant for the ballot bring with him a white supporting witness. But this is not all the report indicates. When a Negro presents himself for the Registration Certificate, he often never hears from it.

Hal and Perry have twice as many Negro persons as white ones and in Sumter the ration is three-to one. In the four counties-Green, Hale, Perry and Sumter-there are only a total of 12,136 voters. This illustrates clearly how the wrongful restriction on Negro voting has reduced politically these counties.

Located in the Sixth Congressional District is Stillman College, which is A-approved and sponsored by the Presbyterian Church. The Alabama Citizen, weekly journal, is also based here. This is the seat of the University of Alabama which one day will train students solely on the basis of qualifications.

You pitch the question of what can be done to widen the use of the ballot, remove the unfair registration restrictions, and to let the political waters flow naturally. Civic leaders have the job of pointing out to the powers that restrictive suffrage hurts the Black Belt. This area can never come back politically until it releases its full voting potential.

A check up could be made of the number of NAACP branches in the district. For there is not a single place where there is a branch of the NAACP is there a total blackout of the Negro vote. Branches of this powerful organization could be started so that leadership could be built and brought forward.

Leaders of Elk lodges should be enlisted in plans to enlarge suffrage. One could audit the quality of P-T A. leadership in the district, draft the Prince Hall Masonic leadership for action. Trade unionists, the progressive and liberal forces and the church leadership could be of immense help.

Counties In 6th District	Total Voters	Negro Voters
Tuscaloosa	24,751	6,500
Bibb	5,857	225
Shelby	10,000	500
Chilton	12,000	500
Hale	3,500	126
Perry	3,840	234
Green	1,796	163
Sumter	3,000	250
TOTALS	64,304	8,498

Should the above figures stand up, it would appear that 12 per cent of the total voters in the Sixth appear that 12 per cent of the total voters in the Sixth Congressional District come from the Negro group. However, in Chilton County there is no racial identification of voters. The Shelby County figure is merely an estimation. Tuscaloosa County keeps neither a racial list nor group classification of the voters. That figure is a guess. Should it hold up, Tuscaloosa would have 1,250 more Negro voters than Jefferson County, the latter with only 5,250.

Jefferson County has 208, 616 Negro persons while Tuscaloosa County has only 25,898 persons. In other words Jefferson has eight times more Negro persons than Tuscaloosa and yet less Negro voters.

Behind The News

By Reid E. Jackson

How religion helps improve our society

IN CASE YOU might not know, one of the potent agencies for improving race relations in this country is sponsored by a religious group.

Dr. Jackson

Its official title is the Race Relations Department of the American Missionary Association, with its headquarters at Fisk University in Nashville.

This department, in turn, is a part of the Division of Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Church. From its very beginning, this organization has sought to better the condition of colored Americans.

A Voice Of Protest

Founded in 1846 by a group of religious leaders who objected to the exclusion of colored people from the churches of that day, it immediately became a strong voice of protest in abolitionist movements.

As a first step, it worked with the Freedmen's Bureau to establish schools for our people in the South. Among these were Howard, Fisk, Hampton, Talladega, Lemoyne and Dougaloo.

To deal directly with interracial problems, the Race Relations Department was created in 1942. The first director was Dr. Charles S. Johnson, now Fisk University president.

His successor was youthful and vigorous Dr. Herman H. Long, University of Michigan graduate. Under his guidance, the techniques of the department are taking fuller form.

"We do not engage in theoretical research," explains Director Long. Rather, our full-time three-member staff "studies actual public policy issues that probably will be decided by legislatures or courts.

"Our analyses show that these decisions usually are based on the social effects of the practice under discussion," Dr. Long says.

Sensing this, the Race Relations Department has constantly gathered data that describe the real impact of segregation practices upon the pattern of living for minority people.

Two major studies, already published by the department, are bound to have their influence in present efforts to bring about integration.

Restrictive Covenants

The first was a survey of racial restrictive housing covenants in Chicago and St. Louis. Here it was shown that restrictive covenants were actually withdrawing more housing from the market than that which was needed by minority groups.

To assemble this data, the department used the new technique of the "self-survey."

In this procedure hundreds of volunteer workers of differing racial, religious, social and economic backgrounds go out into the community to get the facts.

As Dr. Long puts it, "an unusually large number of citizens will be having a new experience of democratic working together on the solutions of common problems thereby helping to improve sound group relations."

Concrete evidence of the worthwhileness of this technique has been provided by self-surveys the department has already completed in San Francisco, Minneapolis, Pittsburgh, Kalamazoo, Mich., Burlington, Iowa, and Trenton, N.J.

Presently, the department is conducting a similar survey in Baltimore.

Sponsored jointly by the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations and the Baltimore Commission on Human Relations, the survey is penetrating into six areas.

These are education, employment, housing, interfaith, public accommodations and social welfare.

A Thousand Workers

Almost 1,000 Baltimore residents are entering the homes of minority families to ask them what difficulties they are having to work and live happily in their own communities.

Many of these survey workers are getting a liberal education free of charge. One such made this voluntary comment:

"People who say that colored residents 'want everything,' are 'never satisfied' and 'spend money recklessly,' should see inside the miserable little homes, sub-standard in every way, with no hot water to keep clean.

"More than this, only one or two rooms heated by separate stoves, large families crowded into tiny rooms, not enough money or clothes to go around, only one salary coming and an excessive rent to pay, and fear of being laid off with no reserve."

While it is good that the Congregational Church is willing to pay money to help improve human relations in our society, there is something that we can do ourselves.

Without waiting to be asked, we should have courage to survey our own personal situations objectively and then place the facts of our own problems in the hands of those who are better able to help us.

Housing Roundup

By Hortense Label

THE SUPREME COURT decisions on segregation in the public schools bring into sharp focus the underlying basis of all American institutional segregation — existing patterns of racial residential exclusion in urban communities.

Those who seek to circumvent the decisions are examining with new interest Northern cities where residential exclusion practices have been used to maintain school and other institutional segregation almost as effectively as the jim-crow legislation of the South.

The great principles enunciated in the school cases will democratize American living only to the extent that housing and neighborhood segregation are eliminated.

Applicable To Housing

Repudiation of Plessy v. Ferguson — the rejection of the fiction that "separate" can ever be "equal" — has been confined to public education in the instant cases.

One week after the school segregation decisions, the Supreme Court ruled on six other segregation cases, at least two of which have significance for housing.

The first was San Francisco Housing Authority v. Banks. In this case, the California state courts held that the local housing authority could not operate its low rent public housing program on a segregated basis.

In failing to grant certiorari, the Supreme Court simply refused to disturb the lower court's decision.

Lower Court Reversed

In Muir v. Louisville Park Theatrical Association, the Court did accept certiorari. In this case a private group leased a municipally - owned theatre located in a Louisville public park.

Here the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's affirmance of the theatrical association's right to impose audience segregation.

The case was remanded with instructions that it be reconsidered in the light of the public school segregation cases and the "conditions which presently prevail."

In holding that a private leasehold may be sufficiently affected by state action so as to bring it within the purview of the 14th Amendment, the Muir case extends the principles of the school segregation cases.

Its relevance to federal urban redevelopment subsidies and federal housing insurance and guaranty programs is clear.

Causes Soul-Searching

The school segregation cases, the San Francisco case and the Muir case have caused serious soul - searching in the Housing and Home Finance Agency, the Public Housing Administration and in many local housing authorities.

Other factors are responsible for increased activity on the housing front. Implicit in this is the long overdue recognition that Federal insurance and guaranty programs are a form of public assistance to housing.

This understanding is reflected in New York City's administration - sponsored Sharkey-Brown - Issacs Bill which unanimously passed the City Council on June 8.

The bill would forbid segregation in all multi - family housing on which mortgages are hereinafter insured or guaranteed by Federal, State or local governments.

This pioneer step to eliminate segregation in housing heretofore regarded as private may well serve as a model for other communities.

Builders Interested

New awareness of the profitable market for middle and upper income families among minority families together with softening of similar markets among whites has sparked interest of builders and lenders.

The National Association of Home Builders has created a standing minority housing committee under the chairmanship of builder Wallace Johnson of Memphis.

The Mortgage Bankers Association has organized its minority housing committee with James Rouse, leading lender of Baltimore and member of the President's Advisory Committee on Housing, as chairman and economist Miles Colean as staff consultant.

Now Facing Facts

Advocates of slum clearance, housing code enforcement, urban rehabilitation and neighborhood conservation are beginning to face the fact that their proposals inevitably require sharp reductions in density and overcrowding.

Even confirmed defenders of segregation recognize that this can only be accomplished by the opening up of new land space and addition to the total supply of standard housing available to non-white families.

This interest and activity should surely produce substantial inventories of housing available to non-white families.

It is too soon to say whether it will result in additional areas of minority concentration or whether this is the curtain raiser to government and private action to eliminate racial restrictions in housing.

SURE, THE ARMY coddled star athletes who were drafted into the service. But a case can be made out for such coddling.

The House Armed Services Committee could better spend its time investigating the coddling of chair-borne Army officers, some of whom went through two world wars and never even got to a port of embarkation.

Mr. Lautier

The Sugar Ray Robinson case stank. Two hours before he was to board a boat bound for Europe with the Joe Louis troupe, the welterweight champion left the port of embarkation and took a taxicab for Harlem.

Robinson was a member of the Louis troupe, which toured Army camps in this country. I visited Camp Lee, Virginia, one night, to watch this troupe in action. They put on a good exhibition and the thousands of soldiers, ranking from private to the commanding general of the post, who saw it, thoroughly enjoyed the show.

Girls Ready For Party

After the exhibition at Lee, a drove of gals from Petersburg were waiting outside with cars to whisk Louis and the other boxers to a party. They got passes from the lieutenant and off they went.

After this tour the Army decided to send Louis, Robinson and other boxers to tour the camps in Europe. It was on the sailing date that Robinson forgot to catch the boat.

After Louis returned from his European tour, I accompanied him, Ruby Goldstein, the New York referee who was then also an Army sergeant; another boxer, and a captain, on a bond selling trip as far as Patterson and Wright Fields at Dayton (Ohio).

Thousands of soldiers and civilian employees at these fields turned out to see Louis. Joe and Ruby did a comedy act with the captain, kidding him about goldbricking, and then the captain wound up making a plea for the audience to buy war savings bonds.

Fought For Army Relief

During the four years he was in the Army Joe also fought a couple of bouts for Army Relief. But when Mike Jacobs attempted to put on a bout to get back the money he had advanced Louis under the guise that the fight was for Joe's benefit and to pay his back income taxes, the late Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of War, did not hesitate to call it off as soon as he learned the truth.

Sandy Saddler, the featherweight champ, one of the cases the committee investigated, was trained in the Army as a heavy truck driver. When he got to Europe, his commanding officer, changed his military specialty to his civilian occupation—pro boxer.

Mahoney full-fledged delegate

CHARLES H. MAHONEY, Detroit lawyer and insurance executive, was appointed by President Eisenhower as a fullfledged Unied States Representative to the ninth sesion of the United Nations.

Mr. Lautier

Other colored persons who have served on UN delegations have been alternate representatives, beginning with Edith S. Sampson, appointed by President Truman to the fifth and seventh sessions, and Dr. Channing H. Tobias, appointed by Truman to the sixth session.

President Eisenhower named the Rev. Archibald J. Carey, Chicago minister, lawyer and alderman, as the principal alternate to the eighth session. As such, Carey was the first called upon to serve and vote in the absence of a delegate.

The delegation to the ninth session will be headed by Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., who has the rank of ambassador. In addition to Mahoney, the other members are Senators H. Alexander Smith, (Rep., N.J.) and J. William Fulbright, (Dem., Ark.) and C. D. Jackson, former Presidential adviser on psychological warfare and now a vice president of Time, Inc.

The alternates are headed by Wright F. Morrow, a Houston (Texas) lawyer. The Democratic National Committee now takes the position that Morrow is the ex-Democratic National Committeeman for Texas.

Morrow offered his resignation to the Texas State Democratic committee in September, 1952, because he recognized the impropriety of supporting General Eisenhower, the Republican nominee, while serving as the Democratic National Committeeman.

Morrow apparently later changed his mind about resigning, but the Democratic National Committee takes the position that he is "no longer the Democratic National Committeeman."

Anyway President Eisenhower has rewarded him for the support Texas Democrats gave the Republican candidates in 1952.

THE OTHER UN alternates are Roger W. Strauss, New York, chairman of the board of the American Smelting and Refining Company; James J. Wadsworth, New York, deputy United States representative to the UN; Mrs. Oswald B. Lord, New York, United States representative on the Human Rights Commission of the UN Economic and Social Council (UNESCO, and Ade M. Johnson, of Tacoma, director of the Washington State Department of Labor and Industry.

Lodge, Wadsworth and Mrs. Lord have served previously on the 10-member team, as President Eisenhower and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles prefer to call the delegation.

REP. ALBERT P. MORANO, (Rep., Conn.), has appointed Dorothy M. Jackson, of Stamford, to run his Greenwich (Connecticut) office.

Wilkins attends cabinet meeting

COLORED VISITORS are making a steadier trek to the White House than ever before in the history of the country.

Mr. Lautier

F'rinstance: J. Ernest Wilkins, assistant secretary of labor for International Affairs, and Dr. Frank M. Snowden, newly appointed cultural attache for the U.S. Information Agency in the American Embassy at Rome (Italy), had the spotlight at the White House Wednesday morning.

Wilkins attended the President's Cabinet meeting in place of his boss, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who was out of town. That was the first time a colored person has ever sat in on a Cabinet meeting.

WILKINS WAS in Chicago when he got a long distance telephone call late Tuesday asking him to fly back to Washington for the meeting.

Usually, reporters sitting in the White House lobby waiting to talk with any visitor who sees the President, get only a fleeting glimpse of one or two Cabinet members as they cross the back of the lobby which is off - limits to reporters except when they are going into the President's or an aide's office.

Cabinet members usually avoid reporters by using the side doors. But on Wednesday morning, Jim Hagerty, White House press secretary, arranged to have some of them come through the lobby with Wilkins after the Cabinet meeting.

WILKINS STOPPED in the off-limits part of the lobby to talk with Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield, Bernard Shanley, the President's counsel, and Maxwell M. Rabb, associate counsel and secretary to the Cabinet.

Waiting for him in the outer lobby and chatting amiably with reporters were Vice President Richard M. Nixon, Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. and Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of health, education and welfare.

When Wilkins finished talking, he and Summerfield joined the other Cabinet members and the five of them posed for photographers on the White House steps.

After the picture - taking was over, the television and motion - picture cameramen had him to walk to the microphones set up in front of the White House and make brief remarks concerning the Cabinet meeting.

— o O o —

YOU CAN bet dollars to doughnuts that nothing like that ever happened at the White House before.

Later, Snowden, accompanied by Sidney Fine, public relations director at the U.S. Information Agency, came in to see Hagerty.

The week was a busy one for President Eisenhower. He flew to New York City Tuesday morning to register to vote in the September primary and the November elections. Flying immediately back to Washington, he held a news conference that afternoon.

The news conference was moved up from Wednesday to Tuesday so that the President could meet with both his Cabinet and the National Security Council. Security Council meetings are usually held on Thursdays and Cabinet meetings on Fridays. But Mr. Eisenhower was flying to Springfield (Illinois) Thursday for Republican Day at the State Fair and later motoring to Evanston for a speech at Northwestern.

CONSEQUENTLY, Snowden didn't get to see Mr. Eisenhower, but Hagerty extended to him the President's congratulations and best wishes.

After Hagerty and Snowden were through talking, they also came out and posed for the photographers, television and the newsreels on the White House steps.

Incidentally, Snowden is the son of Col. Frank M. Snowden Sr., retired Army Quartermaster Corps officers, who served during World War II at Fort Lee (Virginia).

The colonel, a Boston real estate operator, is a Republican leader in the Hub City and had a standing O.K. for anything Frank Jr., wanted. Frank Jr. also was at Harvard with Rabb. Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce, Ambassador to Italy, asked for his appointment.

— o O o —

OTHER RECENT White House visitors included Leonard Evans Jr., of Chicago, president of the National Negro Network, Inc., and the Rev. William H. Jernigan, minister. Evans was accompanied by E. Frederick Morrow, adviser on business affairs for the National Production Authority, Commerce Department, and the Rev. Mr. Jernigan by Joseph Ray, race relations adviser, Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Brigadier General Richard (Dick) Jones, retired Illinois National Guard officer, now vice president of the South Center Department store in Chicago, has been cleared to succeed Dr. John W. Davis, retired president of West Virginia State College, as director of the United States Foreign Operations Mission in Liberia.

Wilkins has bought a Washington home at 4708 Blagden terrace northwest, just off Sixteenth street.

'I certainly enjoyed observing the President preside over the Cabinet. Obviously he had matters well in hand and understood the items on the agenda for the Cabinet meeting."

He added that he had enjoyed the observations made by all Cabinet members on the matters on the agenda.

Mr. Wilkins attended the Cabinet meeting in place of Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, who was out of the city.

FHA aide under fire

Alpha Phi Alpha brothers reportedly are locked horns with a number of ministers over A. Maceo Smith, the Apes' president and race relations officers for the southwestern region of the Federal Housing Administration, Dallas (Texas).

Mr. Lautier

The ministers want Smith ousted from his Government job because of his indorsement of a whiskey appearing in a newspaper advertisement. Joseph Ray, race relations adviser in the Housing and Home Finance Agency, and an ardent Baptist layman, has been carrying the fight for the ministers. FHA Commissioner Norman Mason agreed with Ray sent for Smith and asked for his resignation. Smith, who was in town Friday, said he will not resign because his job is under civil service. He has been a Government employee for seventeen years.

PERRY W. HOWARD, Republican National Committeeman for Mississippi and S. W. Miller, chairman of his state Republican organization, discussed Mississippi patronage arrangements the other day with Leonard W. Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee.

Mississippi patronage has not yet been turned over to Howard and his organization. Eisenhower Democrats have had in their bid, and the Republican National Committee has been interested in working out a deal which would be satisfactory to Howard and his black-and-tan group and also the Eisenhower Democrats.

To complicate the situation there is also the lily-white faction, which is opposed to any recognition of Howard and the black-and-tan wing of the party in Mississippi.

JOHNNY WHITE owner of the Gotham Hotel in Detroit and well known in sporting circles plans to carry to the United States Supreme Court his conviction for contempt of court for refusing to answer questions before a one - man Wayne County (Michigan) grand jury without benefit of counsel — unless the Michigan Supreme Court grants him a new trial.

Louis Mitchell who took a jazz band to Paris around 1913 and later ran a cafe over there which was patronized by celebrities from the United States and England, including the Prince of Wales, believes that he has grounds for a suit against the Columbia Broadcasting System.

CBS televised the other Sunday a program, "You Were There," purporting to give the history of jazz. Mitchell claims that he introduced jazz to New York City before the New Orleans Dixieland Band ever left the honky-tonks of the Crescent City.

IN ITS story of jazz in which Louis Armstrong was featured, CBS had someone to impersonate Mitchell as the trap-drummer who introduced jazz to Parisians, without getting his consent. Mitchell now wants some dough from CBS.

Raises queries in bribe case

BRIBERY OF cops is a serious offense, but the police pay - off scandal here has not yet been proved.

The Government avoided tipping its hand as to the evidence it has by getting Commissioner Cyril Lawrence to postpone for three weeks the preliminary hearing to which the thirteen suspected gamblers and two cops were entitled and getting immediate indictments against them.

Mr. Lautier

Capt. John B. Monroe suspended commanding officer of the Twelfth Precinct, Probationary Detective George C. Prather, suspended from his duties at the Thirteenth Precinct, and the gamblers are yet to have their day in court.

A PAY-OFF OF $10,311 in protection money was allegedly made, $300 of which went to Monroe and the rest was accepted by Police Lieut. Todd O. Thoman, gambling squad officer, assigned for ten months to gethering evidence in the case.

If the gamblers offered the bribes and Thoman accepted them, did the fact that his superiors authorized him to do so and pretend to Monroe, Prather and the gamblers that he was giving them protection give him immunity from a charge of accepting bribes?

Were the gamblers entrapped? That is, were they led into make the payments for protection through police strategy and deciet to bring about their arrests?

There also are other questions which the arrests and indictments raise.

— o O o —

MEN HAVE gambled ever since before the birth of Christ. The emperors of the Holy Roman Empire shot dice. Perhaps gambling nowadays among both men and women is more widespread than ever before in the history of the world.

F'instance: The total revenue to the states from horse racing in 1952 — the latest available figures — was $142,489,696. Figures on pari - mutuel betting are not available, but a rough guess is they would approximate a half billion dollars a year.

If it is legal to bet through a machine at Maryland tracks, why shouldn't it be legal to place a bet with a bookmeker in Washington, saving the time and expense of a trip to Laurel, Pimlico or Bowie?

— o O o —

IF WHITE MEN in their clubs can play poker, what makes it wrong for a colored person to place a nickle or dime bet on a number at odds of 600 to 1.

At least two Presidents, Harry Truman and Warren G. Harding, and a Vice President, J. Nance Garner, were noted for their poker-playing ability.

If Roger Simkins, Joe Hurd, Left Winston, Charley Anderson, Burnie King, Bozo Taylor and Joe Chase are taken out of circulation, who will take over the numbers game in the U St. sector. Will it be white bankers? That is what has happened in Chicago and other cities.

The fast money boys are saying Thoman is racially prejudiced. Maybe he is and an is racially prejudiced. Maybe he is or

— o O o —

ONE OTHER ANGLE is the relation of the trap set for Monroe and his testimony during the 1952 Senate investigation of gambling in Washington.

Monroe was promoted to captain December 6, 1951, and detailed to the gambling and liquor squad. While he was a lieutenant under Capt. William T. Murphy at the Fourteenth Precinct, he and Sergt. James Beach arrested William Whitehead in the latter's car at Thirty - fourth street and Benning Road, Northeast.

They found on Whitehead $1,291 in cash, some numbers slips and adding machine tapes.

Monroe testified before the Senate crime investigating committee that Murphy reprimanded him severely for arresting Whitehead, cursed him, called him dumb and ignorant, and told him he had used poor judgment.

MONROE ALSO testified — and here's the rub — that it was the general feeling in the Police Department that if a cop arrested certain gamblers, they would get transferred to an undesirable assignment.

Is there any relation between Monroe's testimony in 1952 and the trap set for him, Prather and the suspected gamblers in 1953 and sprung in 1954?

Answers to all of these questions will most likely be brought out at the trials, but, meanwhile, District of Columbia officials might ponder the advantages of legalizing gambling against the disadvantages. There's nothing morally wrong in gambling.

WASHINGTON. — The one suggestion on which there is almost unanimous agreement in the 14 briefs filed in the Supreme Court on the questions of how and when the decision against segregation in public schools shall be put into effect is that the five cases be remanded to the lower courts.

But even on this question there is some disagreement and widespread disagreement on the question of what specific instructions the court should issue to the lower courts in remanding the cases.

Louis Lautier

All of the parties to the five suits have filed briefs. The NAACP filed a consolidated brief in the Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware cases.

George E. C. Hayes and James M. Nabrit, Jr., attorneys for the appellants, and Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West, representing the Board of Education, have filed their briefs in the District of Columbia case.

Two briefs have been filed in the Kansas case—one by Attorney General Harold R. Fatzer for the State of Kansas and the other by Peter F. Caldwell, attorney for the Topeka Board of Education, the appellees.

Briefs for the appellees also have been filed in the Virginia and South Carolina cases and for the appellants in the Delaware case. The (NAACP won the Delaware case in Delaware courts, and the State is the appellant in that case.)

Attorney General Herbert R. Brownell filed a brief for the United States as a friend of the court in all five cases.

In addition, briefs as friends of the court have been filed by the Attorneys General of Arkansas, Florida, Maryland, North Carolina and Oklahoma, and by the American Veterans Committee.

Points of agreement and disagreement on the question of remanding the cases follow:

South Carolina favors remand.

The Topeka Board of Education says problems of integration in its elementary schools are being satisfactorily solved, and there is no need for the Supreme Court to issue a specific decree directing the particular steps to be taken to end segregation in Topeka schools.

Attorney General Fatzer of Kansas says it is not necessary for the court to do more than reverse the judgement of the Federal District Court and remand the Kansas case with directions to enter judgment consistent with the decision and retain jurisdiction until the judgment is compiled with.

The State of Virginia says the Prince Edward County case should be remanded to the Federal District Court at Richmond and the mandate should contain only general directions.

The AVC urges that the cases be remanded with directions and that the lower courts should retain jurisdiction.

Attorneys Hayes and Nabrit argue that the court should forthwith order desegregation of District of Columbia public schools. If, however, it should decide to permit a gradual changeover from a dual to a nonsegregated system, it should remand the District of Columbia case to the district court with specific instructions.

Corporation Counsel West insists that upon completion of the timetable for desegregating District of Columbia public schools in the very near future, the case will be completely moot and there will be no necessity for even the remand of the case to the District Court.

Thurgood Marshall and associate counsel for the NAACP argues that the court should enter decrees requiring desegregation as quickly as administrative and mechanical changes can be accomplished.

If the court should decide that an effective gradual adjustment should be made, they say, it should remand the cases to the lower courts with specific directions to complete desegregation by a day certain.

The state of Texas asserts that the court should permit the states to adjust gradually. It favors remand of the cases to the lower courts with instructions to enter decrees implementing the "principles" of the May 17 decision.

The state of Delaware suggests that the decree of the Delaware Chancery Court, as affirmed by the Delaware Supreme Court, be affirmed. It says the other cases should be remanded with instructions to enter decrees ordering the admission of the colored plaintiffs to public schools without regard to race as soon as practicable within a time limit set by the court.

The state of North Carolina says the people of North Carolina are entitled to the entry of a decree that will not "seriously impair or destroy" their public schools.

Arkansas urges that the cases be remanded to permit gradual integration but prefers that the court urgently invite the Congress to take "appropriate action" to solve the problem.

Attorney General E. D. Rollins of Maryland favors gradualism and recommends remand of the cases to lower courts to frame decrees, and with specific instructions as to methods and time of compliance which should be determined by the lower courts in the light of local conditions.

Oklahoma says the court should consider the financial problems of states in determining when and how segregation in public schools shall be ended. Oklahoma has a dual system of taxation — one for the white schools and another for the colored schools. Remedial legislation is necessary to change to a single system of taxation for school purposes. Such legislation will be provided by June 30, 1955.

Florida favors remand to the lower courts with general directions.

Attorney General Brownell suggests that the court enter decrees (1) declaring that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and that all provisions of law compelling or permitting such segregation are invalid, and (2) remanding the cases to the lower courts with specific instructions:

1. To enter orders directing the defendants to submit within ninety days a plan for ending, as soon as feasible, racial segregation in public schools.

2. To order admission of colored children to nonsegregated public schools at the beginning of the next school term, unless a satisfactory plan is submitted and approved.

3. To sanction no plan which does not call for the immediate initiation of procedures necessary to end segregation.

4. To require the defendants to submit periodic reports showing the progress made in ending segregation.

5. That the Supreme Court itself retain jurisdiction and require the lower courts to submit information reports at specified intervals showing in detail the actions taken in bringing about compliance with the decision.

Mr. Brownell also suggests the appointment of a special master to review such reports and make recommendations to the Supreme Court and the lower courts.

Tid-Bits From Washington

by LOUIS LAUTIER

For the NNPA News Service

WASHINGTON. — Attorney General Herbert J. Brownell, Jr., deserves praise for the briefs filed for the United States in the five school segregation cases before the Supreme Court, but it should be noted that he acted at the direction of President Eisenhower.

If Mr. Eisenhower had not wanted his Attorney General to participate in the Thompson restaurant and the school segregation cases, Mr. Brownell would have filed no brief, nor would Assistant Attorney General J. Lee Rankin have participated in the oral argument a year ago.

The same observation holds true with respect to the briefs filed by former Attorneys General Howard McGrath and James P. McGranery and former Solicitor General Philip B. Perlman during the Truman administration.

File in Henderson Case

McGrath and Perlman not only filed a brief in the Elmer Henderson case involving discrimination in service on railroad dining cars, but they both took part in the oral argument.

Perlman also filed briefs for the United States as a friend of the court in the Sweatt and McLaurin cases. He also intervened in the racial restrictive covenant cases, both through filing a brief for the United States as a friend of the court and presenting oral arguments.

So far as the records show, the covenant cases were the first time the Federal Government intervened in a case to which it was not a party and in which its sole purpose was the vindication of rights guaranteed by the Fifth and Fourteenth amendments.

Presidents Behind Acts

But the point is that neither Attorney General Brownell, without the sanction of President Eisenhower, nor former Solicitor General Perlman, without the sanction of former President Truman, would have acted in any of these cases.

Back in 1951, a Georgia Congressman, Prince E. Preston, sought to put Perlman on the spot during hearings on Justice department appropriations because Perlman had not supported the position of the Interstate Commerce Commission in the Henderson case.

Perlman took full responsibility for deciding that the position of the ICC was unsound and to file a brief in the supreme court in opposition to that position.

Acted 10 Years Ago

The Justice department ten years previously had done the same thing—rejected the position of the ICC and supported that of ex-Representative Arthur W. Mitchell. The Mitchell case involved discrimination in the use of first-class accommodations by Mitchell, who held a ticket for first-class travel from Chicago to Hot Springs. He was not allowed to occupy a Pullman seat between Memphis and Hot Springs.

George E. C. Hayes and Belford Lawson, attorneys for Mrs. Carol Williston, suspended medical social service director at Freedmen's hospital, have filed a written argument in her behalf with the security-risk board of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which hears her case.

Incidentally, the loyalty case of Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, a suspended clerical employee of the Army Signal Corps, is still pending before the Secretary of the Army. Unconfirmed rumors are to the effect that the case has been decided adversely to her.

Not Within Elks Law

Perry W. Howard, Elks' grand legal adviser, has advised Bob Johnson of Philadelphia, Elks' grand exalted ruler, that charges of libel filed against Ernest H. Copeland of Philadelphia by Trezzvant Anderson, a newsman, do not come within Elks' laws and should not be sent to an Elks' trial board.

Hobson Reynolds, grand director of the Elks' civil liberties department, shot for, but missed, a big political appointment under the Eisenhower Administration. Reynolds had the backing of Sen. James H. Duff, Republican, of Pennsylvania.

District of Columbia Commissioner Samuel Spencer has reconsidered and accepted an invitation to welcome the Kappas to the city for their annual conclave at a public meeting in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel at Howard university on the night of December 28.

Val Washington, assistant to the chairman of the Republican Committee, who has been away from his desk in Republican headquarters here since before the November 2 election, returned Tuesday.

The Joint Committee of Press, Radio and Television Correspondents and News Photographers are giving a luncheon in honor of His Majesty the Shah of Iran and Her Highness Queen Serava in the Ball Room of Hotel Willard on Tuesday, Dec. 14.

School Decision Top News Event

By LOUIS LAUTIER

For the NNPA News Service

The ten best stories of 1954, selected by the NNPA News Service, were:

1. The unanimous Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public education.

2. The voluntary desegregation of public schools, wholly or partially, in the District of Columbia, Baltimore, and other communities in border states and other areas where racial segregation was the rule prior to the court decision of May 17.

3. The hearing given Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, twice suspended employe of the Army Signal Corps, by the Senate Permanent Investigating subcommittee, at which she denied she had ever been a Communist and two Democrats, Senators John L. McClellan of Arkansas and Stuart Symington of Missouri, challenged the methods of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, of Wisconsin, committee chairman, and Roy Cohn, committee counsel, in branding individuals as Communists on hearsay evidence.

4. The three-day state visit of President William V. S. Tubman of Liberia to Washington at the invitation of President Eisenhower.

5. Discovery of the theft from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing by James Rufus Landis, an employe, of $160,000 in new currency, of which $27,328 has never been recovered.

6. The report of Howard Hosmer, an examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission, urging the ICC to find that the practices of railroads in maintaining Jim Crow waiting rooms in their station and assigning or directing colored interstate passengers to Jim Crow coaches violate the Interstate Commerce Act.

7. The election of Charles C. Diggs, Jr., 32-year-old Democrat, of Detroit, to Congress from the thirteenth Michigan district.

8. The testimony of Albert I. Cassell, former Howard university architect, before the Senate Banking Committee investigating scandals in the Federal Housing Administration that Clyde L. Powell, ousted FHA official, had demanded and got $10,000 in cash for approving an FHA-insured mortgage increase on Mayfair Mansions and that Elder Lightfoot Solomon Michaux and the Gospel Spreading Association had allegedly defrauded Cassell of his $600,000 interest in the housing project for $30,000.

9. Disclosure by the Justice Department that Joe Louis had been paid $150,000 to resign his title of heavyweight boxing champion of the world and procure contracts for the exclusive services of the four leading heavyweight contenders—Jersey Joe Walcott, Ezzard Charles, Lee Savold, and Gus Lesnevich—and assign the contracts to the International Boxing Club, which promoted an elimination contest to choose his successor.

10. The brilliant play of Willie Mays, New York Giants centerfielder, which took the starch out of the Cleveland Indians in the World Series.

Elks Foundation

The Elks were once noted for their charity. One of the purposes of the order is to teach the principles of charity, justice, brotherly love and fidelity.

Mr. Lautier

At their Chicago convention the Elks adopted a resolution creating the "Elks Foundation." The purpose of the foundation is to expand and perpetuate the Elks' programs of education, health and economics, "and any other program for the advancement of all peoples not contrary to the grand odge or functions of the said foundation."

— o O o —

THE FOUNDATION is to be directed by seven trustees, the majority of whom are to be Elks' grand lodge officers. The resolution made Bob Johnson, Elks' grand exalted ruler, the foundation's director for a term of ten years. All other trustees are to serve staggered terms.

The trustee board is made self-perpetuating. The original trustees are to be appointed by Johnson and are required to meet within ninety days from August 26.

The resolution gave the foundation power "to receive donations from all honorable sources."

— o O o —

TO CREATE an immediate fund the grand lodge financial officers are authorized, with Johnson's approval, to approriate and transfer an initial amount of $50,000 to $100,000 from such grand lodge funds as are available.

Two reports reach this column:

1. The purpose of offering for sale the seven-story, brownsptone Monterey Apartments, located at 461 West 114th St., New York City, and containing thirty-six units, from which the Elks' treasury receives a net income of about $10,000 a year, is to raise funds for the initial capital of the foundation.

2. Elks' officers plan to beg $1,000,000 from philanthropic whites to endow their foundation.

The Internal Revenue Service lists more than 30,000 taxexempt organizations. The number of them which can be classed as foundations varies according to the definition of a foundation. Estimates range as high as 32,500 under the broadest possible definition.

For those organizations having a permanent endowment of $50,000 or more and embarked upon a program of philanthropic giving (not that the Elks Foundation will not have any such program), the estimate is slightly more than 1,000 with total assets of about $2,600,000,000.

— o O o —

THE ELKS may have their choice of fields. Foundations operate and supply the risk or venture capital in the fields of education, medicine, public health, the natural sciences, international relations, public administration and government, the humanities, race relations, the arts, recreation and economics.

The John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation restricts itself to the granting of fellowships to individuals.

The Ford Foundation has made the promotion of peace one of its major objectives.

The Rockefeller Foundation has spent its funds for the benefit of mankind throughout the world.

The larger foundations consider themselves to be public trusts and as such are accountable to the public, and the public is informed in detail about their resources, income, expenditures, personnel and programs.

In other words—foundations should not only operate in a goldfish bowl—they should operate with glass pockets.

— o O o —

SMALLER foundations opose public disclosure of their expenditures.

The House Select Committee which investigated foundations during the 83d Congress recommended that the amounts contributed to foundations and the names of contributors should be disclosed to the Internal Revenue Service so that the public will be in position to determine whether tax-exempt moneys are being used for the purpose for which these organizations were created.

Incidentally, the committee which submitted the resolution creating the Elks Foundation consisted of Hobson R. Reynolds, chairman, Philadelphia; Grand Exalted Ruler Johnson; William C. Huestion grand secretary; Judge Perry B. Jackson, Cleveland, grand treasurer; Perry W. Howard, grand legal adviser; Herbert Jones, Grand organizer, and Charles McClane, Steelton, Pa., grand director of public relations.

He dissents in Smith case

Mr. Lautier

I have been given a round-by-round description of the fight between Ray and those who agree with him on one side, and those who are fighting the battle for Smith on the other side.

Here are a few conclusions:

If any preachers complained to Ray about Smith's indorsing a whiskey and permitting his photograph to appear in an advertisement of his indorsement, they ought to have the nerve to say they did so.

— o O o —

THE NAACP, the American Council on Human Rights, and the Congress of Industrial Organizations, who are fighting for Smith to retain his job, are not impartial witnesses.

Smith is a member of the national board of directors of the NAACP, and the Alphas recently took out a $500 life membership for him.

The Human Rights Council gets a portion of the dough it uses for salaries and expenses from the Alphas. In fact, if the Alphas were to pull out, it is doubtful whether the council could continue.

The CIO is hostile to the Eisenhower Administration.

— o O o —

IN ITS TELEGRAM urging FHA not to force Smith to resign, the NAACP distorted the facts. The NAACP press release of Sept. 16 said FHA had asked Smith to resign "because he was listed in a national magazine advertisement as a 'man of distinction.' "

The reason Norman Mason, Federal Housing Commissioner, asked Smith to resign was because of his liquor indorsement and use of his photograph in the ad.

The NAACP parent body — not Thurgood Marshall's NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund — more and more is becoming the National Association for the Advancement of Certain People.

It rushed to the defense of Dr. Channing Tobias, Dr. Ralph Bunche and Smith, all of whom are quite capable of defending themselves.

But nowhere does it appear that it came to the aid of Annie Lee Moss, defenseless woman and suspended $3,300-a-year Signal Corps clerk, who has arrayed against her the powerful FBI, Military Intelligence, and Senator Joseph R. McCarthy.

— o O o —

AS IT LOOKS from here, Smith should be given an administrative reprimand or charges should be preferred against him under Civil Service rules, if he does not voluntarily resign.

But the one to decide whether Smith should receive a reprimand or have charges brought against him is Mason.

The advertisement in question had no connection with Smith's FHA job. That is to say, it had nothing to do with the breakdown of integrity in the FHA due to the receipt of gratuities by employees from builders and others doing business with FHA.

But there is a question of propriety and suitability involved. Under existing executive orders, alcholics and homosexuals are classed as security risks.

— o O o —

(I KNOW OF one case where the Civil Service Commission rejected a woman applicant for Government employment because she had a male roomer who slept in the hallway of her apartment.)

In considering Smith's case, Mason might consider the types of action taken in cases of FHA employees involved in the investigation of his agency.

Some were removed from the service as a result of the investigation. Others against whom there were serious charges were put on involuntary annual leave pending the development of the evidence against them and formal disciplinary action under Civil Service rules.

In other cases, employees against whom less serious charges had been made were allowed to stay on duty pending completion of the investigation.

Dr. Davis prepares report

DR. JOHN W. DAVIS, retired president of West Virginia State College, who recently returned from Liberia where he headed the United States Operations Mission, is putting the finishing touches on reports covering the technical assistance (Point 4) program in the West African republic.

As soon as he completes his work, he will enter either Walter Reed or the Bethesda Naval Hospital for a check-up to find out whether he brought back with him any African germs. After leaving the hospital he will go on annual leave to round out his two years of service.

Mr. Lautier

Editorial P.

Dr. Davis and his family will make their home at Englewood (New Jersey).

— o O o —

ASIDE FROM being the wife of Dr. Davis, Mrs. Davis, the former Ethel E. McGhee, is prominent in her own right. She was dean of women at Spelman College in Atlanta when they were married in 1932. She is a graduate of Spelman, Oberlin, New York School of Social Work, and Columbia University.

At Charleston (West Virginia), she was active in the councils of the Girl Scouts of America and several other community programs.

The Davises have three daughters. The two older ones, by his first wife, the late Bessie Rucker of Atlanta, are teachers—Mrs. Constance Welch in Langston, Okla.; and Mrs. Dorothy McDaniel in Memphis, Tenn. A younger daughter, Caroline (Dash), is a student at Oberlin.

On their return from Monrovia, Mrs Davis and "Dash" visited England, the Mediterranean coast, Italy, France and Switzerland.

— o O o —

IT'S HARD for me to remember when I didn't know Dr. Davis. Our relationship has always been most cordial. But the other day when I dropped in on him at his office in the Foreign Operations Administration to interview him about his observations and experiences in Liberia in connection with the state visit here, beginning October 18, he refused to talk.

He did not want to say anything that might be misunderstood because of the stories which had preceded him back home. Those stories were to the effect that the Eisenhower admisistration had fired him.

Nothing was further from the truth. Dr. Davis took the job only for a two-year period. That period is about ended now. But Dr. Davis has agreed to hold himself in readiness to be of service if he is again needed.

"Somebody has got to be ready to serve — whether it's a Democratic or a Republican administration," he remarked.

— o O o —

DICK JONES, the Chicagoan, who succeeded Dr. Davis as head of the U.S. program in Liberia, will probably arrive back in the States several days before President William V. S. Tubman lands in New York City on October 16. Tubman left Monrovia by boat on October 3. Jones will fly back.

Miss Janie McCants Henderson, of Detroit, a government secretary, left Monday for Tripoli, one of the two capitals of Libya, former Italian colony in North Africa, which is now an independent country. She will serve as a secretary with the United States Operations Mission in Libya.

Miss Henderson flew from New York to Rome, and from Rome to Tripoli. Incidentally, the United States Legation at Tripoli was recently raised to an Embassy.

— o O o —

MISS HENDERSON has been in Government for about eleven years. She was employed in the office of the Army Quartermaster General for about seven years. She also has worked in the Civilian Production Board, the Census Bureau, the Treasury Department, and the War Production Board.

Carol Williston, the wife of Dr. Tom Williston, has been suspended from her job as a social worker at Freedmen's Hospital in a hush-hush proceedings. She is the daughter of the late Dr. Simeon L. Carson. The name of her husband has kept bobbing up for several years at hearings before the House Un-American Activities Committee.

The District of Columbia Commissioners may pass any day now on the appeal of Sebrone King, a cop attached to No. 12, whom a Police Trial Board fined $200 on a charge of interfering with another cop who was trying to arrest Joel Clark on a charge of disorderly conduct.

WASHINGTON. — Although the social security system started as a security measure for workers who did not have jobs, it has become a universal program of compulsory insurance.

Louis Lautier.

It particularly benefits colored people because a great majority of them are in the low- and middle-income brackets and the protection afforded by the program is adequate enough, when added to savings and assets normally accumulated, so that most beneficiaries will not have to apply for public assistance for the ordinary expenses of living.

Colored people, therefore, should acquaint themselves with the program.

The Social Security Act of 1954 changes the method for computing monthly wage, on which the primary insurance amount—the amount of every dependent's and survivor's benefits—is based.

Earnings Affect Benefits

The maintenance of a relationship between the individual's earnings and the benefits he receives is a cornerstone of the old-age and survivors' insurance system.

For individuals who qualify for benefits after Sept. 1, 1954, or who meet certain other conditions after that date, up to five years in which their earnings were lowest, or nonexistent, will be eliminated from the computation of the average monthly wage.

In general, every individual who first qualified for benefits, or who had at least six quarters of coverage after June, 1953, which means that the sixth quarter of coverage must be earned after September, 1954, or who qualified for certain benefit recomputations after Sept. 1, can eliminate up to four years of lowest or no earnings from the computation.

Drop Low Years

The "dropout" of years of low earnings will benefit both those individuals to whom coverage was extended by the 1954 Social Security Act, and those who were covered in the past.

Without such a provision, individuals first brought under coverage on January 1, 1955, would be under a severe handicap because all the months in the years from 1951 to 1954, inclusive, during which they had no covered earnings, would be included as divisor months in computing their average monthly wage.

Under the change, as the newly covered qualify for benefits, their benefits will be based entirely on their covered earnings after 1954.

After five years of work in covered employment, they can drop an additional year, which would be the year in which their covered earnings were lowest.

Won't Reduce Benefits

Individuals who were already covered by the program will also be able to drop the four or five years of lowest or no covered earnings whenever they occurred.

Years in which their earnings were low because of short periods of sickness or unemployment will no longer reduce their average monthly wage and benefit amount.

The "drop-out" proposal is thus also of material advantage to the persons who have been contributing to the program for longer periods of time.

As an illustration, take a worker who is newly covered by the 1954 Social Security Act. His coverage starts January 1, 1955. In general, under the law before the 1954 amendments, all the period subsequent to 1950 was used in computing an individual's average monthly earnings, except for those workers who find it an advantage to go back to 1936.

Assume that this worker earns, on an average, between $200 and $300 a month. Since benefits, in general, are computed on average earnings after 1950, his coverage starting in 1950 leaves four years in which he has no covered earnings.

The "drop-out" provision allows him to drop out those four years with no covered earnings. Then he could also drop out an additional year, if he had twenty quarters of coverage, and that will be a year of low or no income.

With the "drop-out" provision, which avoids the necessity of a new start, his average monthly earnings up to 1967 would be $276, as against $209 without it.

As the other illustration, take a worker who was covered at the time the 1954 amendments were adopted and generally earned between $200 and $300 a month. But in the later years of his life he could not work full time and his earnings were reduced.

He can drop out five years of low earnings. Then his earnings would be computed with that five year drop-out.

Without the drop-out, his average monthly earnings would be $226, but with the drop-out, they would be $263.

Thus, the drop-out provision brings the average monthly earnings in much closer relationship to what an individual's earnings really were during his working lifetime.

Finds Wilkins not the first

THE APPOINTMENT of J. Ernest Wilkins, a Chicago lawyer, as Assistant Secretary of Labor for International Affairs, is an excellent one. It is one of those happy coincidences where the job and the man fit each other.

Mr. Lautier

But it is not detracting from the appointment, nor is it derogatory to Wilkins, to say that he, Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell, and James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, were in error when they said he was the first colored person to be named to a sub-cabinet post.

Since the dispute came up at the press confer ence, Mitchell called to introduce Wilkins to the press—and a reporter quoted me as authority for the statement that a colored person had previously been a member of the "Little Cabinet," I checked to find out whether I was in error.

Checks The Record

The Congressional Directory, 62d Congress, 2d Session, December, 1911, listed William H. Lewis as an Assistant Attorney General of the United States. It gave his residence as 1744 K st., northwest.

Lewis, a Boston lawyer, who had played center on the Harvard football team and had been chosen by Walter Camp as an All - American, was appointed by William Howard Taft. George W. Wickersham was the Attorney General at the time. Lewis was one of five Assistant Attorneys General.

The Congressional Record, 61st Congress, 3d Session, at page 3912, shows that when President Taft nominated Lewis on March 2, 1911, to be Assistant Attorney General in charge of Indian depredation claims, vice John G. Thompson, resigned.

That was in the days when Congresses automatically expired at midnight of March 3, every two years. Lewis was not confirmed by the 61st Congress.

Nominated Again

The Congressional Record, 62d Congress, First session, at page 51, shows that President Taft again nominated Lewis as an Assistant Attorney General on April 5, 1911, and at page 2025 that he was confirmed on June 14, 1911.

As commendatory as the Wilkins appointment is from the standpoint of both job and appointee, it set no precedent for President Eisenhower.

Nor does it top two appointments made by President Truman — the appointment of William H. Hastie as a judge of the Third United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and the appointment of Irvin C. Mollison, another Chicagoan, as a judge of the United States Customs Court.

Legislation recently passed by the Congress provides thirty additional Federal judgeships — three judgeships for United States Circuit Courts of Appeals and twenty seven Federal district judgeships.

Others Of Like Caliber

There are other colored lawyers of the caliber of Hastie, Mollison and Wilkins.

If President Eisenhower is to continue the policy of appointing persons to office on the basis of their qualifications, Chauncey Robbins, of Maine, the new head of the patronage division of the Republican National Committee, might give some of them the once over.

Meantime, Washington hears that the FBI is checking on a prominent Massachusetts chemist who is under consideration for a high post overseas.

On the debit side of the political ledger was the appointment of Thomas Ramage Ethridge, of Mississippi, to be United States Attorney for the northern district of Mississippi. Not only is he a Dixiecrat, but he is said to be a bitter anti - civil rights Dixiecrat.

Colored people in majority

IF ANYONE DOUBTS that two-thirds or three-fourths of the world's population is colored, all he needs to do is sit in the lobby of the White House and watch the foreign diplomats come and go.

Mr. Lautier

F'rinstance, the other day, R. S. S. Gunewardere, Ceylon Ambassador to the United States, came in to present his credentials to President Eisenhower. The Ceylonese is dark brown-skinned.

C. A. Scott, publisher of the Atlanta Daily World, was my guest at the White House Correspondents' Association Dinner for President Eisenhower at the Statler Hotel the other Saturday night. Last year Carl Murphy, publisher of the AFRO AMERICAN newspapers, was there. Next year another publisher will be invited.

Step Brothers On Program

The Four Step Brothers, a tap-dance team, was one of the big hits of the show at the dinner, with Milton Berle, Jaye P. Morgan, the McGuire Sisters, Irving Berlin and Sam Jack Kaufman's orchestra. The Step Brothers opened the show.

Although President Eisenhower was a speaker at the Freedom Fulfillment Conference, sponsored by the NAACP none of his colored appointees had been invited until, at the request of a person who asked that his name be not used, I got in touch with Henry Lee Moon, the NAACP publicity director, at 4 o'clock the afternoon before the conference.

As a result, invitations were telephoned to: Louis B. Toomer, Register of the Treasury; Scovel Richardson, a member of the Federal Parole Board; Vernon Green, an attorney in the Post Offict Department; Joseph Ray, race relations adviser in the Housing and Home Finance Agency;

Alexander Receives Bid

Archie Alexander, nominee for governor of the Virgin Islands; E. Frederic Morrow, adviser on business affairs, National Production Authority, Commerce Department; Dorey Lane, an attorney in the Foreign Operations Administration, the agency Harold Stassen is running;

Brig. General Benjamin O. Davis, a member of the American Battle Monuments Commission; Philip Sadler, a race relations adviser in the Public Housing Administration; Lois Lippman, secretary to Charles Willis, assistant to Sherman Adams, the Assistant to President Eisenhower, and Julia P. Cooper, a lawyer in the General Services Administration.

The list of names was given to me and I simply passed them on to Moon.

Binga Dismond, Sag Harbor (New York) medico, who was here for the NAACP conference, says a book of poetry he has written, "I Have Often Wondered," is due off the press in two months.

Reception For Luque Foche

Binga also said the Society of American Friends of Haiti is giving a reception for Luque Foche, Haitian Ambassador to the United Nations, at the home of the Daniel Jameses (Ruth Ellington) in New York City on Sunday, March 21.

Also here for the NAACP conference were Judge William H. Hastie of the Third United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Philadelphia; Ted Spaulding, a Philadelphia Municipal Court judge; McClinton Nunn, executive director of the Toledo Metropolitan Housing Authority;

A. Maceo Smith, Dallas (Texas), head of the Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity; Franklin H. Williams, San Francisco, secretary and counsel of the NAACP West Coast Region, and Mrs. Robert L. Vann, Pittsburgh publisher.

Issue Constitutional

The issue in the District of Columbia school segregation case, now pending in the Supreme Court, is not whether the Jim Crow schools here are equal to those for white children, or whether colored children are afforded equal educational opportunities.

The sole issue is whether, under the Fifth Amendment, segregated public schools here are unconstitutional.

All the debate over whether the schools are equal is academic. George Hayes and Jim Nabritt, attorneys in the D.C. case, conceded, for purposes of argument that the schools were equal in order to get a clear-cut decision on the segregation issue. Hayes and Nabritt knew what they were doing.

Naming of Wilkins milked

THE EISENHOWER ADMINISTRATION is milking the appointment of J. Ernest Wilkins as assistant secretary of labor for all it is worth politically. There has been more fanfare connected with it than with any other appointment, not excepting the appointment of the Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. Lautier

First, James C. Hagerty, White House press secretary, announced that President Eisenhower was sending Wilkins' nomination to the Senate. Then followed a press conference at the Labor Department at which both Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell and Wilkins spoke.

Usually swearing - in ceremonies are quiet affairs. The oath is administered, pictures are taken, and the appointee is congratulated.

No Routine Affair

But the Wilkins ceremony was no routine affair. A large audience, in response to invitations from the Republican National Committee and the appointee, was on hand.

Justice Harold H. Burton of the Supreme Court administered the oath. Then Mitchell and Wilkins again made speeches. Afterwards Justice Burton, Mitchell and Wilkins posed for the photographers and before the movie and television cameras.

A good delegation of Kappas was on hand. Wilkins is a past grand polemarch. Dr. W. Henry (Stud) Greene, present grand polemarch, and Archie A. Alexander, another past polemarch and recently appointed Governor of the Virgin Islands, were present.

Representing the White House was Maxie Rabb, associate counsel to President Eisenhower, who had a hand in Wilkins' selection as vice chairman of the President's Government Contracts Committee, service on which led Mitchell to recommend Wilkins' appointment to the President as Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Dr. Johnson Also Present

Also in the audience was Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard university; William P. Rogers, deputy attorney general, and George Meaney, president of the American Federation of Labor, who served on the Government Contracts Committee with Wilkins.

Stuart Rothman, solicitor of the Labor Department, is going to appoint as Labor Department lawyers a colored Chicago lawyer from the principal buyer of goods and services for the United States in the Far East.

He Likes His Job

"After a stint in Pusan, Korea (twelve months), with the Seventh Transportation Major Port, I came to the Japan Procurement Agency after eight months with the Joint Field Press Censorship Group in Tokyo. This is a swell job and quite to my liking.

"Yesterday (March 10) I talked with Capt. George Van Buren of Baltimore, an Japanese Procurement Agencf, which is ordnance officer who spent about eight years in Germany. Van came to Japan last January from the Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. and is now holding forth at the 229th Ordnance Depot at Tomoika, near Yokohama.

"A Washingtonian hereabouts that you may know is Captain Bert Cumby, whose wife is a school marm. Bert does most of his work in his room in the swank Dai Iti Hotel in downtown Tokyo. His business is CIC (Counter Intelligence Crops) and he is rated tops in his trade.

"Another Washingtonian is Golden Brown who is a civilian employed by the Army post office.

Ink Spots Packing 'Em In

"The Ink Spots are packing them in at the Latin Quarter in Tokyo. Nippon is a lucrative spot for the jazz dispensers. Recent visitors were the Globetrotters, the Infantry Choir and Glenn Settles' outfit. Yep, there's something out this way that is drawing 'em."

Capt. Cumby was the chief interviewer of the Communists' prisoners and won a number of them back to the Army.

Leake will get a fair hearing

IRONICALLY, A charge of race discrimination has been levelled against Stuart Rothman, Solicitor of the Labor Department.

Mr. Lautier

Secretary of Labor James P. Mitchell is no Johnny-Come-Lately in the field of fair employment practices.

During World War II he was director of the Industrial Personnel Division, Army Service Forces, at the Pentagon.

Judge William H. Hastie, who was the first civilian aide to the Secretary of War, and Truman K. Gibson Jr., his successor, referred all complaints of race and religious discrimination by the Army Service Forces and war production plants to him for investigation and report.

Rothman is from Minnesota. On the day that Williams took the oath of office, NNPA was tipped off that Rothman was appointing a colored lawyer from Chicago and a colored woman lawyer from New York and was seriously considering two more colored lawyers.

Two In Department Now

There are two colored lawyers in the Labor Department — Jimmy Leake and George Hilburn.

So much for background. Here's the story:

Feb. 19 — Rothman sent lawyers under him a questionnaire asking whether they had engaged in private practice and, if so, to furnish certain information about the cases they had handled.

Leake answered all questions — except one calling for the name, court, type of case, his client, and the dates of his appearances in court in private cases. He said he did not have records upon which to answer that question accurately.

Rothman called Leake into his office and ordered him to answer the question, taking any time off necessary. When Leake said he had no records of his outside cases, Rothman told him that if he could not give him the information, he would be happy to accept his resignation.

Feb. 23 — Leake requested the demand for his resignation in writing and in a memo to Mitchell charged Rothman with racial discrimination. Mitchell named Granville Grimes as the Department's alternate fair employment officer, making him directly responsible to the Secretary, and referred Leake's charges to him.

Grimes Handed Charges

In a formal complaint, Leake charged Rothman with racial discrimination in removing him from the position of "Prevailing Wage Attorney, Supervisor;" in refusing to assign him to the Trial Litigation Division, and in assigning him to the Legislation Division and transferring another employee to the Wage Determination Division.

Mar. 17 — Rothman filed charges against Leake. The first count was that Leake had been absent from duty on five different dates, on which he was engaged in hearings in divorce cases, without charging the time taken to his annual leave.

The second count charged him with refusing to furnish requested information about his private law practice.

Leake is a veteran and can only be demoted or fired upon charges after a hearing. He had until March 27 to file his answer to the charges.

Leake is a Democrat. His job is excepted from the competitive civil service. But whatever the merits of his or Rothman's charges — he can bet he will get a fair shake from Mitchell.

Jimmy was not the first

JUST TO KEEP the record straight: Jimmy Leake, Labor Department lawyer against whom charges are pending, is not the first colored lawyer employed by that agency.

Mr. Lautier

As far as can be ascertained, George W. Crockett, who defended one of the eleven top Communist leaders, was the first colored lawyer employed by the Labor Department and assigned to legal work.

If my memory serves me right, a colored lawyer from Baltimore worked with Phil Brown, a Kentuckian, who was appointed to a fairly high job by Secretary of Labor J. Davis during the Harding Administration.

Came From West Virginia

Crockett came here from West Virginia to take a legal post in the Labor Department in the late twenties or early thirties. He then went to Detroit and became a labor lawyer.

After a turbulent nine - month trial of the eleven top Communists, Crockett was one of the lawyers the trial judge found guilty of contempt and gave them various jail terms up to six months.

With the Republicans taking credit for all appointments made from messenger to Cabinet officer, there are a few they failed to mention.

These are technicians appointed by Harold E. Stassen, Foreign Operations Administrator, and assigned to overseas posts with United States Operations Missions as part of tre technical co-operation (Point 4) program:

Dr. Fluerney A. Coles Jr., of Philadelphia, has been assigned to the mission in Bonn, Germany, as an economics exports officer.

Graduate Of Xavier U.

Coles, born in Trenton, N. J., was graduated from Xavier university. He accepted a travelling fellowship to study postwar economic conditions in Italy from the University of Pennsylvania where he received the M.S. and Ph.D. degrees.

Recently he returned from a two - year assignment as U.S. Finance and Trade Officer in Thailand. His wife, the former Miss Pauline Garney Johnson of Philadelphia, and their 8-year-old son accompanied him to Germany.

Ernest Eugene Neal, of Chattanooga, Tenn., director of the rural life council at Tuskegee Institute, is to serve with the U.S. Operations Mission in New Delhi, India, as a community development adviser.

Holds B.S. And M.A. Degrees

He has the B.S. and M.A. degrees from Knoxville college and Fisk university, respectively, and attended the University of Michigan.

Dr. Arthur H. Webb of Chicago, assistant professor of bacteriology in the Howard University Medical School, is slated to join the mission in Ethiopia as laboratory director of the Gondar Public Health Training Center.

Miss Rosie Marcella Bryant, 607 East 63rd st., Chicago, has been assigned to the mission in Paris as a secretary.

VI governor built FHA project

ARCHIE ALEXANDER, Governor of the Virgin Islands and prominent engineer, teamed with Hilyard R. Robinson, the architect, in getting an FHA-insured mortgage loan, while Elder Solomon Lightfoot Michaux, the radio evangelist, and Albert I. Cassel, former Howard University achitect, did likewise.

Mr. Lautier

Mayfield Mansions, the Michaux and Cassell development, was one of the projects FHA listed as having been built between 1942 and 1946 with an FHA-insured mortgage of $2,860,705.

Other projects listed were:

George Washington Carver Apartments, Jeffress and Dyer, sponsors—section 1 with an FHA mortgage of $348,600.

Benning Heights, Inc., Smith, Gottlieb and Eisinger, sponsors—section 1, $652,700; section 2, $556,500; section 3, $231,400; section 4, $625,900; section 5, $175,600.

Other Projects Listed

Projects built since 1946 with FHA mortgages:

George Washington Carver, Philip Lindsay, Edward Richardson and Thelma E. Hill, sponsors, $110,700.

Paul Lawrence Dunbar Mutual Home Association, William H. Horton, Edward H. Alfred and Emmett W. Hurd, sponsors, $234,000.

Douglass Gardens, Inc., Chamberlin and Free, sponsors—section 1, $96,400; section 2, $266,500; section 3, $364,700; section 4, $153,000; section 5, $303,500.

Cedar Hill Gardens, Inc., Archibald Alexander and Hilyard R. Robinson, $1,231,200.

Mrs. Evelyn S. Baker, of NYC, is to serve with the United States Operations Mission in Saigon, Indo-China, as a relief and rehabilitation specialist.

Dr. Eubanks To Baghdad

Dr. John B. Eubanks, Baton Rouge (Louisiana), dean of Albany (Georgia) State College, is slated to join the U.S. Operations Mission in Baghdad, Iraq, as chief of the rural improvement staff.

Eubanks served as president of Jarvis College, Hawkins (Texas) from 1949-53. From 1946-49 he was professor of sociology at Morris Brown College in Atlanta. Earlier he was associated for five years with the YWCA as an educational and field secretary in Indianapolis and New York City, respectively.

Salary Omitted From Release

The Republican National Committee the other day sent out a full-page, single-spaced, mimeographed press release announcing the appointment of Ruth V. Washington of New York City as an attorney in the office of the Solicitor of the Labor Department.

What the release didn't state was Miss Washington's salary and grade. Reported by her salary will be $4,205 and her grade GS-7.

Dec. 18-4-54

A long, tall, life-size photograph of the ever-smiling Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., was reproduced on the hugh placards that were carried by the frantic Roosevelt supporters during the great demonstration for him last Tuesday at Democratic Convention in Manhattan. Printed on one side of the placard in bold type was the phrase "Eventually Why Not Now."

P. 5

A fiery, stem-winder with a booming voice, James J. McGuiness, started the hell-raising when he put young Roosevelt's name in nomination for Governor. For the next hour you couldn't hear yourself talk. I learned later that Roosevelt was directing the demonstration with a Walkie-Talkie from a small backroom off the convention platform.

Of all the speeches made in behalf of Roosevelt none was more stirring nor more enthusiastically received than that made by Leland Jones, jr., City Councilman from Buffalo, the only Negro to speak for him. Charging that Tammany bosses had ditched Roosevelt for Harriman, Jones raised the armory's roof when he declared: "Well, I say, if the bosses are going to dictate what the people are to have, then the people have got to say, "It is time we told them to shape up or ship out."

Standing on a chair in the press section I could see, even at the height of the Roosevelt demonstration, that his chances of getting the nomination for governor were next to nothing. The big blocs of delegates from the counties in New York City [illegible] still, some sm[illegible] but all resolut[illegible] fort to get [illegible] for Roosevelt.

In the press section you could hear all the reasons why Tammany Hall finally decided to back Harriman and put the squeeze on Junior. It was said that the bosses feared Roosevelt, that he could not be controlled if he won, that the Catholic vote or "50th Street" preferred Harriman, that the divorce records of the Roosevelts hurt him, that he had too many enemies and lacked appeal for conservatives in the party. In the view of the party chieftans Harriman had most of young Roosevelt's assets with very few of his liabilities. Despite their enhusiasm for Roosevelt at the top of the ticket, it was clear that most of the delegates also liked Harriman and that a tougher choice could not be put before them.

One of the biggest guns on Harriman's side, of course, was Manhattan Borough President Hulan Jack. He did for Harriman what Leland Jones did for Roosevelt, eloquently putting forth the best reasons why the convention should vote for his man. It was noted on press row that the two most stirring nomination speeches were made by Negroes, Jones on one side and Jack on the other.

The convention demonstrated one fact beyond all question, the biggest political wheel in New York Democratic politics today is neither the winner of the nomination for governor, Averell Harriman, nor the loser, Franklin Roosevelt. It is clearly none other than Carmine DeSapio, chief of Tammany Hall.

Credit must go to him finally in overcoming much of the partisan bitterness that developed between the Roosevelt and Harriman forces by getting Roosevelt to accept the nomination for Attorney General and creating a united Democracy front.

Those who campaigned for Roosevelt's nomination for governor all used the argument that only Roosevelt could win the election in November and many delegates shared this view. Few figured on a slate with both Roosevelt and Harriman. They did not believe that Roosevelt would hold still for a secondary spot but I believe that the pros knew it all along.

The Harriman-Roosevelt combination is a natural in many respects and to top it all, they are good friends with genuine respect for each other. Although the professionals are happy over their tickets, they are not underestimating the vote-getting ability of the GOP nominee for governor, Senator Irving Ives, nor the GOP nominee for Attorney General, Congressman Jacob Javits. Governor Tom Dewey is going to campaign for them too and for twleve years he has been the political master of New York state.

The November election in New York has plenty of national significance and all Democrats who cut their political teeth during the days of the New Deal may well wonder about the meaning of that phrase printed on Roosevelt's placards, "Eventually Why Not Now."

Will young Roosevelt one day sit in his daddy's chair in the White House?

The only vacant seat on Flight 582 to Chicago out of Memphis last Saturday morning was next to one occupied by Dr. George Schuman, top engineer for one of the divisions of the Henry Kaiser Industrial empire centered around the bay area near San Francisco. Along with Dr. Schuman the Constellation was full of engineers returning from a technical convention in Jackson, Miss.

Dr. Schuman is the first man I ever met who was born in Luxembourg, the little country made famous for tourist Americans by party-tossing Mrs. Perle Mesta who until recently represented the U. S. there. He is in his sixties, under aperage height, with a head full of steel-gray hair and a lifely, quick smile playing about his face as he talks with a little accent and a lot of gestures.

When I found out he was from the Kaiser clan I asked him about those forthy thousand cars that Henry Kaiser is supposed to build next year for Argentina. It turned out he had just returned from South America two weeks before and he was so full of his experiences that he talked about them for almost an hour non-stop.

The twenty-minute stop over in St. Louis we spent walking around the airport matching air-travel yearns and then I discovered why he was flying to Chicago from the deep South in order to get to his home in Oakland. Most flights go into San Francisco and the trip from the Frisco airport to his home in Oakland across the bay is time consuming.

It is much worse on Saturdays when there is a big football game at the University of California in Berkley. The Golden Gate bridge is jammed with football fans and according to Dr. Schuman, it would take him hours to get home by auto if he took any of the flights westward out of New Orleans or Memphis which all landed at Frisco.

Therefore he decided to save time by flying all the way north to Chicago where he could get a flight that dropped down at the Oakland airport and by so doing, of course, avoid the football crowd and traffic snarls between Frisco and his Oakland home.

No more illuminating commentary can be made on this dizzy, machine-made age than that offered by the prospect of a man flying clear across one side of the nation merely to duck a traffic jam.

In commenting on his sojourn in several South American countries, Dr. Schuman observed that the two greatest needs there are fresh investment capital and skilled manpower This is the universal story and I would include our own deep South. There just aren't any substitutes for dollars and trained brains.

Finally Dr. Schuman told me about a colored lad he added to his staff in the Kaiser works at a time when many of his colleagues were full of apprehensions over the step. After a few anxious weeks, the experiment was a success. The Negro lost his self-consciousness an the other members of the staff gradually became color blind.

As usual in so many of these cases, crossing the bridge is a lark compared to all the fear and frightfulness experienced getting up to it.

Tragedy struck after only six months, however, and the colored fellow became seriously ill and finally died. In this short period, nevertheless, the big job of eliminating color as a controversial factor in employment had been done. Dr. Schuman told how the lad's fellow workers organized on their own initiative a special cash fund for the widow although the company extended full insurance benefits.

It was obvious to me that Dr. Schuman was quite proud of his role in this successful human experiment. So far, human relations seem to be beyond the control of any science and successes in this field seem to follow no hard and fast formula. Here, therefore, was a real high spot in a wise man's life.

In some ways Dr. Schuman was not hard to figure out. I knew from the beginning he had learned the age-old secret, the closest thing to a scientific rule, in human relations: That is, you get back what you are ready to give; smile and the world smiles with you.

Defender Chicago, Ill.

Colonel Hubert Fauntleroy Julian, better known as the Black Eagle, was getting a manicure and a facial at his favorite Seventh Avenue barber shop when I saw him last Friday morning. The Colonel, six feet, handsome, brown-skinned, with the manners and language of a royal personage, was preparing to depart that afternoon for Europe via Pan American.

Sat. 11-6-54

To allay any skepticism I might have, he pulled out his airline ticket, showed me his passport and then tossed up in the air a bundle of brand new ten dollar bills wrapped in a paper band marked $1,000.

"Lou," he said, "they can't stop me."

Full of fun, boastful about his prowess, eager for an publicity stunt and his pockets full of greenbacks, Colonel Julian has always been a complete enigma to me. The stories he tells about his exploits are too fantastic to beleive but just about the time I am convinced that he is lying about something, behold, he comes up with the proof.

No one I know has more brass or nerve than Julian. His specialty is confounding the white folks. Like some dark-skinned Don Quixote, he rides forth to conquer the beasts of prejudice or, to be more exact, he flies forth.

When he talks of money he talks of millions and every deal is a big deal. Dressed like a diplomat with his homburg at a tilt, Julian puts up a front that seems to confirm his fancy claims of social and financial successes.

"I astound them, Lou," he says. "They have never seen a black man like me. I am at home with Kings and my royal friends on the continent are legion. These poor whites are living in the Middle Ages."

When I asked him how did he get out of the Guatemalan mess, he laughed uproariously. Whipping out his passport, he pointed to his new accreditation.

"You saw all that stuff in the papers about them taking my passport but you didn't read anything about them giving it back to me, did you? Of course not."

Julian often answers his own questions.

"They can't browbeat me. I am too important an international figure and I know my business. I buy from one country and sell to another for money, man. I'm a business man."

Julian loves an audience and in talking to me he talked to the whole barbershop. He is a familiar figure there and a heavy tipper. When he walks in, he literally takes over, dominating all the talk with tall stories and funny anecdotes that no one can match.

"Send a photographer out to Idlewild, Lou, and have some one interview me as I take off. This is my one hundredth crossing on Pan American. Believe me, man."

Julian's accent is British and "Keep up with me and you can sell some papers," he went on. some of his phrases reveal his West Indian background.

"Let the folks know that the Black Eagle flies again."

In his fifties, Julian looks youthful and his snappy air and fast pace conceal his real age. He neither smokes nor drinks and save for a little more girth, he is as trim and athletic-looking as he was in the days of his flying exploits, days when he had all the country talking about him.

"I'm stopping by London this time and I will go on from there to Pakistan. These are busy days for me, man," he continued.

I asked him about the stories I have been reading recently regarding racial tensions in England. Leaflets bearing the title "Keep Britain White" have been distributed in some London areas, and according to the papers, more and more restaurants, hotels and pubs are discriminating against Negroes. All this has resulted from the new wave of West Indians and Africans migrating to England looking for jobs or a chance to get an education.

"Some of that is true but don't believe everything you read," Julian warned me. "The English have class prejudice not color prejudice. If you have money, you can do what you want to and I know. The poor can be expected to catch hell. That's why I make big money, man. I suppose I am the richest Negro in America."

Julian's early adventures as a pilot which won him the title "Black Eagle" are all behind him but, if you ask me, he will always be flying high. How he gets those Rolls Royces, the big wads of dough, fine jewelry, exclusive clothes and keeps up the international traveling — all represent a great mystery to me. All I know is that when he says he is on top of the world, you might as well believe him.

Mrs. Florence Sweeney of Detroit, a teacher for 32 years and a former president of the Detroit Federation of Teachers, retired from her profession recently and last week an article by her entitled "Today's teenagers are too tough for any teacher" was published in the magazine supplement, Parade.

Chicago, Ill.

I remember meeting Mrs. Sweeney many years ago and she was as highly regarded then as now. Her words carry, as the saying goes, plenty of weight.

She describes in her article the hostility of the students toward the teacher and often toward each other, their contempt for education, the total absence of discipline and the general "it pays to be ignorant" philosophy of our times.

Similar reports have come to me from teachers on the college level, from public school teachers in several major cities and from many outraged parents. Mrs. Sweeney has touched upon a great national scandal and, of course, she may be roundly denounced for doing so if she is not careful or even if she is.

Sat. 11-13-54

Where all the violence, glorified ignorance and hatefulness come from is no great mystery to me. The children get it straight from their parents more often than not, although some kids have original genuis in the general field of knavery.

Mrs. Sweeney walks on familiar ground when she states: "Even the least intellectual of children absorbs, somehow, the contagious wave of name-calling current in public life and the spectacle of men in high office offering to meet in an alley to determine who's the liar.

"Intellectual apathy only mirrors the climate outside. The slow-witted scholar who once crept unwillingly to school now rides the current of anti-intellectualism. Those who excel at their studies will become 'eggheads' and targets of derision. This attitude makes it harder than ever to arouse intellectual curiosity and create the desire to pursue answers."

Here again Mrs. Sweeney echoes charges that I have heard many others make. The odd thing about the anti-intellectual fog which as descended upon the country is that it comes at the very moment when the intellectual, particularly the scientific one, has won enormous power.

The atomic scientists represent the most powerful group of men ever to walk the earth. These intellectuals hold in their hands a key which can open the door to hell or heaven on earth. Never have so many depended on so few.

Suppose that the scientists out of angry desperation decided to take a walk. What Congressman or, indeed, what Senator, could make an atom or hydrogen bomb?

The complex world we live in has been created and is being run basically by men who regard themselves as intellectuals. If this is so, why all the abuse, why all the glorification of blockheads?

I believe that it is a temporary phenomenon and represents a reaction to the miracles that have changed our lives and will change us considerably more in the days ahead. When Fermi split the atom at the University of Chicago back in 1942, he also ushered in a new age. The civilized world will never be the same again.

We grown-ups have not yet learned how to adjust ourselves to the prospect of this new atomic age and the young people of today mirror our own ill ease. The kids are wild and violent because their elders are insecure and disorganized. Anti-intellectualism, a rebellion against the frightful handiwork of scientific wizards, is in some respects a natural development.

I believe that we will find our balance before we go to pieces. We always have. The rise of the machine, the discovery of electricity, and all the great creative periods of history sparked, of course, by intellectuals were marked by social unrest.

If no one pushes the wrong button, there may be enough time left for all of us to learn to live with atomic power. In the meantime, the teenagers will discover that blockheads are going out of style.

I don't know E. Frederic Morrow of the Department of Commerce but he must be an interesting fellow. I have just read a speech he prepared for the Mid-Winter Workshop of the National Newspaper Publishers Association which was held at Tuskegee last month.

Mr. Morrow is an Adviser on Business Affairs in the business and Defense Services Administration of the Department of Commerce and with such a title he qualifies as one of President Eisenhower's bureaucrats. Apparently Mr. Morrow is no run of the mill porkchoper, but rather, a serious student of economics who has something important to say.

He is a graduate of Bowdoin College where the first Negro newspaper publisher, John B. Russwurm, was graduated in 1825. He is well prepared and from his speech I gather he knows a great deal about "the brother" and he is one himself.

Mr. Morrow's statements, which I believe are most important, are as follows:

"You newsmen must surely be among the first to realize that we have approached a new and decisive cycle in our 3 centuries-old struggle for complete and absolute citizenship in this country. We have come upon a time when most of the barriers are down that have been blocking our way. We are in an era of new national and international philosophy on the matter of the right of the human race to a decent and untrammeled life. We have come to the branch in the road on national life where the signs are all too clear that the fork to the right marked "Freedom for All", is the only one that will permit our Republic to survive in the world of economic greed and ideological struggle. Verily, we have come to the place for which our fathers sighed.

"Several years of my life was spent as Field Secretary of the NAACP. I went up and down this country, stressing and stimulating the Association's program wherever the need was great. I have patiently and eagerly watched for the signs that the harvest of full-citizenship was near. I see the signs now and wonder if the reapers are ready?

"We have in our history the tragic tale of the aftermath of the period of slavery when Emancipation was proclaimed. It is a pitiful story of a newly acquired freedom wasted upon the tinsel and froth of life because there had not been a period of preparation for this sudden and bewildering transition from slave to free. In our recent exhaustive fight to secure our inherent rights of complete citizenship, I hope we have not become too weak or too blind to see and shoulder the great responsibilities that will go with this new role in our national life.

"For example, we will have to learn new thought processes, new attitudes, new philosophies of life, new relationships, new standards of measurement for positive achievement. We will have to acquire a new toughness to fit us for the ruthless competitive spirit of survivial that characterizes American genius around the world."

Mr. Morrow goes on to decry the efforts of some Negro groups to "retain in government little islands of segregated activity" and he insists that "the day of the 'Negro Specialist in governmental life is over."

Mr. Morrow defines the real issue as follows: "The point is, that we've got to make up our minds whether we want complete integration, or not. We cannot hold on to any of the stultifying methods of the past and hope to secure a complete acceptance for the future. We cannot be half-boy and half-man. Either we accept the perils of this new adult life we have been crying for, or remain in the crib of adolescence forever."

Some may take exception to Mr. Morrow's assurance that we have come so close to the millenium but no one can duck the issue he raises. First class citizenship will eliminate double standards of treatment and also the double-standard of achievement. Every tub will have to stand on its own bottom. I think Mr. Morrow has given us all something that we cannot afford to forget. More and more we are going to have to ask ourselves "Are we ready?" Opportunities are only meaningful to those who have the ability to make use of them.

The meaning of that big decision of the Supreme Court last Monday, a week ago, is trickling down the little side roads, the alleyways, across the cotton patches and swampy pine lands of my home county down in Georgia.

As one humble sister put it to another, "Honey, this thing is for real. That's the Supreme Court talking and they is saying Jim Crow has gotta go. You know, child, Uncle don't take no foolishness."

Certainly to a great many Southerners the unanimous declaration of the Supreme Court that Jim Crow education is wrong and illegal seems downright incredible. To Negroes the decision is too good to be true, and to the whites in the South the decision is too bad to be true.

The responsible leaders of both races in the South, I believe, were fairly certain that the Supreme Court was going to rule against segregation. The fact that the decision was unanimous, however surprised almost everyone.

The white leadership recognizes that segregation like slavery is a lost cause. As one white friend told me, "Sure, we are prejudiced but we are not crazy." Talmadge and Jimmy Byrnes, for all their ranting in the newspapers, do not seriously believe that they can maintain segregation for long.

In my town, Savannah there're two daily newspapers and neither one of them has a reputation for enlightened liberalism. In fact they both suppoted, I believe, Governor Talmadge in the last campaign.

Anyway the Savannah Morning News on Tuesday, the day after the decision, came out blasting the Suprene Court but its tone was restrained and its editorial urged everyone to keep calm and keep his shirt on.

This following paragraph shows they were prepared to accept, eventually if not now, the defeat of the segregated way of life. I quote:

"However, the decision has been made by the highest judicial authority. There is no appeal from it and there is apparently no possibility of changing it. Shortly it will become the law of the land and so long as our States remain part of the United States, there is nothing we can do but obey the law as it will presently be written."

This view is echoed by the Savannah Evening Press also, as well it might since I believe both papers ar now under one ownership. Up the river in Augusta the daily "Augusta Chronicle," which President Eisenhower probably reads when he vacations there, said "The U. S. Supreme Court has confronted the South with one of the gravest crisis in history."

The Augusta editor also failed to call for secession but instead asked for peace and quiet while the local brain trusters figured up "some arrangements to accommodate the decision and still maintain separate schools for the races." He concluded with this impassioned plea:

"We can meet the crisis as true Southerners and as true Americans. We simply must."

Right under the nose of Talmadge in Atlanta, the two papers, the Journal and the Constitution, got in their licks against the decision but they were a long way from secession or any support for the Governor's plan to abolish the public school system.

The Atlanta Journal which says it "covers Dixie like the dew," said flatly; "Certainly Georgia and all other states must abide by the law. Certainly all good Americans respect the court's decision. But it still will be a long time before Negro and white children attend the same schools in Georgia."

Over in Jimmy Byrnes' state, South Carolina, the temper of the people as revealed through the newspapers seems much the same. The News and Courier of Charleston, within earshot of Fort Sumter, carried a front page editorial on the decision and stated:

"Though the court was unanimous, and though the full implications have not yet sunk in, we receive the decision with distaste and apprehension. But it is too late to secede and start another war between the States. Other means must be sought to live within the laws of the country."

Up at the State Capitol in Columbia the daily "The State" editorialized as follows: "No official in South Carolina has issued a statement of defiance, though several have been strong in their characterization of the court. In other states the question of disobedience of order has been openly advocated, and predicted . . .

"No doubt, nationally, South Carolina is looked upon as a place of much race struggle. As a matter of fact, South Carolina will probably deal with the decision with greater calm than any of the other states with large Negro population."

In short, my friends, those who have been looking for bloodshed may be greatly dissappointed.

Charles H. Mahoney of Detroit is a sixty-eight-year old native Michigander who last week became the first Negro American to represent the country at the United Nations as a full fledged delegate, not an alternate delegate. From what I remember of him he probably wouldn't serve as anybody's alternate.

Of all the appointments of President Eisenhower, this one gave me a very special thrill. You probably know him as the president of the Great Lakes Mutual Life Insurance Company but when I first met him his fame centered about his skill in a courtroom.

In Paradise Valley on the corner of Beacon and St. Antoine, you would be sure to hear some reference to Lawyer Mahoney in the corner bull sessions in the early thirties. Somebody in the Valley was given a bum rap, so the story went, and Lawyer Mahoney took the case and saw that justice was done.

The procedure involved a jury trial every time and there stood Lawyer Mahoney like Clarence Darrow calling each juror by name and memorizing them with his logic and eloquence. Nobody ever figured out how he could memorize so quickly the names of the jurors and once when I asked him how he did it, he gave me that big, bashful grin and commented, "It's a neat trick, isn't it?"

Mr. Mahoney is a big man, handsome, copper-colored with long grey hair and if the race may be said to have some blue bloods he must be numbered among them. Born in Decatur, Michigan, he got his college training at Olivet college and Fisk and took his law at the university of Michigan.

His speech and bearing, the clothes he wore and his mannerisms seem to mark him off as some sort of aristocrat when I first met him almost twenty years ago. Withal he had then and has now a pleasant, gracious air. As I look back, it seems that all along he must have known that he would one day be called upon to be a diplomat.

Retiring from the practice of law many years ago, Mr. Mahoney built another successful career as an insurance executive presiding over the affairs of Great Lakes Mutual which he helped established in 1928.

He served along the way as Commissioner of Labor and Industry of Michigan, as a member of the Detroit City Planning Commission and of the Wayne County Board of Supervisors.

Mr. Mahoney along with Mose Walker and Dr. Frank Raiford, two of his buddies, used to take extensive fishing expeditions and several times they visited with my family down home and sharpened their hooks on Red Snapper in the area where the Savannah river meets the sea.

His heart has given him some concern for a long time and he has made such adjustments in his work and living conditions that excessive strain may be avoided. He moved out of town to the quiet of the country around Holly, Mich., with his charming wife and they have not permitted either nature or the brothers to bother them beyond limits that they set for themselves.

When he walks into the United Nations, he will take with him the good wishes of thousands of Michiganders, white ones and colored together, the old folks with whom he grew up in the western section of the state and the new crowd of "natives" from down home. The old timers, of course, regard him as their favorite son.

I don't know much about the other delegates in the United Nations but you can be sure the country is safe if you see Mr. Mahoney sitting there. If a verbal scrap develops, I am sure he will see, as the boys in the Valley would put it, that no head of the enemy will be left unbruised.

As some of his boyhood cronies would say, "The President had to stop that there Molotov and, by crickety, he could'na done better than to come to Michigan to get Mahoney."

Down in Chinatown the other day, Cong. William Dawson, who seems to have the Chicago Chinese vote wrapped up, was talking about the attitudes and behavior of some of his colleagues in Washington. Most of them grow more liberal the longer they stay on the hill although there are some horrible exceptions. In a great way Washington may be said to exert a broadening influence on the boys from the backwoods.

One rebel who will never be reconstructed is a tall, slender, white-haired gentleman with handlebar mustache, string tie and tails, who visited Congressman Dawson's office shortly after he made that famous speech on Jim Crowism in the U. S. Army. Dawson was out of his office but his secretary, Miss Brock, took the message.

The old codger, who must have been 80, was according to the story, an erect and impressive figure. Upon being informed that the Congressman was not available, he gave the following message to Miss Brock: "You tell him this for me. He keeps asking how long, how long the white folks in the South are going to discriminate against his people. You tell him that the answer is simple. We are going to discriminate against him and his people as long as they are black."

There was no rancor in his voice, no display of emotion and he was polite. He thought Congressman Dawson was asking a question that apparently was not properly answered on the floor of Congress. Since he had the answer, the old Dixiecrat thought he ought to pass the information along.

When the Congressman tells this story to colored audiences, they all have a great laugh. There is no resentment over the incident just pity for the old man who lives in the 19th century.

This aged, dyed-in-the-wool Southerner has lost track of the contemporary world. Somewhere along the line he, and some of his friends who agree with him, took the wrong turn, went down the wrong road, some lonesome cul de sac.

This story occurred to me as I read last week about the various developments in integration in the public schools in different parts of the South. From Alabama, Texas, the Carolinas and all over, I watched a common phenomenon repeatedly reported in story after story. That is the Negro children and their parents are bravely knocking on the door of the school houses and there is no fear.

A vast change has taken place within the mind of the Negro himself, particularly in the South. He is no longer afraid to ask for what he wants. He is still gracious and polite about it and even when he knows he is going to be turned down he keeps right on knocking on the door. Judging from their confused reactions and response to the Negro's knock on the door, I would say that the white folks in the South are fearful now.

The white Southerners, of course, know that the whole wide world is watching them, watching every move and among the watchers are the Judges of the Supreme Court and the agents of the Department of Justice.

Looking over their shoulder, too, are all the foreigners, those nasty aliens who just don't believe that democracy will work. Every principal of every little white school in the South is living in a fish bowl and he may be quoted in a headline, praised and denounced at once.

All those Southerners who believe as the old man who called upon Cong. Dawson believes may today consider themselves a lost tribe, the vanishing Americans. All those Negroes who hesitated to take issue with segregation in the South, who felt unsure of themselves and uncertain of the heart and will of other Negroes, are also lost.

The mossbacks on both sides of the line are marooned by the high tide of interracial enlightenment. They will survive for a while but the tide is running against them for keeps.

One old cynical friend of mine whom I cannot name told me last week that a British scientist, Dr. Edgar Douglas Adrian, recently warned the Royal Society of Scientists of Great Britain that the end of the world is not far to seek. This has been brought about by the atomic bomb. If several thousand of them are exploded, no matter in what part of the world, the resulting radioactivity would make human life impossible anywhere on the earth.

My friend insists that when you see signs that the white folks down home are ready to play fair, you can be sure that we are approaching the end of the world.

From Now on Segregation Will Have to Walk Around on Crutches

31a

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

AS I WRITE this article, May 20, Governor Talmadge is standing pat. He says no mixed schools in Georgia as long as he is governor.

Senator Russell is expressing great disapproval of what the Supreme Court has done. White of Mississippi is shocked. Governor Byrnes is all set to turn the schools over to private hands. A move is on foot in Georgia to draft Talmadge for another four years in an effort to perpetuate segregation.

TO DO THIS the Legislature must get three-fifths of the legislators to sign to call an extra session of the Legislature.

If an extra session is called two-thirds of the Senate and House must vote to change the constitution so the governor can run to succeed himself.

The Governor of Virginia is inviting the governors of sixteen states to come together and exchange views. Attorney General Cook of Georgia is calling a meeting of the attorney generals of the states involved to see what legal steps can be taken to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court.

Dissenting voices come from some quarters. Attorney General of Kansas, Harold R. Fatzer said, "Kansas has no further concern regarding school segregation. We are following out the purpose of the decision."

ATTORNEY GENERAL John G. Fox of West Virginia said, "I would not attend any conference designed to circumvent a decision by this nation's highest court."

Governor Stanley of Virginia issued the call after the Governor of Oklahoma, Chairman of the Southern Governors' Conference, refused to issue the call. Governor Johnston Murray of Oklahoma says each state has its own problems to consider and that all the governors could do would be to tell each other what they plan to do.

The Attorney General of Kentucky refused Mr. Cook's invitation. So the storm rages.

BUT THE STORM will subside as all storms do. These gentlemen might have waited until the Court hands down directives after next October as to how de-segregation is to be brought about.

And by that time Washington, D. C., Kansas, West Virginia, Oklahoma and Delaware will be on their way toward implementing the Court's decision. Things will settle down. In some cases communities will move at once to do the Court's will.

Some sections will be where they are now next year and for several years to come. There will need to be more suits. But by and large the South will stubbornly, reluctantly and slowly abide by the Court's decision.

I say slowly because in all too many instances Negroes will collaborate with whites to keep things as they are.

The slowness with which desegregation progresses cannot be laid wholly at the door of the white people. Some Negroes will participate in a move to slow up the process through fear they will offend the white people in the community.

OTHERS WILL do so because of fear of losing their jobs. Still others will feel that the process should be slow.

There will be some who will fight to speed up the process.

The latter will be solely needed to keep heat under those who would circumvent the decision by their slowness.

In the meanwhile, millions more will be spent to try to equalize Negro schools in a further effort to delay integration. So the work of the NAACP is by no means over.

And Negroes in the South must know that even if the Supreme Court's decision were implemented tomorrow, the fight against discrimination will have to continue—just as Negroes in the North must fight discrimination. A big victory has been won but the battle has not been won—far from it.

BUT THE GREAT gain is what I have stated in another connection. Segregation's back has been broken.

For three-quarters of a century segregation has strutted about in this country as if it were God Almighty. Nobody dared challenge it, since Charles Sumner, until Negro lawyers came on the scene.

From now on, segregation will have to walk on crutches and apologize for its continual existence. Thank God for Negro lawyers.

Dr. Mays

He Doesn't Believe Negro Institutions Will Perish in an Integrated Society

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

31a

MARVIN Griffin, one of the six candidates running for Governor of Georgia, said recently that if segregation goes, the six Negro institutions in Atlanta would go too.

The Press quoted him as saying: "Negroes now attending the all-Negro colleges in Atlanta would go to white schools and no white students would go to the Negro colleges."

Dr. Mays

Marvin Griffin is a politician and what men say who are running for office is not to be taken too seriously. But Marvin Griffin is saying what some Negroes and some white people are thinking.

Those who think what Mr. Griffin is saying will turn out to be wrong. When segregation goes, white students will matriculate in what are now Negro colleges and Negro students will enroll in what are now white colleges.

NEGROES WHO believe that all Negro students will flock to white colleges when segregation goes are suffering with a bad case of inferiority complex. White people who think this way, have an inflated notion of white superiority and underrate the Negroes' sense of values.

There may be those who believe that nothing Negroes have built up is good enough to survive if they can participate in something that white people have built up.

If this is true, it means that Negro insurances, the Negro press, Negro churches, Negro banks, Negro hospitals, Negro hotels, Negro schools, Negro businesses of every description will cease to exist in a non-segregated society. I do not believe it.

THIS IS pure nonsense. Let's talk sense. Lincoln University in Pennsylvania has existed 100 years in a non-segregated state. For 100 years Negroes have attended Lincoln University and they have gone there from all over the United States. At present, I understand white students are enrolled in Lincoln.

Wilberforce University has existed in Ohio, a non-segregated state, for many decades. Negro students have gone to Wilberforce from every state in the North.

I have pointed out in these pages before that Negro students are now registered from every State in the Union in Negro colleges in the South. Thirty states are represented in the Morehouse student body. Fisk has just graduated a white student. Talladega has recently had white students enrolled and white students have graduated from Talladega. Howard University has had white stuednts for years.

THE ATLANTA University School of Social Work has had many applications from white students.

It is nonsense to say what Negro and white students will and will not do. Here and there, throughout the South, Negro physicians have white patients. Negro banks have white customers.

Negro churches have white members. The Negro press has white readers. For several decades the most popular grocery store in Orangeburg, S. C., was run by James Maxwell, a Negro.

The white folk almost crowded the Negroes out. Let segregation go and let Negroes build up first-class restaurants, white people will give them more patronage than Negroes.

IN A SEGREGATED society and in a non-segregated society that which is first-rate will live and both Negroes and white people will patronize the first-rate institution, be it bank or a school.

What we need to be concerned about is the quality of our work. If it is a college, we should be concerned about having first-rate teachers on our faculties, up-to-date equipment in our laboratories, good students in the enrollment, an adequate number of first-rate volumes in our libraries, a sound academic program to meet the needs of the modern world, a good character program—if a school qualifies along these lines, students will enroll and all of them will not be Negroes.

Challenge to the Churches Issued By U. S. Supreme Court Decision

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE SUPREME COURT presents a challenge to the churches. Church bodies must advise the people to obey the law. They cannot tell their people to seek ways and means to circumvent the decision of the Court making segregation in the public schools unconstitutional. Even church leaders who believe in segregation cannot advocate a disregard for law. So the churches are on the spot. It is heartwarming though that one church body after another is coming out in support of the Supreme Court's decision. Let us quote from four of them: Southern Baptists, Southern Presbyterians, the North Georgia Methodist Conference and the Council of Church Women from fifteen Southern states.

Dr. Mays

In approving the Court's decision, J. W. Storer, president of the Southern Baptist Convention and minister of the First Baptist Church of Tulsa, Oklahoma, said: "As Christians we are to love all men regardless of color, even as God does. Since the Supreme Court has made its ruling, it is the duty of all Christians to respect that ruling and pray that God shall guide its implementing within the framework of mutual understanding and consideration."

Sat 7-10-54

A. C. MILLER, head of the Christian Life Commission of the Convention, said: "The decision will be accepted by the majority of the people of the South." Baker J. Cauthen, head of the denomination's foreign mission board, argued that the decision will strengthen American influence abroad and "reduce some obstacles to missionary work." Courts Redford of Atlanta, secretary for home missions, held that "We should implement the decision so as to conserve and improve the great gains already made in racial understanding and cooperation." When it is noted that there are seven million Southern Baptists, it is most encouraging to have them vote approval of the Court's decision.

The Council of Church Women representing fifteen Southern states meeting in Atlanta declared:

"1. Because of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus, we reaffirm our belief in human brotherhood and the inclusiveness of Christian fellowship. Therefore, we feel we are impelled to promote Christian society in which segregation is no longer a burden upon the human spirit.

"2. We accept with humility the Supreme Court decision as supporting the broad Christian principle of the dignity and worth of human personality and affording the opportunity of translating into reality Christian and democratic ideals."

THE SOUTHERN Presbyterians meeting in Montreat, N. C., passed a significant statement: "The General Assembly affirms that enforced segregation is discrimination which is out of harmony with Christian theology and ethics and that the church, in its relationships and cultural patterns, should lead rather than follow." "It asked the assembly to urge (1) that segregation be ended in its institutions of higher education; (2) that the synods of the church do the same for their institutions; (3) that church conferences end segregation; (4) that local churches eliminate race as a consideration in church membership or church fellowship, and (5) that all Presbyterians and particularly all church leaders cultivate and practice 'the Christian graces of forbearance, patience, humility and persistent goodwill'."

Equally significant is what the North Georgia Methodist Conference said meeting here in Atlanta, June 24: "We are Christian citizens in a democracy. The highest court in our land has spoken. Our tradition as Methodist people includes an article of religion . . . which, when interpeted, makes it the duty of all Christians to observe and obey the laws and commands of the governing or supreme authority in the country."

These are fine words. But the churches are on the spot. These words are meaningless unless the local churches open their doors for worship and membership to all people regardless of race or color. Will they do it?

The churches on the national level have condemned segregation, but on the local level, for the most part, segregation has continued.

Now the Supreme Court has taken the leadership and has said for the first time that segregation per se is unconstitutional. It has said what the churches have had the God-given power to practice for centuries.

Sat 7-24-54

There is no basis for a segregated church based on color or race in either the Old or the New Testament.

THE BASIS for exclusion in the Bible is on religious and cultural grounds and not racial.

Biblical scholars are agreed that there is no biblical basis for our racial segregation in the church. There is no basis for segregation in the early church and none for it in the practice of the church in the middle ages.

Dr. Mays

Will Churches Meet the Challenge Offered Them by the High Court?

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

TWO WEEKS ago I pointed out that several church bodies in the Deep South have gone on record saying that the decision of the Supreme Court declaring segregation in the public schools unconstitutional should be obeyed.

Among these were the Council of Church-women, representing fifteen Southern states; the Southern Baptist Convention, with seven million members; the Southern Presbyterians and the Methodists of the North Georgia Conference.

Dr. Mays

Before this article is printed there will be other church bodies speaking out.

THE CHURCHES should have led in this matter. They should have long ago denounced segregation in their fellowship, even if they did not denounce it in secular life.

NEED FOR CHANGING

By John H. McCray

Death for the 'miserables'

UNLESS GOV. James F. Byrnes commute their sentences, two teenage boys will die in South Carolina's electric chair early on the morning of Oct. 15.

Mr. McCray

The youths are Frank Wilson 16, and his brother, Charlie, 18.

Both were convicted of slaying a 15-year-old white youth, Glenn Farmer, who surprised them the night they let themselves into the fish market where Frank worked with a key he had evidently taken.

The Lee County jury failed to recommend mercy and the death sentence was mandatory.

Many pleas and prayers that their lives will be spared are heard and read; and offering most of these are white citizens, churchfolk and women who head organizations and who are engaged in community services.

AND THE depths to which some of these citizens are moved indicates that underneath what may sometime seem to have been a calloused skin, beats a heart that is both warm and human.

One of these, a white Baptist minister, pleads that the state law which makes murder during a robbery a capital offense is mis-applied in their case. The law, he says, was intended for use when such a crime occurred in a residence.

If Frank and Charlie are elcetrocuted they will be numbers nine and ten of teenagers the chair has claimed since 1944 —and everyone of them colored. Youngest among the eight electrocuted was George Stinney Jr., convicted when he was just 13 of "attempted criminal assault" on two white girls, eight and five years, respectively.

Accounts of his electrocution were ominous; the cap kept slipping and flopping about his small head as if in protest of its application.

— o O o —

OMITTING DISCUSSION of the pros and cons of capital punishment, leaving out the observation by a member of the S.C. Legislature 11 or 12 years ago that the electric chairs in his state were primarily for "protection" for white people; ignoring even the technical and maybe conjectural points around the application of the state law in the Wilsons' case there is something else from which we cannot escape wrapped up in their plight, and other teenagers who've had to pay the supreme price.

Frank and Charlie, like too many other for whom now we fight, never had a fair chance in Bishopville. There are no recreation centers, no playgrounds—not anything for them and their kind.

Cotton fields and cheap farm pay, inadequate and grossly inferior schools, and an economically prostrate family, were some of the things they waded their way through.

— o O o —

THEY WERE too young to vote, too young to pay poll taxes; they were too young to join the Army and too young to make legal contracts.

But, by paradox perhaps, they are not too young to die under ramifications of laws imposed upon them by the same state.

Whatever their failings, their limitations, these were ground into them by their state and community. And there is something deeper, and meaningful aside from the obvious utter resignment and grief expressed in the terse words of their mother's letter of rejection of their bodies to penitentiary officials.

"You can keep Charlie's and Frank's bodies. Thank you," she wrote.

Yes, keep the bodies of the "miserables" you have made.

Integration—but when?

NOW THAT MOST briefs are before the Supreme Court on arguments of how and when to integrate, and the administration's opinion as given by President Eisenhower last week is known, it is stimulating to try to figure just when integration will become final.

MR. McCRAY

If the Supreme Court, as suggested by the Justice Department and as some of the "Friend of the Court" briefs also favor, passes the job down to lower courts, then unless a definite time limit is set within which the job is to be done, or the character of the has been changed immeasurably from what they have been, the high court will be just "turning Br'er Rabbit loose in the brier patch."

For example, Gov. Brynes of South Carolina, a pronounced foe of integration, and who has vowed to close public schools in his state, came out this week in favor of letting District or lower Courts handle enforcement of any integration order of the Supreme Court.

A FORMER member of the Supreme Court, Byrnes said that his reason for the position is that the high court is not an agency of enforcement. But one speculates as to what does the gentleman really have up his sleeve.

Neither do leopards change their spots — and this quickly, nor can you teach old dogs new tricks.

One good guess is, the hope is to have the matter brought back to local judges who may be inclined to be more lenient and dilatory, and at the same time, whip up enough terror and fear among colored residents so they will not actually follow through on integration rights.

Something like this has happened in the equal salary cases NAACP won for colored teachers in the Deep South. In districts where state salaries are boosted by county and other local funds, there is a general difference between what white teachers draw, and the salary paid colored teachers.

BUT SUGGEST a court case in behalf of these teachers and they flee from the suggestion as though it were a matter of poison ivy. They'd lose their jobs for merely discussing the matter.

And the same is also in registration of colored applicants, even in state where the White Primary and other election laws have been straightened out by federal courts.

Suggest to a farmhand, sharecropper or Mr. Charlie's yard man that he take the case into court and it's just an effort wasted.

We suspect that, beaten with other schemes, the jim-crowing White South now hopes to relapse into using the fear-whip to keep the black rascal caw-cawing about each state flag and each state capitol. This, they hope, can come with purely local settling of the case.

THE SAME Mr. Byrnes boasts that within three years his state has spent more than 100 millions on new schools, 61 percent being for colored. His state could accomplish, with much less expense complete integration of classes, in much less time.

Only the school district whose case was in the May 17 ruling is involved in the forthcoming order. It can be expected throughout the South that there is going to have to be a district by district court case. And with at least 102 more in South Carolina alone, one makes sense asking, "Integration — When?"

One more job for Thurgood

THE FLORENCE (S.C.) Morning News prints in full in its edition of May 27 the text of a sermon delivered May 23 by the Rev. E. L. Byrd, pastor of the First Baptist Church (white) of Florence, which brings to the minds of those puzzled over racism, a "saving" as helpful and moving as the physical and psychological freedom brought by the Supreme Court's May 17 ruling.

Mr. McCray

The sermon - reprint consumes fully two-thirds of the newspaper's editorial page. Its approach, studious and mildly offered facts, its anchorage in Christian teachings and the Bible make it one of the richest messages of the century and, well worth possessing by those concerned with human relationships.

The Rev. Mr. Byrd describes himself as a native of Mississippi, whose two grandfathers fought with the Confederate army. In a nutshell, he points up:

Inconsistencies and immaturity in white religious practices; acceptance of rulings of our courts — whatever these are — as the American spirit.

He notes that significance rests in the "unanimous" findings of the high court on segregation;

He offers more statistics than the average colored researcher has on accomplishments and needs of the colored American, and then banishes the oft-repeated-by-whites claim that the Bible permits racial distinctions.

The sermon is neither bitter nor jubilant. It is sober, deliberate and obviously the product of one who has labored seriously over a situation with honesty and determination to help others soulfully settle a matter the less temperate would blow into explosions.

Exhibits Courage

The Rev. Mr. Byrd demonstrates that he has the mind for good thinking. And more importantly, he exhibits a courage too often lacking right in the geographic heart of the problem.

But in contrast during the same week, two colored school leaders, one in Bamberg county—L.L. Butler at Ehrhardt, and L. L. Pendarvis, supervisor of colored schools in the North Augusta area of Aiken County, had their views on the same subject in newspapers, also.

Their separate letters applauded segregation. Butler's letter presents him as a teacher and operator of a barbershop for whites, from which he gathers thinking of "the" people. His barbershop gossip impressed him more than what he could have gained through use of school teaching facilities.

That of a white Southerner, wielding wide influence, who stands fighting the case of the subjugated and enslaved about him, certain to pay a price for his benevolence; and two of those for whom he fights, linking up with the slave masters in order that ultimate emancipation is the harder.

The only regret we have about the Supreme Court's ruling is that, perhaps because of the lack of foresight, parents didn't believe in the complete equality of races and Christianity, so well outlined by the Rev. Mr. Byrd.

Is it possible that the great and Honorable Mr. Thurgood Marshall slipped up

They talk loud but walk easy

IF HISTORY REPEATS itself, the South is going to conform to whatever edict the Supreme Court issues finally to remove racial segregation in public schools. And it is going to do this with a minimum of "getting around" or "ducking" effort.

Mr. McCray

While an occasional blast in defiance may rise up over Mississippi or Georgia, the real leader in southern rebellions is South Carolina, which has clung proudly to this dubious honor since December 24, 1860 when it led the Secession from the Union on the issue of slavery.

Including the recently decided school case, there have been three major civil rights issues fought in South Carolina in the last ten years — all victories for progress.

Salaries First Issue

The first was over equal salaries for school teachers. While the case itself didn't reach court until five years later, the salary issue came before the state legislature in 1939.

House Speaker Sol Blatt of Barnwell, according to records, noting the Alston vs. Norfolk School Board ruling the year before, pleaded for voluntary action in South Carolina.

The disposition of the defiant at the moment came in the declaration of Senator Olin Sawyer of Georgetown county, who vowed that the United States would have to send an army in South Carolina to get equal salaries, court rulings or not.

Fear Campaign Waged

As the case shaped itself, a countering campaign of fear was waged among colored teachers. They were told that if the State had to pay them equal salaries it would replace them.

Many trembled and quaked but equal salaries did come from the court and it hasn't taken an Army to draw the checks; nor has one of them been fired in favor of white teachers.

The second case involved the white primary. Opponents pictured blood - soaked streets and racial violences reminiscent of the Red Shirt and Ku Klux Klan era. That fight has been over six years now and the only trouble reported comes from these new voters, who say they are unable to sleep during campaigns. White politicians harass them for the votes.

Byrnes Faces Rebellion

Governor Byrnes' bald, defiant bid to shut down public schools sounded heroic three years ago, but forced down to action, he is aware of general rebellion against such a violent course.

In the first place, South Carolina jumped to shut down a constitutionally sanctioned primary in 1944. It lost and shamefacedly had to restore laws to the books. It could hardly hope for more success in a move to eliminate public schools.

In the second place, no matter how they rant and rave and maneuver, southern whites like always to be considered on the side of law and order and veer away from behavior which stamps them as "stinkers."

Truth is most southern white people are as weary as colored people over the inherited race question. Southern whites are right proud over the progress made in educational and political activities—so proud that they forget to remember both were forced from them. They claim all credit.

Meanwhile, it'll just have to be understood why they do not talk loud. They trod easy. And that's the thing that counts.

They knew segregation had to end eventually and have, for the last half decade or [illegible], conditioned themselves for it. In another half a decade, they will be praising themselves for its ending.

NEED FOR CHANGING

31a Negro

By John H. McCray

The loophole that isn't there!

WITH ALL THE pretense of dealing fairly with colored people the bitterest southern white leaders make, and because the realignment of the school systems is dependant more upon satisfaction within the colored, rather than white group, one would expect efforts quite different from what are now underway.

Mr. McCray

Mississippi, Louisiana, Alabama and South Carolina state governments are all thrashing about, not for ways of complying with court orders to end segregation; but for ways and loopholes of "getting around" integration.

If this needless expenditure of taxpayers' money — colored and white taxpayers — weren't tragic enough, a worse tragedy is that nowhere in the picture, on no committee group operating in these states, is a colored educator or citizen.

White Man's Move

It's a white man's move; it's a Southern white man's plan to go right on determining by himself what must and should be where the colored people are concerned.

Further tragedy of the white South is exhibited in the fact that these "scorned" colored Southerners, take the issue into court and, with the best legal minds the South could beg, borrow or buy, beat down the South and lose to win.

In this alone the winners have proved themselves more of an authority on the public school system than the whites, and well may they be.

The public schools were created in the South by legislative groups dominated by colored men who, almost 90 years ago, chose integration over segregation. Had their laws remained and not been changed in the late '90s, we would have been out of the woods" by now.

No Loophole Exists

A hint that the loophole being sought may not be there can be deduced from the recurrent retreating statements of Gov. Byrnes, who has been the segregationists' chief spokesman.

During the week, the South Carolina chief executive, in a carefully worded statement, declared the effort is to maintain segregation, but within whatever order and ruling the courts finally issue.

The statement is contradictory and ambiguous. No one, aside from perhaps the most stupid, expects Byrnes' 15-man committee, nor the committees working in the other states, to come up with a legal "scoop" which tops any ruling the courts may return.

And if the court says "out with it," that is the law. How're you going to get around it?

He's Being By-Passed

Of course, the real loophole for the South is the colored citizen. If it would duck integration, its sole medium is through the heart and soul and patience of this citizen who projected the situation.

But he is being avoided, by-passed and submitted to daily vicious tongue lashings and abusiveness.

And maybe this, too, is good because it has gradually closed the last loophole of escape and there is by far more unity among the South's colored citizens for integration than one year ago; or six months ago.

It is tragic to find Americans who are always "against" progress and practical democracy, and never "for" anything in this direction.

Yet, that is the South's heritage, and by it the South shall be hanged.

NEED FOR CHANGING

Inconsistencies of the South

THE OTHER DAY a Northern friend made a more than 300-mile junket about South Carolina with me. We traveled from mid-state to, and along, the coast.

As we wended our way back in the wee hours of the next morning, we re-hashed experiences on the journey. It was brightening to note how much the friend had observed, and what puzzling questions had arisen from personal observations.

Mr. McCray

For example, I was asked to explain why so often we saw service centers, like cafes, with "For white" signs on them, or understood, and in the heart of these were colored employees.

Filling Station Man Cordial

Why was it that at one filling station the white operators dashed out with cordial greetings, talked about everything from weather to politics and smiled "Please come back."

We found two cars of whites when we pulled in. There was no conversation between the occupants of these and the station's operators.

Why was it, my friend wanted to know, at Charleston, Walterboro, in Beaufort, etc. colored and whites live next door to each other, exchange back fense banter, rush into each other's home when children get ill and often sit in the evenings and chat with each other?

Along the road, here and there, either you see youngsters playing sandlot baseball in the afternoon or their parents in fishing parties, having a good time with each other and no evident consciousness of race and color.

Experiences Don't Harmonize

The things you see, and the experiences you have moving about the South don't harmonize with what you read in newspapers, or hear.

A few years ago, en route to Columbia, S.C. from Jacksonville, Fla., we pulled into a combination service station-cafe at Swainsboro, Ga. It was late at night. We asked directions to a place where we could get coffee and sandwiches and promptly were told to come into the one right there.

When we hesitated after looking inside and seeing the few white stragglers sipping coffee and munching sandwiches, we got the best lecture on what democracy really means from the manager we've ever heard.

He hadn't long before been discharged from the Army.

Plagued By Ghost Of Past

We concluded that what plagues the South is the ghost of its past, the exigencies of a temporarily frustrated white group, whose weaker moments gave birth to theories and practices no longer observed, except on paper and the record.

The record is the big-stick political opportunists wield over the heads of present day whites. "Be like grandpa," they are told in their secret discussions. But more often than not, they forget grandpa and their true desire for living, working and enjoying life take over.

I know a score or more of South Carolina whites, in whose homes I am as welcomed as in my own. I have spent many an evening, and have even slept in the guest room of homes of native whites.

All Born In The South

Many have visited in my humble domain for an evening of cards or enlighted discussions. And all of them were "born and bred" in the South.

Down with the rabble-rousers and racists, the friend was advised, and we'll have the South we want. The people are nicer than you find most other places.

It's that darn old record they keep playing up, and if you know these folk down here, you know they swear and die by their word, or the word of grandpa, whom many of them wish had never been born.

The Day Did Come

WHEN SOMEBODY telephoned early Wednesday morning that Senator Burnet R. Maybank (D-S.C.) had died at his summer home at Flat Rock, N.C., my mind began to trek back down the years of this late and unbeatable political figure who, at his death, stood firmly opposed to integration in federal housing projects.

Mr. McCray

I lived in Charleston, S.C., his native city, during his heydey. His business-like mayor's administration in the turbulent depression years, his projects and help to the unemployed made him as liked there by the poor people as was President Franklin D. Roosevelt who, by the way, took a liking to Mr. Maybank on trips to South Carolina. I remember now, during a Charleston street parade on a visit of the late FDR, a group of us cheered as the two rode together. Somebody said, "There go the two greatest men of our day."

Mr. Maybank came into possession of the holdings and prestige of a fertilizer plant. His late father was loved by our people. This background which the late Senator inherited — this touch with the problems of little people — figured in his humane administration at Charleston and his subsequent election as South Carolina's Governor, from which office he moved into the Senate.

But it seems that after his rise he changed his thinking about the little colored people, whose sweat and loyalty contributed much to the family's success in business.

DURING HIS campaign with former State Supreme Court Chief Justice Eugene Blease of Newberry, Mr. Maybank, on occasion, got into the racial ditch with his opponent.

He declared, on an occasion then that as Governor he had not approved the finally adopted state plan on teacher salaries until he was certain that "It was in the interest of white teachers." Mr. Blease, by the way, charged him with permitting that "Big black . . . woman" to serve as NYA head while may fine blonde, blue-eyed S.C. girls were capable of tthe job.

Our two political brushes with Mr. Maybank came during the 1944 Democratic convention at Chicago where, for the first time in the South, a group of then disfranchised colored Democrats made a challenge of seats held by lily-whites.

MR. MAYBANK represented the white Democrats. At a hearing in the Stevens Hotel, at which were present the late Bob Hannegan, the National Democratic chairman; Oscar R. Ewing, then vice chairman; Rep. William A. Dawson and our delegation, the S.C. Senator was both apologetic and solicitous. "You fellows know my love for the colored people. You know what I did when I was mayor of Charleston and when I was Governor," he said in effect.

But after he insisted on continued lily-whiteism, Mr. Dawson, in an impassioned plea, shook his finger at the late Mr. Maybank and said, in substance, "Senator, someday my people in South Carolina are going to breakup situations like this; and they're going to remember those who helped to block their way."

— o O o —

THE SENATOR didn't reply. Two years later, in a successful campaign for his return to the Senate, he belabored the NAACP and outsiders "meddling" in South Carolina.

These things we must remember, though unfortunately. And at his death he remained opposed to any change in racial customs — despite the fact that many of those things Rep. Dawson predicted 10 years ago have come to pass.

We drink a toast to 1953

WE DRINK OUR final toast to the Year of Our Lord, 1953! All in all, it has been an eventful year—a year filled with a number of aspirations realized, the launching of several new crusades and the skyrocketing of many new personalities into the limelight.

Mr Mackay

If the Supreme Court decides, as Tabloid believes it will in the matter of segregation in public schools, 1953 could go down in the history books as the great year of decisions so far as our fight for first-class citizenship is concerned.

An endless parade of names and events comes to mind as Tabloid pauses and reflects on what has happened during the past 12 months. Many of them made indelible imprint upon our memory. Others were quickly forgotten in the never ceasing shuffle of news.

In keeping with a time-honored custom, we herewith make the annual News in Tabloid awards. Whether you agree with our selections or find yourself in violent disagreement, be sure to drop a line and let "Tabloid" know. We welcome your views. Here goes:

Biggest story of the year: "Operation Big Switch," the exchange of prisoners after hostilities ceased in Korea . . . Hero of the year: Pvt. Courtney Stanley, Mansfield, La., who fired 600 bullets to save the lives of his commanding officer and buddies trapped by the enemy in Korea . . . Most savage act: British use of heavy bombers to rain death on defenseless villages in Kenya.

MOST HISTORIC EVENT: The momentous argument before the Supreme Court that segregated public schools are violation of the Constitution . . . Most encouraging court decisions: Outlawing of state discrimination in Washington; Freedom by N.C. Supreme Court of Mack in being convicted of "assaulting" a white woman by looking at her from a distance of 3 yards; U.S. Court of Appeals' decision that Jim-crow rules of bus lines and railroads cannot be enforced.

Political milestones: Elections of Hulan Jack as Manhattan Borough president, John Clement, Atlanta and W. C. Erwin, Augusta, Ga., to the boards of education of their communities; Lewis Flagg as Brooklyn municipal judge . . . Political disappointments: Failure of Republicans led by the late Senator Robert A. Taft to support a change in the Senate's filibuster rules. Failure of congress to enact a single civil rights bill.

WORST POLITICAL GUESS: Prediction of certain writers that Mrs. Robert Sam Vann would be named ambassador to Haiti . . . Dumbest political appointment: President Eisenhower's selection of South Carolina Gov. James F. Byrnes as delegate to the United Nations . . . Happiest news: Segregation in public schools abolished in Phoenix, Arizona and Topeka, Kans.

Most surprising news: Dr. Frederick D. Patterson's resignation from a $20,000 job as Tuskegee president to accept a $10,000 job as director of the Phelps-Stokes fund . . . Saddest civil rights disappointment: Firing of Dr. Albert C. Johnson as radiologist of Elliott Community hospital, Keene, N.H., after his racial identity was exposed in the film, "Lost Boundaries."

HEARTBEATS OF THE YEAR: Mattiwilda Dobbs-Don Louis Garcia de la Piedra; Peggy Cripps-Joseph Asplah of Gold Coast, W. Africa; Alberta Sheffield. Ernest I. Briggs of the Detroit auto body Briggses . . . Heartbreaks: Billy and June Eckstine; Billy and Martha Daniels; Dr. Charles Baker and Eleanor Ohms of Long Island . . . Biggest joke: Joe Louis' misleading announcement of his marriage to Greta Starke.

Musical mileposts: Dorothy Maynor singing "Star Spangled Banner" at the inauguration of President Eisenhower; Mattiwilda Dobbs, Atlanta, first American to sing with LaScala Opera Co., in Italy; Lenora Lafayette, Baton Rouge, La., singing the lead in "Aida" at England's famed Glyndebourne.

BRIGHTEST NEW FILM STARS: Harry Belafonte in "Bright Road" and Coley Wallace in "Joe Louis Story" . . . Top recording star: Eartha Kitt in "C'est Si Bon" and "Santa Baby" . . . Silliest adoration: Two Chicago teachers, Evelyn and Esther Jackson spending their savings of a lifetime to purchase a $13,500 white mink coat for Detroit's Prophet Jones.

Fastest flyer: Major Daniel James' 20-minute jet-propelled flight from Otis Air Base, Cape Cod, Mass., to New York City for an average of better than 600 miles an hour . . . Books of the year: "The Narrows" by Ann Petry and "Holy Husband" by Sara Harris . . . Sports disappointments: Joe Black of the Brooklyn Dodgers; Randy Turpin's miserable bid for the middleweight title . . . Sports comebacks: Monte Irvin and Henry Thompson of the New York Giants.

BIGGEST FUNERALS: Sara Spencer Washington, the hair preparations queen in Atlantic City; Bishop John A. Gregg of the AME church in Kansas City . . . Clergyman of the year: Dr. Howard Thurman named university preacher and professor of spiritual discipline at Boston University.

Little lambs to the altar

MULLINS, SOUTH CAROLINA is a typical small southern town. Its chief business is tobacco marketing and farming. Its people, white and colored, live the ordinary lives of the section, friendly or upset, planning and working, just as most folks do.

Mr. McCray

Two weeks ago, less than a week after school officials received a petition demanding an end to school segregation, the high school principal and an elementary school teacher, neither of whom signed the petition, were dismissed.

Insurance Canceled

The superintendent denies any relationship between the petition and the dismissals. But citizens disagree. They point to cancellation of real estate and other insurance coverage provided by one company, which reacted quickly.

Impro

They point, too, to the dismissal of one signer from a five-year-old job, whose employer was visited by the superintendent and a school board member, allegedly with a copy of the petition.

P. 4

One mother relates abject terror in her children, who came home from school one day crying. Other children told them that their home was going to be destroyed and their parents killed. It takes no great imagination to sense the feeling and concern in this family.

Balti

Sat. 5-1-54

One Retracts Signature

Against this background, one woman signer last week wrote a local paper that she didn't know exactly what she was signing and hoped her action would no longer be held against her.

Everybody else who signed the petition knew exactly what they were doing. They wanted at Mullins what the folk in Clarendon county had. But the woman's effort now to protect herself, perhaps get back the insurance which was cancelled on her home, is understandable.

The deep concern of those involved with the petition is that they stand almost alone. Nobody has yet moved to relieve or protect them. All of them remember what happened to the Harry T. Moores that fateful night in Mims, Fla.

They remember, too, klan parades, beatings and brutalities in their area. Moreover, none of them can afford to lose their jobs — not even those already fired.

Assurance Needed

The situation points up a need to which we have referred many times. Here, we need more than the legal arm of the NAACP which will, in time, walk into court on its issue. But who or what is there that these people can cling to that will give assurance?

Nothing but their own courage and prayers. Meanwhile, they are like little lambs going to the altar of sacrifice. The rest of us note them; we watch and applaud. Then, we go on our way as vultures peck away on their carcasses.

Some of us even break our necks to replace them on the jobs they lost. The less ambitious and righteous learn lessons on being good cowards from their fates.

Suggests Force In Unity

It is a long shot to say this but we say it anyway: Perhaps if we could in some manner unite the various organizations concerned with our general problems, thus producing a single all - powerful force, we could be able to handle such situations as exists now in Mullins.

We'd have sufficient personnel and resources with which to give protection to those who need it most.

Leave them alone and . . .'

CHUGGING ALONG back to Columbia last Monday night I stopped to pick up a white soldier some 60 miles away, at a rather isolated spot between Greenwood, which I was leaving, and Saluda.

Baltimore

Springing some 50 or more feet to catch up to the car, and with a slight pant, he asked if I minded taking along his two buddies also.

md.

I felt a sudden shakiness. If there were two others, why were they concealed? But looking back, there they were, tumbling from the roadside onto the highway with small traveling cases, typical of thase soldiers use on short trips.

Mr. McCray

They were colored.

Returning To Fort Jackson

A minute or so later the four of us were on the way. They were returning to Fort Jackson, near Columbia, from weekends with their families. The white soldier lives in Mississippi. One of the others lives in Alabama; one in Georgia. They had met by accident that afternoon on the outskirts of Atlanta, and had managed rides as far as the spot where I found them. They're members of the same outfit.

Pittsburgh Courier 7-31-54

Beyond saying they had waited for about two hours and that the two cars which had stopped had room for only one person, they volunteered nothing on why they resorted to a ruse to reach camp.

I don't know whether they figured I'd dope it out myself, or would be too dumb to know. But what began running through my mind delighted and pleased me.

A few miles down the road they forgot me. The Alabamian broke a brief silence with, "I'll bet Junior is raising h-- now." That was their minds in common — Juniors back home.

They Were Just Three Men.

For mile after mile they laughed a little, and perhaps lied a little, about their youngsters; they talked about personal plans after their "Army stretch" and, futures for their families.

They weren't white; they weren't colored. They were just three men with similar concerns, hopes and dreams for things dearest to them.

They won't know why I insisted on driving them beyond my own destination to Fort Jackson, though they felt it was an imposition. Nor will they know that when they gave me a final "Thank you, Mister," inside I was really thanking them.

If for no other reason, that their compulsory sojourn in Uncle Sam's Army has brought them to understand, appreciate and maneuver for one another, is a good reason why all young men — Southerners especially — should be compelled to serve a term in an integrated Army, or any other branch of the service.

Sees Hope For Future

Too, for fellows like this trio, it is unthinkable that though they spring from the deep South, they will instill the brand of racial thinking in their youngsters that has been passed along for generations.

They will come out of service thinking as they now think. They won't vote into offices men who think otherwise.

And those who scream in terror today lest we do away with segregation might find more than "lullaby" worth in these lines from the old nursery rhyme :

"Leave Them Alone; They'll C o m e Home . . ."

Hating business, as usual

SOME WEEKS back we reported that a white Baptist pastor at Florence, S.C. had defied parishioners following the May17 ruling and delivered a sensible sermon on brotherhood which ought to be recorded among masterpieces of the years.

Mr. McCray

This week there is a different report from the same city.

Led by three local men, Florence announces organization of a chapter of the NAAWP (National Association for the Advancement of White People), whose avowed intent is to counteract the NAACP.

Officers Are Listed

Listed officers of the chapter, which has 300 charter members are: G. L. Ivey, president; T. R. Miller, vice president; E. C. Newton, secretary and Carlton E. Turner, treasurer.

Afro American

Ivey, it is announced, summarily fired all of his colored employees immediately after the May 17 ruling. And in practically every southern business or industry, the businesses he and the others represent, depend in measure either on colored labor or purchasing to survive.

Baltimore

About forty-two per cent of South Carolina is colored, and in Florence and Florence county the division between the races is closer than a 58-42 per cent ratio.

KKK Under New Name

One purpose of the Florence NAAWP chapter, reportedly operating from headquarters in Washington, D.C., is seen in that at first the group sought to setup a chapter of the notorious White Circle League of America.

Pit. 7-31-54

Apparently this organization was too obviously anti-colored.

A decision to line up with the Grass Roots Movement, allegedly a southern substitute for the KKK, was also shelved.

Now, activities and efforts are underway to motivate southern whites to making war in behalf of whites—the same thing the old KKK did before its leadership ran afoul of the law.

Advance To Where

NAAWP reminds whites that the NAACP broke up jim-crow schools, and has been the force used to advance the legal rights and status of the people NAACP represents.

What NAAWP doesn't say is that NAACP has not gone out to malign white people, or deny them the freedom guaranteed under state and federal laws. NAACP has sought to resolve notions of race, by custom and tradition. This isn't what the NAAWP would do.

Moreover, what legal right is there that colored Americans enjoy, or seek to enjoy most whites haven't already had?

The NAAWP may grow into a potent organization, bent on committing all over—under a new name—the crimes laid at the doorstep of the KKK; or, it may pass overnight. It could lead to far more serious relations than exist now, or have ever existed.

Fails To Understand

Ivey's firing of his colored workers doesn't give the impression that he has grasped either the proper or profitable point of view.

NAACP hasn't held secret meetings donned bedsheets and armed itself with guns and straps to spread terror among whites. All its meetings are open and its rights are before a court of law.

It would seem that we're still engaged in "hating as usual" in the NAAWP, and where we need common sense and better understanding, we're being plain stupid and heading into another era of hatred we don't need.

NEED FOR CHANGING

By John H. McCray

They don't run anymore!

LAST SATURDAY night no elected official bothered a white man who paraded up and down the street, in both earshot and eyesight of town police officers, cursing and abusing colored residents.

Mr. McCray

The scene was laid in a central South Carolina community.

Later, when a buckshot blast cut down the man who had "swollen" the jaw and injured the neck of an innocent colored man trying to dissuade him from mis-conduct before his family, and trespassing on the colored man's property, there was general alarm.

THE TOWN'S mayor, waving his pistol and sounding authoritative, led a small group of "shocked" whites to the scene. They were acting now because there lay a white man, suffering from shotgun pellets in the left leg, on a colored man's property.

Colored neighbors had watched the white man, had heard him, for more than an hour. They had said nothing, but quickly arrived with arms around the colored man.

Unimpressed with the mayor's orders of "clear out, all you better get home before . . . ," somebody spoke up leisurely but firmly, "If you don't go back to your business place with that pistol somebody's gonna knock hell outta you."

THE MAYOR vanished and with the white man removed by his kin to a local physician, friends helped the colored man travel to the county seat where he sought out deputy sheriffs, surrendered and told his story.

The incident offers two examples of one lesson: Colored folk down South don't flee like rabbits anymore for the pleasure of white men.

The man got up from the ground, ran inside and procured his shotgun; had the alternative of not resenting improper conduct before his wife and family, of laying whimpering after being attacked.

And his friends had the choice of scattering at the sight of a pistol and the voice of the town's mayor. They weren't willing to leave a wronged neighbor in trouble and at the mercy of others who had wronged him, or at least not acted to prevent the wrong.

WITHIN THE last month we noted another story, not quite 200 miles east of the Saturday night scene. In the earlier incident a colored farmer had shot to death a white man who had invaded his mother's home bent upon hurting the family.

A week later, a coroner's jury exonerated the colored man and recommended that no charges be brought against him in criminal court.

While not necessarily all of such violence, there are many similar reports about the South today, reports of colored folk standing up for rights; 15 years ago there weren't as many instances of fighting back.

FIFTEEN YEARS ago, ten years ago, there were few colored citizens on juries, able to hire lawyers or even find lawyers at any price who would present their sides impartially and vigorously. Thusly snared, they often took to their heels for the sake of living, surrendering rights.

Recent legal victories over their pursuers have also bolstered their will to stand up and be counted. They know more now about rights and how these must be preserved.

IT MUST BE startling to the hound who, addicted to making poor "Brer Rabbit" take to his heels, is faced now with a fighting back fellow who has finally grown a backbone.

Another thing 'Hazel' did

OUT OF YEARS of newsgathering and reporting, this we have come to know and expect:

In time of peril and trouble, the folk who holler the loudest about race, and who made who superior, forget their favorite subject and begin acting and talking plenty sense.

Mr. McCray

Back around 1940 when there was fear that Hitler's hordes would cross the Atlantic and pounce on the country, everywhere you went Down South the proponents of white supremacy had taken cover. And they sounded convincing telling you how important you were and how much right you had to everything America offered as they.

— o O o —

SO, YOU volunteered by the thousands, strutting off to war with peacock pride in the heart.

We were in Alabama in 1932 or 1933 when a tornado swept through the towns of Talladega, Sylacauga and environs. Scores of white and colored neighbors went around together acting as though they had been lifetime brothers.

And it was the same in 1938 when a twister came through Charleston, S.C., and prostrated the Gadsden Green area and killed a number of people. There wasn't any color line during that emergency.

There wasn't much thought of race and color in the wake, and during the visit, of Hurricane Hazel. Everybody who recognized anybody else in the area reported on, and compared, respective losses.

— o O o —

PEOPLE GATHERED around in little country stores, white and colored alike, and talked about what to do. Most of them recognized a sort of economic brotherhood. Along highways white and colored neighbors cleared up debris as teams on respective property. They ate from each other's cookpots without thought as whose it was.

Just outside of Johnsonville, S.C., and on Highway 378, we picked up a middle-aged white farmer, who was hitch-hiking some 20 miles, and near to Conway, to see about his aged mother's place. Hurricane Hazel had banged up his old model car so that he was presently without its services.

We noted the damages as we rode along, the uprooted trees, the banged and stripped down roofs, the crushed houses and farm buildings, solemn farm people clearing a way.

— o O o —

AFTER WE passed a flimsy frame house about which a half dozen small colored children romped, we both had seen something most unusual to talk about. The hurricane had uprooted on either side two big trees, one of which should have fallen across the frame shanty. But it hadn't. The tree on the left had rebelled. It fell exactly opposite to the tree on the right, and opposite to every other tree we saw. Fifty yards away a tree flopped upon the nice home of whites.

"Funny how God does His work," the man said. "Guess He takes all sorts of ways to teach us and remind us that we're all human beings and His children together."

Hazel did that much good to his thinking. He meant what he said.

The retreat becomes a rout

THE REPUBLICANS are retreating from solemn campaign promises on many fronts, Public housing, social security, amendment of the Taft-Hartley law and full support of sagging farm prices to name a few. But when it comes to platform pledges on civil rights, the retreat has really turned into a pathetic rout.

Mr. Mackay

It took President Eisenhower only 38 words and five fleeting seconds to deal with the ubject in his hour-long State of the Union address. He said:

"Segregation in the armed forces and other federal activities is on the way out. We have also made progress toward its elimination in the District of Columbia. These are the steps in the continuing effort to eliminate interracial difficulty."

That was all. There was nothing else. Forgotten in the mad rush to appease Eisenhower (Dixiecrat) Democrats and Chamber of Commerce Republicans was the GOP campaign pledge to prove the party's "good faith" by enacting federal legislation to further just and equitable treatment in the area of discriminatory employment practices." There was also ominous silence about platform pledges of "federal action toward the elimination of lynching" and "federal action toward the elimination of poll taxes."

The echo of Mr. Eisenhower's address had not died in the capitol chamber before Senate Labor Chairman H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey reneged on another Republican promise. He announced the postponement of scheduled committee hearings on an FEPC bill. New York's Senator Irving Ives as early as May 15, 1953 had given his word that such hearings would begin without fail on January 12.

But Chairman Smith has re-scheduled them until Feb. 23. When Feb. 23 comes, the hearings will probably be moved back to May 15. And anyone familiar with the workings of Capitol Hill knows that postponement of hearings is the cynical Republican substitute for the Dixiecrat filibuster. It's their way of killing any possible chance for the enactment of FEPC in 1954.

Meantime the labor market tightens. Thousands are being laid off in the heavy industries. And the number of unemployed colored workers, as usual, is far out of proportion to their 10 per cent population ratio. With no federal FEPC to snuff it, the old economic rule, "last hired, first fired" is being dusted off and brought back [illegible] 1-16-54

During the 1952 campaign, Republican orators were shouting from the housetops: "The failure of congress to enact a federal FEPC law rests squarely with the Democrats in congress who haven't wanted FEPC and who have filibustered to prevent its enactment." One wonders what the Republican alibi will be next November when they'll need every vote they can muster if they are to keep control of Congress?

Its no political secret that colored voters hold the balance of power in the 12 big pivotal states. They would be very foolish indeed to throw this balance to Republican candidates whose promises have proven to be not worth the paper on which they're printed.

Facts Forum, the nationally broadcast program, which claims to present "both sides" has some quaint ideas about many subjects. But the quaintest is its approach to the problem of race. There was no racial tension in America until 1928 when Communists began stirring it up, they say. The demand for FEPC, end of segregation and other civil rights legislation was all inspired by the reds, say Forum speakers. The man who pays the program's bills is Texas Oilman H. L. Political notes off the cuff

COLORED VOTERS can take over the driver's seat in the fourth-coming battle for the Senate, most experts agree. That's why you see such feverish activity among GOP tub-thumbers to blow up the racial appointments and achievements of the Eisenhower administration. This political truth was illustrated in the Republican primary in Illinois, won by Joseph T. Meek, a reactionary lobbyist for retail interests.

Meek, a long and bitter foe of FEPC legislation, will try to unseat Democratic incumbent Paul Douglas, a liberal who has consistently voted for civil rights measures. The growing dissatisfaction with Eisenhower farm policy in normally Republican Illinois will make the race extremely close. The more than 600,000 colored voters in Abe Lincoln's state can spell the difference. It's difficult to imagine them casting their votes for a man like Meek. Afro American

With balloting certain to be close, colored voters could decide the fate of two Southern liberals, Alabama's John Sparkman and Tennessee's Estes Kefauver. Alben W. Barkley's bid for a return to the Senate hangs by the thread of support he can muster among these voters. He must beat Kentucky's Republican incumbent John Cooper. P. 4

North Carolina's former governor, Kerr Scott, with a record for equitable treatment, should have little difficulty winning support of a majority of the state's colored voters. This should allow him to unseat Alton A. Lennon. And Arkansas' ex-Gov. Sid McMath, who opened the University of Arkansas to everybody, with the aid of colored voters, will give incumbent John McClellan the fight of his political life.

Attention will also be focussed on Ohio's Democratic incumbent Thomas A. Burke, a civil rights liberal, expected to be challenged by Republican George H. Bender. Burke would be a certain winner with our support. In California our votes can replace GOP conservative Thomas Kuchel with Democratic liberal Samuel Yorty in a close race. Yorty has a perfect voting record on legislation to bring about equality.

Fantastic and unbelievable!

IT'S MORE THAN ironie that ten days after the Supreme Court outlawed segregation, the loyalty of one of the world's great men was being questioned largely on the grounds that in years past, he was too vigorous an enemy of racial discrimination.

For that is the only possible, if unbelievable, reason that Dr. Ralph Bunche could have been summoned before a government loyalty board and roughly grilled in a 12-hour long third degree on suspicions that he is a possible security risk.

It would apprear that Mr. Mackay Dr. Bunche during his school days in the 1930's associated at various times with individuals and organizations dedicated to exposing the doctrine of "separate but equal" as the legal fraud the Supreme Court on May 17, 1954, some 24 years later, has agreed it was.

Yet Dr. Bunche has served his country and the world with distinction in many important positions of trust since 1941. That was the year he was borrowed from Howard University by the State Department. He has never returned to the campus. During the war, his specialized knowledge of the Dark Continent and its people, helped the hush - hush Office of Strategic Services prepare for the victorious African campaign.

So brilliant was his work with the State Department, President Truman made him the unprecedented offer of assistant Secretary of State. But he turned it down because of his intense hatred of Washington's pattern of segregation. He remained with the UN to become trusteeship chairman after his historic halting of a shooting war in Palestine.

During all these years no voices were raised to question his devotion to country. None dared. J. Edgar Hoover's FBI years ago made a thorough probe of Dr. Bunche's background, else he never could have served as a member of U. S. delegations to 10 national, hemispheric and international conferences.

Two paid, professional witnesses, Manning Johnson and Leonard Patterson, have been trotted out to point accusing fingers. Both claim to have quit the Communists in 1940. So anything they say would have to date back to those years of despair during the depression.

But how long are their memories, how reliable is their testimony? It might be remembered that Johnson is the man who, under oath, made the fantastic statement that 11 of our bishops, chiefly of the AME denomination, and a majority of our Protestant clery were either Communists or at one time or another had followed the communist line. Nobody believed him then and anyone who still enjoys his sanity will not believe him now.

That was clearly shown last Thursday night when Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Bunche were guests at the White House. It's no military secret that President Eisenhower hasn't made a practice of extending dinner invitiations to known or even suspected security risks. There's no reason to believe he would make an exception in the case of Dr. Bunche.

There is another angle to the case which remains unexplained. For 13 years of devoted service to his country, Dr. Bunche's loyalty remains unchallenged. Then suddenly when it becomes public knowledge that Dr. Bunche is being considered for promotion to assistant secretary of the United Nations, the highest post ever held by an American, security doubts are belatedly raised.

The fact that the grilling of Dr. Bunche was conducted by former Senator Harry P. Cain, a bitter foe of the United Nations, and an avowed McCarthyite, doesn't serve to put at ease the belief that certain "know-nothing" interests were out to discredit the man who more than any other American stands as the bright symbol of hope to the colored majority of the world's population.

Two who accused Dr. Bunche

OVERSHADOWING THE happy, but not unexpected news of Dr. Ralph Bunche's complete vindication of any and all charges of disloyalty are two disturbing things. The first is that Dr. Bunche was forced to undergo the shocking ordeal of being under investigation and intensive inquiry for 16 consecutive hours before the International Employees' Loyalty Board could arrive at a decision which should have been obvious from the beginning.

Mr. Mackay

The second is that such is the present hysterical atmosphere, the word of an ex-Communist is accepted by loyalty boards and Congressional investigative committees as being of greater value than that of a man who has devoted a lifetime of service to his country above and beyond the call of duty.

The strongest testimony against Dr. Bunche, it has been learned, was offered by Manning Johnson and Leonard Patterson, two Harlemite members of that growing and profitable profession of paid Government witnesses and who belong to this new and close-knit fraternity of informers have four things in common. They first must have at one time belonged to the Communist party. Secondly, they must be possessed with usually long, if inaccurate, memories. And thirdly, they must never have any hesitation about violating the Ninth Commandment which reads: "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor."

It might be advisable to get a closer look at Messers. Johnson and Patterson. Both admit having been Communists until about 1940. Of the two, Johnson has been the busier. An employee of the Department of Justice he has testified in about 25 court cases and made several appearances before Congressional hearings. Transcriptions of this testimony reveal his memory, while long, is far from reliable.

He testified during the trial of Harry Bridges that the West coast longshoreman leader, had attended a Communist convention in New York on June 27, 1936. But six other witnesses and newspaper clippings substantiated that actually Mr. Bridges on that date was some 3,000 miles away attending a meeting at Stockton, Calif. An ordinary witness caught in this situation would have been charged with perjury, but Mr. Johnson is no ordinary witness. Apparently he enjoys immunity from perjury prosecution.

He brazenly admitted testifying falsely in the deportation proceedings against Nat Yanish in 1948. Three years later, in testifying before the Subversive Activities Control Board, he frankly admitted he had no aversion to lying. He was asked:

"In other words, you will tell a lie under oath rather than run counter to your instructions from the FBI. Is that right?"

"Yes," replied the glib Mr. Johnson, "if the interests of my Government are at stake. In the face of enemies at home and abroad, if maintaining secrecy of the techniques of operations of the FBI, who have responsibility of the protection of our people, I say I will do it a thousand times."

In other words as long as a lie is wrapped in the flag, it suddenly becomes no longer a lie but a sacred duty. Such is the reasoning of the man who dared point a finger at Dr. Ralph Bunche.

Leonard Patterson, testifying before the House Un-American Activities Committee, identified the Rev. Jack McMichael as having been a member of the New York District of the Young Communist League in 1934 and 1935. Documentary evidence was produced showing that actually Mr. McMichael was a freshman at Emory University, some 900 miles away in Atlanta at that time.

Both Johnson and Patterson glibly ran off a list of reputable clergymen they accused of Communistic activities while testifying before the Velde Committee in 1953. By their standards each member of the cloth who had ever protested segregation was a suspect. Patterson's testimony during the 1950 hearings on communism among New York school teachers was so fantastic it was rejected as unworthy of belief by the trial examiner.

The fact that Dr. Bunche was cleared by a unanimous vote is a clear indication that the International Employees' Loyalty Board had finally arrived at the same conclusion.

Democracy in Action

THE ADMINISTRATION'S action on the NAACP's complaints against twelve railroads, a terminal company and a news agency, which matter is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, is a good demonstration of the value of administrative relief.

Miss McKenzie

Perhaps when the Eisenhower contribution to civil rights is totalled, the record will show that this area was the one where the greatest good was accomplished.

An ICC examiner, Howard Hosmer, has recommended in the NAACP cases, on which hearings have been held, that the commission put an end to segregation on all trains and stations of railroads operating in interstate commerce.

IT APPEARS altogether likely that the commission will adopt the Eisenhower Administration's position that there shall be no discrimination nor segregation wherever Federal authority or Federal funds operate.

The Attorney General, Herbert Brownell Jr., has filed a brief for the Government which supports Mr. Hosmer's recommendation.

Interestingly enough, Mr. Hosmer has not had to invent any new theories or approach.

HE ASSERTS that segregation subjects Negro passengers to unreasonable disadvantages and is in violation of Section 3 (I) of the Interstate Commerce Act.

This is the clause upon which the brief for the plaintiff relied in Henderson v. U. S. and it served as the basis for the Supreme Court's ruling in that case in June, 1950.

The Henderson case outlawed the use of curtains or compartments for separating Negro from white passengers. Originally, Section 3 (I) was written to assure nondiscriminatory rates to carriers, but its wording is so broad and clear that it is obviously a bar to any form of discrimination which puts a burden on interstate commerce.

THE HENDERSON and Mitchell and Morgan cases, and a host of others, have hacked away at various forms of segregation in interstate commerce.

Despite these gains, many people have thought that nothing short of legislative relief would clarify the total transportation picture, and Congressman A. Clayton Powell annually has introduced such a bill.

The prospect of its passage is dim, since its fate, like that of all other civil rights measures, is linked to closure.

THE FEDERAL courts have been far out in front in the fight for first-class citizenship.

It has been my position that their contribution must be supported by administrative and legislative action, for the protection of both the courts and the protagonists, and also because we must keep the development of the culture in joint by respecting the divided power principles of our Government.

For these reasons, then, the Eisenhower administrative policies are important.

THEY ILLUSTRATE the power of the executive arm when it is fully committed to a program. And by proving the workability of that program, the Administration prepares the way for action by Congress.

This is an orderly progression for society. First theory, then practice, then the formulation of a new rule. So it is that the law often seems to lag behind and is sometimes expressed only after everybody is behaving that way anyhow.

ANYONE who remembers the ideology of the CIO-AF of L split back in 1935, has to reorganize his thinking to accommodate to the current unity talk.

At the recent CIO convention in Los Angeles, it became clear that the no-raiding agreements, already signed a year ago, and the resolutions on merger are more than maneuvers aimed at some indeterminate future time.

Miss McKenzie

Organized labor intends a rapprochement, whether in 1955, as Dave McDonald of the Steelworkers predicts, or in 1956, as indicated by more conservative estimates.

FROM THE dramatic days of the sit-down strikes to the labor-managements talks of today, in which the participants on both sides of the mahogany conference table may be indistinguishably groomed in Oxford gray suits of a Brooks Brothers cut, is, to understate the fact, a long way.

The schisms that separated the industrial worker from the craftsman have narrowed.

Economically and politically, the American worker is more nearly a complete man, has turned his back on the extremists of the left and right in his midst, and now seeks to fortify this unity of outlook by organizational formality.

THE LAYMAN, in his ignorance, easily could regard the contemplated merger as evidence of strength or as a confession of weakness.

Is labor so strong that it no longer needs some competitive activities of two big organizations to keep it growing?

Or, is it so weak that it must join ranks in order to bargain effectively with big business? Labor's theory is that trade unionism is here to stay, but that its efforts should not be expanded in internecine war.

Rather should they be directed to organizing the millions of workers still not in any union.

Moreover, production methods today are erasing the classic lines between the functions of industrial and craft workers, which enables them to make common cause.

CERTAIN IT is that labor's failure to win revision of the Taft-Hartley Act is no measure of its power, politically or otherwise. Labor sets policy for the nation.

Its voice is to be heard, not only on matters of its own concern, but also on questions relating to foreign affairs, race relations, civil liberties, housing—all the issues of national interest.

A merger of the CIO and AF of L has implications for minority workers, especially Negroes. CIO unions have pioneered in breaking down barriers to union membership and have worked vigorously for fair employment.

Some, like CIO President Walter Reuther's UAW, have important committees which are staffed and budgeted in the cause of fair employment.

ON THE other hand, some AF of L unions, like the Boilermakers, have resisted court action and Presidential decree in their determination to remain lily-white.

Others have set up segregated auxiliary unions or controlled non-white employment in their crafts by restricting the issuance of work permits.

The Negro worker is inescapably affected by the fusing of the two labor giants. There are millions more members in the AF of L than in the CIO, although the CIO's national organization is stronger and richer.

TO THE extent that he is affiliated with either, the Negro worker's membership will enhance his position in American industry. To the extent that the CIO loses the initiative in establishing and maintaining democratic labor force patterns, the merger spells potential losses to Negro workers.

We are not without spokesmen in either group, and it will be their job to see that protection is provided in the new labor congress.

AN ASSOCIATED Press release reported last week that 275 out of 430 students in the high school in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., struck when twenty-three Negro students were integrated under a state-wide order.

We have been hearing from Southern Governors, Attorneys-General and state legislators about how they will or will not accept the Supreme Court's decision of last May 17.

Miss McKenzie

Now we have an example of direct action by white teen-age students in a border state, thus exploding some expert theory that school bars would drop more readily in fringe areas and in places where the ratio of Negroes to whites is low.

A COMPARISON of the student reaction in White Sulphur Springs and in Gary, Ind., where several years ago integration resulted from a change in state law, and also occasioned a strike, is inevitable. Very capable social studies were made of the Gary strike, including an investigation of parental attitudes and participation in encouraging the strike.

Socio-economic factors were thought to have played a large part in the Gary drama.

WHITE SULPHUR Springs is in a mountain resort area that attracts wealthy people. The local gentry in resort towns often exhibit inferiority feelings and resentment.

What we know about manifestations of racial violence in non-deep-South regions, suggests that in the West Virginia situation we should look for economic and social conflict, quite apart from race.

Certain it is that the West Virginia disturbance comes at a time when the nation is concerned about teen-age delinquency and crime.

NEWSWEEK MAGAZINE, on Sept. 6, said bluntly, "Let's Face It. Our Teen-agers Are Out of Hand." More than a million young Americans are in trouble each year.

The rise in adolescent crime is four times the increase for adults and includes more and more crimes of violence.

The experts try to illuminate the problem. Judge Samuel S. Leibowitz, before whom appeared four Brooklyn boys who had confessed murder and other horrors, has said the cure to juvenile delinquency must include a resurgence of faith and religion.

Dr. Frederic Wertham, a famous New York psychiatrist, continues his campaign against comic books.

A CHICAGO sociologist, Russell W. Ballard, warns that the problem is national and must be solved in terms of community programs.

And, Dr. Harris B. Peck, director of the Bureau of Health Services in New York Domestic Relations Court, says the time has come to stop heaping all the blame on parents when children go wrong. Dr. Peck says the real delinquent is society, which exerts many pressures over which the family has little control.

The children of the New South have come a long way in showing better racial adjustment. Integration on the college level has been taking place without friction since 1935.

LAST YEAR, 2,000 Negro students attended previously all-white colleges. Pre-integration polls showed the majority of white students favored the admission of Negroes.

Contrary to developments in many areas affecting our children, society is making strides in racial democracy. There are more powerful pressures in favor of integration in education than, for example, the insecurities of life in a mountain pocket in West Virginia can withstand.

White Sulphur Spring's teen-age rebels will have to seek other outlets for their adolescent energy.

Why Hold Regional Meetings?

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

THERE is very little new, ordinarily, to be said about a regional meeting of one of our established leadership organizations. The concepts and the speeches are likely to be old hat to a veteran convention observer.

A regional meeting of the NAACP these days is fraught with added meaning, however.

Miss McKenzie

The disorder in Milford, Del.; in Baltimore, Md.; in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.; in Washington, D. C., lies heavily on the minds and hearts of the delegates.

For this disorder stems from what they have wrought within an organizational framework, policy and discipline. Have they opened a Pandora's box generally? Is their victory a matter which should give them worry and pause?

WHEN A regional meeting occurs in Central California, at a coastal convention resort, far from the scene of the disorder, what national organizational identification is possible? What ties and techniques are relevant to a total program?

These are questions to be answered, not by the membership, whose very affiliation is a kind of answer, but by the stranger within the gates. For one who has seen the organization functioning East and South views its manifestation in the West with a background of assumption that makes many of the organizational weapons seem irrelevant.

In an area that has changed so fast and so much, whose current condition is full of anomaly, perhaps newer or different methods are indicated.

FOR ONE whose experience leads to an acceptance of the NAACP's arsenal as apt weapons for Milford and Baltimore and Washington, the inconsistencies of the West might seem to require a different approach.

Last week at Asilomar, Roy Wilkins, the administrator from the national office, addressing the several hundred delegates from Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado and Montana, did not think the regional variation significant.

Franklin H. Williams, the regional director, agreed that the surface calm, of the coastal states at least, does not provide ground for relaxation. California is not to be haughty or remote from Milford.

It has its El Centro, with a pattern of school segregation that is more baffling because it is without legal sanction or pretense.

IF THE organization itself, in its new national maturity, accommodates the wide regional variation of the nation as surely as other successful examples of national planning, in government and out, encompass their programs, at least its delegates suggest a difference in spirit and manner from their Eastern and Southern affiliates.

There is still in the West a freshness and enthusiasm that are clear and distinct. Not as ordered, not as sophisticated and not as tired as the older hands, the western membership sets a pioneer's pace.

What is especially of significance to a visitor is the realization that there has been too little communication between the East and the West and that each has a great deal to give the other.

While we are so busily talking about making one world, perhaps we might also realistically address ourselves to the problem of making this one nation.

Myrdal, Paton Contrasted

Courier Sat. 10-16-54

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

IF you feel the need of a bulwark of thought to sustain you through the rioting of white children against the desegregation of schools—and I think most of us do—you can read Alan Paton's article in the Oct. 15 issue of Collier's magazine.

Miss McKenzie

Often you will be reading Mr. Paton with tears in your eyes as you go slowly through his first-hand report, "The Negro in America Today." But you will be strengthened by a glimpse into his perspective and thus able to adjust your own to the disquieting news that there are places where white American youth is so tragically out of touch with American ideals.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

A COMPARISON of their relative works wouldn't be fair either to Mr. Paton or to that other famous foreign observer of our strange racial ways, Gunnar Myrdal, the Swedish anthropologist, whose two-volume study, "An American Dilemma," was published almost a decade ago. Dr. Myrdal's book will long serve as an authoritative reference on relations between the races, for all of the history it purports to cover. Mr. Paton has confined himself to a series of articles, the second to appear on Oct. 29.

P. 6

The similiarity between Paton and Myrdal lies not in the size of their undertakings, nor in their method, but in their objectivity. Each brings, of course, a subjective burden of experience to the task of assessing how far Americans have come along the path to brotherhood, but both are able to look at us with fresher eyes than we have for seeing ourselves. Out of the vastly dissimilar backgrounds of Sweden and South Africa, both also bring to the analysis an obvious hope for democracy's success and a genius for pointing out the milestones that remove all doubt as to the direction in which we are traveling.

IN CONSIDERING the meaning of rioting by children, we must understand that such behavior goes beyond racial prejudice and requires an investigation of adults and of the operation of the social order. We recognize that across the nation, our teen agers are out of hand, and that juvenile delinquency rises in rate and seriousness of offense. The transition from segregated to mixed schools provides what may appear to be a lapse in local authority and into such a vacuum the disordered spirits of our disordered children may easily drift. The issue to deal with may very well be, not segregation or its termination, but the reclamation of our young people from patterns of lawlessness and anti-social behavior generally.

MR. PATON helps us look at the violence against a picture of interracial progress that in the main is not confused. Two things impressed him: One was the recognition of the white American South that the long struggle to keep Negroes out of the nation is coming to an end, even though many, like Governors Byrnes and Talmadge, will not say so. The other was the no-nonsense approach of the armed services to integration orders and the resultant success. Mr. Paton also finds the long arm of the Federal courts reassuring.

Like Dr. Myrdal, Mr. Paton perceives the answer to the dilemma in our form of government wherever it is administered with authority and be-her in its principles. This provides, of course, a simple way for handling the antics of children.

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

AT THE recent West Coast NAACP regional meeting, one of the subjects that came up for informal discussion among lawyers and housing specialists was the working out of a formula by which non-segregated housing can be achieved.

Miss McKenzie

So complete has been the Negro buyer's shut-out from new housing, and so great is his need, that when a tract of houses is made available on an open occupancy basis, he snaps it up and thus voluntarily continues a pattern of segregation.

The builder who starts out sincerely willing to adopt an unrestricted sales program has several reasons for dismay when he finds that his best efforts to integrate the housing supply are so quickly frustrated.

* * * *

IT MAY be that the insurance company or savings bank that has agreed to finance his project has made the commitment on the basis that there would be mixed occupancy.

Usually, the lender anticipates that from 10 to 50 per cent of the buyers will be Negroes. This lender may not think that an all-Negro project is as good a twenty-five-year investment risk.

Builders, the great majority of whom are white, are just beginning to be interested in the minority housing market. Lukewarm as they are, they still meet with objections from various community interests, for both the white and the Negro communities are likely to object to the development of more segregated housing.

Courier

HOW CAN the producers of housing, who want to go along with the Eisenhower Administration's promise of more housing for minorities and low-income groups generally, supply it in a way that will assure democratic communities? This is a question that has to be answered, in any event, if there is truly to be an end to segregation in education.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

The basic answer is, of course, a greater supply of housing at a price that the lower income purchaser, white or Negro, can afford. And the private builder has to be ingenious and persistent, in today's market, to produce a low-cost house.

Sat. 11-13-54

In the second place, any builder who advertises, in advance, that he has an interracial or open occupancy project, is consigning it to Negro buyers. "Interracial" has come, strangely enough, to mean "for Negroes" and white customers don't apply.

ACCORDINGLY, if a builder were to delay his integration until after he had established enough white homeowners in a tract to guarantee its mixed character, he could be sure that his willingness to sell to Negroes, and sales to a few, would soon be known without any further declarations on his part.

The third thing a builder can do to commend his house to all buyers is to offer a competitive product.

If he appeals to the consumer's pocketbook, if he has a better house for less money, he will have white and Negro buyers vying with each other and caring less and less about the color of their neighbors.

P. 6

The experience we are thus beginning to analyze in the housing market has significance in other areas where segregation is under attack. Advance planning and thoughtful control are needed if we are to prevent new islands of segregation from developing under a banner of non-discrimination.

PURSUIT OF DEMOCRACY

Vice President Nixon in Stand Against Race Bias

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

A DEVELOPMENT to anticipate with great interest will be the possible acceleration and expansion of the Administration's anti-discrimination program. Along with a profound strengthening of our foreign policy, this program, if it comes about, will reflect the new world-mindedness of Vice President Nixon.

Miss McKenzie

Perhaps no man, no matter how insular, limited in experience or outlook, can travel 45,000 miles, either in the troubled Far East or the troubled world, and fail to grow in understanding. But seldom is a government blessed with this kind of change in a leader of such importance as a Vice President, especially one who has been chosen for the very qualities now under metamorphosis.

MR. NIXON'S statement that racial discrimination is the most dangerous kind of subversion against America is perhaps the strongest ever made by so high a government official. That it was made by Mr. Nixon who is the chairman of the Government Contract Committee, is tremendously impressive. The committee is scheduled to meet in mid-January. It would appear that we can reasonably expect that the Government's nondiscrimination-in-employment policy will become more than political window-dressing. It may be that we can now expect, as a result of Mr. Nixon's new insight and courage, a program that will get off the ground and begin to move, a program that is staffed, budgeted and purposefully directed.

In the strategic position which Mr. Nixon occupies as chief liason officer between the Capitol and the White House, he can influence other aspects of the Administration's stated racial policies and goals. Negro leadership has always known that the platform pledges of Republicans and Democrats alike would never reach legislative fruition unless and until sincere efforts to accomplish these things were launched by those in power. Either party could achieve real legislative reform in all the traditional areas of minority demand—anti-lynching, poll tax, fair employment, cloture amendment, fair housing, non-discriminatory Federal aid to education, anti-segregation laws in interstate travel—if it honestly wanted to and honestly tried.

No such legislation would fail of a majority vote, were it to reach the floor of either house. Both parties have men sufficiently committed to racial reform to win great victories. The issue is nonpartisan, intrinsically and extrinsically. Knowing this, neither party has exercised bold leadership. Each has blamed the other and relied on the other for the preservation of the status quo.

MR. NIXON'S broadly stated conviction, so strong and sure after his travels, could be the force to break the stalemate and enable America to work for solutions of one of her most perplexing international problems. These next few months will be a real test of Mr. Nixon's power. It is rumored in Washington that the conservative elements of the Republican party, whose darling Mr. Nixon has been, are alarmed by the evidences of his broadened horizon. Perhaps President Eisenhower, himself a world citizen of long standing, surmised that a man as young and as intelligent as Richard Nixon could respond to a learning process. If the mission was deliberately planned, not only as a good-will tour, but also as a method of winning over an influential, hard-working Vice President, then President Eisenhower may be a smarter politician upon occasion than he is credited with being.

For us, the prospect that legislative action might be in the thinking and plans of the Administration is a bright hope indeed. We are wearing thin the edge of the judicial sword. We have wielded the shield of executive protection with good effect. Unless there is a comparable development of a legislative nature, we risk a distortion and a weakening of the means of redress theoretically available under our system of government. Ideologically, too, our cause is stymied by legislative inaction. It is as if the American people themselves were not for racial democracy, when their chosen representatives do nothing to enhance it.

Vice President Nixon is a man to watch, to encourage, to teach. He can do a lot for himself and for America if he has really seen the light and really means not to hide that light under those same old barrels of indifference, cynicism and bigotry that have kept the nation from the realization of its destiny.

The Bricker Proposal Would Protect Racists and Bourbons

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

THE BRICKER Amendment has loomed uneasily before the American people for more than four years. Now on the eve of the debate on the controversial proposal, it appears that the storm which threatened Constitutional order and the Republican Party may pass over.

Miss McKenzie

If the country is spared this disaster, it will be because a big and difficult educational job has been done on a big and difficult subject, obscure even to lawyers who specialize in this particular phase of constitutional law.

For certain it is that Senator Bricker, who has been portrayed throughout the campaign for his amendment as having an astute legal mind, did not intend that public understanding should ever become too clear on the issues involved.

THE ERUDITE monographs that have been prepared by specially appointed committees of the American Bar Association are strictly for the trade.

The success of a landslide in favor of the amendment depended really on its being borne along on hysteria, ignorance, isolationism and racial prejudice.

Instead, time has been on the side of light and reason. And the time so gained has been used to impressive advantage by the American press and by liberal organizations working in the fields of international understanding and civil liberties.

Chief among the recipients of the vast store of learning that has spilled across the pages of the daily press have been the Senators themselves, many of whom prove their growing grasp of the subject by retreating from their earlier, favorable stands. Considerable behind-the-scenes briefing has been going on as well, beginning with President Eisenhower himself.

Thus, it could be said that Senator Wayne Morse's (Ind., Ore.) motion to send the amendment back to the Senate Judiciary Committee for further consideration may prove an inspired strategem that will save face for those embarrassed by their new knowledge and also avoid a split in Republican ranks in an election year.

ALL OF the maneuvering on the Bricker Amendment and all of the skull-cracking effort by laymen to see the proposal in its full legal implications, are not matters to be viewed by American minorities, and particularly by Negroes, as beyond their special interests and responsibilities.

I said this here four years ago.

In the interim, the Negro press and civil rights groups have not demonstrated an awareness of the meaning of this amendment to their main cause.

The same Old-Guard-Dixiecrat coalition that has threatened our program was lined up solidly behind Senator Bricker.

This was warning enough. We have been quick to estimate the strength that would accrue to our cause if the covenants being drafted by various UN commissions were to be adopted as treaties.

CIVIL RIGHTS lawyers have included provisions of the UN Charter in their arguments in briefs submitted to the U. S. Supreme Court.

So far, such appeals have been purely hortatory and we have had no assist on a theory that the Charter is self-executing as to the sections on which we rely.

The fact is that the Draft Covenant on Human Rights, if adopted as a treaty, would solve the legal problems of second-class citizenship. Against such an eventuality, the Bricker proposal and its now famous "which" clause, would stand as a full protection to the Bourbon South and the states' righters.

That the Bricker Amendment would also destroy our sovereignity as a nation among nations, suggests the lengths to which the proponents of white supremacy are willing to go to preserve their way of life.

WITH THE stakes so high, it was the job of Negro leadership and the Negro press to have assumed a great part of the burden of explaining, exposing and defeating the Bricker Amendment.

This was so, not only because of the bright promise to human freedom at home and abroad in the various UN covenants, either drafted or under study, but also because we would be fighting not to lose the heart of the meaning of national citizenship, so often our brightest shield.

The German's Efforts to Become Free Are Likened to the Lot of the Negro

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

THE BERLIN talks on the unification of Germany remind me of race relations conferences.

Everyone's mind is perfectly made up on every issue in advance. All the conference does is to provide a forum for the restatement of positions, and, at the conference's end, everyone departs feeling considerably reinforced by the echo of his own voice.

Miss McKenzie

The status of the German people also reminds me of the condition of the Negro in the United States. The West German, in the zones occupied by the Atlantic powers, is almost a free man, just as the American Negro of the northern United States is almost a first-class citizen.

The East German, on the other hand, under Soviet control, is just about as self-determined as Negroes were in the South twenty years ago.

THERE IS, of course, one vast difference. The Germans of the East and West comprise a nation with a long and proud, if troubled, history, and the urge toward national unity and sovereignty is perhaps the strongest emotion that motivates them today.

They want nothing so much as to see the departure of all of the conquerors, whether benign or despotic.

American Negroes want no independence as a nation, which would be, by definition, an ethnic state. But they would like to be united in freedom, North and South, an ambition that spurs the northern Negro "agitator."

Aside from the question of sovereignty, however, other similarities in the situation and response of these two peoples appear to persist. For example, Russia has complete control over the lives of the East Germans. It was not thought that revolt, as evidenced by some of Russia's freer, dissident satellites, was remotely possible in the Soviet sector of Germany. Yet an astonished world applauded the strikes of the East Berlin workers in June, 1952.

JUST AS the history of the South is also the saga of slave uprisings and of the courageous determination of Negroes today to be whole Americans, voting and attending publicly supported schools in spite of Southern might, arrayed and sometimes armed, against them.

Consider also the vitality that captive Germans and underprivileged Negroes demonstrate. Theodore H. White, who has distilled fifteen years' experience as a foreign correspondent so brilliantly in "Fire in the Ashes," his study of contemporary Europe, best describes the desolation of Germany in 1945.

The people were without food, homes, jobs or a government; their industries were shattered, their currency worthless. Yet, says Mr. White, by 1953, four years after the alliance of the Russians and the West was torn apart by the Berlin blockade, Germany had become the strongest of the European states, with her conquerors competing for her favors.

MR. WHITE suggests that German success stems from a deep biological urge in the German people to to thrive and be masters of their own destiny.

If such primordial strivings are in fact stronger in certain cultural or racial groups, perhaps some similar urge has enabled the American Negro to rise above discrimination, enforced by law and custom, and grow toward freedom rather than die in Southern backwoods areas.

German leadership has repeated a pattern long followed by Negro leadership. In 1948, the military Governors permitted German representatives to draft a new constitution for the rebirth of the German state.

The new republic emerged in late 1949, with Konrad Adenauer as Chancellor. But it was not a free government, and Adenauer had to wait upon the Allied High Commissioners every three weeks to learn whether or not they chose to veto the acts of the new German Legislature.

MR. WHITE reports that "Adenauer's instinct was to go slowly, take each grant of freedom as it was offered, ask for more, submit when refused, then wait, then ask for more again." Sounds familiar, doesn't it?

The rabid German Socialists wanted independence and equality at once.

Adenauer was able to win concessions from the High Commissioners by references to this vigorous opposition and could persuade them of the necessity of holding the radicals in line under his own "friendly leadership."

A thousand and one delegations of smiling Negro leaders, inscrutable and outwardly conciliatory, have called upon American officials, from the President of the United States on down through city mayors and police precinct lieutenants, to explain and negotiate and to point out the dangers of depriving "radical" Negroes of every demand.

Negro Leadership Must Advise Us When Bloc Voting Is Most Feasible

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

WHEN WALTER White was interviewed by an editor of U. S. News and World Report on what he regards as next steps, to follow the Supreme Court's ruling that segregation in public education is unconstitutional, Mr. White said that the NAACP would work, among other things, for an expansion of the Negro's voting strength.

Not, Mr. White made clear, that the organization favors bloc voting.

It is just Miss McKenzie that, without any choice of his own, the Negro has an understandable concern about civil rights and equal opportunities and his vote, both North and South, will be directed toward completing the job of abolishing segregation.

MR. WHITE was maneuvering delicately around an old familiar mousetrap.

It is generally held that bloc voting is undemocratic and reprehensible. Officially, Negroes deny that there is any such thing as a disciplined, predictable "Negro vote."

With equal voice, they tote up their strength after each election and lay heavy hands on their successful candidates.

Mr. White could not resist an illustration of what expanding the Negro's voting strength means.

IN THE RECENT Alabama primary, he pointed out, the Negro vote, 50,000 strong, reelected Senator John Sparkman.

The South's registered Negro voters have grown from less than 200,000 before the Supreme Court's decision in Smith v. Allwright — the Texas primary case that was an NAACP victory in 1944 — to nearly two million today.

And the NAACP's objective is three million registered voters by 1956, a development which would increase, of course, the number of instances in which the "Negro vote" would hold the balance of power.

IS THIS BAD? Should we be guilty about bloc voting, whether it occurs either by deliberate intent or understandable result?

Should we engage in the process half-heartedly, all the while denying the interpretation put on our campaigns, or should we intensify our efforts and come out in the open, wielding what is perhaps our biggest stick in the fight for equality?

We are not alone in our dilemma as minority group voters, both rejecting and clinging to the idea that we have a weapon, which we do and/or do not use.

A thoughtful analysis of the significance of the "Jewish vote" appears in the March 26 issue of "The Reconstructionist," a magazine dedicated to the advancement of Judaism as a religious civilization.

LAST NOVEMBER, while the Kibya incident was being considered in the Security Council, the Archbishop of York said that "the Jewish vote in New York has had a paralyzing effect on the UN," in relation to the settlement of the Arab-Israel problem.

This charge was denied angrily by representatives of various Jewish organizations on the ground that there was no such thing as a Jewish vote.

The author of the Reconstructionist article, Rabbi Hertezl Fishman, undertakes to state a thesis that, when certain specific issues arise affecting Jews, as Jews, they can be expected to vote as part of a pro-Jewish bloc.

THE ISSUE then, as with the Negro voter, is not whether Jews do vote as a bloc on certain questions, but whether they should vote as Jews on matters that affect their security.

Many questions arise which involve only individual interests of an economic, political or social nature. In a democracy, we have a choice of voting for one policy or another.

But other questions arise, which relate to the basic principles of self-preservation and equality with others, and which are posed because of racial or religious group membership.

RABBI FISHMAN contends that when group survival is at stake, the power of voting as a group is the right of every minority wishing to preserve itself.

Indeed, it is the moral duty of such groups to influence a candidate for election in behalf of its unique interests, when they are "preservationist issues."

The author also describes individual interests as "enhancement" interests and group interests as "survival" interests. Jews do not vote as a bloc with respect to the former, but they do, and should, vote en bloc in relation to their group identity, aspirations and joint survival.

THE FORMULATION of Rabbi Fishman's thesis offers obvious and useful comparisons with the problems of Negro bloc voting and Negro use of a balance of power strength.

The role of Negro leadership, therefore, is in educating the group as to when an issue is an individual, or enhancement, interest and when it is a group, or survival, interest.

We have rejoiced that increasingly Negro voters have had diversified perspectives on public affairs, causing them to vote as Americans, in support of American interests on issues of domestic or foreign policy, rather than as Negroes.

But it would be unrealistic and unwise to behave as if there remained no survival issues—such as fair employment and fair housing—regarding which bloc voting would be, not only our right, but our duty.

Dynamism of NAACP's Convention Arose From Revolutionary Hearts

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

THE DYNAMISM that infused the NAACP's forty-fifth annual convention in Dallas last week arose from the hearts of revolutionaries.

Not even in Guatemala was a more successful revolution being celebrated.

Miss McKenzie

The exciting aspect of the meeting was not, however, in the measurement of the spoils, generous though they were.

The real victory was in the coming of age of an organization. The NAACP has flowered and wasted over the years.

IT HAS ridden on crests of popularity and fallen on dark days, as mortal as its leadership. In this one fight, on an issue of such universal importance, the organization at last has risen above internecine strife, shrugged off the chains of the few and become the instrument of the many.

Every organization, every institution conceived of man, must stand this test. Either it lasts for the lifetime of some mentor's career or it moves on to an identity and fulfilment of its own.

While it hovers between these two destinies, friends stand by and hope, and enemies try to tip the scales adversely.

Det. T-10-54

THIS IS the year that the NAACP has stood the test and earned its right to live on in men's hearts, servant to their hopes, a force outside of its creators, larger than its interpreters.

This is a happenstance that anyone would have been foolhardy to predict, that anyone will be grateful to acknowledge.

Local heroes now go out to do battle in local engagements, proudly proclaiming the NAACP's banner. There are magic and power in the name. If you are an urban sophisticate, go into a small community with large racial problems and invoke the NAACP.

The local leadership and its local adversary will not know, nor care, about administrative difficulties and the earmarking of funds. Local leadership carries on with the might of Supreme Court sanction, speaking new legal theories and standards, at its back.

IF WE now have an instrument of social precision, we also have agreed upon social objectives. The vitality of our purpose is demonstrated in the boldness with which the victory is accepted. We will go to court against local school boards which balk. "We" means whoever must.

If the local spines are weak or are beset by considerations of survival and jobs or other reprisals, the national spines are strong. We mop up and go forward. The Associated Press report said we will move on to city transportation and railroads as the next anti-segregation targets.

But Jim Carey, the CIO's secretary-treasurer in a convention speech, described a better goal. In many areas, he said, the practical effect of eliminating public school segregation will be negated, as long as non-white families are denied residence in any neighborhood in which they can afford to live.

"As long as we allow custom, the mortgage banking fraternity, or administrators of government housing programs to prevent the free movement of non-white families into certain neighborhoods, public school segregation, in fact, will be with us," Mr. Carey continued.

HARD ON the heels of the school segregation decision came the Supreme Court's refusal to review state court decisions denying municipalities the right to segregate facilities such as golf courses and local housing projects.

The new doctrine is to be extended, therefore, beyond the purview of education and its authority was cited in the subsequent rulings. Theoretically, then, the road-block of Plessy v. Ferguson has been removed from every avenue of publicly supported enterprise.

This presages a busy time for local leadership. But nowhere can the full import of the doctrine have fuller meaning than in assuring a supply of housing on a non-segregated basis.

IF THE new doctrine is that wherever we find state action, that is, the hand of the state in control—granting, leasing, denying, empowering—there can be no segregation, then the NAACP has adequate material for completing the social revolution it has set in motion.

And it is hard not to find the hand of government in man's affairs these days. If the theory is broad enough to cover the granting of licenses and the organization of businesses engaged in serving the public, the millennium is indeed upon us.

McKenzie

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

IN REVIEWING the policy statements issued by the recent forty-fifth annual convention of the NAACP, one is impressed with the maturity of the resolutions adopted by the delegates. The program demonstrates anew that no act of our daily life is free from the cancer of discrimination and segregation, and the resolutions agreed upon manifest both the breadth of the vision of the delegates and the totality of the struggle.

Miss McKenzie

One significant sign of the NAACP's maturity is its labor resolution. The delegates reaffirmed their support of democratic trade unions and of the principle of collective bargaining. They recognized that hundreds of thousands of Negro workers belong to labor unions. Indeed, there are more Negro dues-paying members of trade unions than there are in the NAACP.

DEMOCRATICALLY controlled trade unions have served the interests of all America. The NAACP realizes that the revolution in which it has been engaged has been aided immeasurably by collective bargaining, sound systems of seniority, vacations with pay, paid holidays and the settlement of grievances—all gains won by organized labor. Negro workers and the entire Negro community have benefited directly from the health insurance programs, hospitalization benefits, life insurance policies and pension plans that recently have been written into many collective bargaining agreements.

NAACP support of trade unionism is the fact that organized labor is an important power center in American life today. It is one of the most important decision-making groups in our society. At times, its support is decisive in the struggle to eliminate discrimination and segregation, a political fact that the NAACP convention recognized in recommending that its branches should "seek the support of responsible trade unions for measures that we favor, and in turn give our support to such measures supported by organized labor as are consistent with our policy and program."

THE CONVENTION distinguished precisely between blind, unqualified support and intelligent, discerning support of labor policies. It warned the branches not to cooperate with Communist-controlled unions, nor those expelled from organized labor for being under Communist control, since all such unions function primarily as agents of the Soviet Union.

Evidence of the NAACP's political sophistication was demonstrated in its extension of its prohibition to the National Negro Labor Council as a Communist-dominated organization designed to get Negro workers indirectly to support Communist aims.

Recognizing that an ever-dwindling number of unions, particularly the independent railway brotherhoods, remain guilty of racial discrimination, the NAACP still cautioned that all available techniques—state and city fair employment laws, publicity and court action—must be utilized to end such discriminatory practices.

Auto Trip Through Southwest Shows Economic Worth of Area

By MARJORIE McKENZIE

TO TRAVEL by auto through the American Southwest is to realize how vast, how unused, how new America is. To the Eastern eye, accustomed to city slums, to teeming crowds competing for space and air and warmth, the marvel of thousands of miles of sunny, open land appears as a great national wealth, not yet reported to the people. Surely men would not not dwell in hardship if they were to understand the opportunities that are to be had, not for the taking, but for the planning of a better life.

Miss McKenzie

The West was opened and settled and annexed a century ago. It remains today a frontier area, full of economic promise. Those who believe that our economy is in trouble or has matured fully, should get behind a wheel and roam over the plains and mountains, the deserts and valleys, and experience for themselves the sense of wonder that all of this rich heritage beholds. Nor should the evidence of earlier efforts to conquer the West that have failed be discouraging. For obviously, the opportunity is not one capable of individual effort. Everything is large in scale—the promise, the problems, the solutions.

THE MOST depressing sight of the Southwest is the Indian population. The complexities inherent in the reorganization of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, in the revision of the interlocking network of Indian legislation and in the elimination of the status of wardship of a people in a free land, are all graphic to the mere passerby in Gallup and Taos and Kingman. For while the talk goes on about preserving an ancient culture, and the unthinking exclaim over the colorful costumes and art forms, the social fact and the social problem are those of a whole people caught between two worlds and thus belonging nowhere.

It will take heroic social planning to open the American Southwest. There will have to be cooperative effort between state governments and the Federal Government as well as between government and private industry—a sort of Point Four Program for ourselves. And standing in the face of the acceptance of such an approach is the example of our monumental failure in adjusting mutual rights and responsibilities between ourselves and the Indians under government planning. The difference is, of course, the tremendous one of planning for a free society and for a captive cultural island.

The whole concept of social and economic planning is one that is questioned under the present administration in Washington. Presumably to plan is to oppose free enterprise, when the planning engages the total resources of a people and thus requires a balancing of public and private interests. Unfortunately, the term, social planning, has become synonomous in the public mind with government intervention and government support and thus has acquired such an opprobrious label as "creeping socialism."

ACTUALLY, what is needed is a new interpretation of planning as a bringing to bear all of the skills of a society upon its problems, plus the utilization of whatever resources, public or private, that are needed for the reaching of solutions. Only such large-scale, integrated efforts can achieve the dynamism that will keep a free society increasingly more productive and progressive.

Only as we accept such an approach can we look upon our unsettled domains, or upon the deterioration of our cities, with any kind of optimism that we can conquer new frontiers. The romantic pioneer, striking his personal bonanza, belongs to the romantic past. Today's Westerner, for whom the prospects are just as golden, must be a social engineer.

McKenzie

MARJORIE McKENZIE

MY IMAGINATION is stirred by the announcement of plans for a cross-country political pilgrimage by some Republican women on their way to their National Federation convention in Los Angeles on Sept. 22.

Traveling by bus and being entertained by local federation groups during an eleven-day hegira, they will seek and report on "front porch" political sentiment when they reach the convention.

Miss McKenzie

The idea of women political leaders interviewing women constituents on the latters' home ground is a good public relations gesture and will make wonderful newspaper pictures and copy.

ONE CAN just see the very important Republican ladies climbing in and out of a Greyhound bus, after a 200-mile daily run, to be entertained at luncheon, tea, or the current county fair, Midwestern and Southwestern September heat and wrinkled clothes to the contrary notwithstanding.

A very earthy, democratic and wise adventure, as well as a test of the stern stuff of which lady politicians are made.

Maybe Mr. Gallup won't approve of the accuracy of the sampling methods of the "Election Express."

CROSS-COUNTRY doesn't always mean cross-section. And to be in a new place is not necessarily to see it, nor its people, nor to gain understanding of it.

The girls who will be sitting on their front porches probably will have the better view and the better opportunity to do the questioning, as they interview the representatives of some 4,000 women's clubs about the issues of the day and the Administration's record.

As far as the travelers are concerned, one could hope for them that they might have more than eleven days to cover 3,000 miles and to sound out a nation's political sentiments.

CERTAIN IT is that the only way to appreciate the magnificence and variety of America is to cross it by auto or bus. To appreciate its problems and aspirations requires more than a luncheon's formal opportunity.

The visitor sees what is served, the best, of course, and sometimes the worst, but he may miss the sense of the gray middle-ground between.

As the caravan crosses New Mexico, will the local federation members think to point out the newly desegregated schools, in the first state in the nation fully to follow the Supreme Court decision prior to the entry of the ruling?

The publicity about the "Election Express" says it is a traveling laboratory to analyze how people feel about the issues and to interpret the record of the Eighty-third Congress.

THE DELEGATES plan to talk to women as mothers, homemakers and workers, as builders of the American family and the source of the country's strength.

How can the delegates explain the action of the Eighty-third Congress in crippling the public housing program, so essential to the realization of adequate homes for all of America's families?

What all of us want to know is how our neighbors are responding to the new directions in foreign policy. After years of propaganda about one world, does Mrs. America find it easy to switch to the new nationalism of a divided world?

NEGRO(LOUIS E, MARTIN)

DOPE 'N' DATA

Defender 31a By Negro

By LOUIS E. MARTIN

A representative group of Chicago civic leaders met recently to launch a new plan for raising funds for the various welfare and public service institutions in the colored community. James Stamps of the Social Security office chaired the meeting and Howard Gould, industrial relations counselor, made the major presentation of the new plan. The affair featured finally an address by the vice president of the Combined Jewish Appeal.

Chicago, Ill.

The new plan in essence is a federation of the various fund raising efforts on the Southside into one gigantic appeal and it is patterned loosely after the Combined Jewish Appeal. A lot of little fund raising drives would be merged into one major community-wide or city-wide drive.

P.12

Right below the surface of this proposal one can see, of course, a multiplicity of problems. There is, for instance, the prospect of the various agencies jockeying for a greater share of the combined take. Despite such probabilities, however, the plan seems positively practical if there exists the will to make it work.

Sat. 11-2-54

During the meeting one issue bobbed up that seemed to shock a few Jews who were present. The new plan was tentatively labeled the "United Negro Appeal." There were extreme differences of opinion among the brethren over the use of the word "Negro" in the name and the question was asked by Attorney Sidney Jones, would or would not the new plan make for more or less segregation.

Once the issue of segregation was broached in the matter of the name and in the actual effects of the new plan, a dark cloud of doubt and confusion crept into the room. Although there was overwhelming approval of the plan on its merit, many individuals indicated some mental reservation regarding the Jim Crow aspects of the plan or what appeared to be its Jim Crow aspects.

At every turn and in every group, the question of what is and what is not segregation is being debated by our Negro leadership.

There seems to be a deep inner conflict between personal and racial pride on the one hand and the total fight, on the other hand, to eliminate all discrepancies and inequities in the society which arise out of consideration of race.

Some brothers, for instance, feel so keenly the effects of Jim Crow treatment that they are angered by the word Negro in print. Consider how often someone comes up with a new name for our group. Different leaders among us have what they call their favorite designation for the race. One may use the term colored, another Negro-American or Afro-American, etc. There are also some names not meant for white ears which are frequently used and which I dare not print.

The confusion among the leadership of course, is nothing compared to the confusion among the rank and file. The same guy will say "We Negroes ought to stick together" in one breath and turn right around and say "We Negroes are always getting off in a corner by ourselves." Another will say "I am proud of my race" and in the next breath state with the same conviction "A Negro ain't nothing."

Now that the Supreme Court has outlawed segregation, the general sensitivity on the issue of segregation has doubled. We do not wish to give aid and comfort to anything Jim Crow and at the same time we do not with to feel that an all-Negro effort or project is necessarily all wrong.

We are caught as the poet says between two worlds, one being born and one not yet dead.

When we reach a point in American society that color truly does not matter, these dilemmas arising out of various interpretations of what is and is not Jim Crow will vanish. Up until then the best guide for progress would seem to be that of making certain that we close no doors on course, see that no doors are closed on us. This is simpler said than done but nothing is really simple these days.

I WOULD LIKE TO KNOW

WHAT WILL happen in Georgia and South Carolina if the public schools are abolished? No one is wise enough to know.

But I would like to discuss two aspects of the question. We believe that public funds should not be used to support church schools. As a result, Jewish and Catholic schools do not receive tax money. If the public schools are abolished and each child is given so much money to pay for his education, will the Catholic child be subsidized?

We can now say to the Catholics that the public school is there and the Catholic child can attend if he so desires. But if there is no public school and the pupil is paid so much to attend a private school, won't the state or city or county be compelled to give the Catholic child his pro-rata share?

IF WE GIVE the Catholic child his share to attend a parochial school will that not be a violation of the doctrine of the separation of church and state?

I would like to know how Georgia and South Carolina will solve this problem. If I were a Catholic and the public schools were abolished and the students were subsidized, I certainly would insist on getting mine.

Smart lawyers may see a way out but I cannot see it.

If Georgia and South Carolina should abolish the public schools, I am certain that a suit would be entered to restrain the state from doing it.

MY VIEW is that the Supreme Court would declare the act of abolishing the public schools unconstitutional.

Such an act would be a deliberate and planned scheme to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court. Since Georgia and South Carolina are determined to maintain segregation at any price, what would they do next?

Would they kick in and reestablish the public schools? If they did, they would be greatly embarrassed.

TRYING TO circumvent the Court's decision is like telling a lie. A lie cannot stand alone. It has to be supported by another lie and each succeeding lie has to be supported by another—so there is no end to it. The liar finally concludes that it is better to tell the truth.

Georgia and South Carolina will learn the hard way that they cannot evade the Court's decision. Joe Louis used to say of his opponent: "He can run but he can't hide." So it will be with Georgia and South Carolina and other states that try to evade the decision.

IF THEY refused to go along a second time and tried another trick, it would be rebellion. Would the Federal Government permit these states to continue to flaunt its authority? Would Georgia and South Carolina secede from the Union? Hardly.

If South Carolina and Georgia abolished the public school could the Federal Government step in and run the public schools? I would like for the lawyers to answer these questions.

If the Federal Government should run the public schools, what about state rights?

These states will eventually have to abide by the Court's decision. Why not now?

'Nothing Can Stop It'

Integration Sure To Come: Dr. Mays

By CARTER JEWEL

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Dr. Benjamin Mays, president, Morehouse College, told about 4,000 members of the Virginia Teachers Association here last week that people who are afraid of integrated public schools are "worried about nothing." He said integration was sure to come because "nothing can stop it."

Dr. Mays, reiterated his views of several weeks ago that integration would bring about no disastrous break between the races or no calamity to the races. He spoke to the teachers at a meeting at Virginia Union University where the organization held its annual session for four days last week.

"MANKIND always has been afraid of the future," Dr. Mays said. "In twenty-five years, those of us who are still living will wonder why in 1954 we were so worried about nothing."

P. 16

Dr. Mays urged teachers to face the future with "confidence, poise and dignity." He reminded the group that discrimination will exist after segregation has disappeared.

The VTA resolution praising the Supreme Court decision against segregated public schools drew praise from Dr. Mays who said the groups could have taken another course rather than to support the court's decision "without abandoning or betraying your role as a leader of Negro youth in Virginia."

DR. MAYS, in his consideration of an immediate goal for teachers, stressed the need to make more literate Negro citizens. "We boast that 90 per cent of the Negroes can read and write," he said, "but that doesn't mean that 90 per cent are literate. Children in the grade can read and write, but they are not literate."

The speaker's idea of literacy, as he explained it, is the ability to read a non-technical publication and read it "intelligently" and communicate what is read.

On the question of integrated schools, Dr. Mays said it was a "two-way street." It means that white and Negro institutions open their doors to all students, he said.

The speaker asserted that, "In 1970 there are going to be so many white students at Virginia Union University, we'll forget it was once for Negroes only."

Dr. Mays, who was in the city attending sessions of the World Council of Churches, was introduced by Dr. Alvin Lane, prominent Chicago physician. George W. Watson, president of the Chicago Morehouse club, presided at the breakfast meeting which was held at Washington Park YMCA.

Impromptu remarks were made by Frazier Lane of the Chicago Urban League and Robert Turner. Other members attending the meeting included Lt. Joseph Brooks, Drs. John Eagan and Roy Boggs, Attorneys G. T. Woods, John Bryant, H. C. Arnold, Lloyd O. Lewis, Rev. James Mack, Leon Clark, Robert E. Johnson and Lerone Bennett, jr.

Says Negro Schools Can Survive--If

Lawyer

P. 12

Sat. 9-11-54

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse college, declared here last week that first-class Negro institutions have proven their right to exist in a free and integrated society.

Speaking to the Chicago Morehouse club, the prominent educator and churchman declared, "Only first-class Negro colleges can — and should — survive in an integrated society."

Outlining a million dollar building program at the famous school for men, Dr. Mays stated that institutions like Morehouse are ready and willing to compete with white colleges for Negro and white students. He warned, however, that the survival of Negro institutions in this crucial era will depend, to a great extent, upon the continued financial support of loyal alumni.

What Next?

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

P. 7

THE POPE is the titular and singular head of the Catholic Church. Pope Pius XII is in direct line of descent from Peter.

The line is unbroken. The Pope speaks and the Catholic World listens. There is no dissent from his pronouncements however learned the Catholics may be. There is no criticism of what the Pope does in the Catholic press. On Dec. 8, 1854, almost a hundred years ago, Pope Pius IX proclaimed the dogma of the Immaculate Conception.

Sat. 11-13-54

I SUSPECT most Protestants (and maybe some Catholics) think that the dogma of the Immaculate Conception refers to Jesus. It does not.

It has reference to Mary, the mother of the Christ. As Jesus was conceived without an earthly father, so was Mary. She too was immaculately conceived.

Since sin is believed to be transmitted through the male, both Jesus and Mary were born free of sin, without earthly fathers. They were divinely conceived. Protestant dogma accepts the former but not the latter.

My readers will recall that 1950 was "Holy Year" for the Catholics. On Nov. 1 of the "Holy Year," Pope Pius XII, following the precedent set by Pope Pius IX, proclaimed the dogma of the "Assumption of Mary."

THIS DOGMA adds to the dogma of the "Immaculate Conception" in that Mary was not only born free of the taint of human sin but she did not see death. She was translated to heaven without the death which ordinary mortals are heirs to.

In line with these two dogmas there is added the feast of Mary's queenship. In an encyclical letter (New York Times, Oct. 24) to the Roman Catholic Episcopacy, Pope Pius XII has established a new feast of the queenship of Mary to be celebrated on May 31 of each year.

According to the Times article, "It is the Pope's intention that on this day the consecration of the human race to the immaculate heart of Mary be everywhere renewed. This feast also will be a climax of the Marian year inaugurated by the Pope on last Christmas Eve to celebrate the 100th anniversary of another dogmatic definition, that of the Immaculate Conception."

THE NEW feast will be proclaimed by the Pope on Nov. 1, the last public ceremony of the Marian year.

According to the new feast, Mary is present in heaven in "body and soul and reigns amidst the choirs of angels and saints." She is queen of heaven.

It is interesting to note that the dogma of the Immaculate Conception was proclaimed 1800 years after the birth of Mary and the dogma of the "Assumption of Mary" 1900 years after; so were the Marian year and the feast.

It is difficult to conceive what next, but future Popes may proclaim new dogmas for Mary. These new proclamations dramatize the power of the Pope and the unity of the Church. They also represent the age and prestige of the Catholic Church. All this may be Hebrew to Protestants, but Catholics accept it all as a matter of course.

Open Up

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE MORE I travel over the country, the more I discover fear of integration on the part of Negroes. It is often unexpressed and concealed and one has to probe for it before the fear is discovered. I find it among Negroes in business, in education, in the professions and even in religion. I suppose this is due to the fact that some of us have made our living in a segregated economy so long that we fear what may happen to us in a non-segregated economy. This is understandable. And yet this fear could prove very damaging.

Dr. Mays

Sat. 11-6-54

Pittsburgh Pa.

If it springs from a belief or conviction that a Negro church or school, or bank, or insurance company, or newspaper, or other Negro organized and managed concern are not good enough to survive in an integrated society, it is serious. Because if that is the feeling, the institution or business will not survive, not because it isn't good, but because the people who run them and the Negro people think in their minds that they are not good. If this should be the reason, it simply shows how well the white man has done his job in getting Negroes to feel that nothing that they have built up can be as good as something the white man has built up. If this should prove to be the case, we are dealing with a disease in the Negro's mind and integration will not cure this. Many colored people think that a Negro physician cannot be as good as a white physician and a Negro lawyer cannot be as good as a white lawyer. It is a part of the slave psychology that what is white is good and what is non-white isn't.

I said it before, but I will say it again. The only thing confronting Negro organizations in this period of transition is the question of adequacy and efficiency. A thing does not have to be big in order to be adequate and efficient. There are many banks in America that are just as safe as the Chase National Bank. The Citizens Trust Company in Atlanta is just as good and has the same protection as the Chase National Bank. It was organized by Negroes and is managed by them. This analogy can be made in the case of schools, newspapers, insurance companies, doctors and lawyers. It isn't a question of who organized the thing or who runs it, but it is a question of how good it is. I think if we could get this through our heads, most of our fear would dwindle like the dew under the penetrating rays of a hot summer sun. But this is not all.

A Negro business, college, or anything run and organized by Negroes cannot argue to enter a formerly all-white concern and at the same time deny employment to white people in our organizations. Negro churches, Negro schools and Negro businesses must open up to all who qualify and seek entrance.

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE SOUTH—Georgia, South Carolina, Mississippi, and Louisiana — does not plan to cooperate with the Supreme Court in declaring segregation in the public schools unconstitutional.

The rest of the South is begging for time, time, time. It seems that the South is winning. When it comes to the Negro the South usually wins. On Nov. 23, the Associated Press quoted the President as expressing the belief that the Supreme Court will not be arbitrary in its final ruling on how to end racial segregation in public schools.

THE PRESIDENT is reputed to have said that he understood the Court was trying to find some kind of decentralization in handling the problem.

Eisenhower's remarks were preliminary to the brief filed Nov. 24 by the Justice Department. I wish to record sections of the brief as reported in the press and give my reaction to it. It says:

"Racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional and will have to be terminated as quickly as feasible, regardless of how much it may be favored by some people in the community. There can be no 'local option' on that question, which has been finally settled by the tribunal empowered under the Constitution to decide it."

The Justice Department's brief supports the brief that the ending of segregation should be left to the lower courts under general rules laid down by the higher court.

THE FIVE steps are: (1) lower courts shall enter orders, directing local school authorities to submit within ninety days a plan for ending segregation as soon as feasible.

(2) Unless a satisfactory plan is submitted and approved by the local courts, "appropriate orders" shall be issued ending segregation beginning next school term.

(3) After the plans are submitted the lower courts will hold hearings as to whether the plan provides for transition to a non-segregated system as expeditiously as circumstances will permit. The lower court has power to modify the plan submitted.

(4) The lower courts should require progress reports.

(5) The Supreme Court shall retain jurisdiction for the purpose of making further orders necessary for carrying out its mandate—periodic reports must be made to the lower courts as to actions taken to enforce compliance with the high court's ruling.

THIS IS too much local autonomy. The words "as soon as feasible" and "as expeditiously as circumstances will permit" disturb me.

I am sure that those who believe in segregation will consider twenty-five years or fifty years or never "as soon as feasible."

Who is to determine what is feasible? Or expeditious? A lower court functioning in an area hostile to desegregation could toy with desegregation for a half century. There ought to be a time limit and a short one.

The Supreme Court should reverse the position of the Justice Department and do two things:

(1) Say that desegregation is to begin everywhere immediately.

(2) Give the time when desegregation must be completed. The lower courts could then be used to see that the job is done within the time set by the Supreme Court.

Otherwise it will drag out for decades and that would be tragic.

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

WHAT we did at Evanston on race may not sound new. It isn't new. The resolution on segregation is no stronger than pronouncements uttered by previous bodies. Our own Federal Council and the National Council of the Churches have denounced segregation and have called upon church people to work for its abolition in church and society. National denominational bodies have done the same. So, in this sense our action at Evanston is no more than what other ecumenical bodies have done. But for the World Council we did do something new.

Dr. Mays

It must be understood that the World Council is not a legislative body. It cannot tell the churches what they must do. It is not a dictator. The World Council receives reports and votes to commend them to the churches for study and consideration. It requests the churches to report back to the assembly as to what actions have been taken on the reports received.

But when resolutions are presented to the assembly, they become an official pronouncement. And this is what happened when the Commission on Intergroup Relations presented its resolution on segregation. The resolution was passed. It was not something commanded to the churches. The assembly has now set down an official policy on segregation. This is what is new in the statement that follows.

"IN THE matter Church's task amid racial and ethnic tensions, the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches declares its convistion that any form of segregation based on race, color or ethnic origins is contrary to the Gospel, and is incompatible with the Christian doctrine of man and with the nature of the Church of Christ. The assembly urges the churches within its membership to renounce all forms of segregation or discrimination and to work for their abolition within their own life and within society.

"In doing so the assembly is painfully aware that, in the realities of the contemporary world, many churches find themselves confronted by historical, political, social and economic circumstances which may make the immediate achievement of this objective extremely difficult. But under God the fellowship of the ecumenical movement is such as to offer to these churches the strength and encouragement to help them and individuals within them to overcome these difficulties with the courage given by faith, and with the desire to testify ever more faithfully to our Master.

"From its very beginning, the ecumenical movement by its very nature has been committed to a form of fellowship in which there is no segregation or discrimination. The Assembly of the World Council of Churches rejoices in this fact and confirms this practice as the established policy of the council."

World and national bodies have condemned segregation and as a rule there is no segregation in world and national gatherings. It is in the local church where segregation is usually practiced. Now the local church can get no support from the World Council and none from national church bodies. So the local church is challenged as never before.

Do Students Read?

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

A FEW years ago I was startled to hear a professor complain that he knew a bright student who was graduated from a certain class "A" college with honors who had not read one book outside of class assignments. This was a sad commentary on the student, college and the professors. One's literacy and education do not consist wholly in what is assigned in the class room. There're great books that lie outside of the course.

Dr. Mays

A careful study would reveal that Europeans read more widely than Americans, and that white Americans read more than Negro Americans. Although this is true generally, it should not be true on the collegiate level and yet I am sure it is. There are notable exceptions, but I fear the average Negro student reads less than the average withe student. I have observed the use our students make of college and university libraries. When there is not the pressure of tests and final examinations the patronage is woefully thin. All this says to me that our students, for the most part, read what they must read—what is assigned as required reading. The use Negro students make of the library is one of the things the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools is checking on as it examines our colleges. At this point, I fear, some of our schools are going to be found wanting.

There are reasons for this poor showing. Reading is a habit. One needs to acquire the habit early. Once the habit is formed, reading becomes a delight—otherwise, it is a bore. Too many of our students come from non-reading homes. The parents of these pupils did not have the opportunity to be trained and some of the parents did not take advantage of the opportunity. Books and magazines are rare in such homes.

The reading habits are often not formed in high school. It is possible to find modern, well-equipped grammar and high schools throughout the South. But when you visit the libraries, the shelves are mostly empty in the vast majority of those I have visited. It appears that the school boards do not make adequate provisions for books. I think if I were a principal, I would get books for my school. So under these circumstances, the vast majority of our students come to college having read but little. And this is tragic! It is up to the college teacher to stimulate the student to read which is a hard job with so many years wasted. Here, of course, is assuming that the college teachers are widely read themselves.

During the summer most American students have three months vacation from school. As a rule they work in order to make enough money to return to college in the fall. Here is an opportunity for the student to read several volumes in and outside of his field. It ought to be a requirement for graduation that a student read so many books each year over and above the books required in regular course work. It may ve[illegible]

Be Not Disturbed

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

AS I WRITE this article, the press carries the news that students are demonstrating against mixed schools in Washington, D. C., Baltimore, Md., West Virginia and Delaware. It is clear as day that adults, I suspect mainly parents, are behind these demonstrations. As a rule children do not go out doing things of this kind without parental sanction, either by silence or active encouragement. Children do not do it this way.

Dr. Mays

Some day, soon I hope, these children will see clearly that their beloved parents were in error in inciting them to riot or demonstrate against Negroes entering white schools. All this will settle down and the school officials stand firm. Before the year is over, friendships will have developed between Negroes and whites and many of these friendships will last through the years. Twenty-five years from now, Negroes and whites will sit down as friends and joke about how foolish they were when they cut up in Washington, D. C., in 1954. They will speak with respect for their parents, but will shamefully admit that their parents were sympathetic toward their protesting the entrance of Negro pupils to what was previously an all-white school. Some of the parents will live to be ashamed of their actions.

Parents will soon learn that what they feared most did not happen. They fear now that their high school daughters will be marrying Negro men. As in New York and Boston, the number of intermarriages resulting from mixed high schools will be few indeed. Negroes will be winning prizes and starring on the football team. Things will settle down to normalcy and everyone will be happy.

Parents who encourage these demonstrations think these reactions will influence the Supreme Court. They know the Court cannot change its decision, but they think they can coerce the Court to give them a long time to put the decree into operation. I believe they are wrong. The Court cannot change its opinion nor can it stretch the process of implementation out too long. It would be unfortunate if the time span was too long. We might as well have the demonstrations over with in a year or two rather than drag it out over three, four or five. People can hardly get ready for desegregation in a segregated economy.

How much difference a few miles make: Baltimore is just about one and one-half hour's ride from Philadelphia and about three hours to New York. Negroes and whites have been going to school together in New York from time immemorial. And yet, Washington and Baltimore kids are fighting what New York has had for decades.

No one would believe now that about eighty years ago the people who advocated equal education for women and fought for them to have the ballot were almost mobbed as they moved around in enlightened New York State. Pioneers in science and surgery were cursed and damned. But in time they were hailed as heroes. History will accord the present members of the Supreme Court a large place.

Teachers? Where From?

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

EXPERTS tell us that by 1970 we will have twice as many college and university students as we have now. There are about two and one-half millions now—five millions [illegible]

It is hard to believe, but this is what they say. If this is so on the collegiate level, it means a tremendous increase on the elementary and high school levels. There is a shortage in the public schools now when considered nationwide.

Dr. Mays

And every college president I meet is complaining that he cannot find teachers to staff adequately his faculty. There are at least two reasons for this shortage:

1. TOO FEW people are going into the teaching profession. Although salaries in the teaching profession have advanced within recent years, they do not compare favorably with salaries paid in other fields, such as industry and government.

There is also more money in medicine, law and government than in teaching. A man can graduate from college with an A. B. degree and get as much salary in industry or government as a man with an A. M. or Ph. D. can get in the teaching profession.

In a college or university one begins as an instructor and has to work up to the rank of professor. In a great university, it may take years to become a professor. All this means that the competition for good minds is terrific and that there are not too many of them.

A good personality and good ability are great assets in any field.

2. THE SECOND reason is a part of the first. We are not graduating enough top people to have enough to go around. It isn't salary alone. There aren't enough people.

A large number graduates from college each year. But a relatively small per cent go to graduate school. Many do not go to graduate school because they can get good jobs with an A. B.

Others do not go because their college records do n indicate that they would successful in pursuing an advanced degree. So the truth is, the people are not out there.

In every field there seems to a shortage of able men and women. Certainly among Negroes there is a tremendous shortage in medicine, law, nursing and dentistry.

If there is need for a first-class stenographer or secretary she can hardly be found. You can find many who have taken secretarial courses and graduated, but few who are first rate.

THERE ARE many people who have a master's degree, but too many of them have average records and would not be encouraged to work towards a doctorate in a first-rate university.

A college teacher does not necessarily have to have a Ph. D. in his field. However, he should be able to earn one if he went after it.

We should start a campaign to recruit good teachers. Money is not everything.

The joy and reward that come from developing young minds, the opportunity to do creative work and to be loved by students are not to be taken lightly. The teaching profession is rich in rewards.

Desegregation movement can't be stopped — Mays

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Nov. 6, 1954

By RUFUS WELLS

RICHMOND

"Southern governors may filibuster, but they cannot stop the movement toward integration, nothing can stop it," Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College told some 4,000 members of the Virginia Teachers Association here Friday.

Speaking in the Belgian Building at Virginia Union University at the climax of a three-day state teachers convention, Dr. Mays said the South is "worried and confused."

He said some white southerners are worried about mixing of the races and added, "but when I see colored people as black as I am, and whiter than Walter White, it seems to me that the races have been mixed for sometime."

— o O o —

"MANKIND HAS always been afraid of the future," he continued, "in 25 years those of us who are still living will wonder why in 1954 we were so worried about nothing."

He compared the present fears to those that preceded modern surgery, education of women, teaching the theory of evolution and the discovery that the earth revolves around the sun.

— o O o —

DR. MAYS commended the teachers for their resolution supporting the Supreme Court ruling against segregation in public schools.

The VTA could not have done other than support the courts' action, he declared, "without abandoning or abrogating your role as leader of colored youth in Virginia."

He said the ruling was a "moral decision" and "if it was wrong then the Federal Constitution was wrong, the Bill of Rights was wrong, the Declaration of Independence was wrong and Jesus was wrong when He said "God is the Father and all men are children of God."

Pointing to unmet educational needs, Dr. Mays stressed the development of more literate colored citizens.

"We boast that 90 per cent of our people can read and write," he asserted, "but that doesn't mean that 90 per cent of them are literate. Children in the third grade can read and write, but they are not literate."

— o O o —

HE DEFINED a literate person as one who could read a non-technical book or editorial "intelligently" and communicate what is read.

"Taking that definition you have to admit that not 90 per cent of our people are literate and that the number is probably not greater than 20 per cent."

Dr. Mays said that freshman at Morehouse and other universities often cannot read on a college level.

As a solution, he urged college, high school and grammar school teachers to get together for joint action against the shortcoming and predicted that the problem could be corrected within 10 or 15 years.

The problem of improving the reading level among colored people isn't the English teacher's alone, "it's everybody's job," he said.

— o O o —

POINTING OUT that some colored persons have an inferiority complex and fear that their institutions will be closed when desegregation comes, Dr. Mays said "Let us abolish nothing that is good."

He challenged the teachers to train future citizens capable of holding their own with the best minds in America and the world and predicted that by 1970 so many white students would be attending Virginia Union University "we'll forget it ever was for colored only."

He spoke before the Eighth general session of the 67th annual convention of the VTA.

My View

All Eyes on the Supreme Court

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

NINETEEN FIFTY-FIVE will be a significant year. The Supreme Court will hear arguments on how the Court's decision of May 17, 1954, is to be implemented. Some will hold that the Supreme Court should leave it to the states to determine how and when segregation is to be abolished.

Dr. Mays

Others will plead for time—a lot of time. Some will probably argue for community autonomy — asking that each school board be given the authority to decide whether it will desegregate in one year, twenty-five years, or never.

Some states like Georgia will file no brief at all.

ONE FACT is clear! The Supreme Court will hardly leave it to the states. There are states that cannot be trusted. Were this not true, a decision of the Supreme Court would have been unnecessary.

When states like South Carolina and Georgia have already taken steps to abolish the public schools in order to keep segregation, I am sure it would be an unfortunate thing to leave desegregation in the hands of these states.

Even if the Supreme Court were so inclined, it could hardly be so now. Mississippi could hardly be trusted to work out its own schedule of desegregation since some time in December that state will follow in the steps of Georgia and South Carolina by holding a referendum designed to get authority from the people for the Legislature to abolish the public schools in order to keep segregation.

LOUISIANA COULD not be trusted for the police have power to enforce segregation. Under the leadership of Governor Stanley, Virginia could not be trusted to work out its program of desegregation.

By jumping the gun before the Supreme Court hands down its decision as to how the schools are to be desegregated, these states have made it impossible for the Supreme Court to leave it to the states.

It will be unfortunate if the Supreme Court gives the states too much time. If the Court gives the states several years to do this job, it will nullify its own decision.

Usually, a Court's decision means almost immediate compliance. This was true in decisions involving the abolition of the white primary, the curtain in the dining car, and desegregation in interstate travel.

It was almost immediate in decisions involving equalization of salaries and the admission of Negroes to Southern State Universities.

BUT ONE should be realistic. In desegregating the schools more is involved than was the case in the previous decisions mentioned.

States differ and localities in the same state differ. It cannot be done the same way in every community and it cannot be done in the same time span in every community.

I predict that the Court will order such community to begin compliance almost immediately by ordering kids to go to the schools nearest their homes and by requiring that the job be completed within a relatively short time—probably in two years' time.

EVEN IF my prediction is right, it must be borne in mind that residential segregation will keep segregation for years to come in many communities.

It's Good News to Hear of Jim Crow's Ending in Schools on Army Installations

Courier 31a

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

IT IS good news to know that segregated schools will end on military installations no later than Sept. 1, 1955.

Pittsburgh Pa

It might be well for our readers to recall the order sent out by Secretary of Defense, Charles Wilson, on Jan. 12, 1954. I quote below from that order.

Dr. Mays

It is desired that appropriate steps be taken to assure that the operation of all school facilities located on all military installations shall be conducted without segregation on the basis of race or color. Effective as of the date of this memorandum, no new school shall be opened for operation on a segregated basis, and schools presently to conducted shall cease operating on a segregated basis, as soon as practicable, and under no circumstances later than Sept. 1, 1955.

In the accomplishment of this policy, the following action will be taken:

P. 16

(a) For each military location on which a school is now operatng on a segregated basis, it will be determined whether the local educational agency will be able, under State Law, to operate the existing school in accordance with the provisions of this policy. If the local educational agency will not be able to do so, appropriate proposals should be prepared under provisions of Public Law 874, Eighty-first Congress, as amended, to the United States Commissioner of Education for providing non-segregated free public education in such school facilities. If the local educational agency will conduct the school, immediate steps will be taken to comply with this policy, and

(b) For military locations on which new schools are being constructed, but the schools are as yet not operating, immediate steps shall be taken to make certain the permit for the operation of the school contains a non-segregation clause.

This is a significant move. First, it may indicate the kind of thing that the United States Supreme Court will do in the segregation cases before it.

IT MAY set a time limit when segregation is to end in the public schools in the five cases before it.

In the second place, the order from the Secretary of Defense is significant because it places the Federal Government and the Eisenhower Administration squarely behind a non-segregated economy.

This move will have more weight than the average one of us realizes.

It not only carries with it the prestige of the Defense Department, but it carries with it the prestige of the Federal Government. We are always on safe grounds when we can get the Federal Government, or any government for that matter, to sanction doing something that is morally right.

The Eisenhower Administration is carrying to completion the job of desegregation which had begun under the Democrats. We salute the Secretary of Defense and the Eisenhower Administration on this move.

THIRDLY, THIS move will lead to the breaking down of segregation in the surrounding areas.

It will be awkward to have no segregation on a military installation and segregation just outside the military area. But make no mistake, that act on the part of the military will go a long way towards breaking down segregation in civilian life.

The community sets up and takes notice when the Federal Government and the church speak.

In the fourth place, the ending of segregation in military schools will go a long way towards improving human relations. It is a good thing psychologically, to get people in the habit of thinking of a non-segregated economy. It is a terrible thing to be going around thinking about segregating people when more important things should be on our minds.

Contrary to public opinion, we make real progress in human relations only when people of different groups and cultures live together. Our respect for other people is never enhanced by keeping those people apart in normal everyday human relations. These are the reasons the order from the Secretary of Defense has great significance for good.

AN APOLOGY

A few weeks ago, I was in error when I stated that John Hope was the first Negro to head a Negro college founded by a white denomination. I am informed by Prof. William Brewer of Washington, D. C., that Biddle University, now Johnson C. Smith, had a Negro president, Daniel J. Sanders, as early as 1891. This was before John Hope. Of course, we all realize that there were Negro presidents of the denominational schools founded by Negro denominations prior to 1906.

If the Negro College Is First-Rate It Will Survive in Non-Segregation

Courier 31a

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

Pittsburgh Pa

RECENTLY, a conference on higher education was held in Chicago. Educators were present from more than 400 colleges and universities.

It was pointed out there that by 1970, sixteen short years, the college enrollment in American institutions will be twice the present number.

Dr. Mays

The enrollment is supposed to jump from two and one-fourth million to five and one-half million. This will be true because of the population increase in the 1940's and 1950's. This will be true, also, because more and more high school graduates are going to college, and the percentage of women going to college is definitely on the increase. What does this mean? What does it mean to the private college?

Jan 3 27 54

WITH RESPECT to plant, it means three things. The existing colleges and universities must expand their physical plants.

P. 6

They must make more use and better use of existing plants and, without a doubt, more new institutions will have to be built.

This probably means that most of the expansion will have to be done in publicly supported institutions. I cannot conceive of the private colleges doubling the capacity of their physical plants. It will take money galore to do this.

A few private colleges will be able to do this, but I venture to say that the number will be exceedingly small. The state institutions will be able to expand more rapidly than the private institutions.

THEY GET along on the taxes paid by all the people. This also means that some new public institutions will be established; especially junior colleges.

It means that we will go in for more and more mass education and this may affect the quality of college work.

What will the private college do? It seems to me that the private colleges cannot afford to try to compete with the public institutions in expanding their facilities. They should keep their enrollment down to the physical plants that they can afford.

They should seek to do a quality job rather than a quantity job. As the enrollments in public supported institutions increase, it will become increasingly difficult for them to do the quality job that the private schools can do.

Every graduate from an accredited high school is eligible to enter a state-supported institution and, in most instances, the state schools must accept them. It is not so with the private college. The future of the private college will depend upon the quality of its work.

COLLEGE FACULTIES must be increased from the present 130,000 teachers to 245,000 by 1970, said one of the experts at the Chicago meeting. Where will these teachers come from?

It is exceedingly difficult now to find outstanding scholars to adequately staff every department of a college.

There are thousands of college graduates, but not enough real scholars and real teachers. I predict that it will be easier to expand the physical facilities than it will be to get qualified teachers.

Staffing these colleges, with twice as many students, is going to present a tremendous problem.

IN THE light of these facts, it is silly for anyone to raise the question of what will happen to the Negro private colleges when segregation is knocked out.

It is clear as day to me that the best of them will survive. In a few years, the scramble for admission to college is going to be so tremendous that students are going to be eager to enroll in any college that will accept them.

In 1970, the scramble is going to be so great that white students, even in Mississippi and Georgia, will not hesitate to seek admission to Morehouse and other institutions that were formerly for Negroes.

THE TASK of the Negro college is one: and that is to make its work first-rate, standardize its buildings and equipment, and bring to its faculty the best scholars available. As for me, I have never had any misgivings about the role of the private Negro college in a non-segregated society. If it is good, it will survive.

Dr. Mays

It's Been One Hundred Years, But The Negro Is Not as Yet, 'Free'

31a

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

ABRAHAM LINCOLN issued his Emancipation Proclamation Jan. 1, 1863, freeing the American slaves. Nine years from now, it will be 100 years since Abraham Lincoln issued that immortal document. The Negro has come a long way in these ninety-one years, but he is not yet free.

Dr. Mays

It seems to me that we should be able to emancipate a people in 100 years. And yet, 100 years is a long time in the life of an individual, but a short time in the life of a race.

THE NAACP has on a "Crusade for Freedom." The objective is to completely emancipate the Negro race by 1963. It is a noble objective.

It seems to me that every American Negro and every American white man who loves his country and freedom would be willing to join in this crusade. I have always felt and I feel now that anyone who is not willing to struggle for freedom, to sacrifice for freedom, to pay for freedom, and if need be, to die for freedom, does not deserve to be free.

Some day, the color bar will be completely destroyed. Whether I live or die before the Negro achieves complete freedom, I must have the satisfaction of having done my bit to bring it about.

I don't want to be a coward and I don't want to enjoy something that others struggled to give me while I sat on the sidelines free from the struggle, waiting for somebody else to do for me what I should do for myself.

IF THE NAACP is to achieve its objective by 1963, every loyal American must participate in the crusade.

The very fact that one participates in the Crusade for Freedom is proof that that person is free in his soul and in his mind. Educational salaries have been equalized in many sections of the South.

And yet, I know that there are some teachers who are now benefiting by the increase, but who did not contribute anything to help bring it about. I have often wondered how those teachers feel now.

There are two ways we can participate in the Crusade for Freedom. One way is personal and individual. It is a struggle within the soul. I say this because a man can be a millionaire and not be free.

He can earn a Ph.D. degree and still be a slave in his mind. Many men have been freer in jail than others outside of it.

Courier 4-24-54

Everyone must agree that Socrates was a free man even while drinking the hemlock. Certainly Paul was free when he put on a revival in jail. Paul Bunyan was free when he wrote "Pilgrim's Progress" in jail. The struggle for this kind of freedom will continue after 1963. The NAACP cannot do this job by Jan. 1, 1963. This kind of freedom has nothing to do with race.

THE SECOND kind of freedom which we hope to achieve by 1963 is a crusade in which everyone can participate. We can get the laws and courts that restrict freedom changed.

To achieve this second kind of freedom is helpful in achieving the first. We must not be fooled by the argument that you cannot emancipate through law.

Freedom must be protected by law and safeguarded by the courts. If the Negro has made more progress in the last twenty years than he made in the seventy previous to that, it is because he has learned his way around in the Federal Constitution and the Supreme Court.

THE FIGHT in the courts must continue and this will take money and more money. The poorest of Americans can contribute $2 to the NAACP. Millions of Negroes could contribute $5 or $10 a year.

Many thousands could contribute $100 a year, and thousands could take out a life membership of $500. We must learn that freedom is an achievement and not a gift.

People do not give freedom to others because they are good nor because they deserve it. Human nature is not good enough to do that. Freedom must be won!

Buddy Trosper

SOME days ago, I received in the mail an Associated Press clipping. I was asked to say something about the clipping in one of my articles. The sender did not sign his or her name—simply said "one of your readers." For fear the article which my friend sent me was not widely read, I repeat it in full here. The clipping was about Buddy Trosper from Trenton, Mo., who had taken daily for four years a fifty mile taxi ride in order to be in a segregated school. The article follows: Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dr. Mays

"Buddy Trosper won't get a fifty-mile-a-day taxi ride when school begins next month.

"The Trenton School Board announced yesterday it is abolishing segregation in its public schools. But the only pupil it will affect is young Trosper. Now he can attend school at home instead of being driven every day to Chillicothe, where he has attended school the last four years.

"Each school day a taxi took him to Chillicothe and then returned to pick him up after school. The taxi fare alone last school year was $1,225. Then there was $135 in tuition—all paid by the school board.

"The Trosper boy, who will be in the sixth grade, is the only Negro school pupil in Grundy County."

Here is one more example to prove that people are willing to pay for their prejudice. It is often said that "everything is all right if there are only a few Negroes around. The situation gets tense and worse only when there is a large number of Negroes." The situation in Trenton may not have been tense, but it is amazing that a school board would spend $1,360 a year to keep one lone Negro in a segregated school and transport this one student fifty miles a day. It shows once more that prejudice drives people insane. It not only makes them do mean things, but it makes them do ridiculous things. Anyone telling this story fifty years from now will not be believed. It will sound so uncivilized and ridiculous that the people in the year 2000 will laugh and laugh at us for being so silly.

One fact is clear, the decision was not made by Buddy Trosper nor by the white kids in Trenton. The decision was made by adults. The carriers of prejudice are not the youths. They are the grown-ups. Buddy Trosper could have gone to school in Trenton without an incident if the school officials, the teachers, and the parents had made up their minds. When the students in a little town in West Virginia struck because Negro pupils enrolled, I wager the parents were behind it. Children will never be what they ought to be until adults are what they ought to be.

Integration will work in proportion as adult leaders make up their minds that it should work. But as long as politicians, teachers, editors, preachers, and other leaders stir up trouble or are afraid, integration will have a hard time.

No Revolution Down South If Supreme Court Outlaws Segregation In Public Schools

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

AS STRANGE as it may seem, the issue of segregation is not merely the co-education of the races in the public schools. The issue is whether Negro and white children in South Carolina and Georgia should attend the same school. The issue is much bigger than that. It is world-wide. The issue is this: Can the United States Supreme Court, representing the greatest democracy in the world, having assumed the political, economic and moral leadership of the world—can this democracy afford to announce to the world that it believes in segregation based on color and race? Can the United States Supreme Court afford to say to a billion colored peoples in Asia, millions of colored people in Africa and South America, and to the democracies of Europe, that we believe in second-class citizenship for fifteen million Negroes? These are the main issues and not the co-education of the races.

Dr. Mays

THE SUPREME COURT faces a dilemma. It faces world condemnation if it affirms segregation. There is a threat of a revolution down South if segregation is declared unconstitutional in the public schools. What will the Supreme Court do? I predict that the Supreme Court will declare segregation in the public schools unconstitutional and that there will be no revolution down South. The following are the reasons that there will be no revolution down South:

1. There was no revolution when Negroes got the ballot in the deep South, no revolution when segregation in inter-state travel was declared unconstitutional, and none when the curtain in the dining car was declared unconstitutional. There was no revolution when the Southern tax-supported institutions opened their doors to Negroes. The timid and the coward had argued that all of these changes would produce a revolution. They did not.
2. The members of the Supreme Court are aware of the fact that it will be a terrible thing for America and the world if the greatest democracy on earth puts its stamp of approval on segregation in 1954.
3. In the very nature of things, desegregation will be slower than we think. These are the reasons it will be slower than we think. Many sections in the deep South are going to make the Negroes sue for desegregation. The judges will rule only on the five cases before it. The Supreme Court cannot rule against segregation in the public schools generally. Negro leaders in many sections of the South, urged by the white people of the area, are going to declare themselves in favor of the status quo.

The Negro leaders will do this under pressure and because of fear of what will happen to them if they do not. In the very nature of things, Negro parents are going to be cautious about sending their children to an integrated school. Once the obstacle of segregation has been removed, Negroes are going to relax and pressure on white school boards will be less. As in many centers of the North, Negroes will be segregated geographically and they will be forced to attend the public school within the vicinity where they live.

IT IS FOR these reasons that there will be no revolution down South and the things that most people fear will not happen. It will be much easier for the South to adjust to a non-segregated society and, therefore, save the soul of America, than it will be for the United States to explain to the world why it believes in second-class citizenship for fifteen million people, based on race and color. It cannot be otherwise. Segregation is the badge of inferiority and there can never be any complete equality under it.

The Communists Will Eagerly Take Advantage of Any Mistake We Make

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

RECENTLY 22,500 Chinese and North Korean prisoners were released to the United Nations command despite strong Communist objections. It is reported that the first anti-Red prisoners marched out of the Neutral Zone waving banners and singing. This is a significant event and it reflects discredit upon communism; especially is it significant when the number, 22,500 who refuse to return to communist lands is contrasted with the twenty-one Americans, one Briton, and 327 South Koreans who have chosen democracy.

Dr. Mays

I have little first hand experience with communism. In fact, I have had none except about ten days in Czechoslovakia in 1949. I have had no experience of communist activities in the United States. But from what I observed in Prague and from my reading knowledge of communism, it is difficult for me to understand why an American would prefer communism to democracy, even though it is imperfectly practiced in the United States. At any rate the number that preferred communism to democracy is insignificant when compared with the large number of communists who preferred democracy.

BUT MY chief concern here is the future of the 22,500 Chinese and North Koreans who have repudiated communism. This means that they have chosen to forsake their native lands, their families and relatives in order to have a new way of life. It takes courage to do this and I am compelled to wonder what will happen to the families these 22,500 are leaving behind in China and North Korea. Will the Communists make their families suffer for the decisions these men have made? I wonder! Any way you look at it, it was a brave decision and few of us are strong enough to make such decisions.

One can only hope that the United Nations will deal so fairly with the 22,500 who have repudiated communism that they will never have reason to regret their choice. After all, I think "the Armistice provides only that the Indians and both commands will expedite return to their homes or to a neutral nation." Korea is not democratic and certainly Formosa, where the bulk of the Chinese are being sent, is by no means a democratic nation. Chiang Kai Shek has never been accused of running a democratic government. It would be unfortunate indeed if the future lot of these 22,500 were so hard that in the end communism would win and not democracy. Be it far from me to suggest what steps the United Nations should take—but let us beware, for the future of these prisoners who have voluntarily chosen us could redound against us.

I UNDERSTAND that there are 100 among the 22,500 who do not wish to go to South Korea nor to Formosa. They want to settle in the United States, Japan, Poland, India and Switzerland. There seems to be no provision in the terms of the Armistice for this. What will the United Nations do about it? It would be a serious mistake if these 100 people were forced to go to a country against their will. It would be wise if a way could be worked out whereby these 100 men were permitted to become citizens of any one of the allied nations that fought in Korea or India if some of them preferred. The number is small but a principle is at stake.

If the 22.500 were not allowed to be forced to go back to their communist countries, the United Nations cannot afford to force the 100 to go where they do not wish to go. We can only hope that these 100 will be wisely dealt with and that the world will know that they were not forced to choose a country they did not wish to choose.

The Communists will eagerly take advantage of any mistake that we make not only in the handling of the 22,400 but in the 100 that must be dealt with differently.

Abolition of Segregation in the South Means Georgia Will Be Like New York

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE MORE I talk with people about the possibility of the United States Supreme Court striking out segregation in the public schools, the more fear I find. What are the bases of these fears? Negroes and white people in the South have been segregated so long that they really don't know each other. Though living side by side for decades, there have been two parallel roads which meet mainly in servitude. In a way, we fear the unknown because Negroes and white people do not quite know what the other group is like. We have assumed a basic difference and that has engendered fear.

Dr. Mays

Many Negroes are afraid because they fear economic competition in the open market. They have been competing intra-racially rather than inter-racially. They know that by and large, Boards of Education have not been requiring the same standard for Negro and white teachers and that for decades, Negroes have been given inferior schools. There is a feeling of insecurity. In a non-segregated society, they fear they will lose their jobs.

THERE IS another fear and it is based on the belief that even in a non-segregated society there will be gross discrimination; that a Negro of real ability will not have the same chance to rise as a white person.

White people are afraid too. They don't know what this Negro may become once he is given an equal chance. Although they have had every advantage, they too, fear competition with this unknown Negro. Then some of them are afraid that there may be a considerable increase in the mingling of the races to the extent that there will be inter-marriage. All these fears and others lurk in the minds of people. But let us face reality.

In a strictly non-segregated society, some Negroes will lose their jobs. Some will lose their jobs because other people available will be better qualified and some will lose their jobs because of discrimination within the non-segregated system. These are not only possibilities, but they are probabilities. But even so, in the long run the net gain will be good. Some Negroes of real competence and worth in a non-segregated society, will get better jobs. In a segregated economy, I have seen many Negroes working under inferior white people. And there is no doubt in my mind that the exceptionally competent Negro will rise higher in a non-segregated society than he could possibly rise in a segregated one. Many Negroes who will lose their jobs will find better jobs doing something else. Some of them will find jobs that pay better than teaching.

AS FOR the future of the social status of the races, that is in the laps of the gods. It cannot be handled by law in a segregated society and it cannot be handled by law in a non-segregated society. Nobody is wise enough to know what the social situation will be twenty-five or fifty years from now on if segregation goes. We aren't omniscent and we aren't omnipotent. The abolition of segregation in the South will simply mean that Georgia will be like New York and Mississippi like Massachusetts. A non-segregated society is nothing new in America. There are thirty-one states in the country that have no segregation by law.

The basic problem confronting the United States isn't what will happen in the future if segregation is abolished. The basic issue confronting this country is what will happen to our democracy, to our religion if segregation is not abolished. Either we believe in the Declaration of Independence, the Bill of Rights, the Constitution and the Christian religion or we do not. If we believe in these, we move on the conviction that the abolition of segregation is right and if it is, the future will reveal to us blessings and rewards which we cannot now see. We walk by faith and leave the consequences to God.

Statements by Governors Byrnes And Talmadge Tend to Stir Up People

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

IT IS most unfortunate that Gov. Herman Talmadge has said recently that he will call out the State Militia and State Police to impose segregation should the Supreme Court rule against segregation in the public schools in the cases before it. Governor Byrnes' statement is not as unfortunate as Governor Talmadge's but it, too, is unfortunate. Governor Byrnse is quoted as having said "I shudder to think of the consequences if segregation is outlawed."

Dr. Mays

Both of these statements are unfortunate because these two men occupy the highest positions that their respective states can give them. The Governor is to his state what the President is to the United States. Statements like these tend to stir up the people and they tend to encourage people to do illegal things. Statements like these are likely to make a tremendous impression upon people who have deep-seated racial prejudices and no one can calculate how much influence these statements will have upon the growing young minds of these two states and the South for that matter.

IT IS hopeful, though, that many leading citizens do not agree with Governor Talmadge. I think most of the white people in Georgia would vote for segregation, but I am convinced that the vast majority of them would oppose any effort such as calling out the State Militia just as the majority of them would oppose abolition of the public schools.

The Macon Telegraph has this to say about the Governor's statement: "Such statements can only be calculated to incite bitterness, discontent and misunderstanding—all of which will make the ultimate solving of this problem more difficult, if not nearly impossible . . . When the threat of the military force is injected into the matter, it becomes one of paramount seriousness which is almost beyond the comprehension of the average Georgian . . . The sheer folly of such a circumstance in this atomic age when the world is confronted with the dangers of communism is too horrible to imagine."

The Augusta Chronicle has this to say: "There will be other and more peaceable means of dealing with the problem when it presents itself. Let's concentrate on them and devote our full energies to studying them, rather than talk in terms of force and violence. Living in constant dread of an atomic war is bad enough, without adding the new fears of insurrection and violence such as Governor Talmadge's threat implies."

It's statements like these that we hope will offset statements such as Governor Talmadge has made.

ONE OF the many things wrong with segregation is the fact that it is one-sided. The majority and the strong always legislate for the minority and the weak. For example, an education commission has been officially appointed in Georgia to study the whole problem of segregation and to say what the state should do in case the Supreme Court rules adversely to segregation. As would be expected in a segregated economy, the members of the commission are white and Negro opinion cannot and will not be represented in the report that the members of the Education Commission will make.

This properly indicates that while we have been voting in Georgia since 1946, our vote is not yet felt. Another example is that of South Carolina. It has a comittee studying the question of what to do in case segregation is held un-constitutional. This committee is composed of five members of the Senate, five from the House of Representatives and five at large appointed by Governor Byrnes. Here again there is no Negro representation.

IN GEORGIA, easily one-third of the people of the state are Negroes. In South Carolina the population is more nearly equal, possibly 40 or 45 per cent of the people in South Carolina are Negroes, but in the appointing of these two commissions, Negroes are left out as if they did not exist. And that is the major trouble with segregation, the people in power do not and possibly cannot think the language of those who are not there to present their side.

This situation is inherent in a strictly segregated economy. And yet if any Negroes were appointed that were the right kind, they would have to be at odds with the white members of the committees.

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

MISSISSIPPI is determined to keep up segregated schools in that state. They plan to try voluntary segregation first and if that fails they will abolish the public schools. This seems to be what Governor White and the Mississippi Educational Association want. Governor White favors immediate state aid for new Negro school buildings and he plans to present his proposal to a special session of the Mississippi Legislature in September.

Dr. Mays

But along with this huge proposal to bring Negro schools up to a parity with the white schools, there is to be a proposed Constitutional amendment which will allow counties and separate school districts to abolish public education if the citizens involved vote it. His amendment is proposed as a last resort if voluntary segregation fails.

THE MISSISSIPPI Educational Association made its wishes on voluntary segregation known just about the time the Governor was calling a meeting of Negro educational leaders to seek a "meeting of the minds" and agreement on a program of voluntary segregation. This is a tough spot for Negro educators to be in. It will take wisdom, courage and character for them to do the right thing. I do not envy their position. I can only hope that Negro leaders everywhere will be on the side of progress and the future. And I believe the future is with the Supreme Court.

Suppose Mississippi had done the impossible some fifty years ago! If this had been the case, I would not, as a South Carolinian, have been constantly thanking God for Mississippi. As a rule when I was a college student I could usually expect Mississippi to spend less on Negro education than South Carolina. Now Mississippi is talking about justice and equality in Negro education. Read what the Mississippi Educational Association said in Jackson the latter part of July:

"It is futile to talk of separate schools for the Negro unless we can talk of adequate schools for his race. We can no longer draw the color line in our schools unless there is justice on each side of the line."

The association continues: "We cannot expect segregation by choice while there remains the present disparity in the schools provided for each race." The association expresses concern over maintaining racial integrity. It says that the main institutions through which "racial integrity may be best preserved are the home, the church and the school."

It is too bad people are not willing to face reality. I am willing to guess that there is no state in the Union where "racial biological integrity" is being violated as much as it is in Mississippi today. As long as this violation can be illegal and one-sided, I fear that we here in the South have never been disturbed about maintaining racial integrity. It took a Supreme Court decision to get such expressions from the Governor and white teachers.

PEOPLE almost invariably say that men running for office do not necessarily mean what they say. When elected they will be their natural selves and will be decent men. I have never believed it. At least if they don't mean it and say it for the purpose of getting elected, when elected, they must cater to those people who voted for them because they said the things they wanted to hear. Down in Georgia the people are confused. Eight candidates are running on the same platform. All eight decry the decision of the Supreme Court. They vow to high heaven that they are going to keep segregated schools in Georgia. If we judge them by what they are saying in their speeches we have little choice. One might as well put the names of all eight in a hat and choose one.

Many Negroes think one of the eight is more liberal than the others. But it can hardly be discovered from his speeches. Negroes who support Mr. Thompson say he doesn't mean what he says. Maybe he doesn't. But I fear he, like the rest, will be obligated to do, when elected, what he promised when campaigning.

Mr. Linder, another candidate, advocates three kinds of schools: one for whites, one for Negroes, and one mixed. If Mr. Linder really meant this, it would show a sign of liberalism because he would be giving Negroes and whites who want to, the right to send their children to an integrated school. He says only 2 per cent of the parents would choose mixed schools. But Mr. Linder isn't willing to leave it to the 2 per cent. He says those who favor "mixed schools" would be subject to a psychiatric examination. Teachers would decide what kind of schools they would teach in. I suppose the teachers who would choose a mixed school would also need a psychiatric examination. Mr. Linder says further that legislation should be passed restricting the freedom of the NAACP so they could meet only after obtaining a permit from the governor's office.

The ninth candidate, Mrs. Grace Thomas, is the only candidate who has said the Supreme Court should be obeyed. She qualified late and hasn't had much to say. If she conducts her campaign on a high plane, advocates obedience to the Supreme Court, does not wave the red herring of race hatred, should Negroes vote for her or for one of the eight who advocate circumventing the Court's decision? Some say she can't win. A vote for her is a vote thrown away. Should one vote for a principle or for expediency?

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

IF NEGROES had been admitted to baseball several decades ago, they would have done then what they are doing now. If Negroes had been admitted to big league baseball in Babe Ruth's time there would have been a Negro who would have equaled Babe Ruth's batting record. Willie Mays may equal or surpass Ruth's record this season.

Dr. Mays

When Negroes were permitted to compete in the open market in baseball, boxing, and track, they compared favorably with the best in the other races. If Jackie Robinson, Larry Doby, Roy Campanella, Willie Mays, Monte Irvin and others had been kept out of the big leagues, the world would have never known how good they are.

Scores of Negroes have had the ability to play as well as any of these, but they were never given the chance. These Negro players never knew how good they were until they met the stiffest competition. It took also the big league to challenge the Negro players to do their best.

WHEN THE bars of segregation came tumbling down in sports, the Negro met the challenge. Will this be true all acros the board? If baseball is illustrative, we can see clearly that America has been the loser by keeping Negroes out.

Non-segregation will do one of two things for Negroes.

They may be satisfied to move leisurely along in an integrated society occupying a mediocre place so long as they are not segregated. This could happen to some Negroes.

On the other hand, integration should stimulate Negroes as nothing else could. In a fully integrated society, the sky and not the house ceiling will be the Negro's limit.

He may reach for the highest and best in every field, because he will know that nothing can keep him from reaching the top if he is really outstanding. He will not hesitate to go into banking, because he will know that he can strive for and may achieve the presidency of the nation's largest bank. He will seek a political career because he will know that color will not keep him from being Senator or Governor. He will strive to be the best scholar in a given field, because he will know that he can teach not only at Morehouse or Spelman, but if he is tops, he can teach and may teach at Harvard or Smith.

I PREDICT that when the walls of segregation go and Negroes are truly integrated into every phase of American life, some of the ablest statesmen will be Negroes; some of the most noted bankers will be Negroes; some of the ablest authorities in physics, mathematics and philosophy will be Negroes.

Even with the odds definitely against Negroes, they have been among the best not only in sports, but in music, drama, religion, social science, poetry and pure science. I would like to be around 100 years from now, for Negroes will be occupying many of the biggest positions in the nation.

My View

THINGS look hopeful in Florida—at least at this writing. Mississippi plans to "by-pass" the decision of the Supreme Court, but there is a chance that Florida will seek ways and means of complying. It will be a significant step if a deep Southern state takes a real stand in support of the Supreme Court.

Dr. Mays

It won't take too much courage for border states to stand up in favor of desegregation; but for a deep Southern state it will take nerve a-plenty.

Southern strategy seems to be to go on record as being determined to keep segregation for the influence it may have on the Supreme Court's declaration as to how integration is to be brought about.

Some of the Southern Governors feel that any attempt now to go along with the decision would encourage the Court to hand down an order for an immediate integration of the schools. The majority of the Southern States will keep segregation as long as they can.

LAST WEEK I set forth the intent of Mississippi. This week I write hopefully of something that seems to be brewing in Florida. The Continuing Education Council of Florida is a lay group representing labor unions, Parent-Teacher Association, League of Women Voters, the American Legion, and the State Bar Association.

A group of this kind represents the grass roots and it looks more hopeful than anything I have heard of in the Deep South. J. Velma Keen, chairman of the council who also represents the Florida Bar Association, is reported to have said "to abolish the public schools would set education in Florida back fifty years. This organization would not join in any such move."

Keen made this statement after a closed meeting of the council at which were present Thomas D. Bailey, State Superintendent of Schools; Atty. General Richard Ervin, Dr. Louis Killian of Florida State University, Secretary of State R. A. Gray, and several members of next year's Legislature. Keen was also quoted as saying that those who attended the meeting "were in agreement that the U. S. Supreme Court decision declaring segregation unconstitutional must be obeyed and segregation must end in Florida."

THE PERSONS present at the closed meeting expressed the opinion that integration would have to be carried out county by county and not by a schedule covering the whole state. The Attorney General seems to favor such a plan and will probably take account of it when Florida files its brief with the Supreme Court. This seems to make sense, as I understand it, because the control of education in Florida is not in the capital at Tallahassee, but in the sixty-seven counties.

Although Florida thinks integration should come gradually through its sixty-seven counties, this is a much more hopeful sign than we find in "enlightened" Virginia, South Carolina, Georgia and Mississippi. It may be that Florida will lead the way for the South. At least they are not kicking the traces in Florida. It is a hopeful sign that the South is divided on this issue.

Does the South Make Up Its Mind?

Courier P. 7

THE Atlanta Journal and Constitution wrote an editorial on segregation in Georgia's school. It was an editorial endorsing Fred Hand, one of the nine candidates running for Governor. The editorial said that segregation in Georgia schools could be entrusted only to a man of strong character and that Fred Hand was that man.

Dr. Mays

The Atlanta Journal and Constitution is a great paper, highly respected throughout the nation. I usually find myself in agreement with their editorials. But this time I cannot agree. Let me quote two paragraphs from that famous editorial of Sept. 5:

"Courts can make laws but people live them. And the South is not ready to live this decree that the Supreme Court has spoken. A heritage and a living tradition cannot be ended abruptly by decree. There are forces stronger than the judgment of nine men, regardless of how right in ethics that judgment may be.

"These truths are known to us. They were bred in our fathers and born in ourselves, and we seek a way to prevent their legal contradiction until the time, if that time ever comes, that the South itself, in its own way and by its own decisions, shall alter its manner of living."

Pittsburgh Pa

IT IS true that laws must be lived by the people. Much of the South is not ready to live the decree the Supreme Court has spoken. But some of the South is ready. Washington, D. C., and Maryland are partly ready and they are parts of the South. It seems that some sections of Florida and North Carolina are ready. There are thousands of Southern people who believe in implementing the decision, but they are afraid to say so. But this is not the main point of my quarrel with the editorial.

I cannot accept the view quoted in the second paragraph above. The point advanced in that paragraph is that the South itself "in its own way and by its own decision" will alter its manner of living. The editorial also implied that the South may never make up its mind to abandon segregation.

DID THE South make its own decision to abolish the white primary? Did the South in its own way abolish segregation in the dining car? Did the South make up its own mind to abandon segregation in interstate travel? Did the South decide to alter its way of life by admitting Negroes to Southern universities?

Did the South make up its own mind when segregation was abolished in the Army, the Navy and the Air Force? Did the South decide voluntarily to equalize teachers salaries?

The answers to all these questions are obvious. The South made up its mind on all the issues with the assistance of the United States Supreme Court. And the South will make up its mind on segregation in the public schools with assistance from the United States Supreme Court.

Man May Set the World on Fire, Saving God All of the Trouble

Courier By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THERE is a song they used to sing. It runs like this: "There is no hiding place . . ." With respect to the hydrogen bomb, we can say there is no hiding place on this earth. It seems that God will not have to set this world on fire. Man will probably spare God of this cruel task. He will set the world on fire.

Dr. Mays

The New York Times pointed out recently that the dimensions of the H-bomb are conveyed by a new word — megaton. A megaton is the explosive force of one million tons of TNT. They tell us that the bomb which was dropped on Hiroshima had only one-five hundredth of that power. The H-bomb which we exploded at Bikini on March 1 had the force of at least ten million megatons, and this is equal to ten million tons of TNT. Some estimates of that March 1 explosion have put it at twenty megatons. In a strategically important city, the odds against your survival in an H-bomb war would be about a million to one.

A TEN - MEGATON bomb will do the following: (1) cause total destruction by blast within a radius of four miles—an area of fifty square miles; (2) cause severe damage within a radius of eight miles—an area of two hundred square miles; (3) cause moderate damage within a radius of fourteen miles—an area of six hundred square miles; (4) destroy by fire within a radius of twenty-five miles—an area of eight hundred square miles.

It has been pointed out more than once that one bomb now can destroy New York City. We will probably have to change our song—instead of saying God is going to set this world on fire, we will need to say man is going to set this world on fire. It is for this reason that I fear neither God nor the devil, but I do fear man.

WE TRY to see hope in this. We argue that since Russia has the H-bomb and the United States has the H-bomb, we will be afraid to use it and therefore the development of the H-bomb is for the peace of the world. I seriously doubt that. It is my prediction that if we get involved in a war with Russia, the H-bomb will be used. And if there is a weapon more deadly than the H-bomb, we will use that. I hope I am wrong, but I think not.

The tragedy of it is the fact that man's ability to destroy has outrun his capacity to build constructively. He has developed his mind, but there is a lag in developing the heart and soul. It seems that common sense would say to the nation that since we have now reached the point of total destruction, let us sit down now and settle all of our differences without war, and without preparation for war.

IT IS not only religious people, but generals who say that war is destructive and evil. And yet, we go on spending more money for that item than for all other items combined. And the further tragedy is that man will keep on using his mind in this way, and if it is conceivable to build a more powerful hydrogen bomb whereby a whole nation can be blotted out, we will build that bomb.

We will go on building bigger bombs, and if we ask Congress to put the cost of a few hydrogen bombs into something very constructive, I suspect Congress would not do it. We certainly do not spend sixty billion dollars for efforts of peace, for education, for health, for the elimination of slums and other things that make for human good. It seems that man must have something to destroy and something to hurt to get him to turn his money loose without great complaint.

WE WILL never have peace in the world as long as men are afraid of each other. Nations fight because they are afraid. It is for this reason that I do not believe we can frighten a nation into peace by entering a mad race to outstrip that nation by being better prepared for war.

I have always held, and I hold now, that if we cannot get the major powers of the earth to enter a program of progressive disarmament, there is no chance for peace in our time, or in anybody's time, and to work to this end of progressive disarmament is everybody's task.

If He Were Someone Else, He'd Have Been Atty. Thurgood Marshall

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

I SUPPOSE it is silly to write about being somebody else since it is not possible to be any body other than yourself.

But from my youth up, I have always wanted to do things that count toward improving the cause of justice and furthering human freedom.

Dr. Mays

It is wonderful to help make history. It is for this reason that I have great admiration for scientists who have had a hand in conquering diseases, men like Columbus who discovered a new world, men like Lincoln who emancipated a race and Gandhi who did more than any other to free the untouchables.

If I were a child I would like to be Harry Briggs Jr. of South Carolina; Ethel Belton of Delaware; Dorothy Davis of Virginia; Linda Brown of Kansas, or Spottswood Bolling of Washington, D. C. If I were somebody else, I would just as soon be parents of these five kids.

THEY MADE history May 17, when the Supreme Court made segregation in the public schools unconstitutional.

My hat is off to all the parents, but I believe it took more courage for the parents to stand up in South Carolina and Virginia than it took for the parents in D. C., Delaware and Kansas.

It takes courage for parents to do this and I fear the majority of the parents in the South would not allow their children to be so used.

This decision should prove to be a great stimulus to these five children. They should aim to be outstanding men and women.

I HOPE all five of them have the ambition, the character, and the ability to become useful men and women. According to Life magazine, Harry Briggs Jr. wants to be a minister.

If he becomes one, I hope he will work to be one of the best in the nation. He has participated in the struggle to make it possible for Negroes to compete in the open market, not as Negroes, but as Americans.

I hope he will measure up to what he has helped to make possible. I am sure the other four have aims equally high. Twenty-five or thirty years from now I would like to know what these five young people will be doing.

I TRUST that the Supreme Court decision of May 17 is just the beginning of their history-making careers.

I salute all the children involved and congratulate the parents who had the courage to stand up perhaps under hostile criticism from both Negroes and whites.

If I had to live my life over again and had the power to choose, I think I would attend the same schools I attended: South Carolina State, Virginia Union, Bates College and the University of Chicago.

I would follow the same career. I see nothing to make me wish I had done something else. But if I had to be somebody else or choose another profession, I feel now, certainly momentarily, that I would choose law and that I would want to be Thurgood Marshall, James Nabrit, Robert Carter, George Hayes, Spottswood Robinson or Redding; men who argued the cases before the Supreme Court.

IF I HAVE envied any one, I hope it has been an envy of admiration not a malicious one; wishing I could do something just as well and something just as uplifting and constructive.

Thurgood Marshall and his associates must experience great satisfaction in that they, more than any other group of lawyers, are responsible for breaking segregation's strong back and thus helping to make America a real democracy.

They have rendered the world a great service.

Six Georgia Candidates Use Same Platform, Segregation, in Campaigns

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE SUPREME Court has given six candidates in Georgia a platform. All six are standing on one platform — preserve segregation in the public schools.

They differ in some ways as to how segregation is to be preserved, but not a one of them has any intention of going along with the decision of the Supreme Court.

Dr. Mays

It is suggested that segregation may be maintained by giving the school boards the authority to assign the pupils. It is suggested that legal ways be unearthed whereby segregation can be continued. There is the Byrnes and Talmadge way—abolish the public schools and turn them over to private hands.

One candidate advocates three schools: one for Negroes, one for whites and a third one for Negroes and whites who want to go to the same schools.

ONE OF the candidates, speaking at the sixtieth birthday of Kingsland, in the southernmost point of eastern Georgia, said: "Shall we be calm when they light a fuse that will blast the white South that we love out of existence.

"Agitators have never given up hope for a black South. Communists and fellow travelers tell us to 'be calm' while they light the fuse that will bring on a Negroid civilization.

"They said 'be calm' a few years ago, and we lost the primary. The voters on Sept. 8, will say 'no" to the Negro agitators and their red and pink backers who want mixed schools." These words are attributed to Marvin Griffin who was striking at those candidates who advocate calmness.

CANDIDATE HAND said: "I repeat that we must be calm and determined not to create strife and bloodshed, but to work out the problem peacefully. The Supreme Court's decision was not based on the law nor the welfare of the South.

"We should have a multitude of plans to use to preserve public, segregated schools, so that when the Court knocks down one plan we will have another one ready. We will maintain segregated schools and we will do it on a public school basis."

Candidate Thompson urges the white people to stand united. He said in his Kingsland speech: "We won past victories when the white people were united—this is no time to divide. I agree with all the candidates, except one, on segregation in schools. No effort should be made to divide the white people or the gubernatorial candidates on the issue of segregation."

CANDIDATE GOWEN declared that if Georgia public schools are destroyed, Communists will rush here to set up private schools. Without public supervision, isms will infiltrate the education of Georgia's children.

Gowen believes segregation can be maintained by assigning students. These quotations are illustrative of what our candidates are thinking.

I want to make four observations. When the Supreme Court said that separate but equal was the law, all of these men urged that the decision be obeyed.

NOW THE same court says segregation is unconstitutional and they are seeking ways to circumvent the decision. When it is what they want they say "obey it." When it is not what they want they say "do not obey it."

The second observation is it is mighty late in the day to be worried about the mixing of the races for unless my eyes fool me, the races are already mixed.

The third observation is that the Negro vote in Georgia is still so weak that candidates have no real fear of the Negroes at the polls.

If Negroes want to be free they must register and vote.

Finally, if any blood is spilled because of the court's decision, the leadership will be responsible.

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

I AM HERE at Evanston attending the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches. It is my twelfth World Conference — two in Asia, three in North America, and seven in Europe. They have been religious conferences, Church and YMCA. All this has happened within a span of seventeen years. The first one was in India in 1937.

Dr. Mays

Here we are from 163 communions or denominations and forty-eight countries. Every brand of Protestantism is represented here. The Orthodox Church is here. The Roman Catholic Church is not represented. Many cultures and races are here. These 163 denominations represent 170 million Christians. We are drawn together and held together by a simple creed: "We accept Jesus Christ as God and Saviour." It would be difficult—almost impossible to find another creed that would be acceptable to the 163 communions.

THIS IS truly the World Church at work. Race does not count in the Assembly of the World Council of Churches. Negroes and colored peoples from America and Africa have prominent places on the program. Two of the outstand- speeches before the plenary were delivered by D. T. Niles of Ceylon and P. K. Dagadu of the Gold Coast, West Africa. The writer has addressed the plenary. The different racial and cultural groups are skillfully scattered among the various sections and committees. Each delegate has a chance to make whatever contribution he is able to make.

Sunday, Aug. 22, a fine communion service was held in the First Methodist Church. It was under the auspices of the Methodist Church, but other denominations were served—in fact it was opened to all communions, but there are some denominations that could not partake of the elements under Methodist auspices. Those who feel that way celebrated their own.

Denominational groups participating other than Methodists were Congregational Christian, Church of the Brethren, the Moravian Church, American Baptist, the Evangelical and Reformed, the International Convention of Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Reformed Church in America, the Evangelical United Brethren Church and the National Baptist Convention. In addition to these denominations, members of many other churches partook of the bread and wine.

THE WORLD ASSEMBLY cuts across national and racial boundaries. Indians and Pakistanians fellowship here despite the hot dispute over Kashmir. There are a few here from behind the Iron Curtain. Southerners, Negro and white, work, eat, discuss and commune together. Africans, Negro and white, move in friendly accord.

Evanston has caught the spirit. Northwestern, I believe, had it already. I have not been and I have not heard of any kind of discrimination based on color. Evanston guaranteed that before the officials of the assembly agreed to come. Northwestern University and the city of Evanston have gone out of their way to make everything right.

Perhaps the most spectacular scene was the religious pageant where 125,000 people worshiped in Soldiers Field. To bring this many people together when it isn't athletics or a prize fight is something to write home about.

My View

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

ON AUG. 21, 1954, I addressed a plenary session of the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches which convened at Evanston, Ill. I, along with Ben Marais of South Africa, introduced the study, "The Church Amidst Ethnic and Racial Tensions." The addresses were well received. I thought the response to my speech was exceedingly generous, more than I deserved. Several thousand people applauded lustily and a goodly portion of the audience stood and cheered after I finished speaking.

Dr. Mays

Many letters have come from people who heard the speech and those who did not hear it but read excerpts in the press. Letters have come from the North and South, from the East and from the West; from Mississippi, California, Maine, Rhode Island and several other points. The vast majority of the comments received—verbally and through letters—have been commendatory.

I shall not dwell on the favorable comments, but rather on the unfavorable ones. Oddly enough, the letters of dissent came from the North. In the address, I was showing that there is no basis for modern segregation based on race, color and ethnic origins in the Old and New Testaments, none for it in the early Church and none for it in the Medieval Church.

I made it clear that there is no basis for it in science. Since the modern Church can find no basis for it in any of these disciplines, I challenged the churches to rid themselves of all forms of segregation based on race and color. Some of the writers assumed I was white. Here are some of the remarks. A woman from Maine thinking I am white began her letter this way: "You hypocrite: Do you want your daughter to marry one of these black men? God did not intend us to mix and become a mongrel set of half breeds. They are (Negroes) children of another strain and evolution, like the monkeys—they mimic well. It is only as they have white blood in their veins that they show intelligence."

A MAN from California writes: "Let race segregation continue in the churches or lose millions of white members in your churches. Don't tell me you can make a Negro Father Divine into a Luther or Wesley. If you love the Negro, prove it by marrying your children to Negroes — practice what you preach! Oh religion, what asininity is preached in your name. God made the different races to be diffferent racially, mentally, physically and morally." Another one from Chicago wrote: "If you have your wife or daughter with you send them to the South Side of Chicago and in a short time they wiuld be raped or murdered."

These are the worst of the lot. As a rule I ignore them. Usually they are not signed—if signed, no address is given. When one gets a few letters like these, it is a true sign that what you write and say gets under the skin of some people. Then, too, all praise is not good for the soul. Progress, yes. But we have a long way to go.

From Now on Segregation Will Have to Walk Around on Crutches

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

AS I WRITE this article, May 20, Governor Talmadge is standing pat. He says no mixed schools in Georgia as long as he is governor.

Senator Russell is expressing great disapproval of what the Supreme Court has done. White of Mississippi is shocked. Governor Byrnes is all set to turn the schools over to private hands.

Dr. Mays

A move is on foot in Georgia to draft Talmadge for another four years in an effort to perpetuate segregation.

TO DO THIS the Legislature must get three-fifths of the legislators to sign to call an extra session of the Legislature.

If an extra session is called two-thirds of the Senate and House must vote to change the constitution so the governor can run to succeed himself.

The Governor of Virginia is inviting the governors of sixteen states to come together and exchange views. Attorney General Cook of Georgia is calling a meeting of the attorney generals of the states involved to see what legal steps can be taken to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court.

Dissenting voices come from some quarters. Attorney General of Kansas, Harold R. Fatzer said, "Kansas has no further concern regarding school segregation. We are following out the purpose of the decision."

ATTORNEY GENERAL John G. Fox of West Virginia said, "I would not attend any conference designed to circumvent a decision by this nation's highest court."

Governor Stanley of Virginia issued the call after the Governor of Oklahoma, Chairman of the Southern Governors' Conference, refused to issue the call. Governor Johnston Murray of Oklahoma says each state has its own problems to consider and that all the governors could do would be to tell each other what they plan to do.

The Attorney General of Kentucky refused Mr. Cook's invitation. So the storm rages.

BUT THE STORM will subside as all storms do. These gentlemen might have waited until the Court hands down directives after next October as to how de-segregation is to be brought about.

And by that time Washington, D. C., Kansas, West Virginia, Oklahoma and Delaware will be on their way toward implementing the Court's decision. Things will settle down. In some cases communities will move at once to do the Court's will.

Some sections will be where they are now next year and for several years to come. There will need to be more suits. But by and large the South will stubbornly, reluctantly and slowly abide by the Court's decision.

I say slowly because in all too many instances Negroes will collaborate with whites to keep things as they are.

The slowness with which desegregation progresses cannot be laid wholly at the door of the white people. Some Negroes will participate in a move to slow up the process through fear they will offend the white people in the community.

OTHERS WILL do so because of fear of losing their jobs. Still others will feel that the process should be slow.

There will be some who will fight to speed up the process.

The latter will be solely needed to keep heat under those who would circumvent the decision by their slowness.

In the meanwhile, millions more will be spent to try to equalize Negro schools in a further effort to delay integration. So the work of the NAACP is by no means over.

And Negroes in the South must know that even if the Supreme Court's decision were implemented tomorrow, the fight against discrimination will have to continue—just as Negroes in the North must fight discrimination. A big victory has been won but the battle has not been won—far from it.

BUT THE GREAT gain is what I have stated in another connection. Segregation's back has been broken.

For three-quarters of a century segregation has strutted about in this country as if it were God Almighty. Nobody dared challenge it, since Charles Sumner, until Negro lawyers came on the scene.

From now on, segregation will have to walk on crutches and apologize for its continual existence. Thank God for Negro lawyers.

Dr. Mays

Negroes Will Be Better Off When Segregation Is a Relic

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

IT IS a thesis of mine that as a general rule when there is considerable racial tension, the leadership is at fault.

It is not the people at the "bottom" but rather the people at the "top" who keep things stirred up. The United States Supreme Court has handed down the most historic decision since the close of the war between the states.

Dr. Mays

In places where the top leadership announces that it plans to comply with the decision of the Court the transition will be made fairly easily. In places where the top leadership announces it will not comply with the Court's decision, desegregation will be much more difficult.

FOR EXAMPLE, it will be difficult in those states where the governors are denouncing and impugning the integrity of the Supreme Court.

It will be more difficult in places like Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi because of the attitude of the top political leadership.

The Supreme Court is a great court and the interpretation of the constitution by the Supreme Court is the law. Any high official who announces to the public that he will not abide by that decision repudiates the law which he has sworn to uphold and plays directly into the hands of Communist propaganda.

WE NEED more light than heat; more integrity than compromise. Name-calling, denunciation of the nine men on the beach, arousing interracial animosity— those who do these things are shedding more heat than light.

If Negroes and white people deliberately plan separately ways and means of circumventing the decision of the Court, that is dishonest.

If Negroes and whites enter into a compact whereby they plan to go against the decision of the Court, that is dishonest. It is within these two areas that we need the highest types of statesment on both sides.

It is unfortunate that in two or three instances Negroes in small communities have already gone to the Board of Education in their community stating that they want segregation to continue.

ONE WILL never know whether this is the result of honest conviction or whether it is fear. It is a fact that more Negroes than we think are afraid to express an opinion which they think is contrary to the thinking of the white people in their community.

It is a fact that it would probably be dangerous for some Negroes in some small town or rural community to crow too loudly about desegregating the schools.

It is also true that as rule all too many Negroes have more rabbit in them than is necessary.

HONESTY DEMANDS that people in every community throughout the South, Negro and white people, make up their minds that they are going to be law-abiding and that they are not going to try to avoid the decision of the Supreme Court, but are going to seek honest ways and means of implementing the decision.

Here it seems to me that it does not matter whether desegregation is accomplished immediately or whether it is done in two or three years. The main thing is that we begin immediately to plan to do what the Court says. That's citizenship; that's Americanism and that's integrity.

The example has been set in the District of Columbia where they plan to desegregate the schools in September and where they hope to complete the job in a year's time.

A GOOD example has been set in Kansas, West Virginia, Arkansas, Oklahoma and in North Carolina.

According to the press, Greensboro is planning to perfect ways and means of implementing the Court's decision in a relatively short time. This is the time for the press, ministers, teachers and politicians to urge people to comply with the Court's decision.

There is no need for Negroes to be panicky or afraid. Time will prove that the Negro in America will be better off in every way when segregation is a relic of the past and when all men are in a position to walk erect not as Negroes or Jews or Gentiles but as men, brothers under the skin.

Legal Attack on School Segregation Initiated in Boston Over Century Ago

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE ASHMORE Study, "The Negro and the Schools." The study was sponsored by the Fund for the Advancement of Education in anticipation of a Supreme Court decision on segregation in the public schools. The book is published by the University of North Carolina Press. The report reminds us that the first legal attack upon segregation in the public schools of the United States was initiated in Boston more than a century ago.

Dr. Mays

The brilliant Charles Sumner was the lawyer. Sumner appeared on behalf of a "Negro girl who had been barred from a white school under local ordinance which provided separate education of the races. At this time, 1849, there was no Fourteenth Amendment, but Charles Sumner's argument in Roberts v. City of Boston did not differ from the arguments presented against segregation in 1954. Sumner relied on the bill of rights of the Massachusetts Constitution.

He argued that the Massachusetts Constitution forbade any legal distinction based on race since it declared that all citizens are born equal. He argued further than the operation of segregated schools "tends to deepen and to perpetuate the odious distinction of caste, founded in a deep-rooted prejudice in public opinion."

He argued that the separate schools of Boston were not equal using as proof that this Negro girl had to walk 2,100 feet to attend her classes "while the white school was only 800 feet from her door."

THE MASSACHUSETTS Supreme Court ruled against Sumner. Chief Justice Shaw held that segregation of the races was not discriminatory and that when the Boston School Committee provided substantially equal schools for Negroes, it had done its duty which a higher authority could not deny. Shaw argued further that "any caste distinction aggravated by segregated schools," "if it exists, is not created by law and probably cannot be changed by law."

How familiar these words sound! But Sumner was not the quitting kind. In 1855, he and others had mustered so much strength that the Massachusetts Legislature repudiated the court's decision.

Although the Massachusetts Legislature invalidated the court's decision, Chief Justice Shaw's decision became the model argument for the South. We get next the case of Plessy v. Ferguson which was argued in 1896. Plessy, a man of about one-eighth Negro descent, asked the court to invalidate a Louisiana law which made it mandatory that he ride segregated on trains. The United States Supreme Court ruled against Plessy.

THIRTY-NINE years passed before the "separate but equal doctrine" was tested in court. It was done in 1935 when Donald Murray applied for admission to the Law School of the University of Maryland. Murray argued that Maryland had no law schools for Negroes and that it was not "separate but equal" if Negroes had to go outside of the state. Maryland Court of Appeals sustained Murray and said Maryland had to provide legal education for Negroes within the state.

Next was the Gaines case in 1938 where Lloyd Gaines sued for admission to the University of Missouri on the ground that no separate law school existed for Negroes. The United Supreme Court sustained Gaines by asserting that "the obligation of the state to give the protection of equal laws can be performed only where its laws operate, this is, within its own jurisdiction."

In 1946, Miss Sipuel sought to enter the University of Oklahoma and won admission in 1949 after refusing an inferior law school improvised for her. In 1948, McLaurin sought admission to the Graduate School of the University of Oklahoma. He was admitted on a segregated basis. McLaurin went back to court and in 1950 the Supreme Court ruled that once admitted McLaurin could not be segregated.

Lincoln U. (Pa.) Has Had Great Influence Upon Dr. Mays' Life

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

THE ACADEMIC world salutes Lincoln University (Pa.). This institution has just celebrated its one hundreth anniversary. It is the oldest Negro College in the United States, founded in 1854.

During the one hundred years Lincoln has been a beacon light and from her walls many distinguished men have gone forth into the world to serve and bless mankind. Founded originally to train Negro youth, Lincoln has recently opened its doors to all races.

Dr. Mays

Being located in the North, I wonder why Lincoln's doors were not opened to all races almost from the beginning. But be that as it may, Lincoln is doing now what we here in the Deep South will soon do—open our doors to all qualified students.

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY has greatly influenced my life. During my high school days in the State College of South Carolina, several of my most capable teachers were Lincoln graduates.

One of my best mathematics teachers, Professor Levister, was from Lincoln.

He loaned me $18 to buy a Pullman uniform when other teachers had denied me. He was an able mathematician and a most inspiring teacher. He was honest and thorough.

One of my English teachers and my Latin teacher was a graduate of Lincoln, H. P. Butler. He was an excellent teacher, both in English and Latin. He was a good speaker. He also inspired me greatly. My high school roommate, Ralph Edmondson, did his college work at Lincoln.

He and I lived as brothers until his death last year. One of my best friends was Dick Hill, a Lincoln man.

I HAVE MET Lincoln men in many fields: medicine, education, the ministry, law, dentistry and other areas. Lincoln men do well.

I admire and respect them for what they are and for what they have contributed to America and to mankind. I suspect Lincoln has done more for Africa than most of our colleges.

As Lincoln begins her second century, I salute President Bond, the faculty, students and alumni and wish for the institution many more centuries of great performance.

The distinguished performance of Lincoln during the past century should stimulate all Lincoln men and friends of Lincoln to rally to her support. Lincoln, like all private colleges, will have to rely more and more upon her graduates for support.

THE FUTURE of Lincoln and all private colleges is mainly in the laps of their graduates. A school which has turned out the caliber of men Lincoln has turned out deserves large support.

But if Lincoln is to do as well in the next hundred years as she has done in the first hundred years, she will have to do better. The competition in the next century will be keener.

The students of this generation will not be able to get by boasting of the great men Lincoln has produced. They, themselves must become great men and each student generation must produce distinguished men if Lincoln's star is to shine brighter with the years. It is a great institution and Lincoln men everywhere should be justly proud of their alma mater.

MOREHOUSE IS known everywhere as the pride of the South. We have much in common with Lincoln. We are the only two institutions established for Negroes that have remained colleges for men.

Both institutions can boast of graduates who have risen to national and international prominence. Both institutions have turned out a good many college presidents.

Lincoln and Morehouse men speak well. Lincoln thinks it is better than Morehouse and Morehouse thinks it is better than Lincoln. Through the years Lincoln and Morehouse men have argued this point. The argument will never be settled because on this point both have closed minds.

But the friendly rivalry is good and the Morehouse faculty and students join me in wishing for Lincoln a successful second century. Long live Lincoln University!

Says Negro Schools Can Survive--If

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse college, declared here last week that first-class Negro institutions have proven their right to exist in a free and integrated society.

Speaking to the Chicago Morehouse club, the prominent educator and churchman declared, "Only first-class Negro colleges can — and should — survive in an integrated society."

Outlining a million dollar building program at the famous school for men, Dr. Mays stated that institutions like Morehouse are ready and willing to compete with white colleges for Negro and white students. He warned, however, that the survival of Negro institutions in this crucial era will depend, to a great extent, upon the continued financial support of loyal alumni.

Dr. Mays, who was in the city attending sessions of the World Council of Churches, was introduced by Dr. Alvin Lane, prominent Chicago physician. George W. Watson, president of the Chicago Morehouse club, presided at the breakfast meeting which was held at Washington Park YMCA.

Impromptu remarks were made by Frazier Lane of the Chicago Urban League and Robert Turner. Other members attending the meeting included Lt. Joseph Brooks, Drs. John Eagan and Roy Boggs, Attorneys G. T. Woods, John Bryant, H. C. Arnold, Lloyd O. Lewis, Rev. James Mack, Leon Clark, Robert E. Johnson and Lerone Bennett, jr.

Non-Communist People Should Say They Aren't Reds Before the Probers

31a

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

SOME people take one view and some take another on the following questions: If one is called before a Congressional Committee to answer questions as to his possible connections with organizations that are suspected of being subversive or Communist - front organizations, should he testify?

Dr. Mays

Should one refuse to testify on constitutional grounds?

The blunt answer is that one has a right not to testify. Those who refused to testify may do so on several grounds:

(1) Some persons may definitely feel that their connections with organizations and the views that they hold are private and that even the Federal Government has not the right to invade that private domain. It may be a matter of conscience for those who take this position. Perhaps such persons could find some support in the First Amendment. Courier

(2) There are others who may have had some connection some time or other with communism or with Communist-front organizations and thereby feel justified in refusing to testify on the right given them in the Fifth Amendment. P. 8

(3) There may be persons who are definitely innocent of any subversive connections and would fall back on their constitutional rights only because they question the fairness of the committee in conducting investigations. Pittsburgh

THERE ARE many people who feel that a person cannot get a fair hearing before a Congressional committee.

They feel that anything they say would be twisted and misinterpreted. A person has a perfect right to take any of the three positions. It is an individual choice and no one has a right to speak for another and no one has a right to condemn another for doing what he thinks he ought to do. But I would like to state my personal views on this important question.

It is most unfortunate that a person is likely to be smeared by virtue of the fact that he is called before the committee, and once he has been smeared, it is very difficult for him to get over it.

Despite that fact, it seems to me that a person who has not knowingly been connected with subversive organizations or who was at one time so connected, but disvowed his connection when he knew the character of the organization should not hestitate to testify before any duly constituted committee.

IT APPEARS to me that a person under such circumstances would be willing to waive any constitutional rights that he had. I do not believe that to testify is giving encouragement to the committee in their Communist hunt. Bat. 2-27-54

America is so excited over communism that anyone who refuses to testify is likely to be accused of having something to hide.

A person who is not a Communist should without any hesitancy say that he is not a Communist. That it seems to me is much better than refusing to talk.

EVEN IF one has had Communist connections and no longer holds them, he should be willing to say that. It is better to be straightforward when facing an investiation committee, even when that committee may not always conduct its investigations fairly.

One may be misinterpreted when he testifies, but he is more than likely to be accused or misunderstood in case he stands behind constitutional immunity.

I know that in taking this position, I go against the opinion of such persons as Albert Einstein.

I SEE no substitute for facing issues squarely. Many of the leaders and outstanding men of America have been accused of encouraging or abating communism.

Even former President Truman has been accused of playing into the hands of communism. Mrs. Roosevelt has been accused. In fact the whole Democratic party has been accused by implication.

But if one's conscience is clear of non-subversive affiliations, it seems to me that he will meet any congressional committee and testify. Whatever position one takes, he must be willing to take the consequences whatever they are.

Frankly, I think Bishop Oxnam rendered a great service in volunteering and requesting a hearing.

Georgia's Ex-Governor Arnall's Threat Against Negroes Recalled

Pittsburgh

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

WHEN Ellis Arnall was elected Governor of Georgia a decade ago, the press of the nation made him appear a great liberal. A new kind of politician had come on the scene in Georgia. I said to my friends over the nation that I did not see that Ellis was a great liberal. I insisted further that Ellis Arnall defeated Eugene Talmadge not because he was more liberal on race but because Eugene Talmadge had tampered with the University of Georgia System.

Dr. Mays

I took the position that I did because in 1942 when Arnall was campaigning for Governor of Georgia I heard him say over the radio and read the statement in the press which was tantamount to expressing the belief in mob rule and lynching. In essence he said something like this: If any Negro should try to enter a white school down my way, he would not live to see the sun set. There would be no need to call out the state militia.

At another time, he challenged a man to a fight who said that he, Mr. Arnall, believed in the co-education of the races. In those early days I felt that Ellis Arnall was another average politician seeking office for prestige and power and that he was willing to say and do whatever he thought was required to get elected.

AROUND 1947 I changed my mind somewhat and wrote an article in the Pittsburgh Courier under date of Jan. 11, 1947, under the caption, "With Apologies to Mr. Arnall." I gave reasons in that article why I thought that Mr. Arnall had grown and that he was on his way to becoming a liberal. I am not so sure now. It may be that my first estimate of Mr. Arnall was correct rather than the views I expresed in 1947.

Mr. Arnall is reported by the United Press as having said in Buffalo recently that segregation in the public schools would continue in the South even if the United States Supreme Court ruled against it. The United Press quoted Mr. Arnall as follows: "If the court rules that segregation is illegal, most Legislatures in the South simply will change the laws . . . Then there will have to be more court tests on those laws. If they, too, are declared unconstitutional, the Legislatures will change them again, but they won't end segregation." The press quoted him as saying these were not necessarily his ideas of what was right. Then he was quoted as saying the only way to eliminate injustices and discrimination is to make men realize that we are all a part of a total humanity.

WHAT IS Mr. Arnall saying? Is he saying that the South is basically and fundamentally non-law abiding? Is he saying that the South is so fundamentally different from the East and the West that it will never abide by a decision of the highest court in the land? Is he saying that the South has no fundamental regard for the Bill of Rights and the Constitution generally?

The implication of what Mr. Arnall said in Buffalo is that the South will never get rid of segregation. Is Arnall playing politics or is he expressing his own views? I am a little dubious about a man who is willing to express the views of others but try to appear in the role of a liberal by stating that these are not my views. It will be interesting to know what Mr. Arnall does believe on this subject.

To say that the only way to eliminate injustices and discrimination is to make men realize we are part of total mankind, definitely implies that court decisions and laws won't help. I imagine people will keep on killing each other but we need a law against murder. I imagine people will keep on stealing but we must have a law against theft. Although we may not eliminate injustices and discrimination by law, we can keep the prejudiced mind from using the law to maintain his individual prejudices. When the law is changed, people will change.

Dr. Mays

Negroes Will Win Even If High Court OKs Separate But Equal

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

I HAVE been asked to comment again on the possible decision which the United States Supreme Court may hand down in the case before it involving segregation in the public schools. There are several decisions which the United States Supreme Court could make. I shall discuss three possible decisions.

Dr. Mays

The United States Supreme Court can declare segregation in the public schools unconstitutional and insist that the five territories involved move immediately to abolish segregation in the schools.

Certainly the United States Supreme Court could rule segregation in the public schools unconstitutional and set a time limit for the completion of the job of desegregation. It is my hope that one of these is the position the Supreme Court will take.

To do otherwise is to say that we did not mean it when the Fourteenth Amendment made the Negro a citizen, and the Fifteenth Amendment stated that there could be no discrimination based on race or previous condition of servitude.

IT SEEMS so strange to me that the Supreme Court wanted to hear arguments on what was the original intent of Congress when it adopted these amendments. Even if they meant at that time to make Negroes second class citizens, this is 1954 and not two or three years after the Civil War. Of all the racial, national, and ethnic groups in America, I cannot see how the Supreme Court could pick out one group and say that it, of all the groups in America, should be segregated by law.

As I have said in this column before, America will be a long time recovering its moral leadership in the world if it ever could. This is the most significant case the Supreme Court has had to deal with since the emancipation of the slaves. I can only hope that the Supreme Court will not neglect so great an opportunity in one of the decisive moments of our country's history.

WE HAVE been a democratic country since 1776, when Thomas Jefferson and his colleagues wrote in the Declaration of Independence that "All men are created equal, they are endowed by their creator with certain inalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

India has been traveling the democratic route only six or seven years, and yet India has done a remarkable job in making untouchability unconstitutional. Whatever the practices may be, there is no mistaking the fact that the Indian Constitution is against discrimination based on untouchability. Surely we are not going to trail behind India in this regard. I do not mean to imply that the former untouchables have complete equality in India. I only declare that the Constitution of India is clear in its statement of no discrimination against the former depressed classes.

BUT SUPPOSE the Supreme Court takes a third position? Suppose for some strange reason the Supreme Court hands down a decision confirming a previous decision that separate but equal is constitutional? What then? Although America will lose prestige in the eyes of the world, and she will never be able to explain, the Negroes will win even if this is the decision.

A decision of this kind will be tantamount to saying to the nation that you must spend billions of dollars and spend it quickly to try to do the impossible — make two things equal in every area of our life. Thousands of suits will pop up all over the country. Not only must schools be equalized, but there will have to be equality in swimming pools, golf courses, parks, travel, recreation facilities, waiting rooms in stations, restaurant facilities in stations; in fact, everything will have to be equalized and this will take money, money, money, money.

If the Supreme Court does the first or second things discussed here, the back of segregation will be permanently broken for the first time. It has scars on it now, but its back is still strong and rugged. The first great step towards integrated citizenship will be taken when segregation's back is completely broken.

Dr. Mays

If the Negro College Is First-Rate It Will Survive in Non-Segregation

By BENJAMIN E. MAYS

RECENTLY, a conference on higher education was held in Chicago. Educators were present from more than 400 colleges and universities.

It was pointed out there that by 1970, sixteen short years, the college enrollment in American institutions will be twice the present number.

Dr. Mays

The enrollment is supposed to jump from two and one-fourth million to five and one-half million. This will be true because of the population increase in the 1940's and 1950's. This will be true, also, because more and more high school graduates are going to college and the percentage of women going to college is definitely on the increase. What does this mean? What does it mean to the private college?

WITH RESPECT to plant, it means three things. The existing colleges and universities must expand their physical plants.

They must make more use and better use of existing plants and, without a doubt, more new institutions will have to be built.

This probably means that most of the expansion will have to be done in publicly supported institutions. I cannot conceive of the private colleges doubling the capacity of their physical plants. It will take money galore to do this.

A few private colleges will be able to do this, but I venture to say that the number will be exceedingly small. The state institutions will be able to expand more rapidly than the private institutions.

THEY GET along on the taxes paid by all the people. This also means that some new public institutions will be established; especially junior colleges.

It means that we will go in for more and more mass education and this may affect the quality of college work.

What will the private college do? It seems to me that the private colleges cannot afford to try to compete with the public institutions in expanding their facilities. They should keep their enrollment down to the physical plants that they can afford.

They should seek to do a quality job rather than a quantity job. As the enrollments in public supported institutions increase, it will become increasingly difficult for them to do the quality job that the private schools can do.

Every graduate from an accredited high school is eligible to enter a state-supported institution and, in most instances, the state schools must accept them. It is not so with the private college. The future of the private college will depend upon the quality of its work.

COLLEGE FACULTIES must be increased from the present 130,000 teachers to 245,000 by 1970, said one of the experts at the Chicago meeting. Where will these teachers come from?

It is exceedingly difficult now to find outstanding scholars to adequately staff every department of a college.

There are thousands of college graduates, but not enough real scholars and real teachers. I predict that it will be easier to expand the physical facilities than it will be to get qualified teachers.

Staffing these colleges, with twice as many students, is going to present a tremendous problem.

IN THE light of these facts, it is silly for anyone to raise the question of what will happen to the Negro private colleges when segregation is knocked out.

It is clear as day to me that the best of them will survive. In a few years, the scramble for admission to college is going to be so tremendous that students are going to be eager to enroll in any college that will accept them.

In 1970, the scramble is going to be so great that white students, even in Mississippi and Georgia, will not hesitate to seek admission to Morehouse and other institutions that were formerly for Negroes.

THE TASK of the Negro college is one: and that is to make its work first-rate, standardize its buildings and equipment, and bring to its faculty the best scholars available. As for me, I have never had any misgivings about the role of the private Negro college in a non-segregated society. If it is good, it will survive.

Military Services Integrated, Creating Salesmen for Democracy

By P. L. PRATTIS

NOW THE story can be told. What story? The story of the elimination of segregation from the military services of the United States.

This is the story which all the services have been keeping a sort of cover on for the last four years because most of the leaders in the Army, the Navy and the Air Force were afraid of what might happen if some Southern Senators and Congressmen knew what was taking place.

Mr. Prattis

But, as of today, the lid has been taken off and we are able to learn what has been going on behind the scenes in a warm and moving chronicle written by Lee Nichols, entitled "Breakthrough on the Color Front." The book is published by Random House, New York, and may be purchased for $3.50.

Mr. Nichols has brought out into the open all the suspicions those persons have held who have been fighting segregation and discrimination in the armed forces through the years.

THESE FOES of segregation felt all along that there were friends and advocates of segregation within the armed services themselves, but it was difficult to put your finger on them.

Now, thanks to Mr. Nichols, we know who the pro-segregationists were — and why. We also know the names of those civilians and military leaders, white and colored, who carried on a never-ending fight against the evil of segregation.

In the battle for and against segregation, we learn about the role played by such men as:

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Frank S. Knox, Secretary of the Navy, Adlai Stevenson, General George C. Marshall, General and President Dwight D. Eisenhower, Senator and President Harry S. Truman, William H. Hastie, Truman F. Gibson Jr., Col. Campbell Johnson, Robert P. Patterson, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, John J. McCloy, assistant Secretary of War; Kenneth Royal, Frank Pace Jr., James Roosevelt, Lester B. Granger, Dr. Paul R. Hawley, Col. Noel Parrish, former Defense Secretary Robert A. Lovett, the late lamented Lieut. Chris-Sargent;

Also, Capt. Wendell Pruitt, Senator Stuart Symington, Lieut. General John C. H. Lee, Major General Anthony C. McAucliffe, General Brehon B. Somervell, James C. Evans, General Hoyt S. Vanderberg, Chauncey E. Spencer, Dale L. White, Oscar R. Ewing, the Fahy Committee, Dwight Palmer, Brigadier General S. L. A. Marshall, General Walton H. Walker, General Douglas MacArthur, General Edward M. Almond, General Matthew B. Ridgeway, General Thomas C. Handy, Lieut. Gen. Manton S. Eddy, General J. Lawton Collins, and many, many others.

YOU'LL HAVE to read this book to find out who was FOR segregation and who was AGAINST segregation.

The important point from this commentator's standpoint is that the author produces the records and the facts to prove that segregation is gone. Nor will it ever return. It is dead beyond resurrection, because it has already given shape to a new kind of life.

Korea, as you might suspect, was the testing ground for integration. When the statisticians had the figures to show that most of the dying in Korea was being done by white boys, they thought they had the ammunition to hold off the Southern politicians if Negro boys were mixed with white boys in the front lines. They did.

AFTER THE mixture had been tried, teams of social scientists from the United States were sent to Korea to conduct interviews to see how integration had worked. The reports were overwhelmingly favorable. With this background of success, the Army began to work on mainland installations and those in Europe.

The Navy beat the Army to the punch in effecting a large measure of integration, except for the stewards' branch where Negroes remain concentrated today. But the Navy is acting to integrate the stewards' branch.

The Air Force did a thorough job once it got started. The Marine Corps has gone whole hog, although the number of officers in both Navy and Marine Corps is not proportionate.

If you want to get to the kernel in the nut, Negro and white boys, in Uncle Sam's various uniforms, are eating, sleeping, working, fighting, playing and studying together all over the world.

That even includes Mississippi and Texas. There are considerably more than 300,000 Negroes in Uncle's fighting forces, and of that number, less than 10,000 have not been integrated. They will be.

MR. NICHOLS' story of integration in the military services raises an important question:

What effect will such integration have, upon civilian life? Mr. Nichols is confident that the white and colored men who have been the beneficiaries of integration in the armed services are going to become new salesmen for democracy when they have taken off the uniform.

Military integration will further weaken the foundations of civilian segregation.

Dr. Archibald Carey Jr. Finds Good Side of United Nations

By P. L. PRATTIS

THIS WRITER has a friend who once protested that she didn't like okra. "Have you ever tasted okra?" I ventured to ask. "No," was her answer. There are lots of people like that. They are facts of life with whom you have to deal. Just like people who don't like Jews, or Negroes. Some people don't like the rich. Others don't like people who are tidy and neat or who have respect for themselves.

Mr. Prattis

They don't want to KNOW Jews or Negroes, or any rich people, or the man who paints his house, or the mother who sends her children to school neatly dressed. They just don't like such people.

So with the United Nations.

I was in on the birth of the United Nations at San Francisco. I was at least a conscientious student of the events leading up to the formation of the United Nations.

But even while the United Nations was being born, I would go to bed at night thinking about the activities of those stubborn critics who didn't like the United Nations —even before it was born. I wondered how they could justly criticise an organization which had not even come into existence.

SINCE THEN, I have observed that they have continued to criticise the organization. They have never wanted to KNOW it. All they have been interested in have been its flaws. Their obsession with the UN's weaknesses has blinded them to its positive virtues.

I have heard no more eloquent, persuasive and realistic defense of the United Nations than that given in Pittsburgh two weeks ago by Archibald J. Carey Jr., first alternate United States delegate to the world body.

I would like to see some of the foes of the United Nations, who were against it before it was born and refuse to examine its work objectively, face Archibald Carey, who does know the organization and has examined its functions, its purposes and its achievements.

Mr. Carey admits that the United Nations does not have enforcement powers. That is because many nations, like the United States, do not want to give up any tiny bit of their own sovereignty. But that does not mean the United Nations does not exercise an effective influence for good.

MR. CAREY reminds us that there are sixty nations in the UN, with twenty-one others knocking at the door. What these united nations do is to serve notice to any offending nation when it is right or when it is wrong. Just as an individual may be chastened by having his fellows go against him, so Mr. Carey believes offending nations are chastened by the moral indictment of UN action. Otherwise, they would not fight so hard to escape such moral indictment.

Mr. Carey believes that this power to place a nation on trial before the eyes of the world has had a beneficent influence on all nations including the United States. He cited progress in the moral position of the United States to show how the influence of the United Nations has worked.

Then, he has the answer to end all questions as to why the United States should stay in the United Nations. It goes without saying that there is going to be a United Nations whether the United States is in it or not.

At the present time, the United States is the most powerful nation in every way in the UN body. But the second most powerful nation, the one which contributes the most money after the United States, is Communist Russia. Thus, with the United States out, Russia would be left free to dominate this great world body.

MOST OF THE nations which are knocking on the door, trying to get into the United Nations, are Communist-dominated nations. If the United States backed out, these nations would walk in, thus strengthening the position of Moscow.

Such a prospect, of course, would not frighten those Americans who cling nostalgically to the outmoded Washington cliche about entanglements with foreign nations. They think the United States can go it alone as it might have in the day of the sailing vessel, before the airplane, the steamship and the radio. They ignore the fact that the world today is but a forty-hour neighborhood, as contrasted with the forty-week world of Washington.

Mr. Carey is firmly convinced that the UN is a contributing influence toward the brotherhood of man, particularly in the United States. He says that the United States, cast in its present leadership role, is on trial before the rest of the world. The charge against the United States is racial discrimination. The loud-mouthed prosecutor is Soviet Russia. They jury is the rest of the world, most of which is colored.

This moral condemnation before the rest of the world, which we cannot escape, Mr. Carey believes, will have the effect of purging our own country of the grosser manifestations of racial prejudice.

For this, he would give the United Nations great credit.

Thoughts on Freedom — II

31a Negro

By P. L. PRATTIS

LAST week we began a discussion of some aspects of freedom with a reference to the testimony of Dr. Vannevar Bush who told a House subcommittee that scientists are "discouraged and downhearted" and that they feel they are "regarded with suspicion."

We held the present political climate to be responsible for the condition of which Dr. Bush complained.

Mr. Prattis

Further, we stated that such a political climate can serve as a blight upon the efforts of gifted men and women in the arts and sciences and rob the nation of the fruits of their creative endowment.

Such men and women are endowed by God, or Nature, if you will, and they must grow according to God's law, or Nature's law.

MAN-MADE LAWS, restrictions, regulations, prejudices, etc., deprive them of their freedom, even their sense of freedom, and they fail to grow, develop, create, as intended by God.

We have referred to "political climate," but what is meant is a sort of political mob authority which, in these days in our country, essays to control the actions, the behavior, the production, and the thinking of individuals.

The rod and staff of this Authority is politically inspired patriotism and its sceptre is a fear psychosis which grips many persons.

This authoritarian sway is really too important and fundamental to have won the label, McCarthyism. It has too much significance to be attributed to an individual of so little fundamental significance.

THE SCIENTISTS of whom Dr. Bush speaks, and all creative persons, have had to wage a fight against Authorities which feared the gifted man since the beginning of man on earth.

These Authorities have usually set up business under either a political or religious guise.

The Authority has been either the Church or the State. One or the other of these, at different times in our history, has clamped down on gifted men and women to deprive them of their freedom of growth.

This kind of repression has not always had a highfalutin' name. But, however recognized, or called, its nature has always been the same.

IN PRE-HISTORIC times, the gifted man who could work "magic" was often banished from the tribe, driven off alone into the forest to die.

He was feared either by the tribal chieftain or the priest. They never knew quite what he was up to or how he would influence other members of the tribe. So he was exiled—unless he either gave up his creative activity, or used it along lines set up by the discipline of the tribal chief or priest.

The creative artist or scientist of those days was never to get out of line.

Because gifted primitive man was deprived of the freedom of natural growth, mankind slow-dragged through the long centuries of the Stone Age, the Iron Age, the Bronze Age before the curtain of history was lifted.

Thoughts on Freedom—III

31a Negro

By P. L. PRATTIS

ARNOLD TOYNBEE, in his "Study of History," expresses the conviction that most civilizations the world has known came about because of the readiness of a people to meet the challenge of certain natural conditions.

In overcoming natural handicaps, they develop strength. Also their creative forces are called into play. But all through history, it has been the few who have cleared the way for the many. Indeed, it has been the gifted few, whether in science, art, religion, philosophy or whatnot.

THIS GIFTED few has always had to wait for an opening, a chance. Sometimes, these few, recognizing that the times, or the forces, or the authorities, were not propitious, have withdrawn themselves to await better times when the hand of Authority was more benign and they could enjoy greater freedom.

I firmly believe that a history of civilizations could be written which would show that they have risen or fallen in relation to the amount of freedom for growth to gifted men and women allowed by either Church or State.

Wherever and whenever there have been great civilizations, there have been beneficent rulers, of Church or State, who at that time and place, have encouraged and rewarded God-gifted men.

THE DARK periods of retrogression have occurred when either Church or State has regarded such men with suspicion and has stunted their growth through deprivation of freedom.

There are those who believe this will come to be known as the Atomic Age. But why should it? Why not the Age of Electricity? What has done more to give the last two centuries their significance than electricity?

Benjamin Franklin discovered electricity. He toyed and played around until he caught some lightning in a bottle.

Suppose Benjamin Franklin had lived under a political or religious authority which feared and suspected such goings-on?

HERE HE was reaching up into God's heaven, snatching away God's fire. 'Twas the devil's work, to be sure, and never intended for mortal man to do. Away with him! Away with his evil bottle of fire! Away with his books and writings! Punish, imprison this demon-inspired man who would reach his arm where God never intended it should be.

That's what could have happened to Benjamin Franklin in other countries, in other civilizations, in other times.

It could have happened to him during the period of our medieval history. It did happen to Galileo and many others who came up with strange, scientific notions.

IT WAS a crime to insist that the earth was round in the early part of the Fifteenth Century. He was a fool who thought it was round as late as Columbus.

One of the contributing forces to the decline of the Roman Empire was undoubtedly the fear and suspicion caused by the impact of Christianity.

But Christianity itself, before it was to see the full fruits of man's gift, was to establish an authority which deprived the gifted man of full freedom and led to eight hundred years of darkness.

Fraction of Progress in YMCA Grows Larger and Larger

By P. L. PRATTIS

THIS writer has been associated with the Young Men's Christian Association for a great many years, ever since 1912. As a student at Hampton Institute, I was active in the association on the campus and I recall that in 1914 I was sent as a delegate to a student conference in Atlanta. There, for the first time, I listened to J. D. Weatherford, William Pickens and John R. Mott and, for the last time, to Booker T. Washington.

Mr. Prattis

That has been forty years ago, but those four speakers are etched clearly in my memory today. I recall how Weatherford, a sort of radical of his times, brought emphasis to bear on his belief that Negroes were then, in 1914, getting a fraction of their rights. His point was that they were making progress and that they would make more.

Then Pickens, young then and wiry, too, was introduced to speak. This Phi Beta Kappa from Yale electrified the student group. He pounced upon the fraction of the now sainted Weatherford. Said Pickens:

"It's a fraction all right, but a very small fraction."

YOU WERE thrilled by his mathematical skill in handling the social equation.

Two weeks ago, I participated in a National Consultation on Interracial Practice in the YMCA. The consultation was held in Columbus, Ohio, planned and directed by the National Commission on Interracial Practice, of which Dr. J. Gordon Howard is chairman, and the urbane and deft Leo B. Marsh is director.

Even as in 1914, the 145 YMCA representatives who came to Columbus found themselves confronted with a FRACTION. The FRACTION concerned how much, or how little, progress the association has made in the direction of a completely integrated interracial, Christian association. Some thought the integration FRACTION small and stressed their belief; others thought the integration FRACTION was significantly large and that the association should exploit the positive factors in the movement.

This writer spoke at the consultation. He spoke critically of the association and of Christian groups generally. He quoted Benjamin Mays to the effect that "the most segregated hour in America begins at 11 o'clock every Sunday morning." He even had the temerity to state that the generous and consecrated efforts of such great and good men as J. E. Moorland and Julius Rosenwald had had the effect of stabilizing the concept of a Negro "Y," or a Jim-Crow "Y." As you might expect, such a statement was difficult for some men to take.

THIS WRITER feels that the FRACTION about which the "Y" can boast is despairingly small, even yet. But he does not believe that should induce pessimism as to the future.

There was a time, as late as twenty years ago, when nobody questioned the moral propriety of a segregated YMCA. Now, scarcely anyone in the movement, North or South, will publicly give moral sanction to a segregated "Y." We still have the segregated "Y", but it is recognized that such YMCA's are hangovers from the past and the proper goal is to do away with all segregation in the association as rapidly as conditions in different areas will permit.

Even the Southern delegates at Columbus took this position. They were not afraid of integration, nor hostile to it. They couldn't always approve the methods advocated by their Northern brethren, white and colored, but they knew that some day, somehow, Negroes and whites should be brought together in the association to pursue common Christian objectives.

JAY URICE, general secretary of the National Council, asserted that white men in the association should accept chief responsibility for the job of eliminating segregation, because they had been chiefly responsible for creating the division. Nobody blinked an eye at that.

However, the consultants learned that there are two sides to segregation in the "Y" as in schools. There is always a risk of casualties, jobs and status, in the desegregation of schools. The same risk operates in desegregating Negro "Y's". What happens to Negro staff members, to Negro board members, if you interracialize the former Negro "Y"?

It has been found that Negro "Y's" resist desegregation until the foregoing questions are answered.

The Columbus consultation demonstrated clearly that although the National Council of the YMCA cannot order local associations around in the area of interracial practice, segregation and discrimination are going to become increasingly unpopular and the FRACTION of progress is going to become larger and larger. Glory be!

It Is Much Too Early to Begin to Crow About Progress in Race Relations

By P. L. PRATTIS

EVERY now and then I get a reminder that I must keep my guard up among these delightful whites (my Christian brothers) among whom my lot is cast. That is despite the noble sentiments which issue from their pious mouths. Also, it is despite the fact that I know, respect, trust and honor many of them.

Mr. Prattis

But I just must never forget (during my lifetime, at least) knowing the American white man for exactly what he is. I think that, on the whole, he is becoming a better person so far as I am concerned. The recent Supreme Court decision proves this. But I know what his nature is capable of and you just don't cleanse or change the nature of a people in one or two generations. You may change their way of talking (even acting), but it takes longer to "cure" their attitudes.

This morose line of thought was awakened because of two thought conditioners which recently struck me. One had to do with that position, taken by all too many Negroes, that inasmuch as our white brothers are no longer quite as mean to us as they formerly were, they are no longer mean. Just because they have relaxed a little (under great pressure), we wash them and find them whiter than snow. That kind of thinking amuses and pains me at the same time.

THE OTHER thought conditioner came to me in the form of a news item which told about two wealthy white farmers in Alabama who had just been convicted of holding some Negroes in slavery (A. D. 1954).

Now isn't that an ironic dispatch to crop up in the so-called Free World?

Surely I must be pardoned if all this free world talk I hear sounds less than sweet to me sometimes. Am I to forget that less than a century ago my forebears (colored, not white) in this country were held in slavery? Or can I forget that the forebears of these Alabama gentlemen held my colored forebears in slavery.

Among the thought tonics which I am required to take these days is one concocted of Russian slavery reports. That is to say, there are reports that the Russians have millions of human beings in cold Siberian slave camps. For that reason I must fear, despise and hate the Russians. I go along with that because I do hate slavery. If the Russians are keeping human beings in slavery, I'll hate them. Slaveholders are just as obnoxious to me as is the system of slavery.

HOWEVER, I must confess to a sort of tricky sort of mind. It makes me ask myself such a question as: Should Russian slave masters of today be compared with American slave masters of a century ago, or vice versa?

If I grant that the American slave master of the 1850's was just as evil a person as the Russian slave master of the 1950's, I have an embarrassing equation. First, I must attribute to the former American slave master (whose descendants are my fellow citizens today) all the sins of which I am told the Russians are presently guilty. Or I must attribute to the Russians all the bestiality of which I know the American slave masters and their descendants to have been guilty.

That's tortuous thinking and I'm willing to forego such comparisons.

But I do know that this white man who enslaved me and robbed me of the fruits of my labor for two hundred and fifty years, has kept right on cheating me down to the present day.

I KNOW THAT his lynch mobs murdered more than five thousand of my brethren.

I know that despite the Thirteenth Amendment, he has kept many of my brethren in slavery and peonage down to the present day.

I know that only the constant pressures of Negroes, their organizations, and their white friends, aided by forces operating throughout the world today, have won any measurable relaxation of restrictions against the Negro as a citizen in this country.

It is much too early to begin to crow about progress in race relations. Such progress as has been made should be recognized as a basis for scientific study and measurement. But it shouldn't cause any shouting — not yet.

The leopard has not changed his spots, nor has the American white man. If you think he has, just forget one day that you are colored and start acting like a white man. Behave as the least among whites would behave and see what happens to you quickly. All you have won is a bit of tolerance. Acceptance is still a long way off and slavery still exists in Alabama. Byrnes and Talmadge are not dead.

The Negro Church Is the Negro's One Unassailable Bastion Today

By P. L. PRATTIS

TWO YEARS AGO, the National Negro Publishers Association dropped the word "Negro" from its title and became the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

Three weeks ago, delegates of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church met in conference and decided to eliminate the word "colored." I'm construing this to mean that these church leaders know there are some changes taking place.

Mr. Prattis

By now, the United States Supreme Court decision stating that public school segregation is unconstitutional has been hailed and denounced throughout the length and breadth of the land.

HOWEVER, AS I pondered the recent action of the delegates of the Colored Methodist Church, I wondered just what would happen if there were a Supreme Court of the church which would rule that jim crow churches are against the laws of God.

I heard the bells of Negro churches pealing "Hallelujah!" when the ban against public school segregation became known. There was shouting and backslapping and "Praise be to God!" Many ministers joined in this song of Thanksgiving.

But I wonder if the bells of Negro churches would peal and Negro ministers would shout "Hallelujah!" if it were learned from a radio announcer that jim crow churches, white and colored, were going to be required to abolish the jim-crow pattern.

I think I know pretty well what the reaction of white congregations and their ministers would be. Some would take it in stride. Others would grumble and complain that you've got to educate men to be Christian brothers. A substantial number of white Christians would quit going to church.

BUT I'M NOT so sure what would happen in the Negro church. The Negro church has been one of the prized jim-crow possessions of Negroes.

As such, it has performed services of inestimable value for Negroes. There is hardly any worthwhile activity among Negroes which did not get its start in the Negro church or which has not been helped on the road to success by the Negro church or its leadership.

Even now in these days of hysteria, the Negro church is the Negro's one unassailable bastion.

But, if you are against segregation, based on race or color, you must be against segregation based on race or color whenever and wherever you find it.

How can you oppose segregation in public schools, in public parks, in public hospitals, in public auditoriums, in public restaurants, in hotels, in trains and buses and embrace segregation in the church and be logical?

AGAIN, I REPEAT I do not know how the Negro church would react to an anti-jim-crow church edict. I don't think Negroes would receive such an edict in the spirit of jubilation which greeted the public school decision.

I don't think they'd assume the attitude that new doors were being opened to them.

I rather fear, and I could be wrong, that there would be many among us who would feel that such an edict would lead to intrusion by white folk into our churches. I think both our laity and our clergy would be apprehensive as to what was going to happen to an institution which belongs to them.

The plain fact is that this getting together of the races is not as simple as it may appear to be to some people. I have faith to believe that over the years we'll develop a more perfect understanding. But I know it isn't here yet.

I KNOW the white men must be blamed for starting all this foolishness based on differences of color and hair. And he has kept stubbornly at it. But he has also set up some pretty strong defensive blocks within us.

There are some devices which we think we need in our fight for recognition, dignity and salvation. One of these is the Negro church. Without it, even though it's jim crow, we might feel like a cripple who has lost his crutch.

But somehow, in another generation or so, we're going to have to learn to get along without this crutch. Segregation is about to become an ancient social custom. It will go and what we call integration will come.

The church, even the Negro church, will be compelled to yield to the vital new social forces alive and at work in the world of today and tomorrow.

In Playing Their Own Deadly Game, Lickspittlers Care Naught of U. S.

By P. L. PRATTIS

I WISH THE detractors of President Eisenhower, the Peglers, black and white, who are doing everything they can to make it difficult for the man in the White House, would stop just long enough to read up on the history of the Republican party so that they might learn something about its soul.

Mr. Prattis

This madcap gang of McCarthy lickspittlers spewed their poison when Truman was in the White House. They are no less venomous today. They hate Eisenhower and they have no love for the party as such.

This is a good year, the one hundreth anniversary of the birth of the Republican party, to take a look over the shoulder at its beginnings. It came into being because it represented the morality of the greatest number of the American people. To say it had moral objectives is to state that it had a soul.

ONE HUNDRED years ago, this nation was being torn apart over the basic economic issue involving free labor and slave labor. New territories and states were being added to the nation. The great question was: "Shall these new territories and states be slave or free?"

Slave labor was a menace to free labor and created the base for an aristocracy, not a democracy. Therefore, the beneficiaries of free labor, the economic units which depended upon free labor, fought the extension of slavery into new territories and states.

When the Nebraska-Kansas Bill was introduced there was great concern in the free-state area because, under the provisions of that bill, the residents of the territories or new states would have had the right (states' rights) to determine whether they should have slavery or not.

In the North, Whigs, Free Soilers and Democrats who opposed the extension of slavery, united to form the Republican party. They fought slavery as a moral, not an economic, issue.

AT THE FIRST convention in July, 1854, the following resolutions were adopted:

"RESOLVED, That . . . in view of the imminent danger that Kansas and Nebraska will be grasped by Slavery, and a thousand miles of slave soil will be thus interposed between the free states of the Atlantic and those of the Pacific, we will act cordially and faithfully in unison to avert and repeal this gigantic wrong and shame.

"RESOLVED, That in view of the necessity of battling for the first principles of Republican government, and against the schemes of an aristocracy the most revolting and oppressive with which the earth was ever cursed or man debased, we will cooperate and been known as 'Republicans' until the contest be terminated."

It was because of these historic resolutions and a follow-up under the Republican party leadership of Lincoln and Grant, that the great Frederick Douglass was able to declaim: "The Republican party is the great Ship of State—all else is the Sea."

IT WAS ALSO because of this devotion to a great moral principle (despite the underlying economic motivation) that Negroes properly gave their support to the Republican party during its almost uninterrupted sway and the period of the country's greatest growth from 1854 until 1936.

During this period of eighty-two years, Democrats were in the White House only twenty years, including the first term of Roosecvelt.

It is because of this long tenure of the Republican party that most of the basic framework of our present system of government can be, and must be, attributed to that party.

When the Democrats, under Wilson, entered the White House, the moral climate created by Lincoln and his successors, was despoiled. The aspirations of Negroes, whose grandfathers had been slaves, for full citizenship, were rudely disregarded. Segregation was clamped on Washington.

SUCCEEDING Republican administrations did not act to restore the soul of the party and to destroy the evil seed sown by the Democrats under Wilson.

That is the reason the late great Robert L. Vann rebelled in 1932 and Negroes, generally switched their allegiance in 1936.

As one traces the history of the party from Lincoln to Eisenhower, it should be apparent (it is apparent) that the man in the White House today is guided by moral objectives and that he has perceived that the party is not a simple machine, but a living organism with a soul. It is clear that his prayer must be that God give him the vision to see the right and the strength to do it. This is the Republicanism of Lincoln, penitent, but brave; humble, but strong—"with malice toward none."

It is needless to say that this kind of Republicanism is not the kind of brew upon which the Peglers, the Sokolskys and others of their ilk, black and white, would feed and fatten. Lincoln fought to unite the nation.

These others would divide our people. It is useless to advise them to read history (as President Eisenhower must have done), for they are playing their own deadly game and they care not what happens to the Republican party or the Republic.

Georgia's Negroes Should Be Able To Show Governor Talmadge Something

By P. L. PRATTIS

I HOPE the election of Scott Kerr in North Carolina is indicative of a trend which other Southern politicians can observe and of which they will be willing to take advantage.

All of us know that there are important, fundamental changes in racial attitudes taking place in the South. The diehards are politicians who have kept aflame the sparks of hostility which belong to other, earlier times.

Mr. Prattis

Just as soon as Southern politicians learn that race-bating does not pay off at the polls, there are going to be vast and radical changes in the South. Proof of such a fact has not been too clear.

A FEW years ago, the boom was lowered on Claude Pepper of Florida. Senator Pepper, a gifted orator if there ever was one, had inclined toward what is in these days contemptuously regarded as liberalism.

He was inclined to consign all the claptrap about "white supremacy" to the limbo where Vardaman, Tillman and Bilbo now rest. But Pepper is no longer a Senator.

The same thing happened to Senator Frank Graham of North Carolina. Everybody knew he had taken his stand against the old mores and that he was an advocate of more and more friendship between the two races in the South. But at that time, North Carolina repudiated him.

The race issue was used in Alabama in the 1952 campaign to make the going rough and tough for Senator John Sparkman, the Democratic candidate for Vice President.

IN THE same election, Sid McMath, the young liberal Governor of Arkansas, had his measure taken by the Dixiecrats.

However, there are signs of a change and the nomination (tantamount to election) of Scott Kerr is important in this respect. At the end of the primary, Kerr was played up as much more of a friend of the Negro than he ever pretended to be.

His opposition really laid it on him. But Kerr won. He deserved to win. We hope Negro Democrats in North Carolina supported him and we are confident they did.

The same thing was true in Alabama. As bad as some persons pictured Sparkman in 1952 on the racial issue, his opponent for the Senatorial nomination told Alabama that Sparkman was "Mr. Civil Rights" himself. But it appears that white Alabamans did not swallow this bait. Mr. Sparkman was renominated and will thus serve another six-year term.

FORMER GOVERNOR McMath has returned to the political hustings. He has his eye on Washington. If he gets there, there will be a great reassessment among the political wiseacres of the South.

The politicians are the principal block to interracial cooperation and friendship in the South. They must be taught that race prejudice does not pay off politically any more. Every aspirant for political office in the South who can win without race-baiting, and in spite of it, will serve warning that the old order has passed.

South Carolina has just had a primary to nominate a Governor to succeed James F. Byrnes. South Carolina Negroes are politically alert and active.

I HAVE no doubt Negro leadership in South Carolina knew which was the better of the two men who ran. I hope they quietly threw their support to this man and helped nominate him.

If such a man knows the support of Negroes helped him into office, you can look for diehard South Carolina politicians to have an "agonizing reappraisal" of their political tactics in the future.

No one should forget that Talmadge will soon be out as Governor of Georgia. In the selection, or nomination of a new Governor, Negroes should really prepare to throw their weight around. They might be able to show Herman something during his lifetime.

A Tribute to Nimrod B. Allen, Founder of Frontiers of America

By P. L. PRATTIS

THEY gave a testimonial for Nimrod B. Allen in Columbus, Ohio, June 30, and I wish I could have been there. "Nim," as he is called by his friends, is retiring after many years as excutive secretary of the Urban League. Most of his working life has been spent in the YMCA or the league.

Mr. Prattis

I am sure "Nim" has made his fair share of enemies. Anybody who tries to get things done will reap a crop of critics.

However, in this piece, I'm not particular about the enemies he has made or the host of friends who regard him as the busy "Little Wizard." I have two points I would like to make in respect to his career.

I would say to the friends and foes of Nimrod Allen, now that he is retiring from the routine of regular and inescapable responsibility, that he could not have been any different.

If there are those who have wondered why this busy, little man just kept pushing and pressing and organizing and trying to get things done, I'd say you'd have to blame this aggressiveness on his, or his dad's, hormones. For I'm told that "Nim" is a replica in action of the Rev. George Wesley Allen, his father. Some day the story of George Wesley Allen will be fully told and those who have puzzled over young "Nim" will then be able to understand that he had a heritage. They will know that mixed up in that heritage was a driving force which compelled him to be an organizer and builder. He had to live up to his bequest of intelligence, integrity, moral compulsion and a sense of responsibility which challenged him to try to give leadership.

THE SECOND point I'd like to make in regard to "Nim" has to do with my personal envy or jealousy of the human race. I look around me and I see all that I have to live with, all the material things which make life more pleasant and comfortable and all the wisdom stored in books for my guidance.

Everything material and spiritual that I use and exploit is available to me because some gifted person, past or present, created something, invented something, or said or wrote something for my benefit. The world exists as it is today because of the contributions made by billions of God-gifted human beings, a few now living, most of them dead and belonging to almost forgotten centuries.

I write of my personal envy, jealousy. What have I done that is of value to anyone living, or anyone to come? What have I been able to contribute? Or have I just been taking a free ride?

When I have this train of thought, I want to be a man like "Nim." Oh, yes, I know, he'll be cussed and discussed—but that will only be added evidence of the impact he has made on those who know him. Long after he shall be gone to his father, they'll be saying in Columbus, "They tell me there used to be a man named Nimrod Allen here who used to DO this and DO that." They will know he was a DOER.

NIMROD ALLEN founded the Frontiers of America, the first national service organization set up by Negroes. This organization will live and grow as just one of the symbols of the kind of life "Nim" lived. It will be a mark of one of his contributions. When in future years, the question is asked: "How did the Frontiers come to be?" the answer must be that Nimrod Allen made it.

There is, of course, much, much more that this "Little Wizard" has done, but I stress this point of DOING so that you may ask yourself: "What have I done? What shall I leave behind?

FDR Thought for Himself

By P. L

AMONG other things, the "Secret Diary of Harold L. Ickes," reveals that a President, one like Franklin D. Roosevelt, does most of the working, thinking and figuring for himself.

One is amazed to learn of the close grasp which Roosevelt kept on even small matters and of how they were channeled through him.

Mr. Prattis

Last week, we referred to the Ickes-Hopkins feud. Long before the opposition party and other Roosevelt or New Deal foes had ganged up on Hopkins and made his "spend, and spend and spend," a part of our history, Ickes was trying vainly to stop him.

The then Secretary of the Interior never quite succeeded. Sometimes it looked as though his attacks on Hopkins (within the administration family) might boomerang against him. Ickes was puzzled and he questioned others for an explanation of the apparent influence Hopkins had with the President.

THE EXPLANATION given at that time was that Hopkins' influence came through Mrs. Roosevelt, but there was nothing to substantiate that guess.

The first Roosevelt cabinet was not very strong and not very progressive. Ickes labels Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, as an aggressive pushy, but plainly incompetent man.

Swanson, Secretary of the Navy, was sick all the time until he died.

Dern, Secretary of War never tried to learn his job. A heart attack took him off.

Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, shared some of Ickes' progressive ideals, but he and Ickes fought like cats and dogs over the prerogatives of their respective departments.

MISS PERKINS, Secretary of Labor, in Ickes' opinion, simply talked too much without having anything to say.

Farley, Postmaster General, did not win any "A's" from Ickes as a smart politician. Ickes thought Farley wanted to do a job, but he also felt he bumbled.

Ickes conceded that Roper, Secretary of Commerce, had political savvy.

Ickes also had high regard for Roosevelt's gnomeish little friend, Louis Howe, ill for years, who talked to guests while he rested on his hands and knees in bed.

During these first four years, Ickes' wife was the victim of a fatal automobile accident in 1935, and he was to marry the 25-year-old Jane Dahlman in 1938 when he was 64.

BUT ONE of the most solicitous friends of Ickes was Cissie Patterson, publisher of Hearst's paper, the Times-Herald, in Washington, at that time. Cissie was always inviting Ickes to either her Washington or her Long Island home despite the fact that Ickes was a bitter enemy of her boss, Hearst.

In retrospect, one cannot help but wonder whether Cissie, who died in 1944, had set her eyes on Ickes, only to be dealt out by the more youthful Miss Dahlman.

Negroes will be interested to know that all references made to Negroes by Ickes are flattering.

It was he who first suggested to Roosevelt that William H. Hastie be named a judge in the Virgin Islands to succeed a Mississippian who had an allegedly unsavory record.

Horizon Courier

HAROLD L. ICKES, Secretary of the Interior for more than sixteen years under Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, has pulled the sheets off many well-known public officials, including himself, in the first section of his secret diary; as published by Simon and Schuster. This first book covers the first one-thousand days of the Franklin D. Roosevelt Administration.

Mr. Prattis

Perhaps few people knew that the self-styled "Old Curmudgeon" was filing away some six million words on his well-known contemporaries and himself.

Although Mr. Ickes has exposed the naked personalities and ambitions of scores of so-called New Dealers and New Deal enemies, he, perhaps unwittingly, has left behind him a startling, thought-provoking, unretouched photograph of himself. The more you read of Harold Ickes' diary," the more you know about Harold Ickes.

As I read the Ickes' diary, adjectives fitting his attributes, came to my mind: suspicious, distrustful, sensitive, hard-working, stubborn, efficient, bothersome, cynical, irreverent, unaffectionate except for himself, truly progressive, unprejudiced, crafty, domineering, vain, but not excessively so, honest, straight-thinking, and utterly devoted to the public interest.

Ickes' devotion to the public interest was greater than his devotion t either Roosevelt or Truman.

The publishers assure us that not a word has been changed or left out in this secret diary except reference to living persons that might result in libel suits.

There is important history in the Ickes' diary. The story of General Hugh Johnson who figured so dramatically in the National Recovery Administration is given an airing.

But perhaps the most significant story in the first 1,000 days brings out the bitter feud between Ickes and the late Harry Hopkins. Ickes, an independent Republican and former Bull Mooser, was not a Hopkins' man. Ickes had been set up as head of the Works Progress Administration which largely devoted itself to large-scale public works projects.

Hopkins later was to emerge as the head of the Works Progress Administration, WPA.

The PWA and the WPA represented entirely different philosophies of the approach to the then-existing problem of mass unemployment.

Ickes, an administrator of PWA, thought that the Federal government should share costs with state and municipal governments in the construction of public works which, by stimulating industry, would create secondary employment. That is, somebody would have to make and provide the materials for the public works.

Hopkins, on the other hand, thought that the Government should "make" work to take men off the relief rolls.

Ickes wanted economically sound projects. Hopkins didn't care whether projects were economically sound projects. The big goal to him was elimination of unemployment, regardless of cost.

Ickes thought Hopkins' program was a waste of public money. He fought Hopkins with all the tools he had, but somehow Hopkins had cast a sort of spell over President Roosevelt.

Negro Insurance Companies Reinvest Earnings Into Real Estate, Loans

31a

By P. L. PRATTIS

THIS writer is greatly indebted to the Research Department of the North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company for some valuable information pertaining to the growth, policies and investments of life insurance companies owned and operated by Negroes in the United States.

Mr. Prattis

The statistics furnished me are of Dec. 31, 1952 (the latest available), and they reflect growth, based on certain indices, over a ten-year period.

To begin with there were fifty-nine companies at the end of 1942 and sixty-two at the end of 1952.

The premium income of all the companies in 1942 amounted to $21,872,257. By the end of 1952, it had increased to $62,520,574.

THE TOTAL income of the fifty-nine companies in 1942 was $23,630,870, as against $69,050,979 at the end of 1952.

The admitted assets of the fifty-nine companies in 1942 were valued at $34,397,795, whereas at the end of 1952 these admitted assets amounted to $168,212,686.

Insurance in force increased from $435,944,649 in 1942 to $1,232,585,222 in 1952.

It is somewhat startling to learn that the percentage of increase of insurance in force in Negro companies over the ten-year period was 182, whereas for the industry as a whole it was only 115.

THESE FACTS of growth are inspiring, but what are these companies doing with their large accumulations of capital? Are they using this money to help the people who support them?

There has been criticism to the effect that "the economic tragedy of our day is the reluctance of many of these institutions (Negro insurance companies and banks) to commingle their capital in the interest of large scale developments, business enterprises of investment diversification."

It has also been asserted, in the light of the foregoing, "Negroes are being denied the fullest benefits of their own accumulated wealth."

However, the actual figures do not sustain the implied charge that the Negro companies are "dragging their feet."

IT IS disclosed that twenty-four Old Line Legal Reserve companies of the Negro group had $155,103,069 in admitted assets or 92 per cent of the total admitted assets of the sixty-two companies operated by Negroes in 1952.

As of Dec. 31, same year, these twenty-four companies held mortgage loan investments of $38,146,212; building and loan shares, $2,345,837, and real estate owned of $4,237,518, making a total for the three items of $45,729,567 or 29 per cent of the combined admitted assets of the twenty-four companies, compared with approximately 30 per cent for all companies operating in the United States in 1952.

The twenty-seven Industrial Legal Reserve companies included among the sixty-two companies, had seven with admitted assets of $7,790,220 or 65 per cent of the total admitted assets for this group. These seven had $2,116,530 invested in mortgages, real estate and building and loan shares as of Dec. 31, 1952, or 27 per cent of the total.

ALTHOUGH these figures indicate that percentage-wise the Negro companies "plough back" in mortage loan investments, building and loan shares and real estate, almost as much as the national average, one is reminded that these companies, through experience, have learned that their clients are the first to feel the effects of unemployment, recession and/or depression.

If and when these evils strike, a higher than normal liquid position as to invested assets is essential to meet demands for policy loans, cash surrender values and losses resulting from excessive terminations.

Some of the assets of the Negro companies are invested in United States, Municipal and State bonds, highway bonds, railroad bonds, telephone bonds, corporation bonds, etc. It is pointed out that Negroes benefit from these investments just like all other citizens.

IT IS further interesting to learn that the amount of Ordinary Insurance in force compared with Industrial is in reverse to that of the life insurance industry as a whole in the United States.

As of Dec. 31, 1952, life companies operated by Negroes had $275,500,593 Ordinary Insurance in force, including group, or 24 per cent of the total insurance in force on the books of twenty-four companies writing Ordinary, compared with $240,143,000,000 Ordinary insurance in force, including group, or 87 per cent of the total insurance in force in the United States.

All in all, it would appear that our companies are making significant progress.

Horizon Corner

DAVID L. LAWRENCE, the pompous, know-it-all editor of U. S. News and World Report, and newspaper columnist, has finally revealed himself for what he is—a dangerous, deliberate, deceitful phoney. He has done this in his active efforts to stimulate and disseminate fear and hostility against the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation.

Mr. Prattis

Lawrence's position is based on two foolish, preconceived notions, or maybe, three.

No. 1. That if segregation in schools is abolished, Negro teachers in the South will inundate Northern states seeking teaching jobs.

No. 2. That the prospect of more Negro teachers in Northern schools will create some sort of calamity for white parents whose children, forsooth, would be taught by these Negro teachers from the South.

No. 3. That school systems in the North would be compelled to hire these Negro teachers because, if they didn't, they'd be assumed guilty of discrimination by a (as Lawrence perniciously injects) Supreme Court which has taken over an "outlaw" jurisdiction in the field of education.

THIS MAN Lawrence is wrong on all these counts, although he had his stooges compile statistics to try to support them.

His basic error resides in the fact that he completely ignored the pattern of residential (ghetto) segregation in the South and in the North—all over the United States.

For a long time to come, regardless of the Supreme Court decision, because of this residential segregation, Negroes will continue to go to schools largely attended by Negroes, and whites to schools largely attended by whites. The process of integration will be a slow one at best.

So there is no reason to fear or expect the sudden mass disemployment of Negro teachers and their desperate search for jobs elsewhere.

But even if some of these teachers sought jobs in the North, there are no grounds for pointing up such a happenstance as a problem. White pupils and white parents become accustomed to Negro pupils and Negro teachers.

AS MY colleague, J. A. Rogers, wrote last week, Grover Cleveland made his opposition to mixed schools in New York one of his campaign issues when he ran for Governor of New York in the 80's. That would be unthinkable today.

As Loren Miller, Los Angeles attorney, stressed at the recent National Urban League conference, Mr. Lawrence is safe and most of the institutions rooted in segregation are safe so long as we have residential segregation.

If Mr. Lawrence had wanted to obtain a fair and true picture, he could have done so by having some of his "experts" interview men in the field of education such as Dr. Benjamin E. Mays of Morehouse; Dr. Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University; Dr. Charles S. Johnson of Fisk University; Dr. Charles M. Thompson of Howard University; Dr. Albert Dent of Dillard, and many, many others.

But, no indeed! Lawrence is too slick for an approach like that. He would interview, if anybody, heads of tax-supported institutions who, in the language of a Mississippi legislator, are kept "humbled."

Horizon Corner

WHEN I first met Mr. Ezzard Charles, I was fraught with curiosity, to say the least. The introduction to this shy and indifferent young man occurred at the home of Councilman Theodore Berry in Cincinnati and it was followed by a discusion of the boxing game to which which Mr. Charles contributed strained and monosyllabic responses.

That was many years ago when Ted Berry thought he had a "find" which, he was later to learn, he could not hold. Mr. Charles had too great a potential and neither Ted nor his resourceful wife, Johnny Mae, were prepared to thread the devious passages of the boxing game.

Mr. Charles has prospered since those dimly-remembered days, lived up to the potential which Ted foresaw, and has become much more articulate.

Ultimately, as you may recall, he became the heavyweight champion of the world.

But, in the opinion of this writer, that accomplishment did not represent the apex of his success. Indeed not!

Mr. Charles' real significance and success, it may now be seen, were to coincide when he achieved the status of a business instrument.

He could not have become a business instrument if there had been no International Boxing Club at the center of which sits, and operates, my good and trusted young friend, Truman K. Gibson Jr.

I don't want to be critical of anybody, even the IBC, which makes a business out of boxing. A sport can't live unless there is some business to go along with it.

But, as a man who sacrifices an hour's sleep to see or hear some of these IBC return bouts, I'm protesting against the kind of fights to which I and others have to listen over the radio, or see over television.

I doused my choler in a cold shower bath right after the second Walcott-Marciano fight. That one I hold against Walcott. I think Preacher Walcott cheated his public by succumbing to Marciano's attempt to caress him. If Marciano had been a gal, I coulda understood.

There have been some great ones put over on Brinks (the money toters), but this one of Walcott was in a class by itself. The public had no recourse.

Now as to Mr. Charles. All my friends who regard themselves as experts told me that after the beating Ezzard took in June he would be no good in September. They were right.

Hasn't the IBC got any experts? Or did the IBC think that the public would return to see Mr. Charles "murdered" again, or that Mr. Charles would stand up to be "murdered?"

I think that in both these fights with Marciano, Mr. Charles was a business instrument; that is, he was used to make a gate, draw a crowd. After years of not catching on with the public, he became popular in reverse.

If IBC wanted a real fight, why did that corporation not let Nino Valdez get at Marciano? Why don't they talk about Valdes now? This Cockell—who is he? Valdes is the man who whipped Charles.

Is he being overlooked because he isn't good business—yet?

THIS column could be called "The Editor's Notebook: Monday morning, Sept. 27, 1954." It is a column which has to do with despair and hope. It is a column which has to do with perspective and balanced judgment. It is a column which shakes your faith in humankind, then restores it.

This column will tell of three items which passed across this editor's desk in three morning hours noted above.

Mr. Prattis

ITEM NO. 1. The editor picked up his morning newspaper and the first story to strike his eye was that which told of the rebellion of white parents against the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation in Milford, Del. This was an ugly story. It made one bitter. It made one sad. A faker, under the guise of a clergyman, at so many dollars each, was enrolling white men and women in an organization designed to defy the Supreme Court and to maintain segregation.

Any mirror of mirrors, white adults were calling for this. The rabble-rouser was winning and democracy was losing. Morality was taking a back seat and the Communists were advancing with glee written all over their faces.

This was the kind of story to make all Negroes hate all whites—if the Negroes were not careful.

ITEM NO. 2. The editor's telephone rings. The public relations director at Carnegie Institute of Technology asks him if he had read the morning newspaper. "Oh, yes," replies the editor. But he hadn't. This was another story. Of an African boy stranded at Carnegie Tech. No money. Nothing but ambition, brains and faith in Carnegie Tech. The school was carrying him, but couldn't continue to do so. The sum of fifteen hundred dollars was needed if this stranded African were to stay at Carnegie Tech.

The public relations man was calling the editor to tell him that a woman's heart had been touched by the story of the boy's plight. "I will see him through," she told school officials.

She was a white woman, anonymously doing God's work, while some of her brothers and sisters were raising hell in Milford, Del.

ITEM NO. 3. A letter from a white woman in Mobile, Ala., reaches the editor's desk. She writes to inform that she is rearing a colored girl, aged 10, in her home—just as she would her own daughter. The letter also brings the information that she and this girl are flying to France in a few days and that the girl will be placed in a special school in Versailles for a year. She wants to know if the editor would be interested in knowing about their experiences while abroad.

Well, there you are: Ugly Milford—to make you mad. The anonymous white woman donor to the African student in Pittsburgh—to jerk you up and remind you that all whites are not alike either. Then this white woman in the South who rears a Negro girl as her own daughter, gives her the best—to make you know that all Southerners are not alike either.

These behavior patterns of whites are sources of hope, sometimes despair, but hope mostly if you are not an outright cynic or pessimist.

THE SUPREME Court decrees which are to issue from the hearings to be held Dec. 6 are as important as the Supreme Court decision of May 17 in respect to public school segregation.

The hearings Dec. 6 are designed to enable the Court to come to some sort of reasonable understanding with the parties most involved. Then decrees, or orders, will be issued. The Supreme Court has taken a most reasonable position.

Mr. Prattis

Although declaring, by unanimous vote, that public school segregation is unconstitutional and inherently wrong, the court has recognized the existence of an unconstitutional system, rooted in the laws, customs and traditions of the states involved, and has conceded that time and planning, as factors, are essential in implementing the decision.

IN A GESTURE of great courtesy, the Court has asked the states involved to submit briefs indicating how and when they can bring their school systems in line with the Constitution.

The Supreme Court justices will study these briefs with great care.

It is admitted that some obdurate states will not file briefs or, in essence, advise the Supreme Court.

So far as these states are concerned, the justices will be left largely on their own, or they may have to rely on briefs received from neighboring states for a suggested pattern of action.

THE CHANCES are that it may take several months for the Supreme Court to fashion its decrees.

Such care as the Court may take is prudent, for once these decrees are formulated and issued, they will constitute the law in this situation and states, or their legal representatives, which do not follow or obey the decrees will find themselves in direct violation of the law.

Such disobedience will compel the Supreme Court to act to enforce obedience.

As a Negro, I cannot admit in principle that every public school in the United States should not be opened to every American child on the same basis TOMORROW.

The time to end our prostitution with segregation is exactly NOW.

BUT I DO know that what is right in principle may not always be prudent in practice.

Therefore, I would concede that TIME and PLANNING are essential to obtaining compliance with the Supreme Court decision and whatever decrees it may issue.

I know that the majority of sensible Negroes, South and North, wants segregation eliminated TOMORROW. I believe there is a substantial, effective body of white leadership in the South which wants to help bring the South within the limits of man's and God's laws.

I believe these Negroes and these whites want to have a chance to work together. I believe they need help and encouragement — and that they should have it.

THE JOB and the challenge to them is stupendous. They contend not merely against old laws, customs and tradition, but against vocal politicians still in the saddle, still exploiting the race issue.

Negroes who want segregation eliminated quickly, I believe, should find some way to work with whites who truly have the same goals. They can give the greatest help to the Supreme Court in the enforcement of its decrees.

Job Opportunities Beckon, But Trained Men, Women, Are Few

By P. L. PRATTIS

DR. CHARLES S. Johnson, president of Fisk University, spoke to the students of that university, Nov. 19, on the subject, "The Next Ten Years of Your Life." Dr. Johnson has seen generations of students come and go at Fisk.

He knew that the next ten years in the lives of the students to whom he was talking would be the best and last years most of them would have to prepare themselves for the new kind of world which is being made.

Mr. Prattis

What Dr. Johnson said to Fisk students is good for all students, for all young Negroes. Chief emphasis in his talk was placed upon the fact that NOW, ninety years after emancipation, Negroes are not prepared for the opportunities which beckon to them. Negroes are not educated for the demands of the times. Said Dr. Johnson:

"IN SPITE of the continued existence of racial barriers, the opportunities today for soundly prepared Negro youth go begging—because they actually cannot be found. And I can prove this."

"There are more than 100,000 Negro youth in colleges, and over the past ten years these colleges have graduated no less than 150,000 A. B's or B. S.'s. But, in spite of this, it would be impossible as of today, to fill ten new posts with Negro Ph. D.'s in chemistry, physics, mathematics, history, English or sociology.

"To take just one of these fields—that of mathematics—where there is an acute demand, not merely for scientific and industrial research, but for teachers in colleges and high schools.

"Of nearly 4,000 persons holding Ph. D.'s in mathematics in the United States, only fifteen are Negroes. Of about 400 persons expected to receive this degree in the next two years, only three are Negroes.

"Hardly any of the 105 Negro colleges and universities have been able to find fully qualified mathematicians for their staff. Only two have two or more Ph. D.'s in mathematics as faculty members.

"The extent of this shortage is made even clearer once it is realized that there should be, BUT THERE IS NOT, a large number of Negro mathematicians in industrial and governmental employment and on the faculties of white colleges and universities. There is only one Negro mathematician holding a professorship outside the Negro institutions.

"Something like 40 per cent of our men students begin their college work with the vague notion of becoming physicians. Less than 1 per cent get into medical schools. One reason is that the number of medical schools is limited, but the most important reason is that they are not prepared to meet the qualifications.

"THERE IS a dismal lag to be overcome in the science fields. The work of scientists and engineers has helped to bring about great changes in the food we eat, the medicines we use, the clothes we wear, and the ways in which we produce goods, travel and even spend our leisure time.

"There are a few Negroes in fundamental research who are revolutionizing man's whole relationship to his physical universe. However, when we have counted Charles Drew and Percy Julian and the legendary George Carver of the older, but not too old generations, we begin to run thin on names.

IN ACHIEVING national security and in strengthening the free world, many different kinds of scientists and professional persons play key roles — agricultural experts, international specialists, nuclear physicists, aeronautical engineers, psychologists and a host of others.

"There are other fields than science. We can count the really qualified Negro historians who are writing history on one hand.

"In English, apart from the teachers of English in the public school and the small colleges, we can count the writers of novels, poetry and drama on perhaps the fingers of two hands. The greatest of them—W. E. B. DuBois—was a graduate of Fisk, and I challenge any of you to read "Souls of Black Folk" without a deep thrill over its exquisite beauty and emotional depths.

"The social sciences are an active and exciting field. An economist or a sociologist or anthropologist of any reasonable preparation can find a post on the faculties or universities in the South or in the North. But where can you find one? There are fewer than a dozen Negro Ph. D.'s in economics. I know of only three Negro anthropologists, and less than five political scientists—one of these being Dr. Ralph Bunche who was told that there was no future in this field for a Negro.

"THERE IS a critical shortage of qualified persons in modern foreign languages, including Oriental languages, and the Russian language. There are shortages of clinical psychologists, child specialists, actuarial statisticians, accountants, public health officers, biologists, geologists and geophysicists.

"Last year we had a call from a Government Department in Washington for four Negro geologists. To date, among the 15 million Negroes in the United States, not a single one has been located or even heard of.

"There are shortages of nurses and skilled para medical personnel, and in the profession of medicine there are vast shortages in psychiatric personnel."

Dr. Johnson wanted to show Fisk students that important roles are awaiting them in modern society.

Both Parties Prepare To Ditch Civil Rights As Political Issue

By P. L. PRATTIS

CONCERN for the Negro's citizenship status, symbolized by legislative objectives, is a political instrument which, it seems, is to be left in the dark corner of a closet in the political campaigns ahead. Civil rights loomed large as an issue in the 1948 election when President Truman won by a narrow margin. But the margin of victory for President Eisenhower in 1952 was so great that there is room to question the value of the Negro vote as a balance-of-power factor.

Mr. Prattis

Both parties seem to be aware of this.

When, at a recent White House press conference, Mrs. Alice Dunnigan of the Associated Negro Press, naively asked the President if civil rights was among the subjects he proposed to discuss with legislative leaders and to include in his program, the President was caught somewhat off guard. It was apparent that he had not thought of civil rights as a program objective.

HE EXPLAINED that although the program would not include civil rights as such, the program would include objectives which would, if enacted into law, promote the welfare of all Americans, including Negroes.

His messages to Congress bore out the fact that civil rights, as such, would not be spelled out. There is no special concern for the Negro nor recognition of his presently unique position in the economic, social and political life of the nation.

But President Eisenhower is not alone. There are signs that in this year and in 1956, the Democrats will remove the sharp edge of the issue as it existed in 1948 and in 1952. In his recent trip South, Adlai Stevenson said nothing to underscore his party's continuing interest in civil rights.

Both parties are backing up off the issue.

ALTHOUGH Negroes will not be able to view this wariness in respect to their interests without some concern, justifiably, they should not allow their emotions to obscure the realities of the present situation.

If it were conclusively proved that the so-called Negro vote could keep either party in power, that it was a prime factor in keeping either party in power, the ABC's of such a fact would dictate that the party so affected would cater to the Negro vote.

But that no longer seems true. Or, better, it is not true for the present.

President Truman won although there was disaffection in the South. He carried Northern and Western states.

But in the last election, President Eisenhower took the map with him, including the so-called unreconstructed South.

UNLESS IT has a preponderance of strength in the North, East and West, the Democratic party simply cannot win without the South.

The Republican party, in the last election, came through with a preponderance of strength North, East and West—and in the South as well.

If the Republican party can win North, East and West, as it did, without the Negro vote, and split up the traditionally Democratic South, it can safely merge the Negro's special interest into the general interest without fear of reprisal from Negro voters.

The lesson is clear for the Democrats. They see a party in power which is playing it across the board, straight American, except for farm and labor. When then should not the Democrats, nationally, drop the touchy race issue? They may still beat the Republicans to the punch in critical urban areas in the North by appealing to the Negro vote.

But, for the present, the Negro vote, does not help them in the South. Nationally, the Democrats need the South.

SO DON'T BE surprised at what you see happening. This is still, to all practical intents and purposes, "a white man's country," although I fight against the dictum and the concept. But the white man is the rule maker and the play maker. The day may come when we may twist his tail and make him take notice, but it looks like, for the present, we have lost our grip.

The chances are that the new "strategy" of the two parties will call for a new attempt to be active and strong in both parties to keep either one from getting completely away from us.

The key position of Negroes, a key power at key process in both parties within both. We need to

Money to Fight Color Prejudice Comes in Small Dribbles

By P. L. PRATTIS

THE CONGRESS of Industrial Organizations, through its secretary-treasurer, James B. Carey, and at the behest of its president, Walter Reuther, has made known to the National Conference of Christians and Jews that the CIO will no longer be able to cooperate with the conference. I don't know exactly what "cooperate" means in this instance, but I suppose it means the CIO will not give financial support to the conference.

Mr. Prattis

The CIO is divorcing itself from support of the conference because of the wavering policy of the conference in respect to the Negro. The CIO is disturbed because Negroes in some sections of the country are not made welcome at conference-sponsored affairs—dinners, meetings, etc.

The CIO has taken its position on high and important ground. This writer is not prepared to question the wisdom of the CIO's action. He is inclined to believe that there must be more and more Americans, as individuals and in organizations, who take the forthright and uncompromising stand.

Even so, the National Conference of Christians and Jews has its side in the point at issue.

FIRST, IT must be remembered that the National Conference was not born to solve the race problem or even to work on it. It was a direct outgrowth of the religious strife blown up in the heat of the campaign of Governor Alfred E. Smith for the presidency in 1928. Some Americans opposed Governor Smith because he was a Catholic.

That was bad. Many Americans thought objection to Smith on such grounds was bad and they were willing to support a movement to combat religious prejudice on any ground. Many Southerners were in favor of a movement like that.

However, as the National Conference grew in strength and favor, it found itself confronted with the color problem. I am confident that most of the leadership of the conference felt that the color problem would complicate the job they had originally set out to do, but they could not see just how a Judeo-Christian organization could evade or duck the color problem.

Thus, in some places, there has been extreme caution about including any phase of the color problem in the program. That is particularly true, of course, in the South. National headquarters has not wanted to press the issue too strongly.

The CIO accuses the conference of having a wavering policy. That is undoubtedly true. The conference could accuse the CIO of having a wavering practice. Very few CIO unions live up to the policy statements of the CIO so far as Negroes are concerned. That is true North and South.

BUT IT does no good for the pot to call the kettle black.

There is a fundamental difference between the conference and the CIO and it is in this difference that the will to compromise or not to compromise resides.

The CIO does not have to beg for the money it uses to combat color prejudice. For the most part, such money comes from checked-off dues. The conference depends upon voluntary contributions. Most of these contributions are made to combat RELIGIOUS, not color, prejudice.

It is the experience of this writer that most organizations which have to depend upon VOLUNTARY contributions to combat racial or color prejudice do not fare well. A significant example is the American Council on Race Relations, set up in 1944 with money from the Rosenwald Fund and the Field Foundation.

The American Council gasped along for several years financially, then gave up the ghost. Mr. Field quite properly felt that he should not pick up the entire tab each year and too few other persons were found to help out. So the council died. It was never able to get as much as $100,000 a year, outside the Rosenwald and Field contributions, to fight racial prejudice.

IN ITS lush years, the National Conference of Christians and Jews has obtained as much as THREE MILLION DOLLARS to combat RELIGIOUS prejudice.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is a prime example of an organization fighting COLOR prejudice. It has to "beg, borrow and steal" to raise less than FOUR HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars through memberships and voluntary contributions.

White people are not contributing money in great gobs to fight COLOR prejudice, nor are Negroes.

How far should the National Conference go in jeopardizing the financial support it receives to combat RELIGIOUS prejudice by making COLOR prejudice an issue?

Personally, I think the National Conference has gone a long way and that its national leadership wants to go further. But there is a suicide factor involved. If the leadership of the conference could check-off its financial support, I'm confident it would be willing to improve both its policy and practice.

Race Relations Factor Behind Bricker Amendment

By P. L. PRATTIS

ACTION WILL probably have been taken on the so-called Bricker Amendment before this column is published. But I must write my piece about the amendment—because nobody else has written it and because I believe it needs to be written so that the public (particularly our public) can be informed about one important reason for the Bricker Amendment.

Mr. Prattis

Oddly enough (and this is well understood), the reasons for and against legislation are frequently obscured. This is always true in the case of civil rights legislation. It has been true in respect to Hawaii and Alaska and their admission as new states.

The chief opponents of statehood never get up in the Senate or House and state that their principal reason for opposing statehood is the fear that representatives from such states would increase the number who favor civil rights—which is another way of saying such representatives would be friendly to legislation favoring minorities or the Negro.

DESPITE ALL the finely spun legal reasoning which is advanced to support the Bricker Amendment, it is greatly to be doubted that it would have ever been thought up, or would have received such support as it has, if we did not have a race problem in this country.

The Bricker Amendment would do three things:

1. Prevent the ratification of any treaty provisions which were not in line with the Federal Constitution;

2. Prevent any treaty provision from having the effect of internal law in the United States unless it was covered by Federal and state laws, and

3. Give Congress the right to look over the shoulder of the President and say, "No, no," when he was in the act of effecting an executive agreement with a foreign power.

Senator John W. Bricker, author of the amendment, frankly admits that there probably would have been no need for the amendment if there had been no United Nations. We have gotten along well, grown and prospered as a nation, with no such amendment.

THE UNITED NATIONS presents us with a problem, in the opinion of Senator Bricker. He feels that the United Nations, the United States assenting through the executive branch, might take some action, binding to the United States, which would have the effect of internal law in the United States. Senator Bricker would have the Congress and the states approve any such action before it became binding upon our Government and the states. Thus Senator Bricker would put the states into the business of foreign relations.

Now the real reason some people began to fear such action on the part of the United Nations is because it appeared that the charter of the United Nations might have the effect of internal law. There was a case a few years ago in Canada involving human rights (those of a Negro) and the Canadian court based its action on the United Nations Charter. At another time, a California judge looked back to the United Nations Charter for the basis of an opinion in a case of housing discrimination.

Those two cases were enough to put many persons on guard as to how the United Nations Charter and similar covenants, which might be entered into, could affect discriminatory practices in the United States.

It is significant that the American Bar Association stands behind the Bricker Amendment. The Bar Association has been the principal American organization fighting United States ratification of the Human Rights covenant of the United Nations.

WE PARTICIPATED in drawing up the Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations. However, it was clear to anyone who read it, that once it was re-worked into a covenant and signed by the covenanting nations, many nations would be in violation, including ourselves.

A United Nations covenant on human rights, signed by the United States, would require us to face up to the problem of human rights in our own country, would discover us to be legally derelict—in the eyes of the world.

Of course, we wouldn't want that. We want to make our own law and practice in regard to our own problems. We certainly don't want any foreigners poking their fingers into our own racial mess. So we will find some nice fancy way to dance around a covenant on human rights.

And, for fear that somebody might sneak up on us with another covenant, the purpose of which we might not recognize at first, we'll seek the Bricker Amendment. That will take care of anybody who might want to charge that we wern't treating Negroes, Jews, Catholics, Mexicans, or anybody else, as human beings should be treated.

It looks like we're in the woodpile on this Bricker Amendment.

The South Is Interesting! . . .

NEW ORLEANS, La.—One cannot tour the South without forming fixed opinions. Such as deciding that New Orleans is the most friendly city and that Mississippi is the worst state.

Whereas a visitor or an "invader" gets the "fear feeling" once he enters the cotton patch state, the same visitor or "invader" receives a sense of freedom when he strolls or rolls through the gay and colorful Crescent City.

LITTLE AND BIG DOOKY
. . . they run the finest bar and restaurant in New Orleans

New Orleans, which offers very little in a way of hotels and motels for Negroes, is quite proud of its Dooky Chase.

Dooky Chase is advertised as "New Orleans' Leading Colored Restaurant and Bar." Located at 2301 Orleans in the Creole section of town, the Dooky Chase restaurant-bar is the meeting place for the locals and out-of-towners.

You find a certain friendliness at Dooky's bar where the bartenders greet you with a smile, or in the dining room where the nicest waitresses shower you with attention and expert service.

Papa Chase, a Creole who wears big diamonds, is always around to greet and welcome oldtimers and visitors . . . and to offer a free drink when he thinks a spender is due one on the house.

Pride of the Dooky Chase outfit is "Little Dooky," a handsome, black-haired youngster with a million-dollar smile. He bosses the bar during the daylight shift . . . and Mama Chase is around at the right time to keep an eye on the returns.

Dat. 12-25-54

New Orleans has been called gay and rowdy, and perhaps it could be called sinful. The bars operate twenty-four hours a day, including Sundays.

Fine motels are springing up for Negroes in some of the bigger Southern cities. Some are operated by Negroes and some by whites. Houston has two brand new ones. Dallas has a big one that used to be for whites. New Orleans has a small one and there's an ultra-modern motel in Birmingham operated by Gaston.

Most motels charge you five or six dollars a night, but once in a while you find one where the fee is two dollars an hour or five dollars for twelve hours and ten dollars for twenty-four hours. These are the exceptions.

* * *

One can't tour the South without visiting Charleston, S. C. It is the oddest, the queerest and the most picturesque.

Familiar sight in the larger Southern cities—Negro residents taking over entire areas formerly occupied by whites.

The big fieldhouse at Loyola University, a Catholic institution in New Orleans, is showing how segregation can be wiped out without incident. The fieldhouse has done away with its jim-crow seating arrangements.

Arkansas will be the most favorable state in the South when it comes to desegregating schools, and Tennessee and Texas probably will fall in line more easily than the rest.

WASHINGTON—Like any writer whose work requires him to make political predictions, I occasionally go back over the files and check my batting average and study the extent to which predictions have become facts as the weeks and months roll by.

Recently, while going through my file, I came across a major piece of campaign literature widely used in the last Presidential election: "The Negro and the Republican Party."

In the spring of 1952 I was granted a leave of absence from the Courier and commissioned by the Republican National Committee to write "The Negro and the Republican Party" and then later was given an opportunity to serve as publicity director to Val Washington's minorities division during the Eisenhower campaign.

Courier * * * P. 13

UNDER A CHAPTER headed "Negro Benefits When Republicans Are Victorious; Fourteen Decisive Reasons for a GOP Vote," I wrote the following predictions. Test our prophetic judgment: Pittsburgh Courier

1. A Republican Administration will win an honorable and just peace.

2. A Republican Administration will stop spending so much money abroad.

3. A Republican Administration will end segregation in the nation's capital.

4. A Republican administration will stop bias and jim crow in Federal departments and bureaus, which the Democrats have not done. Date 3-20-54

5. A Republican administration will make Negro Federal appointments of real importance, commensurate with the demonstrated ability of educated Negroes, as it did when in power before.

6. A Republican administration will appoint a Negro to an administrative office in the White House.

7. A Republican administration will make it possible for Negroes—not just one Negro as now—to be placed in policy-making jobs in governmental agencies.

8. A Republican administration will strengthen the Civil Rights Section of the Justice Department.

9. A Republican administration will not be tied down by an anti-Negro bloc in control of Congress and committees.

10. A Republican administration will be able to better enforce the non-discriminatory clauses of the Taft-Hartley Act which will break the grip of Negrophobic labor unions.

11. A Republican administration will be able to enforce the anti-bias laws already on the books . . . but seldom invoked by prejudiced white officers.

12. A Republican administration will reduce taxes.

13. A Republican administration will protect the basic freedoms of all people and stop the trend toward all powerful and costly centralized government.

14. A Republican administration will not arouse false hopes of Negroes by promising what it never intends to deliver.

When a White House administrative assistant was discussing these Republican promises, written twenty months ago, he was amazed at the progress made and promised to show the list to President Ike and report his reaction to Pipeline . . . so I can share it with you.

Ike read and approved the promises at his campaign headquarters at the Commodore Hotel in New York during the campaign, three months before he was elected.

How's his batting average on promises to Negroes? You can analyze it for yourself!

Mrs. Annie Lee Moss of 1244 Evarts Street, here in the District of Columbia, has had a rough going over by Senator Joseph McCarthy. She was accused of being a part of the Communist conspiracy in America and word was let out by the Wisconsin Senator that her case would support his charges that the Army had been "coddling Communists."

As a result of the charges she has been suspended from her Government job at the Pentagon.

Earlier the Senator had persuaded Mrs. Moss and her attorney that she was too ill to do herself justice before the committee. An opportunity to testify later was promised. Thanks to George Hayes the promise has been kept.

Mrs. Moss would, perhaps, not be too important in the frantic events of political Washington except for two facts:

1. She is a Negro and

2. She is represented by one of the nation's most prominent Negro lawyers . . . George E. C. Hayes, who stands ready and willing to defend her and whose loyalty to this country and the true American ideal is unquestioned.

The Courier crowd didn't like it worth a damn when the NAACP "big shots" went out from the platform to escort President Eisenhower into the hall . . . and left our Mrs. Robert L. Vann sitting on the stage.

The NAACP affair here was planned around the magic name of Eisenhower as well as the goal of a million dollars for "freedom," but the question uppermost in the minds of Negro Republicans here is: "Why did the NAACP invite Ike and ignore his principal appointees here, who are always prominent in meetings around the President of the United States?

Up until 4:30 the night before the NAACP rally, there had been no invitations from NAACP officials to ranking Negro Republicans here to participate.

At fifteen minutes to 5 P. M., an NAACP call went to Val Washington at Republican National Committee, after complaints had been registered at the White House itself. Following a lengthy "explanation" to Val as to why the oversight had occurred, word went down very quickly and promptly that the Negro Republican leaders would be welcome at the meeting.

The treatment accorded Mrs. Vann was a better than average example of a game being subtly played by a segment of NAACP leadership.

WASHINGTON—Reports reaching our D. C. office indicate that working people throughout the nation are finding it rougher and tougher to make money . . . to enjoy and benefit by permanent employment . . . and, to make ends meet. Pipeline would like to pass some sixty-four-dollar common sense questions.

1. What are Republicans going to do about the increasing insecurity that is being felt in this country, for men and women being unable to find jobs? Courier

2. When are we going to tell the American people (particularly Negroes . . . the segment of population that is always hired last and fired first) what the score is?

3. Are we in the middle of a recession? P. 13

4. Are we in a depression?

5. Is a political party responsible for the existing nation-wide feeling of family tension and economic insecurity? Pittsburgh

6. Is the Democrat party, by achieving so-called "full employment," through an unreal economy based on defense and war work, to be allowed to tell Americans that the Democrat party is the party of prosperity and that the Republican party is one of gloom, doom and depression? Date 4-3-54

There is no doubt in my mind that President Eisenhower has been and is pondering these questions, and that he and the Republican party must supply some answers. During these times there is no need for anyone to act like the ostrich and put his head in the ground . . . with an embarrassing portion of his body completely exposed for criticism and target practice. Let's face the facts.

As a reporter with an obligation to my newspaper and to our readers I took some time out this week and analyzed official United States reports as to how many people in America are really working at individual, full-time five-or-six-day week job. I was amazed that many men and women on jobs throughout this country (though actually working only two or two-and-one-half days a week), are included in U. S. Government official reports as being employed.

Those figures are phony.

To me, and to others concerned with telling President Eisenhower the actual work conditions in this country, misinformation and half-truths are absolutely inexcusable; unforgivable and certainly misrepresents the plight and problems of people honestly attempting to earn a living.

A man, supporting his family, meeting his notes and obligations and earnestly attempting to pay his debts, must base his income on a pay-check for a whole week's work. To list a man as "employed," when he is only doing two and one-half days work, is deceiving to the American public.

Again, we say, it's time for some answers!

This next paragraph is not intended to frighten you . . . but . . . here follows what "the man" had to say in a letter dated March 11, 1954:

"The man" is N. F. Twining, Chief of Staff; U. S. Air Force, and he says: "The Air Force is becoming increasingly concerned about the growing capability of the Soviet Union to launch a surprise air attack against this country."

Mr. Twining wrote those words to "a select group of newspaper men with the hope that we would pass the word along to you . . . and that you will get up and get active in the civilian defense program of your community and the Ground Observer Corps." To put it bluntly, our Air Force Chief of Staff, Mr. Twining, is merely telling you that it's a bit later than you think, and that we ought to make immediate plans to protect our cities, homes and loved ones against whatever is getting ready to happen. O. K., General . . . it's up to us. Can't say we weren't warned.

Miss Spirit of Cotton, and her sponsor, Mrs. Ethel Vinson of Memphis, will land in the nation's capital for the event, after visiting Haiti. Master-minding the event with complete cooperation of the Haitian Ambassador is Dr. Millard Dean and several Courier folks . . . and we must congratulate Betty Granger of New York. She's moving into a top flight Government job this week. Month's back Pipeline predicted she'd do it. She deserves the appointment with Vice President Nixon's Government Contract Committee. After all, when Val Washington gave Betty a chance to ride on the Nixon campaign train she observed and reported on one of the great political stories of our time. And, what's more, she endeared herself to Nick and Pat by her general decorum, appearance and efficiency. Welcome to D. C. Betty . . . And I suppose it's time to say a word about Emmer Lancaster, former adviser on Negro Affairs in the Department of Commerce. Mr. Lancaster, after fourteen years service in Government, was fired from his position and now he wants back in. His recent movements, particularly with the Housing Agency and the Civil Service Commission are interesting, to say the least. So, we'll have to talk about Mr. Lancaster in more detail in a subsequent column.

WASHINGTON—The appointment of the great-grandson of the famous abolitionist Frederick Douglass, to a high government position is imminent, it has been learned by Pipeline from sources close to the White House.

Joseph H. Douglass is about to return to Washington and carry on the illustrious history of the Douglass name in public service.

The appointment will be in the Department of Health Education and Welfare under Secretary Oveta Culp Hobby.

Douglass, a world traveler and Ph. D. from Harvard, is, in fact, in Washington at this minute working in government.

He has been a special consultant on Intergroup Education in the U. S. Office of Education.

Mr. Douglass is on leave as dean of the Fayetteville State Teacher's College, Fayetteville, N. C.

Val Washington, Republican Committee Minorities Director, is a member of the patronage committee. In a speech before the graduating class at Howard's School of Engineering and Architecture, Val let the public in on how he operates.

Said Val: "Where I had qualified candidates, I submitted Negroes for every job vacancy offered. I have been able to fill many of these jobs with qualified Negroes and hope this is only the beginning. I had eight colored engineers and architects on my list. These were loyal followers of the Republican Party who on their reports were qualified for top positions in government. These men did not seek jobs; they were all successfully running their own businesses.

"I had to use devious means in order to get them to accept government appointments. My idea called for opening new jobs in government for Negroes.

"I told them that I had to offer the best if we were to break these bottlenecks. Of the eight on that list, Dr. George Maceo Jones, who formerly taught at Howard; Archie Alexander, Paul Williams, and Emmett Scott Jr. have accepted appointments.

"Two others were offered jobs in the troubled zones of the Far East; another was given an appointment abroad, but failed his physical examination.

"He was a diabetic and did not know it until he took the physical. He is now under the care of a physician. The eighth man is being processed at this very moment. I consider this a good batting average. Eight offered, eight accepted.

"Another interesting sidelight on one of these appointees is the fact that Archie Alexander, Governor of the Virgin Islands, was picked because he is an engineer as well as a good administrator.

"The Virgin Islands do not have sufficient water supply. As an engineer, Governor Alexander is going to try to rectify this handicap, so the islands can be further developed.

"Every move I have made in my official capacity with the Republican National Committee has been pointed toward the development of opportunities for us."

In the recent Alabama peonage case where two white men were convicted of holding Negroes as "slaves," District Attorney Frank Johnson Jr. of Birmingham, who successfully prosecuted the case, said it was the first time in the state that a court had convicted white men on "involuntary servitude" laws, although the custom is still prevalent.

The Republican National Committee here looks with pride on the case and will no doubt use it in coming campaign literature since D. A. Johnson is an Eisenhower appointee and because the white brothers, Oscar and Fred Dial, were defended by Alabama's most able criminal lawyer, Roger Beddow.

The Republican Committee hired a professional poll-taking organization to conduct a skillful sample survey among Negro Washingtonians two days after the May 17 Supreme Court school segregation decisions.

Taken at random, the cross-section survey was made among 416 Negroes from all walks of life who were asked (1) What do you think of the Supreme Court school decisions? Results: all were pleased.

(2) Who do you think made the decisions possible? Answers: 304 said either "Eisenhower" or the "Republicans," 42 said "the Democrats" and 70 said they did not know.

(3) Are you a Democrat or a Republican? Answer: 240 said they were Democrats; 144 said they were Republicans and 32 claimed they were independents.

NEGRO (J.A. ROGERS)

Rogers Says:

By J. A. ROGERS

SOME weeks ago I attended an affair unique for me: "A Festival of Books," staged by the National Freedom Day Association, founded by the late Major R. R. Wright, and of which his daughter, Mrs. Harriet Wright Lemon is now chairman.

Mr. Rogers

Booklovers and others met in the city's public library to make better known the works of Negro authors, principally current ones.

The books, with long streamers bearing titles and names of authors, were shown through the audience by young women, the whole being very effective.

MORE AFFAIRS like this, I'm sure, would go far towards solving the problem of the Negro writer, who is a key figure in the progress of his "race." Civilization marches on the written word.

"All the known world, excepting only savages, is governed by books," wrote Voltaire two centuries ago. That is even truer now.

Man, regardless of race, is a recording animal. He's going to relate, draw or write what he sees about him. But in our day, especially with the high cost of printing, writing is very commercialized.

What reaches the general public is as carefully selected to fit or to please as the food in a cafeteria or a display in a show window, all of which leaves those writers who do not fit in high and dry, no matter how true or how good their books are.

BUT THE moral improvement of mankind, the rooting out of evils, comes chiefly through telling unpleasant truths, the saying of what is not supposed to be said.

And right here is the Negro author's greatest handicap, that is, he who writes fearlessly what he sees and knows.

Our great need today is a few good novels by those best qualified through experience to write them. I say novels because one can make his characters do or say things he wouldn't care to reveal in an autobiography.

Another reason why we should not depend on publishers alone is that the annual number of manuscripts is very far in excess of the requirements of the regular trade.

Only a small part of what's written ever gets into print.

A VAST number of manuscripts are turned down annually, some of which were from good to very good, but which were not what the editor wanted.

That left the writer with one of two things: either to pay a printer to get out his work, and sell it himself; or pay some firm to do it, in which case, the selling is largely up to the author, too. The solution of this, as I suggested some years ago, was the formation of local book clubs to finance and support such efforts.

It must be a labor of love, because such publishing is not a paying proposition.

I THINK, too, that outspoken books on the Negro by white authors as Earl Conrad, Delmar Bordeaux and Herbert Apthekher, should receive equal support.

Here are a few books sent me, but which I have no space to review: Eve Lynn: "To No Special Land," $3.00; Ella Earls Cotton, "A Spark for My People," $4.00; Gordon L. Hall, "Saraband for a Saint," $3.00. (These three from Exposition Press, 386 Fourth Avenue, New York City.) Irving H. Barlett: "From Slave to Citizen: Story of the Negro in Rhode Island," Urban League, Providence, R. I.; Amos Tutuola, "My Life in the Bush of Ghosts (Africa)," Grove Press, New York City, $3.50.

Rogers Says:

By J. A. ROGERS

THE STORY of Mohammed Surur, ex-slave, and an African, who has risen to be Minister of Finance in the oil-rich kingdom of Saudi Arabia, is an age-old one in the East.

It goes back to ancient Egypt. Ability came before pedigree. Slaves, black or white, sometimes rose to rulers.

Mr. Rogers

Under Islam, unmixed Negroes were usually chosen for positions of trust because of their honesty and fidelity.

AL-JAHIZ of the eighth century in his work, called in English, "The Superiority in Glory of the Black Race Over the White," says that the bankers of his time confided their businesses to these blacks.

"One hardly finds," he says, "a Greek or a Khorassan in a position of trust in a bank.

"When the bankers of Basra (Arabia) saw the excellent affairs that Faraj Abu Kub (a Negro) had negotiated for his master each one of them took a Negro assistant."

Mohamet's treasurer and closest friend, was Bilal, an Ethiopian black.

IN ANCIENT Egypt, in Arabia, and Islam India, there was some prejudice against unmixed blacks (Zengs) but chiefly only against the first generation.

The latter were usually strangers and from a more primitive culture. It might be compared to the feeling of the Northern Negro towards the Southern migrants of World War 1.

In fact, when Jahiz wrote in the eighth century A. D., such color prejudice as existed was against unmixed whites. He said that "the French, the Greeks, and the Slavs with their thin, red, straight hair, and pale color," appeared very ugly to some.

PROF. TOYNBEE says that the Arabs called themselves "the swarthy people," and the whites "the ruddy people with a connotation of inferiority, that is to say they drew the distinction we draw between blonds and brunets but reversed the values."

Arabs are usually classed as white. Years ago in Congress during the enactment of a law on immigration, they were named with others as "white."

But Arabia has always been much more Negroid than white. For over a thousand years white women slaves (Circassians) of Russia were imported for the harems, and slaves, male and female, from Africa.

Little, if anything, was thought of so-called racial intermixture. Mohamet, himself, was of this stock, and though usually depicted as white in European portraiture, might have been jet-black. Jahiz, who lived only 150 years after him says that the "ten sons of Mohamet's grandfather" were all "black and strong."

IT MIGHT be recalled that in the meeting between President Roosevelt and Sultan Ibn Saud in the last war, it was reported that when Ibn Saud's people saw the American Negroes with Roosevelt they took them for Arabs.

The great Ibn Saud was himself a dark mulatto.

The term "Arab," is also very loosely used. Because people like the Moroccans speak Arabic it no more makes them Arabs than speaking English makes Americans English.

The number of Islamic blacks and near-blacks who have risen to power over the centuries is very great.

MANY HAVE been rulers in Egypt, North Africa, India.

An unmixed Negro, Tarik, invaded Spain 711 A. D., defeated the whites, and gave his name to Gibraltar. Moorish sultans, some jet-black, dominated in Europe for several centuries after that.

Also, for centuries under the Turkish Empire, the one next in power to the Sultan was always an unmixed black —the Kizlar Aghassi, or Lord of the Harem.

For true knowledge of the capabilities of the black man one must go to Islamic history.

Rogers Says:

By J. A. ROGERS

THE REV. Norman Vincent Peale, author of "The Power of Positive Thinking," advised a Negro girl to give up her her white male friend.

"People generally, both Negro and white, do not look with favor upon interracial intermarriage," he says.

Mr. Rogers

Let's analyze this advice. First, it is based on public opinion. But every thinker knows that public opinion is usually uninformed and habitually opposed to changes, even those that turn out to be most beneficial.

Innumerable instances going as far back as ancient Egypt could be given. Dissection of the dead human body was once opposed on religious ground. But how otherwise could we have had the boon of surgery?

THE EARTH was also held to be flat. Columbus was told he'd fall off the edge if he tried to sail around it. Public opinion opposed for centuries the freeing of slaves, white and black; the railroad and the telephone, etc.

In the last century and even in this, public opinion strongly opposed the vote to American white women.

Dickens had one of his characters say, "The public, sir, is an ass." He was largely right. Take out of the brain of the average individual what has been proved isn't so, and his knowledge would shrink to the size of a peanut.

That was true of myself once. At that time I was positive, too, that all this exploded stuff was right. Hadn't I been taught it by those supposed to know. But I was fortunate in having an open mind. Thus, if myself of forty years ago and myself of today could meet, we certainly wouldn't get along.

SO MUCH for this public opinion which evidently guides Dr. Peale.

Again, he says that both white and Negro generally oppose so-called interracial intermarriage.

First, the term "race" is used now by only loose thinkers, especially so in the case of the American of color.

The so-called Negro American is really a white American inside. Even had he remained unmixed African, how could he, a minority, be anything else after centuries of the same food, same religion, same education, same everything, except equal opportunity?

In Europe I could always spot an American. After centuries of the same ways, he had, regardless of color, a certain look. I recall one very dark Negro with horn-rimmed glasses who was so typically American, he was a curiosity to the French. Europeans who catered to tourists could spot Americans, too.

I RECALL how once in Brussels, a boy selling postcards spoke to me in English.

I had said nothing and was wearing European clothes. When I asked him how he knew I understood English, he said, "I could tell by your look." I got a similar answer many other times.

Dr. Peale also uses an argument, now popular in opposing integration, namely, that Negroes, themselves, do not want so-called racial intermarriage.

But since their thought processes are usually patterned on the white, what does it prove? Moreover, jim crow and similar taboos were established by whom? The slave master. Why? To keep the blacks at a stage where their labor could be had at greatest profit.

The Negro, who is for segregation, especially when he isn't getting money from it, is only thinking "white."

DR. PEELE'S advice is therefore not only negative, but savors of color prejudice and timidity

Like the average leader, he is led by the public.

Real progress in human relations can be made only by critical examination of the status quo, and at times even open defiance to it.

Rogers Says:

Beneath the McCarthy Hearings Lies a Struggle for 'Freedom'

By J. A. ROGERS

PERHAPS, like myself you are wondering what's really at the bottom of this seeming ridiculous affair between the Army and Senator McCarthy.

Certainly, it isn't favors too persistently sought for Schine. Nor is it the rooting out of Communists.

Mr. Rogers

Stevens is against them, too, and issued orders to that effect, on his own initiative, in taking office.

McCarthy has promised to produce "information of tremendous importance. That's to be seen. And perhaps from certain whispered reports a scandal of a certain nature might break against one of the principals before this appears in print.

But beneath the surface it is really a struggle between the forces of liberality and reaction; a question of whether Americans shall retain such freedom as they now enjoy or whether this nation shall veer towards a dictatorship of the right as Russia is now of the left; that is, fascism, such as existed under Hitler and Mussolini.

SECRETARY STEVENS, it is clear, would have rooted out the subversives quietly and with little if any publicity for himself. McCarthy, on the other hand, attacks them with the noise and ballyhoo of Hitler, who used the same issues to hypnotize his way to power.

The citizens of any country, from ancient times, have opposed doctrines they think disruptive of their way of life. Pagans of Rome opposed Christianity and in America abolitionists of slavery were persecuted. The Soviet Union opposes the doctrines of the so-called free world.

The people of this nation are almost wholly opposed to communism. England, France, Italy, all have a much higher percentage of Communists than America, yet they have no McCarthy and generally show far less fear of them.

Why? Is not the goal then something else than rooting out communism?

WHAT ALSO points to the goal of dictatorship is the blame being placed on persons who through lack of judgment embraced communism or leaned towards it; or who accidentally came into contact with Communists, as Dr. Oppenheimer makes clear he did.

Furthermore, the Communist party was once legal here and Russia, its proponent, had the blessing of Congress and the White House.

When Roosevelt and other officials were hobnobbing with Stalin and wining and dining him, what would have happened if anyone said then against Russia what is now expected of them?

They would have been considered traitors and saboteurs. In short, a favorable atmosphere for Russia was created by this Government. And as I pointed out the other day, while a government can turn right-about in its policies over night, it isn't so easy for many individuals, especially when they see the evils that led them to a change from the old parties still existing.

FURTHERMORE, is it not possible that when Alger Hiss and the Rosenbergs gave secrets to Russia they felt they were helping that democracy Roosevelt and America were ing to the world.

In any case, the private citizen who was helping Russia then had abundant example from his own government.

This brings me to the matter of those few American Negroes who are Communists or are strong pro-Communists. I have in mind five who when I knew them first were rather conservative.

Two of them were attacked by more radical Negroes for the rather wobbly attitude on racism. But they finally saw it in its true light and after fighting it for years realized that getting anywhere through the usual "democratic" channels was hopeless.

THEY SAY, too, that fear of communism forced the hands of the racists.

Officials of the State Department have said again and again that the race question was a stumbling block in their handling of world affairs.

The simple truth is that had there been no communism in America the Negro would have been further back than he now is. World communism is having a still stronger effect. And whose fault is it, pray?

Take Ben Davis. I knew him when he was a rank conservative like his Republican father.

Then he served as attorney for Angelo Herndon and the raw injustice of that case soured him. If there were any justice, not Ben Davis but those who created such conditions would be in prison.

In our society, those who oppose established injustices are dealt with more severely than those who practice them. It's tougher for the jim-crowed than for the jim-crower.

Rogers Says:

Was Pressure of Communists Behind The Supreme Court's School Decision?

By J. A. ROGERS

WHAT brought about the Supreme Court ruling against jim-crow? Many feel that it's due to the Communists who were using the treatment of Negroes as a weapon in the cold war.

Is that correct?

Mr. Rogers

The fight against it began fifty-eight years ago, or after the Supreme Court made it legal, and twenty-one years before the Communists came to power.

Victory was brought about by pressure and not by some generous feeling of the American people. Were that so, America would have followed the example of the rest of the New World. Of its twenty-one republics, one dominion, and some twenty colonies, it is the only land with jim-crow laws. Most of the republics had laws against Negroes, but got rid of them soon after the colonial period.

THE UNITED States alone retained hers.

Of course, these lands have some degree of color prejudice. But it's social, not legal. A rich Negro may live where he pleases. He cannot do that even in civilized New York.

Here are some of the pressures that caused the decision. I give them in order of importance.

First, that of the right-thinking whites of America as the labor unions (principally the CIO), the liberal and radical writers; certain religious leaders and groups, etc.; international attacks, and, that of a rather small percentage of Negroes led by the NAACP.

Life Magazine (May 31) also gives credit to President Eisenhower, who, it says, has put more effort into solving the race problem than any other President save Lincoln." Life gives instances.

AGAIN, JIM-CROW in America is nothing else but colonialism, and two world wars and the Korean War have been fatal for that.

While France and England have their colonies of colored folk outside their borders, America has hers within her borders. Negroes living in the jim-crow states are colonials in all but name.

International Pressure. For centuries color prejudice in America has struck Europeans as incredible and unjustified. There is a considerable literature on this.

No European country ever had a color line (although some had large Negro populations) except England and France, for a very brief period. These attacks have increased since World War II.

In 1950, the Crisis gave a resume of what 500 European papers said, most of them non-Communist.

OF COURSE, all were not inspired by the preposterousness of color prejudice, but rather by dislike for America.

One nation has always used the shortcomings of another to stir its citizens against a rival. We used Germany and Japan's against them and are now using Russia's.

Our Latin-American rivals also use injustice to Negroes against us. Last year a leading Argentina paper had a cartoon showing a Negro lynched from the outstretched arm of the Statue of Liberty.

SINCE WORLD WAR II, the darker world of Asia and Africa, has become increasingly conscious of American color prejudice.

It was preposterous to them, too, because while they have their own restrictions, mere color of skin is not a cause for 'egal restrictions.

Whites and blacks have lived for over 8,000 years in Northern Africa and the Near East without a legal color bar.

If we except a period of about some 5,000 years ago in India, it was the whites who introduced a color line in Asia.

AMERICAN COLOR prejudice was therefore a trump for the Communists and they played it for all it was worth.

Dr. Saul K. Padover who made a tour of these Eastern lands tells how well students there know of it. So does Chester Bowles, James Michener in his "Voice of Asia," tells how much Chinese Communists knew of America's jim-crow. Russia was hitting America where it really hurts.

According to reports, the Russian newspapers have been silent about the Supreme Court decision. They may be only holding their fire. They will have plenty to say if the decision isn't carried out.

Rogers Says:

A New Political Organization, Called 'For America,' Set Up in Chicago

By J. A. ROGERS

A NEW POLITICAL organization, called "For America," has recently been formed in Chicago under the sponsership of Col. Robert R. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune. It is headed by fourteen civic and business leaders and is opposed to foreign aid spending, high taxes, the Korean situation, the unbalanced budget, 30-cent dollars, and "the fact that Eisenhower Republicans are carrying on the the same foreign policy that was voted out with Truman and Acheson in 1952."

Mr. Rogers

Its chief goal is to stop the throwing away of American manpower and money over the world. It gives as its general aims: "To oppose so-called preventive wars or 'police actions' without the consent of Congress;

"To stop sending our American boys to fight all over the world without the consent of Congress. To combat super-internationalism and interventionism, one-world-ism and communism.

"To prevent squandering and giving away our money and resources, a burden that falls upon all Americans, threatening our financial, economic and political structure and that can only end in bankruptcy and ruin, thereby aiding any nation planning world conquest.

"To demand the return to Americanism, enlightened nationalism, and keeping our own interests uppermost instead of our costly, dangerous, imperialistic foreign policy of tragic super-interventionism and policing the world single-handed with American blood and treasure."

THE "FOR AMERICA," which is to start with a fund of $500,000, declares that it isn't a third party but will support those of both parties who support its principles. "We will be organized," it says, "in all the states on a basis of states' rights, regardless of race, color and creed."

That such an organization should come into being, sooner or later, was inevitable. This excessive taxation of American citizens, sometimes as high as 90 per cent of one's income, and handing out that money over the world, was sheerest insanity especially as the hundreds of billions given away and the hundreds of thousands of American lives lost in World War II and Korea called for more and yet more sacrifices. Two billion dollars, or $12.50 for every man, woman and child in the nation, have just been tossed away in the tropical jungles of Indo-China.

And stupid as the give-away program was, the way it was done, made it even more so. The purpose was to buy peace. Admitting that any should be given away at all should it not have been to those likely to make trouble not to those from whom we have nothing to fear. Leaving Russia out naturally made her angry. The Communists are just as eager for filthy capitalist dollars as those of the "free" world. A couple which just got their children out of Red territory says it managed with the aid of Communist officials who "didn't mind taking American dollars."

OUR FOREIGN policy, especially since the end of World War II makes no kind of sense. We don't like the Communists and they don't like us. But we have to live on this planet with them and they with us. Why, then, this diehard policy, this belligerency, largely to play the game of one or two religious groups. The British have shown much more sense. Russia and China were among their best customers in the past and they're anxious to win them again. Churchill has just announced that he is lifting the ban against sale of rubber to Russia and that Nikolai Nestorov, president of of the all-union chamber of commerce of Russia, is to visit England. "We should establish with Russia," he says, "links which, in spite of all distractions and perils and contraditions will convince the Russian people that we wish them peace, happiness and increasing prosperity."

I'm sure American businessmen would like some of that Russian and Chinese trade, too.

With this "For America" group, however, one must watch that it doesn't turn fascist, even though its president, Orville Taylor, declares that there is "nothing of America First or isolation" in it; but solely to save America "by keeping her out of foreign wars."

Rogers Says:

Majority of the Founders of the City Of Los Angeles Were Negroes

By J. A. ROGERS

SOME years ago we said in "Your History" that a majority of the founders of the city of Los Angeles were Negroes. That fact came from researches of one of America's greatest and fairest historians (white), Hubert H. Bancroft.

Mr. Rogers

The percentage of even Negroes who knew that was very, very small. I'm discovering more that the ignorance of most Americans, including educated ones, on what Negroes have contributed to the building of America, is colossal. Those who worked at insulating them from this type of information have done a thorough job.

Of course these facts were never hidden nor buried, nor even in a strict sense, suppressed. They can be found in such archives as the Congressional and the New York libraries. What was done was to make them so unpopular, invest them with an air of incredulity, that no matter who said them they just couldn't be so. However in an age when man is exploring even the depths of the ocean, knowledge that has been pushed aside is emerging and demanding a hearing.

AS REGARDS Negroes and the founding of Los Angeles, this information is now easily available in a fifty-cent pamphlet published by the Bryant Foundation, 737 N. Edgemont Street, Los Angeles 29, Calif. Author is John M. Weatherwax. Based on documents, some of them in Mexico, he gives the names, ages and "race" of the forty-four original settlers as follows: white, two; Indian, twelve; Indian-Caucasian, four; Negro, seventeen; Negro-Indian, nine, or a total of twenty-six of Negro ancestry out of forty-four.

For instance, here is this from the Spanish records: "Antonio Mesa, Negro, 38, native of El Real de los Alamos, married, his wife is Anna Gertrudis Lopez, native of said Real, mulata, 27. Two children, Antonio Maria, 8, and Maria Pascuala. He enlisted as a settler, June 4, 1780, and is a resident of the City of the Queen of the Angels" (Los Angeles).

In spite of the above, Los Angeles, until recent years, was almost like a Southern city. Negroes were refused service in restaurants and bars and had to sit in the gallery of theatres. Once a friend and I went into a Greek restaurant on Pacific Street. The waiter, who could barely speak English wouldn't serve us. When we complained to the owner, also a Greek, he said, "We don't serve n———rs," and threatened to call the police if we didn't get out.

IN OTHER words, here was a man who had contributed nothing to the building of this city and had come from thousands of miles across the seas to make a living, could push aside members of a group who had done most in founding it. Only in Hitler's Germany could a similar situation have been possible, that is, to the Jews, who for centuries had contributed so much to that land. But I didn't blame those Greeks so much. In their native land they would never have dreamed of doing that. In Rome, they were merely doing like Romans, and finding strong support, too.

Negroes, as Bancroft and others have shown, were important not only at Los Angeles but in the development of California under Spain and Mexico. And there was no discrimination against them. The last Spanish governor of California, Pio Pico, shows undoubted Negro ancestry in his portrait, which was given years ago in "Your History." Later, too, Negroes contributed in the bringing of it into the American Union.

WHAT IS true of California is also true of the southern region from the Atlantic to the Pacific and as far north as parts of Kansas, Virginia and Colorado. This was the first explored, and chiefly the first settled part of what is now the United States. And those pioneers were not whites. They were what racists call "mongrels," that is, Spaniards who for centuries had been dominated and mixed by jet-black Africans. I've given abundant proof of this elsewhere from the old writers, and recent ones as Freyre and Ortiz. Simon Bolivar, himself, said, "Spain has ceased to be European by its African blood." And with these pioneers were many unmixed Africans.

To repeat: What is now the United States was positively not founded by white people. They came in long after the mixed-blood trail-blazers.

Rogers Says:

He Visits Emperor Haile Selassie, Recalls A Prophecy Fulfilled, Amply and Quickly

By J. A. ROGERS

JULY 9 will remain a memorable day for me. It was when Emperor Haile Selassie sent for me, praised my work very highly, bought 128 copies of my "World's Great Men of Color, 3000 B. C. to 1946 A. D.," and gave me a rare gold coin of Ethiopia, which I understand is worth a great deal more than its original value.

Mr. Rogers

I was especially grateful in that he had sent for me. Knowing he would be receiving many, I thought it better to leave him freer so far as myself was concerned even though I felt he would have received me as graciously as he did in his own country in 1930 and again in 1935, when he granted me an interview that was published in the Courier.

And this time though I had many things to say to him, I was brief. I saw many waiting to see him. It was 6:30 and I knew he had had a busy day, too.

MEETING HIM was thrilling.

And it wasn't chiefly because he had honored me; nor was it because I consider him not only the greatest living head of a state, but the greatest living statesman.

It was because I was in the presence of one who is the embodiment of a belief I have always held—the belief that sustains me—namely, that right wins in the long run, and is worth any sacrifice.

Seeing him reminded me, too, that retribution inevitably overtakes those nations, peoples and individuals who for profit or self-advancement exploit their fellowman.

AS I LOOKED at the quiet, gracious, simply-dressed, dark monarch, thoughts of what he had been through especially in 1935 and '36, filled me.

I saw again the rape of Ethiopia by Mussolini's armies; how they spread the land with mustard gas, killing the people, the crops, cattle and poisoning the rivers; how bombs dropped on villages caused fleeing women to give premature birth and how these women picked up the newly born infants, navel-strings still uncut and continued their flight.

I SAW again the Emperor at the League of Nations (of which he was a member) and the Fascists who packed the hall, howling him down.

When he could speak at last, I recall how the fifty-two nations assembled there, paralyzed with fear of Hitler and Mussolini, refused to vote sanctions against Italy.

Litvinov of Russia alone had the courage to speak out. But Russia in 1940, joined with others in recognizing the rape of Ethiopia.

Stalin had made a treaty of peace with Hitler the year before and had thrown in Ethiopia as a peace offering.

HAILE SELASSIE in his address warned those fifty-two nations that they, too, were not safe from the Fascist monsters.

"God and history," he told them, "would remember."

Never in history has prophecy been fulfilled so amply, so quickly. Poland, France, England, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Russia, all who had recognized the rape of Ethiopia, saw their own cities and homes destroyed and tens of millions of their people killed.

Hitler killed himself.

Mussolini was shot to death by his own people, and hung up by his feet like a slaughtered hog. Never, never, has there been retribution so terrific, so dramatic. Today, the man who warned them is back in his own land, a living model for all statesmen, present and to come.

And, the Emperor is in excellent health, too. Two medical checkups of him were "very satisfactory."

Though 61, he looks no more than 45.

Rogers Says:

By J. A. ROGERS

"ETHIOPIANS of the ruling class . . . consider themselves 'white' no matter what their color is," says John Gunther in July Readers Digest. Mr. Gunther, an able and careful writer, seems to have picked up an opinion much more popular in America than among the whites in that part of Africa. The correct version is that of a white woman there, who thought Ethiopians too cocky. "The trouble," she told me, "is they want to be like white people. If they would only stay in their place!" What she meant was that they considered themselves as good as the dominant people in Africa, the whites, and more particularly herself. All of which is something else. Because I consider myself as good as a blond man, does that mean I want to be blond?

Mr. Rogers

Africans have had so much trouble with white invaders that I'm convinced the last thing they'd want to be is white. I saw no Ethiopians straightening their hair, using face-bleach, or white powder, like some dark folk we all know. Ethiopians simply want equality with other peoples, white or otherwise. As Haile Selassie once said, "Apart from the Kingdom of God there is not on this earth any nation that is higher than any other."

WHETHER IN Africa or the Americas when dark-skinned folk try to assimilate the advanced scientific way of certain white peoples there are those whites who feel that these dark folk want to change their color, too. This is purely a reflex of the superiority these people believe that a colorless skin invests them with. But is there any intrinsic value in mere color? In the black man's land nothing is thought of blackness; and in the white man's land, as in Northern Europe, mere whiteness has no value whatever. White Americans seem to be crazy about blond but in Denmark or Norway where almost everyone is blond, blondness has no more value than water in Holland or sand in the Sahara. I once asked a white girl in Berlin why she went with a very black man. She said, "When I'm with him everyone notices me. When with a white man, nobody does." White monarchs and the nobility of Europe once kept blacks about them for the same reason.

A so-called white skin in America, as in the South, has value only because of the colored folk there. Black is subject to inferior citizenship; white has superior one. Thus a white skin is a symbol of desirability. That's the why of jim-crow laws and segregation. But were all the colored folk to leave, the value of whiteness would drop to that of the Confederate dollar after the surrender of Lee in 1865.

P. S. Last week's column 3, line 3, ought to read "Franco" not France.

Rogers Says:

Nature Mixes Human Beings

By J. A. ROGERS

PROF. Curt Stern, in Scientific American (Oct. 1954) repeats the oft-made prediction that the Negro in America will be absorbed by the whites. "Looking into the centuries ahead," he says, "it seems likely that the flow of African genes in the numerically dominant white population will increase," and that centuries hence if one now living could return, he could ask, "What became of the Negroes?"

Mr. Rogers

That question can be asked times without number and as far back in history as you can go of other groups. For instance, what became of the fair Aryans who invaded Negroid India about 1500 B. C.? Or of the dark Asians, who invaded Western Europe in the early centuries A. D. under Attila and Genghis Khan? Or of the Greeks who invaded Egypt under the Ptolemies years before Cleopatra? Or the white Vandals who swept into North Africa after the fall of Rome? Or the white Englishmen shipped off to West Africa by Cromwell? Or the white Englishwomen who were married to Negroes and sent off to settle in Sierra Leone?

Again, what became of the millions of Negroes who have lived in Europe since prehistoric times? We know for a certainty that they lived in ancient Greece; that they came in vast numbers into ancient Rome, Sicily, Turkey; that jet-black Moors invaded Spain in 711 A. D., and dominated most of Spain, and parts of Italy and Southern France for centuries; that from 1440 to 1773, hundreds of thousands of Negroes were brought into Spain and Portugal. What became of them? Also of Negroes taken into the Netherlands when Spain dominated there? Or the vast number of Negro slaves taken into the British Isles from about 1440 to 1800? Answer: These and others, as in France, were absorbed into the white population, including royal families. I have given immense documentation in proof in my three volumes of "Sex and Race" and in "Nature Knows No Color-Line."

Your racist is a hopeless, pig-headed relic of man's primitive, unsociable past, plus an inferiority complex because racial intermixture, as revealed in its long history, is a natural law. If REALITY is the only truth, and it is, then the only truth in life is CHANGE. Everything changes including human varieties. Nature changes them to suit climates.

I'm convinced that peoples now white, were once dark or black, and the converse. The Arctic Circle was, for instance, once tropical. And tropical man is dark-skinned. Schopenhauer was quite right when he said in 1813 that there is "no such thing as a white race much as this is talked of"; and that since man had originally a black or brown skin, "every white man is a faded or bleached" product of some once-dark race. Von Luschan enunciated that too, in 1911; so have others since.

It might be that the Negro will be absorbed in the United States as the whites were in Jamaica, Haiti, Santo Domingo and elsewhere. Only one thing seems certain: that the human color scheme will be changed by ever-changing Nature. In 1500, the population of the United States was dark-skinned. Who could have dreamed that by 1800 there would have been such an immense change to lighter and darker?

American whites, over the past 400 years, have absorbed an enormous amount of Negro strain. Racial fanatics and racketeers like Byrnes, Talmadge, Eastland, or Bryant W. Bowles, absolutely cannot prove they hadn't a Negro ancestor along the line. I know what I'm talking about.

Rogers Says:

Man Debased Through Mind

By J. A. ROGERS

CONTROL what goes into a man's mind and nearly always you have him wrapped up ready for economic slaughter.

The African brought to America was an example. Entirely ignorant of the language and ways, he was a perfect setup for "brainwashing."

Mr. Rogers

First he was told the Bible said he was cursed by God. The master said something like this, "You were turned black by God and doomed to be a slave forever.

"Your ancestor, Ham, laughed at his father, Noah. But if you're a good slave here on earth, when you die you'll be washed whiter than snow and go to heaven where you will be my equal."

NEGRO "MAMMIES" taught that to their young white masters. A Negro Sunday school teacher taught me that, too. Millions of whites still believe that. Mormons, for instance, except about the heaven part. And there's reason to believe that many Negroes still accept it.

Later the white scientist came in. Instead of the Bible he used color, hair, features and history.

Add to this the power to force Negroes to use the jim crow, the backdoor, entrance to life and you breed mice not men—the three-fifths of a human being which Article I of the U. S. Constitution said a Negro was.

THIS IS what self-respecting Negroes like Frederick Douglass had to fight against. Things have changed since, but the underlying principle is still there.

For instance, Negroes in prison are generally barred from getting my "100 Amazing Facts About the Negro," though it has nothing on prison breaks or sex.

Perhaps if they had read it as youths, they'd have had enough self-respect to keep out of jail.

Now, what a warden does in a prison, is done outside by the power of money which controls the kind of literature most likely to reach you. Another way is through scholarships and subsidies to Negroes in the fields of education and leadership.

MOST BOOKS on the Negro by Negroes, you're likely to hear about have been financed in some way by white capital.

Some are timely and effective, but the authors dare not say, or cannot get through, all they think. And real progress in any field is made only by saying what is not supposed to be said, or questioned.

Negroes are demanding this more and more now, especially Africans. But the latter are not allowed to send out money.

Emperor Haile Selassie, in buying 128 copies of my "World's Great Men of Color," said to me, "This is the kind of literature I want my people to read."

But being an independent is tough. It means that single-handed you have to do all that is done by a whole publishing staff, including distribution, toughest of all, especially as most agents will keep what's coming to you.

I COULD give the Emperor only Volume One.

Volume Two, out of print, I promised to send him. An advance of $2,000 was needed for the printer.

To raise that, I asked for 2,000 buyers of the Amazing Facts, which sells at a dollar. The response three months later is $164.

An old friend said to me recently, "The trouble with your recognition is that you're still alive." True.

But I mean to keep on living. The French say, "You can't teach an old monkey to make new faces." So I'll just have to go on the old way.

P. S.: A whole set of my books—eight in all—is $25—a saving of $3.50. Address: The Courier, 2091 Seventh Avenue, New York 27, N. Y.

Rogers Says:

Truth Is Difficult To Publish

By J. A. ROGERS

IN THE last three colums I discussed a fact that several persons, educators among them, have brought to my attention, namely, that since there's no integration of "white" history and "Negro" history, that Negro children in desegregated schools are going to get only "white" history, which, in the main, teaches that black people, as far back as you can go, never accomplished anything until they were taken into slavery in the New World. This is the kind of history most Negroes get in white colleges.

Mr. Rogers

Wondering what could be done, I talked with my friend Schuyler, who over the years has given me valuable ideas. He proposed that I get out a large, illustrated booklet, something easily read like the "100 Amazing Facts About the Negro," this time exclusively on the colored American, and see that it get national distribution.

But right here are great obstacles. First, getting a publisher. Get out your own book and it has no standing. That's called vanity publishing. It's believed that if your book was worth while, some publisher would snap it up. Now there are no Negro publishers of books. All are white, with white customers, and they must get out what these customers want. Such books as these publishers get out on the Negro are bought mostly by whites.

Even some of the best white friends do not take to Negro history. Some even think it mischievous. For instance, a white educator, who declared himself a staunch friend, once said to me, "What you say in your books only makes the problem worse. You make white people angry when you say that Beethoven was of Negro ancestry; that Christ and the Virgin Mary were originally Negro; and that it was the Negro who saved the day for the Union in the Civil War."

I asked him, "What white people do you mean?" I added, "Do you know where I get the facts you don't like. Almost solely from the works of white people — European whites, who haven't the inferiority complex of New World whites, particularly our Southern whites. Some as the Black Christ and Virgin Mary I saw myself in many European churches. And as for the Negro in the Civil War, I only quoted Lincoln."

"Well," was his answer, "even if what you say was true, it's best in the interest of good race relations to say nothing about it."

Oh yes, and there are Negroes who feel that way, too. I have met 'em.

Of course, I have plenty of material for such a booklet, but it's a thousand to one I'd never get a publisher. I never write to please, racism, least of all. Morever, writing is hard work. Publishing by the author is still harder. It's tough getting the money to publish and still tougher selling.

Schuyler also suggested getting the booklet to the Negro parents and see that they get it into the schools. Getting the parents interested wouldn't be easy and still less easy getting it into the schools. You'd have to buck the school boards, which are dominated by the moneyed or other powers. Russia isn't the only land where children's minds are controlled. What Russia does by power of the state, we do through money, politics, and color prejudice. And some of us find it as irritating.

A concluding word on this next week.

Readers Proud of History

Courier By J. A. ROGERS

LETTERS are coming in on what I said about the integration of "white" and "Negro" history. Edgar T. Stewart of Memphis, Tenn., says, "I saw that movie ("The Egyptian") and criticized it along the same lines you did . . . Since the Africans invaded Spain, Italy, Southern France, and ruled there for centuries, is it not evident they would have been dominant in Egypt on their own continent?" By the way, "The Egyptian," with its white masters and Negro slaves, is now being shown in two Harlem theatres.

Mr. Rogers

Sat. 11-6-54

Mrs. Jay Brooks of the Janda Dramatic and Fine Arts Center, Los Angeles, says, "We read your columns religiously and can honestly say they have revealed to us so many amazing and tremendous facts . . . Too long we have patterned after the white man and worshipped his heroes almost to the exclusion of our own . . . The time has come when we as an ethnic group should study and become aware of our historical past, and begin to pick up the fragments and piece them together to form a solid foundation so that our youths can identify themselves with a race of which they can justly be proud . . ."

A. Young of Galveston, Tex., says, "Millions of American Negroes have said, 'I know I'm as good as anybody else.'" But, he asks "What proof had they? Your illustrations by Malai give that," he adds.

P. 6

Mrs. Teena Comegys, Oxford, Ohio, writes, "I read Your History and your column every week. I'm thankful for this enlightenment. I was particularly interested in the articles on Akhenaton, and a book you said you'd write." Even if you have difficulty in getting it into the schools, I'm sure Negro schools would use them," she says. And Charles J. Harris of Durham, N. C., says, "Wouldn't it be wonderful if a million Negroes sent a dollar for the 100 Amazing Facts About the Negro for distribution among school children of this country."

Pittsburgh, Pa.

One of another matter comes from Justice Hubert T. Delany of the Domestic Relations Court, New York City. Because he treated humanely a delinquent youth before him, he was severely attacked in one New York daily, which carried the headline, "Judge Pats Zip Gun Thug on Back." He says, "The inflammatory nature of the story represented an attack upon the entire court and the philosophy of the Children's Court as defined by law . . . I have noted," he adds, "the calls to get tough with children and punish the parents . . . and to cast aside all we have learned about children in the past fifty years . . . Neither this city nor any civilized community can afford to rely on repression in the place of education." At a conference of leading citizens of both "races" Judge Delany (who is colored) was unanimously upheld.

William Patterson of the Civil Rights Congress tells why he refused to give the names of those who had sent in money and for which he was given ninety days.

"The money," he writes me, "came from Negro ministers and others in the South who supported the fight to free Willie McGee, the Trenton Six, the Martinsville Seven, Rosa Lee Ingram and other victims of racism . . . To give their names in such a way would make them available to Southern terrorists. It would be a betrayal of the trust imposed in me. This I would never do . . ."

P. S.—If James Faustin of New York will send his address, I will answer him. His first letter had neither name nor address; his second no address.

Latimer Helped Edison

By J. A. ROGERS

IN THE week of Oct. 21, 1954, was celebrated all over America, and perhaps in Europe, the Diamond Jubilee of the electric lamp.

Courier

One of the greatest of all miracles, it brought into reality the story of Aladdin and his wonderful lamp, from which when rubbed came forth a mighty magician to do Aladdin's will.

Mr. Rogers

Time Magazine, in a glowing tribute, says "Out of that lamp in due time came the regiment of electrical servants that speed and illuminate and ease the day's work . . . miracles in medicine . . . the great powerhouse of energy that turns the wheels of mechanized America . . . the wizardry of electrical computers . . . the new revolution of electronics, with its radar and television, its facile capacity to set whole factories humming smoothly without benefit of human hands.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Out of that lamp came the energy that endows the average American workman today with the strength of 200 men . . . the envied phenomenon of America—the strongest nation on earth . . ."

* * *

THE GREAT genius behind this was, of course, Thomas Edison. But just as Napoleon wouldn't have been Napoleon without his marshals, so Edison wouldn't have been Edison without his first assistants—twenty-eight of them, who in 1918 formed a society, "The Edison Pioneers."

Now one of the first of these pioneers and the one credited with having done the most next to Edison was a Negro.

Do you know his name? I'd bet dollars to doughnuts that you run true to form and never even heard of him.

Well, he was Lewis Howard Latimer, born 1848. Starting as office-boy in a mechanical drafting firm in Boston, he picked up drafting and became in time one of the ablest in that field. Hiram Maxim, inventor of the machine-gun, then employed him as secretary and adviser. In 1878, he went to work with Edison.

THE BIG problem in electricity was to make it burn. Latimer solved the problem by inventing a filament that did and on Oct. 21, 1879, the world had the electric lamp. That scene was recently enacted on television. But all the characters were white.

Latimer's next big job was to install electrical machines for lighting New York City, Philadelphia and Toronto.

In 1881, he did the same in London, England. Then in 1890, he wrote a book, the most authoritative then on the subject: "Incandescent Electric Lighting."

This book, as well as that on the founding of the Edison Pioneers, is in the science department of the New York Public Library.

OTHER MATTER, too, may be found in the Schomburg Collection. See also his picture in my "World's Great Men of Color," Vol. 2, p. 711. Published 1947.

Later, Latimer became Edison's right hand man and in the fight over patents won many victories for him.

Latimer's inventive skill covered a wide field. He was also a pioneer with the telephone. He drew the first plans for it according to specification given him by Alexander Graham Bell.

He died in 1928, but in the Golden Jubilee that year he wasn't forgotten. Two of his daughters were honored guests at the celebration.

His obituary with his accomplishments were mentioned in leading dailies—the Times, the Herald, of New York, and others. But in 1954, what? He's submerged. Forgotten. Whose fault?

Courier 11-13-54

than lose ground.

To eliminate one obstacle, the committee agreed to merge the two parent bodies first and then work out jurisdictional and other problems between individual rival unions.

UNDER FRIDAY'S agreement, the CIO and AFL each will name three members to a subcommittee to draft a framework for the new single body.

The subcommittee also will recommend machinery to settle jurisdictional problems and other differences between individual CIO and AFL unions.

An AFL-CIO merger, long sought by leaders of both groups but blocked by problems involving the respective place of each within a merged organization, would blend the nation's two biggest unions into "one big union" with a collective voice of some fourteen million workers.

Rogers Says:

Let Byrnes and Talmadge Rave; They Highlight the Victory

By J. A. ROGERS

THE SUPREME Court ruling against segregation proves again a very old truth, namely, that right always wins in the long run and that doing right in the first place is always cheapest and best.

Up to 1915, this court was engaged in killing almost everything for which the Civil War had been fought. It killed the Civil Rights Law intended to implement the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments and it sanctioned the jim-crow car, the jim-crow school, barring of Negroes from juries, and general injustice for millions of citizens. Chief Justice Harlan protested in the strongest language against these rulings in vain. Now fifty-eight years later, history gives a verdict in his favor and reverses in sweeping language his colleagues.

Mr. Rogers

The object of the court then in supporting jim-crow was to bring back in spirit the Southern whites into the Union by tossing the Negroes to them, as well as to promote Northern exploitation of the South. But, in doing so, it set back the nation at least a century politically and economically—politically because it brought to Congress a lot of inferior, loud-mouthed politicians whose only qualification was that they could make a hit by abusing Negroes.

WASHINGTON HAD the spectacle of such creatures as Tillman, Tom Watson, Blease, Vardaman, Heflin, Roddenbery, Ellison Smith and Bilbo. When Woodrow Wilson came to power in 1913, these mischievous fellows, thanks to seniority, rode in with him. Wilson, himself, especially in his second term, owed his election chiefly to the Solid South, to the fact that Negroes were barred from voting.

But that was a very critical period for America, that of World War I, and this was the type that ran the nation. Blabbermouths, whose only qualification was how to keep Negroes down, and with absolutely no international experience, found themselves pitted against seasoned European statesmen like Lloyd George, Poincare, Briand and Clemenceau—men trained in the hard school of the fight for survival and supremacy over powerful rivals. Much the same is true of World War II.

Roosevelt, too, was deeply indebted to the Solid South. Just as Wilson made the poorest kind of showing against Clemenceau and Orlando of Italy, so did Roosevelt against Stalin. As for Churchill, Roosevelt was putty in his hands. What was Andrew J. May, Negro-hater (later sent to prison for bribery) and so powerful in World War II, trained for? Or Bilbo, Ellender, Byrnes, except to fight against underprivileged American citizens? These fifth-raters were the ones we pitted against Europe's sharpest such as Churchill, Attlee, Vishinski, Gromyko.

Whatever way you look at it, the type of legislator the South has generally sent to Congress has done the nation no good. With the abolition of segregation, national, not racial, interests will appeal chiefly to the Southern voter, and the better type of Southerner, long suppressed, will come to Congress.

THE SUPREME COURT decision has brought immense relief to every thinking American, North and South, white and black. Segregation was hurting America, even with her allies, in a way that the vast giving away of money could not overcome. It was also the strongest talking point of the Communists and made them stand out as the champions of the two billion darker peoples of the world.

Proof of how America knew it was hurting her is that an hour after the decision, the Voice of America broadcast the news to thirty-four nations, including China and all the other Communist ones. The decision (if followed up and broadened) is a victory for American diplomacy and a blow to the Communists. If followed and broadened, it will make Negroes feel less and less that this nation is getting rid of jim crow not because of international pressure but because it's the right thing to do. It will increase, too, their affection for this land of their birth. Africa is rejoicing, also. It hits Malan smack in the eye.

As for Byrnes and Talmadge, let 'em rave. We need them to highlight the victory just as a play needs a villain to make the hero shine. One thing is sure: the younger generation of Southern whites isn't with them. All in all, the decision, especially its wording, is a mighty good thing. And from the general enthusiasm with which it is being greeted, it seems sure this nation is heading for a new era of brotherhood and respect for American citizenship.

Toynbee History Charge Is False

Sat. 10-2-54

LAST week I said that the integration of schools, desirable as it is, has one drawback that would have to be taken care of. This is: Since there's now no integration of "white" history and "Negro," Negro students attending "white" schools will drift back to that time when it was commonly held that the black man had no history worth while until he was dragged from savagery and cannibalism to the New World. That was what I was taught as a boy. And millions of whites and blacks are still taught that, or nearly that.

Mr. Rogers

There are those who will say, "What's the use of history? Give me the here and now." Pittsburgh, Pa.

That's about as deep in ignorance as anyone can get. It puts him near the lower animals who live only in the here and now. The monkey, nearest creature to man, has remained a monkey for millions of years, because he cannot summon to his use the experience of vast generations of his species. An elephant, who is stronger than a hundred men, has remained a beast of burden since Hannibal for the same reason. Man, however, has been able to pile up his past experiences, as one does money in the bank, for use when needed.

JUST AS the further back you can go in your own experiences, the better when you have to solve a personal problem, so the further back humanity can go in its history, the greater the progress. Without history, there'd be no invention; we'd be still in prehistoric caves.

History, therefore, is going to be taught. Negro pupils are going to get it anyhow. And what kind? Largely white imperialist history. Do I exaggerate? Well, I won't go back to the innumerable anti-Negro books that were written up to World War II. I take that of a modern scholar, one who is called the world's foremost historian, Prof. Arnold J. Toynbee. In his "Study of History" (1939), he says that the black man has made no contribution to civilization. "When we classify mankind by color, the only one of the primary races . . . which has not made a creative contribution to any of our twenty-one civilizations is the Black Race," he says. He adds, "Within the first 6000 years the Black Race has not helped create any civilization."

OF COURSE, this is absolutely false. But the belief has become so fixed that even a conscientious scholar as Toynbee, who is anti-racist to boot, accepted it withont investigation.

Why is this falsehood kept alive? To discourage black folk and make them content with what is handed them. In short, to keep them at a stage where their labor can be had as cheap as possible. How discouraging the above from Toynbee could be to a young Negro who didn't have facts to offset it!

Again, if history, even the most ancient, has no value why do the foremost nations pay so much attention to it? Discovery of ships of 5,000 years ago in the Great Pyramid, made front page of the world's leading dailies.

In my next column, I'll tell how the whites, who positively began in savagery and cannibalism, have appropriated the history of the blacks to glorify themselves, as in the movie, "The Egyptian."

Rogers Says:

Courier By J. A. ROGERS Sat. 10-9-54

Whites Got Off to Poor Start

LAST week I tried to show the very great importance of history, however ancient. Anti-Negro writers realize this, hence they are forever declaring the Negro had "no history." You see, if it can be proved that a people never did anything over long centuries, they're hopeless.

Mr. Rogers

Now, I've read innumerable books and articles along this line, but in not one have I ever seen that the whites began in worse savagery than what they attribute to Negroes. And there is positive proof of this. The ancient Britons were cannibals. Julius Caesar of 55 B. C. and Tacitus tell how benighted they were. Caesar says that sons cohabited with their mothers and had children by them. Cicero, also of that time, thought that the most hopelessly stupid people brought to Rome were the Britons. He advised Atticus to buy none of them. Some translate this passage as, "The stupidest and ugliest slaves come from Britain." Were there no hope for such a people, as these anti-Negro writers say of Negroes, then England ought not to have had a Shakespeare, or risen to world supremacy.

Not only anti-Negro writers, but most white historians claim the ancient civilizations of Africa as white. For instance, the Moors of Africa who invaded Europe in 711 A. D., and restored civilization that had been destroyed by white barbarians from the North, Roland, who lived at that time, says the Moors were "blacker than ink with nothing white but their teeth." In fact as late as 1050 A. D. Said, Moorish historian, wrote of the whites to the North. "They are by nature unthinking. Their bellies protrude; their color is white; their hair is long. Ignorance, lack of reasoning power and boorishness are common among them." Pittsburgh, Pa.

Egypt, the mother of Western civilization, is being increasingly claimed as white. The latest is the multi-million dollar Hollywood film, "The Egyptian." The millions who see it will believe the ancient Egyptians were white. Yet, Akhenaton, Pharaoh of the film, as seen in his portraits and from his skull, was "pure" Negro. His queen, Nefertiti, is also white, even though in the novel (p. 386) she is said to be of "black blood . . . the blood of injustice and treachery." See their portraits in this week's "Your History."

Leading white scholars as Volney, Darwin, Flinders, Petrie, Weisgerber, Breatest, Osburn, Birch, Maspero, agree there was a Negro strain in Egyptian royalty. Wilkinson says of Amenophis III, father of Akenhaton, "The features of this monarch cannot fail to strike everyone who examines the portraits of Egyptian kings as having more in common with the Negro than those of any other Pharaoh." In my "Sex and Race" and "Nature Knows No Color Line" will be found abundant sources and portraits in proof.

Right now, ancient Egypt is in the limelight. There is also the film, "Valley of the Kings" and "Land of the Pharaoahs" soon to appear. This last deals with the building of the Pyramids. Negroes in great numbers are being used in it—only as slaves, of course.

And so you see history of 3,000 B. C. being brought into our lives today. Dead, is it? Well, it's being used to keep alive the old fiction that blacks before their emancipation in 1865 were always slaves to white people. More on this next week.

Rogers Says:

What Are You Going to Do About Aiding Defenseless Negro Women?

Courier

By J. A. ROGERS

I HAVE the very great pleasure of giving this week a letter from one of the grandest living women in this nation, one who has fought for justice to her racial group for nearly seventy years, and who, now at 91, less a few months, still carries on with the same determination.

Mr. Rogers

The present generation owes her an immense debt. She became known as a leader of women in America and Europe in the 1890's, represented several times women's organizations abroad, and is one of the greatest living foes of racism—Mrs. Mary Church Terrell, 1615 S Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Pittsburgh Pa.

I give her letter in full:

"DEAR FRIEND Rogers: Although I have never written to you before, I have often expressed to friends a deep appreciation of the untiring efforts you have made to get the details of the feats of colored men and women in the development of the political and cultural life of many countries before the world.

"Everywhere those who hate the colonial and African colored peoples have tried to completely hide or distort or emasculate their history.

"I know of no one who has been more zealous in attempting to combat the racist lies than yourself.

"I am writing today with a specific purpose. You have probably been told of the magnificent demonstration I had the honor to lead to Atlanta, Ga., during the Christmas festivities in an effort to secure the freedom of that courageous colored woman, Rosa Lee Ingram.

"We called it a Prayer Crusade and from the steps of the State Capitol sang, 'Oh, Freedom,' and other liberation songs of our slave forefathers. Contrary to the belief of some, we were invited by the Governor to speak with him.

"OF COURSE, he evaded the responsibility and argued that the law did not permit the release of a lifer until after seven years.

"But the law of the racist does permit the imprisonment of innocent colored men and women for years. Our prisons from one end of the country to the other are full with these innocents.

"One the 26th of February, I led a delegation of men and women from various sections of the Eastern Seaboard to the office of the Attorney General, because it is my conviction that the Federal Civil Rights statutes have been violated in the frame-up and conviction of Rose Lee Ingram.

"Again we were given the run-around. This time the old myth, the theory of State's Rights, was invoked by Herbert Brownell's assistants.

"I do not see how they can reconcile this stand with the commendable entrance into the school cases unless that is only a demagogic gesture.

"ON THE 6th of April I shall lead a delegation in behalf of the freedom of Rosa Lee Ingram to the United Nations. I am not asking that body to intervene in the affairs of this nation, but I believe that in the frame-up conviction and imprisonment of this colored mother, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights was violated.

"I want to call this matter to the attention of the civilized world.

"Finally, on Mother's Day, I shall lead a Prayer Crusade to Atlanta. I hope that Rosa Lee Ingram will be named the Mother of the Year. She deserves that honor for her defense of motherhood and womanhood, a defense which does her and her people proud. Maybe you can help in this. I am satisfied you can if you will."

UNFORTUNATELY, this letter came while I was away. Nothing has stirred me more deeply than the most cruel and unjust treatment of Mrs. Ingram.

Were she white, she would have been made a heroine instead of a convict. The racists of this nation have been getting away with that sort of thing to defenseless and preyed-on Negro women for three hundred years and the time has come to cry halt.

I feel that every lover of right and justice the world over opposes this total lack of consideration for human rights and of the black woman in particular. Mrs. Terrell, at her advanced age, still leads the way.

Does she not deserve the fullest backing of the present generation? What are you and you and you going to do about this?

Rogers Says:

His Doubt, of What the So-Called 'Superior' Race Says, Was Strength

31a

By J. A. ROGERS

A LEADING Negro educator from the South was recently mentioned in the daily press as opposing direct attacks on race prejudice, calling it futile since some people maintain it as a psychological necessity.

Mr. Rogers

That is, without it, they'd be lost. I'm omitting his name since he wasn't directly quoted.

Now I've always admired the way Socrates of old used to attack falsehood. He'd begin by apparently agreeing with himself.

History sayeth not, however, whether that caused a change of heart in the opponent. And there's the rub.

With many folk when you attack what they think about things, you're not attacking mere facts but the innermost ego of such since what they think they know and their ego are one. With this type, pussyfoot as you will, you'd still offend them. What they want is total agreement.

AS I see it there are three kinds of racists: those who are so from lack of better information; those who need it because if they didn't look down on Negroes, Jews, or foreign-born they'd just be nobody in their own estimation; they need someone to be better than. The third group are the profiteers.

The first group is fairly easy to handle; the second are on the whole impossible because so far as real humanity is concerned they are still at the tribal, or even lower animal, stage.

As for the third, the only cure is showing them some more profitable way of exploiting humanity; or death.

DEATH, FOR instance, was the only cure for Bilbo, Tillman, Vardaman, Blease. It looks too as if it will be the only one for Talmadge and Byrnes. They're professional racists; it's their means of holding power.

Bilbo's dying act was to call in a Negro reporter to try to set himself straight before the world.

REMOVE THE incentive from Byrnes or Talmadge; exile them say to a black man's land like Ethiopia; or a white man's land like Finland, Scandinavia, or Russia, where they wouldn't get an audience for their racial chatter, and they'd very likely change.

I met quite a few white Southern racists living in Europe who did change. And they were enthusiastic about it, too.

THERE IS this about a pussyfooting program: Life progress, doesn't give a damn about it and slams right in. It doesn't say, "Please, Mr. Racist, will you be good and regard those of other colors or birth as brothers under the skin?"

4-24-54

No, it brings on a Civil War, where racial oppressors get what's coming to them; or a world war, where lads nurtured in "race superiority" see that a bullet knows no color-line. Or they may be driven to it as in Korea or Germany because the Communists there were using jim crow in the U. S. Army as propaganda.

But progress is not always violent. Changed industrial conditions sometimes help. And there's television.

Southern censors ban movies showing Negroes and whites as equals, especially white women. But television goes right over the head of the racist censors. It shows Negroes singing beside white men and women and sitting among them in audiences. The racists are on the losing end any way you look at it.

I'M NOT so sure, but what direct slaps at race, or other, prejudices, aren't the best after all. It has been in my case. I was reared in the usual way, that is, given those facts about race, religion, etc., that would make me a harmonious member of the society in which I lived.

Later, when I was thrown among those who contradicted me, didn't I boil?

Hadn't I been given these things as truths by those I trusted and respected? Besides, that was all I knew. Later when my thirst for knowledge took me into other lands and research in history, I was not only glad for those contradictions, but I resented those who had filled my head with such rubbish in the first place.

Today, a lot of similar rubbish, racial, political, religious, is still being peddled to the youth.

ONLY A similar experience as mine will help them. My Negro ancestry also helped as an eye-opener.

Doubt of what the so-called superior race says has been my strength.

Finally, this race question is over three centuries old. If we must still pussyfoot in order not to hurt those who are hurting others when will we ever be able to speak out?

Moreover, go back to the middle of the last century and you'll find much more outspoken talk on all phases of the race question, including so-called intermarriage, than we have now. In fact so far as plain talk goes we have had a r[illegible]ression.

Rogers Says:

Hawaii Finding It Hard to Gain Statehood Because of Racial Mixture

By J. A. ROGERS

TO BE AN expert on racial classifications, I once wrote, the first qualification necessary is to be crazy. Two recent news items bear this out. One is a Supreme Court ruling that its ban against barring Negroes from jury duty also extends to cases where Mexicans are involved. The court has reversed the conviction of a Mexican for killing a white Texan because Mexicans were deliberately kept off the jury. But according to the U. S. Census, all Mexicans are "white," therefore, it was merely a case of one white man killing another. Up to 1940, Mexicans were listed as non-white but in the census of that year all Mexicans, however dark or Negroid, were all whitewashed by a Federal ruling to fit our good neighbor policy. And those of us who have been in Mexico know how dark the majority of Mexicans are. Mexico absorbed much Negro blood and some of its great men were of that stock. Now since Mexicans are "white" and Jews, Poles, French, English, Irish, etc., are also white, might not such also demand that persons of their national origin be on juries in cases in which they are involved?

BUT IN THE case of the Mexicans the rub is this: While a Federal ruling whitewashed them, they are to the Americans with whom they come in daily contact, what their color shows them to be.

The second instance comes from Hawaii where race mixtures have become so baffling the racial classifiers have had to throw up their hands. The island Bureau of Vital Statistics has at last been forced to drop mention of race. "It now develops," says the Chicago Tribune, "that the omission was not an oversight. Hawaii's 'melting pot' population has become so mixed in its racial strains that health department officials have decided that attempts at racial breakdowns result merely in hopeless inaccuracies."

Under past procedure a child was classified as part Hawaiian if one parent was Hawaiian even if the other was Caucasian or Chinese. If one parent was a Negro and the other no matter what, the child was classed as Negro. Unlike the case of the Mexicans, a child with no matter how high a percentage of white strain, was never classified as white. "If," says the Tribune, a Caucasian named Brown, married a Japanese woman, their son would bear the name Brown, but he would be classified as Japanese. It gets terribly mixed up as generations of mixtures intermarry.

IF YOUNG Mr. Brown, classified as a Japanese, marries a Miss Kim, whose mother was white but whose father is Korean and who, therefore is classified as Korean, their child, because its father is classified as Japanese, is also classified as Japanese. Yet that child's racial make-up is one half Caucasian, one quarter Japanese and one quarter Korean. And in future generations when the one-quarters marry other one-quarters, the classification becomes more and more complicated.

Here are some of the so-called racial groups in Hawaii: native Hawaiians, Chinese, Japanese, Koreans, Malayans, Portuguese, Negroes from Cape Verde (Africa), American and other whites, Puerto Ricans, white and black, and American Negroes, as well as East Indians and others. Negro troops on the islands have had many children by native women. As for the aboriginal Hawaiians they were more Negroid than anything else. (See portraits of the Hawaiian royal family in my "Sex and Race," Vol. 3, pp. 7, 107, 109, and a typical Hawaiian girl of 1816 in my "Nature Knows No Color-Line," with quite Negroid features and hair). Kamehameha the Great, early Hawaiian ruler, could not have been taken for anything else but a Negro. In fact, the early Americans had a saying, "You might call them Hawaiians, but they look like n——grs to me." In short, the Hawaiian is so mixed and is so generally unconcerned about it island racists are out of a job and might have to migrate to the States.

And there you have the reason why Hawaii will find it very difficult to get statehood. She might be sending two colored men to the United States Senate, the "world's most select club," and that would never do.

Rogers Says:

If the Racists of America Win It Will Be a Victory for Russia

By J. A. ROGERS

THE DECISION of the Supreme Court on segregation will be not only of national, but world importance. Here's why. At present, generally speaking, two-thirds of the human race distrusts the other third. In some lands it even hates violently. The whole affair began thus: In the fifteenth century white-skinned adventurers of Europe set out into darker men's lands and finding much wealth began to rob and murder them. Later, they started colonies and set up a caste line based on color of skin.

Mr. Rogers

Plunder of these dark peoples reached such a colossal scale that countries like Spain, Portugal, France, Britain, which were about to decline like ancient Greece or Egypt, rose to world power.

Read what Las Casas or Prescott wrote of the robbery and murder of the dark-skinned peoples of the New World; or of what Europeans did in Africa where the natives were not only robbed, but some ten millions of them were stolen and sold into slavery in the New World.

Plunder and massacre in Asia also was on a colossal scale. A white humanitarian, like the late Sir Harry Johnston, tells in his "Negro in the New World," how his indignation rose to white heat when he learnt what whites did to the dark races.

HATRED OF THE whites naturally began to develop over the world. You read of occasional massacres of them in India, China, Africa (South, East, West), the West Indies, Brazil, etc. Fiercest of all was in Haiti. Even the United States had a few as the Nat Turner rebellion. I have read of hundreds and have a vivid picture of the hatred of these dark peoples for whites.

In some parts of the world as China and India this white exploitation has practically ceased, thanks to the rising power of their peoples. But it still exists in the rawest state in Kenya, South Africa, and Southwest Africa. But even in partly freed lands, memories of white injustice still rankles. 1776 is a long time but do we not still celebrate our victory over England?

Now what is this dark world thinking as W. E. B. DuBois asked in Darkwater in 1920? At that time racists like Lothrop Stoddard and J. W. Gregory, and anti-racists like H. G. Wells and Sir Harry Johnston, as well as some dark writers, all agreed that the future was ominous.

I RECALL in 1930 while on a ship bound for Indio-China there were an Egyptian, two Ethiopians, an East Indian, a Chinese and a Japanese. We had our meals at the same table. Everyone of them was bitter about white injustices in their land. The Japanese said he looked forward to the day when Japan would get even for how his people were being insulted on the Pacific Coast. America is now rearming Japan. Have the Japanese, a proud people, forgotten their defeat in the last war? A beaten people never does. Our South still hasn't forgotten its defeat in the Civil War.

The New York Daily Mirror, strongly anti-Communist, rightly said (March 23, 1954), "Asiatics . . . hate white men." This has a long history that antedates Karl Marx. It has nothing to do with communism, because it existed long before communism became a factor in world affairs. It is a direct response to the mistaken assumptions of racial superiority by the Europeans who turned ancient kingdoms into colonies. These people are now getting even.

"WHEN THEY fight white men they are ferocious." The editorial adds that these people thrill at any defeat of a white power. "This has nothing to do with communism in the minds of these Asiatic countries but the Kremlin takes full advantage of a situation which has been brewing for more than a century."

Chester Bowles (New York Times, Feb. 7), says he was told from Lebanon to Japan that "The Number One obstacle to Asian friendship for America" was "racial discrimination against your own colored citizens." He added, "No American returning from Asia can doubt that the status of the American Negro is a key to our relationship with the awakening nations of Asia and Africa."

And there's your answer to what effect either way the Supreme Court decision on segregation will have on communism and the majority of the world's people. If the racists of America win it will be a tremendous victory for Russia, too.

ROGERS SAYS:

America Comes Near Being a Model for Stable Government

By J. A. ROGERS

TO CONTINUE on book-banning, book-burning and censorship. The object, as I said, is always thought control and thereby have people do what you want. Thought control (through book-banning) and lying aim at the same thing.

Mr. Rogers

Repression, through censorship, can go only so far. Comes a time when it blows off the lid, sometimes with volcanic force as in the French Revolution and the Russian one of 1917. No historical period is fuller of horrors than the French Revolution. But the government was reaping what it had sown. Monsters like Robespierre and Murat were born of that repression. The King, his family and aristocrats were guillotined by tens of thousands. Read Thiers' "History of the French Republic," translated by Skoberl (1842), with notes from others.

And the Church, tool of the state, got its due, too. The churches were broken into, the sacred images dragged out and burnt, and some, like Notre Dame de Paris, turned into beer halls and places of amusements. Italy had convulsions, too. Pope Pius VI was captured and taken prisoner to France. The French today are individualists, made so by their well-justified distrust of rulers.

RUSSIA, under the Czars, suffered even more than the French under the Louises. As late as Alexander I, who freed the slaves, the Czar had absolute power over the lives of his subjects. As a monster, Ivan the Terrible outranks Nero. In 1881, Alexander III resumed this tyranny. Anarchists, Nihilists and others tried to establish liberal government. Nicholas II, last of the Czars, a mere stooge, dissolved the liberal Duma again and again. This I recall. Or you may read Russian history, past and present, in the Encyclopedia Britannica. Result, Nicholas and his family met the same fate as Louis XVI and his. Russia, with its periodic massacre of rival officials, reminds one of France in the 1790s.

Most countries that have won freedom through revolution have had a violent aftermath. This is especially true of most of the Latin-American countries, as Argentina, under Rosas; Paraguay, under Francia; the Dominican Republic, under Heureaux. Haiti was one of the worst. Whites and mulattoes were massacred. After the passing of Boyer, Haiti was so unsettled it became a synonym for chaos. What a difference today. If Haiti could become liberal, Russia will.

REPRESSED LIBERTIES usually explode like repressed steam. No censorship is far safer than having some Mr. Know-What's-Good-for-You banning books and movies. His aim is to use you. Also, if everyone had his way, I doubt whether there would be any books at all, since there's not a book that isn't disliked by someone. Think of school children. As a boy I hated Euclid's geometry and if someone had proposed banning it I would have said "hurrah." Today, the books that retard the progress of humanity—racial, political, religious, mystical and the like—are legion. But if I had the power of banning such, I would compel people to read them as one way of boring them to death.

So far as stable government is concerned, America comes near being a model. But let's not be self-righteous as we now are in the case of Russia. Or of China, which suffered under Manchu oppression until 1911. We have just been lucky. We inherited freedom of speech from England, which paid a high price for it in the bloody civil war of 1642-1649, and later in the revolt against the Stuarts. In 1689, the Act of Toleration gave freedom to the British press, and we inherited that.

HOWEVER, the Puritans who had fled from intolerance, practiced precisely that here in their murderous cruelty to Quakers, Catholics, and their torture and hanging of supposed witches. Fortunately, other Europeans, fleeing here to escape oppression of church and state, were strong enough to modify them. Today, however, we have to watch this New England puritanism plus Irish Roman Catholicism, which is much less liberal than European Catholicism. I saw books on sale in the Catholic countries of Europe—France, Spain, Italy, Portugal—that are banned here. "The Miracle," motion picture banned in New York, later permitted by the U. S. Supreme Court, was shown openly in Rome. So was "Vesuvius."

America's sole hope for stability is freedom of speech, the press and the movie. And the best minds realize that. Some of the strongest opponents of communism are now seeing McCarthyism as a menace, among them Eisenhower, Truman, Dulles, Dewey, most of the Protestant clergy and some of the Catholics. McCarran, McCarthy's co-worker, has declared he has gone too far, and the not-so-liberal Senator Ellender is planning to clip McCarthy's wings.

Next week: "Censorship and the Negro."

Rogers Says:

White People Still Decide What Goes Into the Heads of Negroes

By J. A. ROGERS

LAST week I wrote on censorship and book-banning. What of the race question? It can be said, I think, that even though Uncle Sam or none of the states has no special love for black folk, not even in the worst states are books on race banned. Mississippi has some sort of law but it is neglected. I have spoken in many Southern states and said the same thing I did in the North and have never met with the slightest opposition. White people were even present and sat among the Negroes.

Mr. Rogers

Why this liberality? Well, the powers-that-be know that race prejudice has the book-banning situation so well taken care of that the public can be trusted, including most Negroes. In place of slave pressure there is economic pressure which decides what books must reach you. Negro scholars are well under control, too. They must rely on the white publisher, who is out chiefly for sales, and gives the public what it wants. Yes, white people still largely decide what goes into the Negro's head. I shall elaborate on that later.

FROM EVER since man began to exploit his fellowman or be jealous of a rival, the tactic has been this: Say nothing good and play up the faults. No other group, not even the Helots or the Jews, had as severe a dose of this as the Negro, especially in the United States.

In 1915, when I was about to write "From Superman to Man" I began by reading anti-Negro books. What I found was simply astounding. Later, I said this in my "As Nature Leads" (1919): "From the Negro's earliest entry in America, everything that the mind could suggest has been brought forward to belittle him. He was a beastly creature without God, law, religion or commonwealth; he was a relic of the pre-Adamite period, having neither part nor lot with the rest of the human race; the Beast spoken of in the Bible; a cross between a male Caucasian and a gorilla; the serpent that tempted Eve. He was degenerate, thievish, lying, malodorous and God knows what else besides."

Do I exaggerate? Well, you can find all and worse in such books as Shufeldt's "The Negro: A Menace to American Civilization"; Carroll's "The Negro: A Beast"; W. B. Smith's "The Color Line," and Leecraft's, "The Devil's Inkwell."

And there was the Congressional Record with the anti-Negro venom of Tillman, Vardman, Blease, Bilbo. Many of the scientists, though using more respectable language, were equally denunciatory.

IS THIS belittlement through books dead? If you think so, you'd better go back to sleep. They have found a more effective way. They get Negro writers to do it now. More of that later. I wrote "From Superman to Man" as I did, because after reading all those books, I found the faults of Negroes (only human faults, by the way) had been so minutely explored, so exaggerated, that any future writer along that line had already been beaten to it.

Therefore only the good was left as a new field. Well, no publisher would touch that book. Even some of the libraries refused it for free. The Chicago Public Library sent it back to me. A first edition of that book now sells for $10. I had sold it for one. The New York Public Library (Fifth Avenue) also returned it together with "As Nature Leads," which is now entirely out of print and sells for from $10 to $15 (second-hand).

With a change to the present director, Ralph Beals, came a great change as to race. While no Negro employe was ever seen, today, they are very much in evidence in every department. The library bought my books, too, and more than any other library in the country. It recently ordered four sets of my "World's Great Men of Color." I could supply only one as Volume Two is out just now.

THE PUBLISHERS also refused this work. One New York firm that has published a dozen or more books on the race question, praised it highly but said there was no demand for works of that kind. Yet, with absolutely none of its set-up for sales, I disposed of about 5,000 copies, since 1946, which is about the run of most books.

And it's just here we can see belittlement of the Negro in its present dress. Write a book like "Native Son," portraying some vicious, no-good Negro and generally exaggerating the difficulties facing Negroes, and you're likely to find ready acceptance. (More of this next week and the cases of some who can't get their books accepted because they present the better side.)

Rogers Says:

Negro Writers Have Hard Time Getting Their Works Published

By J. A. ROGERS

OF THE letters I've received from readers over the years, the greatest single kind is from writers with books to publish. The outlet for such is very limited. Negroes, though some 17,000,000 strong, haven't a single firm that publishes books and gives the author a royalty. They have not yet realized the immense importance of literature in the advancement of any human group. Man, no matter what color, is a recording animal by instinct. He tells, draws, or writes what happens.

Mr. Rogers

Some fifty thousand years ago or more, Negroes depicted what happened, mostly hunting, in the caves of Europe, Asia and Africa. Without a record of the past we would be little better than dumb animals. There would be no airplanes, no atomic energy, no medicine, no radios or television. And if all literature were suddenly obliterated, humanity would be set back a thousand years. It is simply impossible to overestimate the importance of the written word.

AS REGARDS their own literature, American Negroes though ahead of Negroes in every other land, are away back as compared with white Americans. They have their newspapers (which do not receive anything near the support they deserve) and a few periodicals, but in the matter of more permanent literature what they get is decided for them by the white publisher, who, in turn, has decided for him what his customers want. He must please them and the story of the better side of Negro life is not one of the things that pleases most. Most of the buyers of books on Negroes are white people. If most were Negroes they would be catered to instead.

Recently I told of the immense propaganda waged against Negroes since the 1680's in order to keep them at a stage where their labor could be had in the cheapest possible market. That situation is improving; it is in the process of evolution but the worst side of Negro life is still the better seller. It's okeh to attack injustice, but do not stray too far from the old pattern. The book trade has decided that the time is not yet for a Negro character in a novel that would inspire Negro youth, though there are many examples in real life, not only dead, but living.

THOROUGHLY acquainted as I am with the centuries of bad things said about Negroes, I find some of the Negro characters by Negro novelists just too much. Have a heart! Giving me so much more of that rotten stuff just because it's what the market wants. Not that I want characters that are just too good for this wicked world. At the same time I don't want to be kept always in the gutter. I want to soar sometimes.

Self-respecting Negroes complain about such characters. But why should they expect white publishers, who must rely on the good-will of their customers, to get out what they would like? Why not step out and do it for themselves?

I have before me letters from two of our able women writers, women of the finest sincerity and whose long devotion to their group I admire greatly: Mrs. Georgia Douglas Johnson, 1461 South Street, Washington 9, D. C., and Miss Kathryn M. Johnson, 4509 Prairie Avenue, Chicago 15, Ill. Georgia Johnson is known principally for her poems; Kathryn Johnson for her "Two Colored Women With the AEF." She served overseas in World War I. Both these fine women are stalled when it comes to getting out their work. It's not the kind that generally sells to white but would be good for Negroes.

GEORGIA JOHNSON writes, "When you know that I have twenty-four books ready for publication, one of them a novel waiting for many years to find a publisher, another a biography of my husband (Henry Lincoln Johnson) 'A Bridge to Brotherhood' to cement races . . . you will understand my position in trying to make a headway. You, being a man, have made your way with a man's courage, but I have household cares and must carry my world of dreams on tired shoulders."

Her only alternative is to publish them herself, a terrific job as I shall show later. As for Kathryn Johnson, it'll be another fifty years before her book will be even touched. One glance at the title would be enough. It is "George Washington's Son" (whose name is West Ford, a mulatto). In 1953, I got a picture of him from her and gave it in "Your History." Since then I ran across the picture and his story in an old issue of the Illinois State Register.

That George Washington had an illegitimate child, much less a Negro one, is an impossibility. You see, he knew from childhood, he was going to free America, be its first President, and be revered, so he kept himself above all human frailties, especially those of his time. More on Kathryn Johnson's work next week.

Rogers Says:

Getting a Book Published Is Tough And at Times Very Discouraging

By J. A. ROGERS

LAST week I mentioned Georgia Douglas Johnson of Washington, D. C., and Kathryn M. Johnson of Chicago, Ill., and their problem in finding a publisher. The latter's book, "George Washington's Son," I said, will be viewed with horror by every true patriot. Washington, foreseeing how he was going to be revered, had none of the frailties of youth or of the average slaveholder.

Mr. Rogers

In fact, no one who was ever to reach the White House could possibly ever had had Negro offspring. But I wonder what would have happened had Martin Van Buren died in office and Vice President Richard M. Johnson become President. Johnson had a Negro woman, Julia Chinn, to whom he was said to be married (he probably wasn't), who was his hostess. She and her mulatto daughters sat at table with him, no matter whom the guests, and he had the daughters married to white men at gorgeous affairs in Washington.

OF COURSE, that is what Gunnar Myrdal would call some of my "pseudo-history, fantastically glorifying the achievements of Negroes," but if doubters dare look into Columbia University Studies on History, etc., No. 359, pp. 317-22, or Carl Sandburg's "Abraham Lincoln, Vol. 3, p. 264 (1939), they'll see there are other falsifiers beside myself. In the chapter, "Famous White Men and Their Negro Mistresses," in Vol. 2 of my "Sex and Race" I've given more sources. The late Dr. Woodson told me of a Negro family living in Washington, D. C., who claimed descent from Washington and said he had every reason to believe it true.

But the above simply could not happen, so Kathryn Johnson's book is out. She has asked me whether she should pay a publisher to get it out. To all who have asked that, I've said "No." If you do, you will eventually have to sell the book yourself, since the publisher already has his. Take it to a printer and let him get it out. Selling it will be still up to you, but you'll be saving money and many headaches. This latter, by the way, is called "vanity publishing," on the belief that if your book is worthwhile some publisher will snatch it and give you a royalty.

NOW AFTER all the trouble you've had in writing the book and paying the printer, when the printer gives it to you your real trouble will begin — selling it. Firms have a whole staff for that, but you will have to do it all yourself. And there's one and only one way. You'll have to take it around. And humanity is awful skeptical about books, especially when you get it out yourself. However, if the book fills a certain inspirational need, others will be even eager to help you. And you can't let up. Negroes, as a whole, are still rather apathetic about literature on themselves.

Another thing: Don't give out your book on credit. People, regardless of color, are worse about books than about umbrellas. They consider books common property. What if you had to pay your good money to the printer for it? Ninety-nine per cent of the agents will keep all the money, no matter how well they start. I have many thousands of dollars owing, and once they owe you, so far as ever answering your letter, they could well be dead. If I were to view humanity from the above experience, I'd say it is inherently dishonest. Of course, there are many who are honest. But how can you know them? You will find that your biggest heartache. It is mine because no matter who doesn't pay, I must pay the printer. Some of my books cost $2 a copy to print alone. One group you will find are doctors and dentists. They always pay.

AGAIN, give out your books on credit, and some day you'll find you could get cash for them and haven't any.

If your book sells and you pay your printer, after a time you'll establish credit. Since 1930, all but one of my books were got out that way and without a deposit. And you'll find printing very costly now.

But go ahead and get out your book yourself. Some of the world's best books were turned down by publishers because they didn't look like money-makers. The game is very tough, at times discouraging. If you work alone you might even run into debt, but the struggle will do you good. It gives you a feeling of independence money never can. I've been in the game thirty-seven years. Had I been accepted by some big-name publisher and getting fat royalties the sprit of fight within me would very likely have been dimmed by knowing I had everything wrapped up. And I wouldn't be saying what I want to.

WASHINGTON — A 29-year-old American Negro has turned out to be one of America's best private "ambassadors" to India. The State Department figures that Uncle Sam got more than his money's worth from the three-month visit of Carl T. Rowan, a Minneapolis newspaperman.

Rowan was invited by the Department to visit India under the United States leader exchange program with foreign countries. He went as a free agent and not as a spokesman for anyone but himself, despite Communist efforts to make him appear to be a United States government propagandist.

P. 23-A

He planned to visit with Indian journalists and among other things, to discuss a free press' role in a free society. But he found himself lecturing to student groups, civic organizations and others.

Sun. 11-21-54

And being a Negro, he was an obvious target for questions about racial discrimination and segregation in the United States, according to reports of his visit sent to the department.

Rowan must have answered "millions of hot, embarrassing questions," an official here said, and he refused to duck any of them. He batted it out "toe-toe-toe" without antagonizing any of his questioners.

He made no bones about the fact that discrimination exists here, but he emphasized that more progress toward ending it has been made in the United States than anywhere else, the reports indicated.

He was a "walking example" of the opportunities he discussed, the official observed.

Rowan visited such major cities as New Delhi, Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, as well as numerous villages.

The editor of The Bombay Sunday Standard showed him an article written by a Briton about the United States, titled, "White Brotherhood Succeeds Ku Klux Klan," and invited him to reply to it.

Rowan made a point-by-point refutation of the "distortions" in the article, United States officials reported, and then used the article as the text for his discussions of bad headline writing.

While in Bombay, Rowan was scheduled to make a speech before a newspapermen's group. The chairman of the meeting was the editor of a pro-Communist weekly which had accused Rowan of being a "trained Negro parrot" of the State Department.

The American promptly turned the embarrassment to his advantage by making a forthright rebuttal of the charges.

The United States embassy in New Delhi reported that Rowan's trip had been "very successful," and that he had been effective in counteracting distortions of American life that he found created by the flamboyant Indian press.

An American official in Calcutta cabled this about Rowan:

"Perhaps the most refreshing aspect of his visit (to that city) was his unqualified willingness to work hard and travel far afield (often under hardship conditions)."

Rowan, a graduate of Oberlin College who obtained his master's degree at the University of Minnesota, was one of the first 15 Negroes to attain a commission in the United States Navy.

His Indian tour completed, he is now making his way through other Southeast Asian countries before returning to the United States sometime next February.

IMPLICIT in the campaign for full integration into the economic, political and educational structure of this country is the assumption that we are capable of holding our own in national competition.

Unfortunately this assumption is not entirely warranted because there has been a very grave lag in our education and training for this role to which we aspire.

Mr. Schuyler

It cannot be denied that as of today we do not have the capable technicians, professionals and administratively trained Negroes in sufficient numbers to avail ourselves of the opportunities already in existence.

This complaint comes from many parts of the country where organizations like the Urban League have been able to force open the doors of industry and business, only to find too few qualified persons to force through.

It is the cry of many of our own business men who seek secretaries, stenographers, typists, file clerks, and others who are familiar with the usage of the English language, and the training and the discipline necessary for proper administration.

Full integration means full competition, else there will continue to be as much individual frustration among us as there is today.

IT SEEMS to me that what is needed right now are several thousand scholarships for intelligent and ambitious young Negroes in first-class technical and professional schools to take the kind of training which the donors deem essential for successful competition in an integrated age.

We need fewer bachelors of arts and more bachelors of science. We need more capable white-collar workers but we need more trained blue-collar workers.

We need less doctors of divinity and more doctors of minerology. We need more foresters and less choristers. We should have more doctors of physics and less doctors of literature.

We need more experts in radio and TV production and less blues and spiritual singers over radio and TV.

We need more in-training scholarships in plants and offices. We need many more highly trained people qualified to compete in the growing field of personal service instead of the swarm of undisciplined, ignorant louts largely responsible for losing for us the foothold we once had in this business.

NOBODY ATTENDING one of our numerous conferences and conventions of all sorts can doubt that the money for such scholarships is available.

What we spent so far this year for these largely useless gatherings where delegates boast, spray platitudes and cliches, and display their material gains, would send a thousand young Negroes through the Massachusetts Institute of Technology or give 10,000 of them in-service factory training.

If each Negro church in the country with 1,000 members would give a four-year technical scholarship, we would have a lot more trained people to use to knock on and open the doors of opportunity.

If any great industry today should suddenly lower the color bar and throw open all categories of jobs to Negroes, there would be a most embarrassing time trying to find qualified ones.

I think it is significant that almost all the Negroes properly trained for technical and professional work are engaged in it.

THIS IS a technological civilization requiring on the upper technical and professional levels increasingly higher standards of qualification to meet and beat competition.

One not only has to know how but to know better. Even where there are no obstacles to such training, not even financial, we find distressingly few young Negroes getting ready for the opportunities coming or already here.

Only the Urban League and organizations of that type are sounding the warning.

The others content themselves with whining and complaining for an end to segregation, as if there were 10,000 black Einsteins prepared to compete and hold their own.

Here's a topic for next Sunday's 40,000 sermons and the next 1,000 conferences!

THE STRANGE case of Mrs. Annie Lee Moss was solved to the satisfaction of the Government a few days back when the Signal Corps suspended again the $3,335-a-year clerk. The action was taken the first time when she was flushed out by the McCarthy subcommittee after an FBI undercover agent found her name on a Communist party list.

Mr. Schuyler

Mrs. Moss, a lady of color, had been mysteriously transferred from work in the cafeteria to the code room where she handled secret messages. It was never explained how her qualifications improved so swiftly that she got the promotion, but it was said that she could understand the messages that passed through her hands. Presumably, it would have been possible for her to take out the coded messages to somebody who could decode them. Remember the Hiss case?

MRS. MOSS denied that she had been a Communist at any time or even knew anything about communism. In her behalf, moreover, it was alleged that there were several Annie Lee Mosses in Washington, although admittedly one at the address where she lived and which appeared on the Communist party list.

Well, sir! All hell broke loose. Senator McCarthy was damned from Dan to Beersheba for another instance of hounding innocent people with "unsupported" charges. Senator Symington, an old Truman buddy from the Missouri political badlands, rang the charges on the "persecution" and wept tears as big as ostrich eggs over the plight of this poor, ignorant colored lady trapped by the wicked witch-hunters. Naturally, the anti-anti-Communist press, radio and television commentators had an anti-McCarthy field day, and the Negro columnists ballooned the hysteria in their usual His-Master's-Voice manner. Only Schuyler warned against any hasty whitewashing of Mrs. Moss.

SENATOR FLANDERS, the senile stooge of the powerful Eastern banker-ADA-One World wing of the GOP, made the Moss case one of his "points" in his bristling indictment of the junior Wisconsin solon. The Roosevelt-Truman relics, the Reds, the anti-McCarthyites and the same elements who fought the Bricker amendment and cried for UN membership for Red China bayed en masse for McCarthy's blood.

Then, adding fuel to the fire, Joe remarked that he was not convinced of Annie's innocence. Earl Brown, "liberal" New York councilman and Amsterdam News columnist almost burst a blood vessel denouncing McCarthy for having sunk to a new level. Meanwhile the G-men (as is their wont) were continuing quietly to investigate Sister Moss, since restored to the Army payroll.

SO, WHA' hoppen? The beagles blew the whistle on Aug. 4 and . . . Annie doesn't work there anymore. The G-men had discovered that the "innocent" had been a card-carrying Communist in 1943. Of course, she objected; she had never seen her membership book! The hawkshaws couldn't find any other Annie Lee Moss, just like nobody heard of any other Anna Rosenberg than the former Defense Department manpower executive who vigorously denied she had ever played footsie with the Reds. Remember?

Well, what now? Was McCarthy right or wrong about Sister Moss? Looks like the Army has answered that one. So I wonder what Earl Brown and the other suspiciously vituperative anti-anti-Communists will say!

GOD SAVE Aframericans from their charlatans and clowns because apparently no one else can or will!

Not all the Negrophobia diatribes of Southern Neanderthals of the Ku Klux persuasion have done so much to hold the group up to ridicule as the antics and amphigories of the long succession of sable witch doctors who have briefly hogged the spotlight and headlines as "leaders of their people," and so contributed to the mirth of the ofay majority.

Mr. Schuyler

The latest on the long list is Detroit's gift to Negro mortification, the self-styled Rt. Rev. James F. (Prophet) Jones.

At a time when the embattled brother is fighting reaction against desegregation of public schools and in many ways trying to prove his ability to measure up to the general cultural standards of this civilization and be accepted on a plane of equality, Prophet Jones blew into and out of New York last week offering comic relief.

THE PROPHET, whom two Chicago females recently presented with a $13,000 mink coat, crashed the metropolis with a retinue of eighty persons, five automobiles (beige Cadillac, white Buick convertible, green Lincoln, spare Buick and Chevrolet station wagon), $100,000 in jewelry, a portable throne, a selection of his 400 suits and thirty brightly colored robes.

Needless to say, he stayed at the Waldorf-Astoria, and the New York press had a field day.

The white reporters flocked to his suite like horseflies to a stable, to hear about his Church of Universal Triumph and the Dominion of God which, he asserted, has six million followers in the USA, West Indies, Canada and Africa (What, nobody in Asia, Europe and Australia?).

Greeting the press in bed dressed in silk pajamas, he declared that he had received a command to tell New Yorkers that a vicious spy ring was operating in their midst (as if everybody didn't know that, what with the UN a stone's throw away!), to rededicate themselves to the Four Freedoms, and to prepare for the day, forty-six years hence, when men will live on earth without fear of death, work or taxes . . . or, perhaps, without Prophet Jones.

As if to confirm his boast that all his worldly gifts came from the people "in appreciation of the clean life I live," he proceeded to hold a big Sunday meeting in Carnegie Hall attended by 1,300 persons (in an auditorium holding 4,000!).

When he finally halted laughter by checking out of the Waldorf-Astoria, he said he was awaiting a celestial directive to return to Detroit. He evidently received it, which is tough on Detroit.

WHILE ONE may discount the figure of six million followers, it is evident that the Prophet has a lot of dupes in the Motor City.

There is something amazingly paradoxical about a shaman of this sort operating in the shadow of giant industry in the atomic age. It is as if a New Guinea witch doctor set up shop at Los Alamos.

I suppose we shall always be afflicted with these fellows whose antics make such good copy for the press, but it is rather discouraging to have them grab the headlines at such an inopportune time.

Of course it might be argued that this is beneficial since it graphically demonstrates the Negro's need for more and better education in integrated public schools. But after nearly a century of freedom, the persistence of such "clergymen" with swarms of faceless followers makes our claim of equality more difficult to prove.

The National Association for the Advancement of White People should offer the Prophet its Shinbone Medal.

Mississippi's Legislature having voted to abolish public schools in a desperate step to avoid educational integration, the state's voters will decide the issue on Dec. 21. The provision is so unworkable that even Mississippi voters are likely to reject it. This, and similar programs in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Louisiana are mere bluffs. The days of secession being over, what can the Confederates do but comply?

WASHINGTON'S firemen will be fully integrated despite the opposition of bigots. President Eisenhower was obviously not kidding when he said jim crow in the District of Columbia must go. Roosevelt and Truman left a lot of work for him to do—but he's doing it!

Current target of the Committee on Government Contracts is the Capital Transit Company which seeks to have the dubious distinction of being the only jim-crow outfit remaining in Washington, D. C. It's beginning to dawn on them that they can't win.

BIG NEWS is that Charles H. Mahoney of Detroit will be head of the Legal Committee of the U. S. delegation to the United Nations. This is the most important role a Negro has played in any UN delegation of importance.

Der Tag on U. S. Supreme Court's public school desegregation will be Dec. 6, when legal lights will gather from all points of the compass to argue pro and con. Big issue is revolution versus evolution: i.e., immediate desegregation or gradualism. There will probably be a compromise satisfactory to neither side.

BALTIMORE'S story of desegregation even tops Washington in interest because the former has previously been so implacably jim crow. Integration has been proceeding so smoothly that soon even the swank department stores may be welcoming Negro patronage!

Republicans might as well quit wooing labor union leaders, most of them New-Fair Dealers. Plan probably is to appeal to union members over the heads of the leaders. It worked in Ohio when Taft got the largest majority in history despite millions of dollars poured into the state by union leaders to defeat him. That proved that leaders and members do not necessarily see eye to eye.

Dr. Max Yergan

Finds World Curious About American Negroes

By George S. Schuyler

(Last of a Series)

Ceylonese 'Darker Than You'

OSSINING, N. Y.—We turned to Ceylon, the island Commonwealth at the tip of India, and knowing that its people are very dark, I wondered about its attitude. Dr. Yergan then told me of one black mine owner who asked: "You Negroes are not concerned with being dark, are you? We Ceylonese are much darker than you!"

Many of them are, indeed, almost blue black, and yet they have no feeling of inferiority because of it.

"Wherever I traveled," he said, in reply to another question, "I was received with courtesy and had the fullest enjoyment of any facilities for which I was able to pay.

"This was also the experience of other Negroes I met in hotels in Asia and Europe."

Dr. Yergan is quite concerned about the magnitude of the Communist issue in Asia. It haunts them in Japan, Hong Kong, Siam, Burma and to some extent in India. In Ceylon and Pakistan, it seems, the people are dead against the Reds.

Dr. Yergan

SAID HE, "I was amazed in India at the extent to which many people underestimate the extent of the threat. I met only a small group here and there, and read only one publication that took a realistic, informed and effective attitude against it."

He feels that it would be blind and foolish to fail to see the possibility of Communists seizing all of Asia. They and their dupes and fifth columns are the modern, aggressive foes of peace and democracy there.

"A Communist Asia," he observed, "would not only be a grave threat to our country, but to Africa as well. Many misguided people are swallowing the Communist propaganda about 'Colonialism,' and many anti-colonialists become in effect pro-Communists. Dr. Nkrumah of the Gold Coast has recently clarified this issue for his people.

"The jailed Dr. Jagan of British Guiana is evidence of Communist interference and intrigue in a country in line for democracy.

"Communism is Twentieth Century imperialism; it confuses, sets back and eventually miserably exploits its victims. It should be checked in Asia; it must not be permitted to advance, indeed must be crushed, in Africa."

GOOD EFFECT OF EISENHOWER ACTION

Like most American Negroes, I was interested in knowing how the American Negro problem influences the attitude of foreigners toward the United States, and I asked Dr. Yergan about it.

"There are," he replied, "at least two parts to the answer to this question.

"Undoubtedly, the progress we are making in handling the racial problem here is bound to influence the attitudes toward America. President Eisenhower's action in enforcing integration in the armed forces and in removing segregation on military bases has had a good effect.

"I heard an official in Ceylon say, 'Your President acts whereas others talked about removing race discrimination.'"

HE ADDED that "American racial discrimination never does us any good, of course. At the same time, I think it is a mistaken approach for Negroes and other Americans to hold us up as a horrible example to other countries.

"I doubt if such methods get any good results. Most other countries have too many problems about which they are able to do far less than America is doing about its racial problem.

"They are, in these respects, far more vulnerable than our country. We are solving our problem and we are the only ones who can solve it.

"If Negroes and other Americans count on any help from the outside in solving our problems here they count in vain. This does not mean that we are satisfied. It means that we shall continue striving for the realization of every American guarantee."

DR. YERGAN did not share the optimistic view of many Negroes about the racial attitudes in France and England, and in conclusion, knowing his long familiarity with those two countries, I asked him why.

"In those countries," he replied, "there is a double test of color attitudes. There is a great difference between the attitude of these whites locally and in the colonies.

"In the past there has been a great deal of liberality at home, but now that a larger influx of colored people has taken place in the home countries, serious problems have arisen with regard to jobs, housing and social status.

"Many problems similar to those existing in some parts of this country have recently arisen and are the cause of grave concern."

HAVING GIRDLED the globe and observed conditions in many Asian and European countries, Dr. Yergan observed, in conclusion, that "The pace of the solution of our problems here has been speeded up.

"Because we are a great country, this pace will continue. Our efforts to accelerate that pace should be in keeping with the traditions and the spirit of our country."

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

NAACP Campaign Against Housing Bias Needed

AN NAACP survey made by Mrs Constance B. Motley, a special counsel, and reported to the Dallas conference, highlights the serious housing problem confronting American Negroes which, in effect, hems them into the least desirable areas of our cities.

According to Mrs. Motley's report, about 35 per cent of all houses built in this country involves financing through the Federal Housing Administration mortgage insurance programs, but less than one per cent of such housing is available to Negroes.

SCHUYLER

Since the majority of this housing is in the garden-city type of multiple housing projects on the fringes of our cities, the result is that Negroes are being fenced into older areas of obsolescent residential structures.

True, a large number of huge housing projects are being erected in these areas for Negro occupancy, but these are largely jerry-built flats which tend to perpetuate Negro ghettos where congestion and increasing traffic constitute hazards of various kinds from which whites are being enabled to flee.

WHENEVER THERE is a large incursion of migrants of a lower-income group into an urban community anywhere in the world, they settle per force in those residential areas where housing is least desirable because of obsolescence and encroachment of industrial and mercantile institutions.

Groups having lower income usually have greater occupancy per unit in order to pay the high rentals or in order to have more money to spend on other needs or desires.

For instance, many people attracted to the superficial aspects of urban living will purchase automobiles, television sets, etc. (on time) rather than pay for more space for less occupants. The resulting congestion encourages thriftlessness, prodigality, deliquency and crime.

White people seeking to escape such an environment find few obstacles and they desert such areas in large numbers, leaving them to those unable to escape: i.e., Negroes, Mexicans, Puerto Ricans, and the like, who also would in equal proportion prefer to move, if they could rent or buy in the new FHA-financed near-suburban garden-type settlements.

ONE OF the immediate and obvious results of this fencing-in is that, despite the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing racially segregated schools, most of them will remain, in effect, segregated, because few if any whites will remain in the area where most of the Negroes and other "out" groups live.

Similarly, the public schools serving the FHA-financed peripheral settlements (chiefly populated by whites) become in fact white schools and will so remain until such time as Negroes are permitted to rent or buy in these areas.

The urban and suburban areas where there are privately-financed residential areas have long since excluded Negroes, regardless of wealth or class, save in rare instances, and whether North or South. Add these to the FHA-financed districts from which colored folks are excluded, and you have what amounts to an actual perpetuation of the ghetto and the racial segregation which is now illegal.

ALL THIS emphasizes the necessity for the NAACP campaign to break down racial discrimination in privately-owned, multiple-unit housing developments having any governmental involvement.

As it is, Negroes as taxpayers, are actually helping to subsidize their own segregation, the FHA being a Federally-controlled agency. True, they are getting more low-rental housing projects, but these are largely in the same areas where they have been living all of the time; so racially this represents no change whatever since the pattern remains the same.

While we wax enthusiastic over legal changes, there is a likelihood that actual conditions may remain the same, unless we exert ourselves to drastically alter them.

Courier By GEORGE S. SCHUYLER 3/ a hour

BACK in February, 1954, the Courier management conceived the promotion of a special Labor Day edition scheduled for Sept. 4 publication and devoted to the story of the Negro's contribution to American Labor and Industry. Anybody who read that special edition will agree, I'm sure, that it was a notable journalistic achievement of which any newspaper could be proud, and followed in the footsteps of other fine Courier accomplishments. Never before had such a picture of Negro labor been presented to a popular audience. Not only was it informative, educational and entertaining, but it was profusely illustrated, many photographs being quite rare.

Mr. Schuyler

It was an issue which certainly should have been supported by organized labor in this country, because it contained precisely the kind of information labor leaders and the rank and file membership of all colors and religions ought to know for the future benefit of the labor movement.

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS excellent special number seemingly did not have the support of organized labor despite the professed interest of labor leaders in worker's education and better race relations.

American labor unions have fluid resources of billions of dollars. Every U. S. national and international labor union was asked to support this popular educational effort months before publication.

Anybody can look through the Sept. 4 issue and see how little support came from labor unions. A few unions did respond and they are to be commended; but the overwhelmingly majority did not buy space nor copies. Special numbers are very costly and sales alone do not begin to pay for them, considering the cost of paper, ink, overhead, union wages and taxes.

So any newspaper enterprising enough to launch such a venture must look for financial support from those who will derive benefit from it: in this case the labor unions. Very, very few saw the point even though there are 1,500,000 Negro workers paying dues and periodical assessments into union treasuries.

PARADOXICALLY, industry and business gave better support than did organized labor although it was labor to which the special number was directed. The contrast is really startling and indicates a disinterest in labor education which is not only surprising, but alarming.

Some labor leaders were more than merely indifferent. One prominent labor leader who is an NAACP supporter, and professedly an extreme progressive did not even deign to reply to several letters addressed to him.

Others whom he would probably regard politically as reactionary at least offered the courtesy of a reply. Some felt that because they had few or no Negroes in their unions, it was not necessary for them to have any interest in this vital phase of workers' education.

Actually, it is the white unionist more than the black one who needs education on the Negro. Through the years this newspaper has done a pretty good job of educating the Negro worker. For three months in 1937, this writer covered the great labor organization drive in some forty cities. Labor organizers used those weekly articles to help them in their work among Negroes.

THE CONCLUSION I draw from this experience is that a lot of labor leaders are short-visioned, narrowly partisan and not nearly as interested as they should be in the education of their followers, particularly on the race question as it affects workers.

There is a lot of lip service these days to equality, democracy, fairplay, upgrading, etc., but too frequently it amounts to not more than that. In many places no progress is being made at all.

There are many notable and outstanding exceptions, of course, and some unions have performed yeoman service in implementing the democratic ideal. The Urban League roundup of labor conditions in forty cities gave a very good picture of what has and has not been accomplished.

Negroes in organized labor will have to organize themselves (whether they are CIO, AFL, or Independent) into a racial group for their protection and advancement like the Italian Chamber of Labor, United Hebrew Trades, Jewish Labor Committee, etc., in every industrial center from coast to coast. The Negro Labor Committee of New York, headed by veteran labor leader Frank R. Crosswaith, has shown the way.

Tears are being shed by the Firemen's Association of the District of Columbia because the District Commissioners have integrated the department. The 870 white members (110 Negroes) don't mind fighting fires with Negro comrades, they say, but want to draw the line on any more intimate association. Last week they took out a page newspaper advertisement to let the District know it. News for them is that the Commissioners, spurred by Eisenhower, will not change.

ARMED WITH new laws, the Attorney General is going to crack down on Communists, spies and fellow-travelers as never before. This is going to corral some of our colored brethren, but they cannot say I didn't warn them. Been telling them for years. Now comes the pay-off—and the concentration camps, five, are all ready. No hidin' place now!

Fayetteville (Ark.) made the biggest news last week when its formerly all-white high school enrolled five young colored girls and boys for the fall term. Junior high school integration comes next year, reportedly. School patrons approved unanimously. No incidents. Southern newspapers, please copy.

LAST REFUGE of education segregationists in New Jersey was cut off when the state's attorney general ruled, last week, that all private schools (except religious or sectarian) were subject to the state law against discrimination and may not refuse any student applying because of race, etc.

Harlem will get a $3 million 211-apartment housing project, its first unsubsidized housing since 1938, built by the Bowery Savings Bank. This is significant because the reluctance of white banks to enter the big Negro investment market has retarded both the development of colored communities and the ability of residents to buy property and expand business. Growth of Negro Federal loan associations is helping big banks make up their minds.

LAST WEEK President Paul E. Magloire, chief executive of the second oldest republic in the Western Hemisphere, took to the radio to give an appraisal of the crisis facing that colorful and history-rich Caribbean country.

He told of the devastation wrought by Hurricane Hazel in the Southwestern sector where major crops including coffee, sugar and sisal, have been largely destroyed and food staples wiped out. He estimated the damage at $5,000,000, and predicted that for the next six months the government will have to feed some 500,000 people, or a seventh of the population.

Mr. Schuyler

Those Americans who have visited Haiti or are concerned with its history and progress are filled with sympathy for the little Republic which has suffered this tragedy at a time when tremendous progress was being made under the nation's most democratic regime.

After all, Haiti is very close to all of us in many ways.

THE RESPONSE to appeals for aid has been very encouraging, but of course, does not begin to meet the need.

Cardinal Spellman of New York has not only wired sympathy to President Magloire but has contributed $10,000 to the Haitian relief fund. Members of the Haitian American Association, Inc., have also generously responded with promptness, through the American Red Cross.

The latter is accepting cash contributions earmarked for Haiti hurricane relief through the Red Cross headquarters, 315 Lexington Avenue, New York, N. Y., while gifts of clothing for the homeless population are being solicited by the Haitian Red Cross, Consulate of Haiti, 32 Broadway, New York City.

There must be hundreds of thousands of Courier readers who can well afford to send financial help and who have used clothing and shoes which these homeless and impoverished people need.

This column will be glad to transmit any monies readers contribute directly to the Haitian Red Cross. I think we owe this to these valiant folk.

THE HAITIANS are a proud people and ordinarily do not relish soliciting charity. The Republic is self-supporting and has the second best credit rating in Latin America, but in this grave emergency they do need help, and American Negroes can well afford to give it, and should.

Of course they would prefer that those who love and admire the Haitians would render this aid in a manner mutually beneficial rather than as simple charity, desirable as that might be.

Haiti is one of the world's greatest tourist havens, and it is so close to us that even those of us who are in modest circumstances can afford to pay it a visit for several days or weeks. Having been a frequent visitor, I can vouch that there are accommodations for every purse and uniformly agreeable.

The food is good, the service is excellent and the tourist attractions are unique.

Transportation by air on the familiar circle tour is less than $250 and room with meals can be secured for less than $10 daily whether on the seashore or in the mile-high mountain.

Of course, swanky $25-a-day hotels offer more deluxe accommodations. The country is cool, beautifully green and profuse with gorgeous blossoms at this time of year, and the people are kindly, gracious and engaging. What is more, Hurricane Hazel did not touch those parts where tourists usually go.

LIKE MANY Caribbean countries, Haiti depends largely upon tourism to balance its budget, and the increasing flow of visitors to the black republic has recently compelled the provision of many new tropical hotels as colorful and delightful as any in Florida.

It would be a fine gesture of friendship if many of our people who have been contemplating a vacation in Europe would at this time switch to lovely Haiti, and help it in its adversity in a way that would be mutually beneficial. It would be a wonderful place for many of our organizations to hold their annual conventions and conferences. After all, Haiti is living proof of the capacity of black men to order their lives efficiently.

Nigeria's government, composed of native blacks, has significantly enough, just barred all Communists and fellow-travelers from holding any office on the ground that they represent a foreign power. This follows closely the directive handed down by Price Minister Kwame Nkrumah of the Gold Coast. The African leaders know the score.

SMART move made by New Rochelle, N. Y. High School which last week invited student representatives from Baltimore and Washington, D. C. high schools on an all-expense-paid trip to the New York City so they might see just how well integration works in the public schools. Similar invitations from other Northern school boards to Southern student leaders would be extremely educational at this time. NAACP, please note.

Milford, Del. difficulties might have been averted if a similar public relations job had been done. That will all be ironed out in time, but we should learn how to lay the groundwork for drastic reforms. However, the arrest of Bryant Bowles, head of the National Association for the Advancement of White People, should go a long way toward educating the Milford residents.

Dr. Max Yergan incurred the criticism of many "leaders" several months ago when he declared in a U. S. News and World Report interview that the Communist menace in Africa was great. Now comes Oden Meeker, a white writer, in the Saturday Evening Post, pin-pointing similar charges with facts and figures. Let's see how many will jump him as exaggerating.

AFRICA, as a matter of fact, is one of the main targets of the Kremlin conspiracy, whose agents, trained in Moscow, constitute a menace to progress in the great continent. I documented this in 1947 in the Catholic Information Society's pamphlet, "The Red Drive in the Colonies." When will some of our "authorities" learn the facts of life?

Progress report from Virginia shows its Medical Society's House of Delegates finally accepting Negro physicians as members. Another nail in segregation's coffin!

AT THE same time the Defense Department announced the abolition of the last of the all-Negro units and that integration has been carried out ahead of schedule. Who would have believed this ten years ago?

U. S. Information Agency desperately trying to fill 109 vacant jobs in its overseas staff paying from $4,000 to $13,000, plus allowances. Ages from 21 to 56. Locations in Europe, Asia and the South Seas. High qualifications and good health required. Here's Miss Opportunity knocking again! Who's ready?

ADRIEN MALEBRANCHE Haiti Tourist Bureau, Shop 44, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N. Y., still asking for used clothing for the 500,000 Haitian homeless hurricane refugees. Send it at once, the need is great. Money for food should go to the Haitian Red Cross, Port-au-Prince. Surely there are few who cannot contribute.

Uncle Sam is pondering what to do when King Tribhubana of Nepal arrives with his two wives, since polygamists are barred from entry. The king has two wives. This is a laugh, what with all the Asians and Africans who have been visiting the country (many of them with scores of wives). Americans just have to interfere with other people's business. If any man can stand more than one wife, just let him alone to suffer!

Pageant Calls Schuyler One of 'Top' Anti-Reds

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. p. 3

NEW YORK — Pageant Magazine has chosen Courier Associate Editor George Schuyler one of the nation's six real top anti-Communists, after a special poll conducted to reveal the men most responsible for keeping the Red scourge from gaining a foothold in America.

Schuyler

Schuyler, brilliant editorial writer and scholar, was selected because of his writings aimed at blocking Communist attempts to exploit the Negro, the most important minority in the nation.

Said Pageant, "That they (Communists) have been spectacularly unsuccessful in turning Negroes against their white 'masters' is in considerable part because of one man, George Schuyler. The Reds started their hate war in 1920. At the same time, Schuyler began speaking and writing in rebuttal. He's been at it, on a world-wide scale, ever since."

Sat. 11-13-54

The anti-Communist experts were drawn from many fields, law and law enforcement, the labor movement, religious groups of all faiths, industry, government service and journalism, and included Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, Jay Lovestone, Benjamin Mandel, Frederick Woltman and J. Edgar Hoover.

The article appears in the November issue of Pageant.

BASCOM JOHNSON, 76, retired associate director of the American Social Hygiene Association, and an international authority on illegal traffic in women, recently died in North Carolina.

A lifelong opponent of organized vice, he was one of the leaders in the successful fight to close down San Francisco's Barbary Coast. The sad news sent me galloping down Memory Lane, back to the day after New Year's 1913, when I first saw and heard that glamorous stretch of Pacific Street famed as the Barbary Coast.

We had just been paid at Fort Lawton, outside Seattle, had detrained that day prior to departure for Hawaii, and we were definitely ready for what Frisco had to offer, which was plenty and I do mean just that.

At that time the wave of reform in the USA was just picking up steam, but had not made much headway.

Every town and city of any importance had a thriving "district" where music, gambling, dancing and assorted joys were unconfined. Sin in capital letters was for sale at whatever the traffic would bear (and it bore plenty), unmolested by the cops and revivalists as long as it stayed within the "district." Outside those bounds the ladies of the evening, gamblers, madames, procurers and pimps were barred, rarely ventured and even more rarely lived.

Pittsburgh Pa.

A respectable neighborhood in those days meant just that. The "district" denizens acted, looked and dressed differently. It was a world apart, but men did not lose prestige when they entered this world for a fling. In this sense America was more European than it is today.

ONE HEARD the Barbary Coast and saw its blazing lights before one reached it. Dives were side by side for blocks and in each there was continuous, raucous ragtime music, except for brief periods when it stopped to enable the dancing girls to cadge drinks from the patrons.

The more elaborate dance places had a mezzanine balcony around three sides for the spectators, and when the Texas Tommy dancers completed a session on the maple, silver and gold coins rained down upon them, causing a wild scramble. Many of the dancers were so good that they found employment on the Keith, Proctor and Pantages circuits.

Theatre people, tourists and others came all the way to the Pacific Coast to see the new dances expertly performed: i.e., the Texas Tommy, the Grizzly Bear and the Bunny Hug.

WITH ALL due regard for Storyville in New Orleans and Twelfth Street in Kansas City, the orchestras on the Barbary Coast were tops in playing the emergent jazz.

In the midst of all this pandemonium of syncopation, the commercial gals openly plied their trade—and they only had to go upstairs or around the corner. Cops eyed it all indulgently. Pimps in John B. Stetson hats, fingertip coats, toothpick shoes and gold coins swinging from their watch fobs scanned the scene with cold appraisal.

Those were the days when one-hundred proof, bonded liquor was $1 a full quart, and drinks accordingly priced. We hadn't yet "won" two wars and the New-Fair Deal to boost debts and taxes.

IN THE basements, craps, blackjack, three-card monte and stud poker thrived through the night, with gin-voiced bankers presiding over the games with glistening revolvers at their right hands and calling the dice in sing-song tones.

It seemed that no one slept at night, save in an opium den or one of the multitude of "houses" . . .

Well, it's all over now (openly). Frisco "cleaned up" for the Pan-Pacific Exposition in 1915. The madames and gals scattered to the Far Pacific where the pickings were bigger, better and safer.

Mr. Johnson and his friends won, but I think the pleasure-seekers lost a lot of glamour, fun and excitement, spiced, mayhap, with occasional danger.

Desegregation issue is moving dramatically to a climax. Southern white officials are urging the U. S. Supreme Court to "go slow" and to give the South "the greatest latitude," as if they hadn't had it all along, with well-known results. 'McCarthyism,' Is Termed a Synonym for Exposure

FOR THE PAST twenty years there has been an increasingly desperate and hysterical campaign to halt by any and every means the exposure of Communists, fellow travelers and assorted totalitarian dupes who have wormed their way into government, education, labor, industry, entertainment and the church.

SCHUYLER

Presidents Roosevelt and Truman gave aid and comfort to these foes of exposure, and behind them and helping to shape their thinking, was a whole corps of miseducated so-called intellectuals captivated by various Fascist schemes to remake American civilization into the Soviet image.

Americans have been traditionally fascinated by schemes and plans for social perfectionism. In the early days, dozens of Utopian communities were launched and vanished here.

Almost always they were started by weird Christian sects or little groups of theorists eager to take a fling at free love and primitive communism. They simply ate up Rousseauism, St. Simonism, Fourierism, Anarchism and Marxism as these appeared.

They gurgled with glee over Bellamy's "Looking Backward" and devoured with bug-eyed appreciation the "Communist Manifesto" of Marx and Engels. To the egg-heads offended by the Strenuous Life philosophy of T. R. Roosevelt and the rugged individualism of the Robber Barons, no literature surpassed the Planned Economies envisioned by "The Republic" of Plato and other early totalitarian scripts. Outraged by the gaucheries, injustices and evils of the free economy, they favored a slave economy drawn to blueprint, based on optimistic guesses and clothed in the deceptive garments of equality.

They fell for every political quackery that came down the pike: such as Greenbackism, Free Silver, Socialism, Syndicalism and finally the infantile paralysis of communism.

On the eve of World War I the Socialists were polling a million votes without the ballots of women, and would have garnered more if so many of the egg-heads had not become intoxicated by Bull Moose-ism and the New Freedom. The Intercollegiate Socialist Society had cells in every hall of learning, the AVANT GARDE hallroom boys and girls of Greenwich Village and similar squalid Bohemias gobbled anarcho-socialist pamphlets between rutting and writing. Others, up to their ears in "progressive" education theories out of Europe, yearned for the Revolution when they could force their views on a none-too-reluctant public. But the Great Day seemed remote. Socialism, although eminently desired, was largely a distant vision—like a truck driver dreaming boozily of Marilyn Monroe.

Then came Wilson's Crusade simultaneously with the overthrow of Czarism and the Fascist counter-revolution against Russian democracy led by the Lenin-Trotsky cutthroats, and again the "intellectuals" were agog. Like a gang of primitive Christian zealots who truck to a hilltop to await the Second Coming some Thursday night, these Americans (having been shown "The Way" by the "Ten Days That Shook the World") panted to Sovietize the U. S. A. and put all their social theories into practice.

The Roosevelt Fascism with its various totalitarian devices and schemes, was the answer to the egg-heads' prayers. They swallowed the alphabetical soup avidly, swarmed into Government and education, and promoted every politico-social fallacy designed to destroy the freedom they publicly espoused.

They devoured every Moscow line, having acquired a taste for totalitarianism under the mask of reform. It seemed only right to promote anything the Kremlin proposed. So, did a generation of "intellectuals" betray their heritage for a mess of spurious doctrines.

Inevitably the day of reckoning came, although these people in every way worked assiduously within and for the Communist conspiracy, until it triumphed with grabbing of one-fourth of the human race, the theft of radar, bomb-sights, atomic know-how and top secret documents.

An aroused and indignant America demanded that this subversive element be exposed and punished. In response Congressional committees started digging, followed by the inevitable outcry of those involved in the conspiracy (or whose friends were) and feared exposure.

Senator Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin was the loudest, most dramatic, most courageous, most persistent of the many patriots determined to save America from the fate of the 800 million behind the Iron Curtain.

So the whole, powerful machinery to protect the guilty, gullible and indiscreet aides of the Kremlin has mobilized against, and concentrated their fire upon him. By killing him off, they hope to attain their goal of stopping ALL investigation of Commie infiltration and subversion, and thus save the bacon of their buddies and themselves.

It is as simple as that. It is easy to see the motives of the formidable corps of writers, broadcasters, and "educators" who scream so hysterically about stopping McCarthyism, which is just a synonym for exposure.

What Will Our Liberal Apostles Have to Say, Now?

ONLY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT getting lockjaw could have pleased me more than the testimony recently of former ambassador and State Department official, Spruille Braden, before a Congressional Committee. He not only vindicated McCarthy by swearing to the leftist skullduggeries of policy-making officials while he was in the Department but, more ominously, asserted that cells of "Little Soviets" still infest the agency, for all the change of Administration from "donkey" to "elephant."

SCHUYLER

Now this is the "McCarthyism" which the "intellectuals," illiberals and self-appointed "progressive spokesmen have been attacking since 1950 when the Wisconsin Senator first said the same thing Spruille Braden said in 1954. Only Joe waved lists and named names. An infinitesimal number of persons have been unjustly named by McCarthy, and since he started his rampage against internal subversion, scores of employes he named have been discharged or permitted to resign. In an infantry unit McCarthy would be named expert rifleman on the basis of his bull's eyes. And he scored despite the powerful opposition of the Democrat Administration from Truman down and the most concentrated smear campaign in history. Now comes Spruille Braden confirming McCarthy.

OWEN LATTIMORE, of "Chinese agrarians" ill-fame, was first to coin the term "McCarthyism" and the Daily Worker (which was as interested as the Johns Hopkins professor in halting all probes of Red infiltration) promptly took it up. Immediately it became the rallying cry of the Communists' less forthright friends—the anti-anti-Communists, "progressives" and illiberals — ever ready to run interference for trapped members of the guilty generation that sought to sell us down the Volga in the name of Planned Economy—and almost succeeded.

Will some of these frightened eggheads now coin the term "Bradenism" for former State Department officials who, like A. A. Berle and Joseph Grew, let the world know what went on inside our most sensitive and influential department? Will they comment at all? At this writing the chief anti-McCarthy sheet, the New York Times (which even manages to drag "McCarthyism" into discussion of every public question however remote) has refrained from editorial comment. Will there be a campaign to smear the ex-diplomat who aroused the ire of Juan Peron?

WHAT WILL be the comment of such loud and persistent Negro anti-McCarthyites as Walter White, Earl Brown, Judge Delany, et al? Will they denounce Braden as a liar or apologize to Senator McCarthy? So far most Negro columnists and commentators have simply repeated all the "McCarthyism" smears perviously voiced by their ideological masters of the Roosevelt-Truman-New-Fear Deal stripe now largely holed up in the Americans for Democratic (Demogogic!) Action.

That they have made some headway in corrupting the thinking of other Negroes is indicated by the increasingly frequent, gratuitous attacks on McCarthyism by resolutions passed at NAACP conferences and other gatherings. This is understandable since there are top brass of the NAACP who could not survive a security check. They, along with some of our reverend clergy, have been in more fronts than a burlesque house brassiere.

ONE IS nauseated by the hypocrisy of these anti-anti-Communists of all colors and persuasions who are suddenly professing such deep concern for the civil rights of Malenkovists hailed before committees probing the Communist conspiracy.

Why were they unconcerned in 1940 when the young U. S. code clerk, Tyler Kent, was railroaded at United States behest to a British prison for seven years because he kept copies of the warmongering cables between Roosevelt and Churchill (not yet Prime Minister) and was planning to turn them over to the Republicans? Kent's civil rights were unmercifully mauled, but the "liberals" kept mum. They wanted nothing to interfere with FDR's drive to war which he was then vociferously telling the people "again and again and again" that he would keep out of.

THEY WERE similarly silent over the civil rights of General Short and Admiral Kimmel scapegoats of the Pearl Harbor catastrophe engineered by Roosevelt and his brain trust. They were taken by surprise because they were never alerted to the closeness of war; but, as Lady Eleanor has naively revealed, nobody in the White House was surprised. Naturally not, since FDR through Hull had made attack inevitable by the ultimatum of Nov. 25, and the Japanese code having been broken, the White House knew exactly when the attack would come. At least Eleanor knew where she was that night. Marshall never could remember—or so he said.

Short and Kimmel were never given any day in court, but the "liberals" never rushed to their rescue as they did to the aid of Hiss, Lattimore, Remington, Field, Truman and others involved in the Red conspiracy.

Well, now that Braden has vindicated McCarthy, what will our "liberal" apostles of intellectual honesty have to say?

Biggest problem in Dixie right now is to get Negroes to become eligible to vote. There is very little opposition save in some remote regions . . . With plenty of work and plenty of money almost everywhere in the South, next fall's Negro vote should be a big one. In a score of areas where that vote has appreciably increased, there have been marked changes in race relations, and the Negro's ballot is being solicited. That's good.

Pittsburgh

NEGRO candidates for office are stepping up for consideration in the oddest places. Many of them will garner many votes from whites as well as Negroes. Indeed, some of them are likely to do better in the South than they would in the North. Sounds paradoxical, but it is true. A lot of Southern whites today would rather vote for a capable, honest black man than an incapable white rascal. Remember that vote in Atlanta?

Sat. 4-24-54

It is not too much to expect to see, with the next five years, a Negro Congressman from the South again; not supported by Federal bayonets as in Reconstruction Days, but by the ballots of the majority of his constituency. That is implicit in the goal of full freedom by 1963, so cannot be regarded as unwarranted optimism.

IN 1930 a fusilade of horse laughs greeted me when I prophesied that some day colored folk would rule Manhattan Island.

Of course, it required no unusual prescience to predict this development because even the mentally retarded could see that with Negroes pouring into the fabulous borough and white folks fleeing to the suburbs, it would not be many years before "boots" would be in control.

Mr. Schuyler

So today, the Manhattan population is considerably darkened, the colored vote is much more potent, the sepia folk have spread all over the borough, and the Borough President is a Negro.

ACCORDING TO the New York City Department of Planning, the town will lose 720,000 whites by 1970, as compared with 1950, and the non-white and Puerto Rican groups will constitute 28 per cent as against 13 per cent in 1950.

It is predicted by the Planning Department that between 1960 and 1970, there will be a net exodus of 650,000 whites.

Considering that the darker brethren are more prolific than the whites, we can reasonably expect that by 1970, the Mayor of New York may be an American Negro.

MOREOVER, NEW YORK will not be unique because something of the kind is taking place in many of our large cities.

As the colored brethren invade, the white brethren who can get away, make tracks for the suburbs.

Many of the Negroes would follow them if it were not for the canny realtors who so far have successfully excluded Negroes from the new garden cities surrounding the metropolises.

Since Negroes have not broken this real estate barrier (and show little indication of doing so), this will leave the center of our big cities as the sole possession of a swarm of Negroes living in skyscraper public housing projects with a few areas inhabited by a few thousand wealthy whites, big office buildings, theatres, hotels, etc. Most of the municipal functionaries will be colored, along with policemen, firemen, and all the rest.

There are plenty of indications of this. Many of the "better" department stores and factories are moving their operations already to the suburbs.

The vast expanses of individual residences on the outskirts of our cities are mostly lily-white, and the development of color television will eventually destroy most of the theatres, even as talkies did in the Thirties.

THE OMINOUS thing about all this is that the perfection of atomic and hydrogen bombs propelled by guided missiles of uncanny accuracy makes our large cities sitting ducks.

No Maginot Wall of radar installations can stop, or even detect, these guided missiles streaking through the stratosphere and exploding unannounced with incredible devastation.

No fleets of fighter planes can stop them any more than they stopped them over London during World War II. In World War III, it will be worse.

Obviously, the enemy targets will be big ones: i. e., the cities. No bombs will be wasted on small towns and villages, where at most there will be only two or three factories.

THOSE WHO saw the devastation wrought on big European cities know that it was the center of the metropolises that got the works. I noticed in Berlin and Frankfurt that many suburbs were generally untouched.

It will be even worse here because an atomic bomb will destroy everything within a radius of five miles and the accuracy of a guided missile is within 5 per cent.

This means, my friends, that the colored communities will be the first to be destroyed, completely, while the people living on the outskirts of town in lily-white garden cities will either be unscathed or in a better position to flee to less radioactive areas.

So . . . what about the darker brethren scattering themselves over the countryside in smaller towns or exploring the possibilities of Idaho, Wyoming or Alaska? The future atomic war is, I might add, not far off.

New York's Coordinating Council for Negro Performers has launched a new campaign for more and better jobs for Negroes in radio and TV. Only one Negro is employed for every 200 whites in TV. Negro market of $15 billion is consistently ignored. The 375,000 Negro TV set owners in New York look almost in vain for a colored face. Negro parts are written out of scripts or rarely included where they could be. Only two or three Negro musicians have jobs, but no Negro bands, and no regular programs of Negro classic or popular singers. Some shows use occasional Negro talent. Otherwise we're frozen out.

REAL culprits are not the sponsors, but the agencies, directors and writers who, to satisfy their own prejudices, eliminate Negroes and then blame the alleged reaction of the South as the reason for the exclusion. The sooner Negro owners of TV and radio register a loud squawk to program sponsors the sooner will some attention be paid to this flagrant discrimination. We have much power, so let's use it!

Supreme Court has a month's respite, but then must return to the knotty question of deciding how public schools shall be desegregated. What it decides will satisfy extremists on neither side. Its remedy will be gradualistic, because it's still true, as Mr. Dooley said, that the Supreme Court always follows the election returns. And there is no evidence that a clear majority of the inhabitants of the areas affected want integration, although some are more willing than others.

During the last campaign, Democrat calamity howlers claimed hard times were just around the corner. Actually, the cost-of-living index has dropped for the third month to the lowest point since June, 1953, while the Labor Department reports the job rise continuing. Wonder what the donkey boys, ADA, CIO-PAC and assorted collectivists have to say to that!

ALARMING and fascinating is Daniel James' well-written and documented book, "Red Design for the Americas: Guatemalan Prelude" (John Day, $4.50).

It is a must for every thoughtful person who wants to know the technique of taking over a country with a handful of Marxist zealots instructed in Soviet methods.

Mr. Schuyler

There has been so much nonsense circulated about the significance of the number of Communists in a country that it is refreshing to learn from Mr. James that this is unimportant.

The Communists have been an insignificant minority in every country they have captured, and the Red control in Guatemala followed much the pattern elsewhere.

A HARD core of trained Reds wormed their way into labor and government, worked industriously on the problems and prejudices of the people with the same type of slogans and programs found successful elsewhere behind the Iron Curtain, chose some "devil" on which to blame everything —(in this case US "imperialism")—with the little "devils" being the landowners, ranchers and small business people.

By whipping up nationalism, class antagonisms and racial prejudices, the Guatemalan Reds got full control within ten years without firing a shot.

Naturally, there were jailings, torturings and beatings with occasional assassinations.

MR. JAMES carefully charts the course of this "revolution." Not only does he have all the bare factual bones of the story, but he skillfully clothes them in the raiment of brilliant analysis.

You know these Reds not only as names but as individuals, and you are made as familiar with the social and economic forces, the political maneuvers, the international entanglements, and the topography of this picturesque country of three million souls as if you were there.

One conclusion strengthened from reading this book is that these proletarian revolutions are not proletarian at all, but essentially lower middle-class—small army officers, left-wing professors and students, disgruntled politicians, social theorists, all eager to help themselves upward by playing upon the emotions, frustrations, ignorance, prejudice and poverty of the masses.

Look around you right in this country at the active leftists who are of the same type!

MR. JAMES makes a very unique contribution in his chapter dealing with agrarian "reform."

The overwhelming majority of Guatemalans are unmixed Indians who are despised by the Ladinos (mixed breeds and whites) and do the work on the plantations and ranches. There has never been any land hunger in Guatemala.

Previous rulers vainly sought in every way to get the Indians to take up unused land.

Large areas of the country are almost uninhabited, as is true, for that matter, in British Guiana and neighboring countries. Only 9,797 of Guatemala's 45,000 square miles are in possession of individuals. Some districts are actually unexplored.

temalan Reds made an agrarian "revolution" from the top, whipped up the prejudice and avarice of the Indian masses, took over much of the lands of the United Fruit Company, and soon had the yokels burning plantations, killing cattle, striking for impossibly high wages, and otherwise following the familiar Soviet pattern.

West Indians will be interested in the author's chapter on the Caribbean Conspiracy in which he tours the various islands in, and countries around, the Caribbean, and touches on the extent of the infiltration of Marxist-Leninist ideology and practice.

He reveals, as I discovered, that only the Dominican Republic and possibly Haiti are free of the menace today.

What was done in Guatemala by a handful of Reds is going on today in almost all Latin American lands.

The success of this conspiracy means tough times for the Latin masses and complete destruction of the shaky economic structures everywhere down there, to say nothing of posing a grave danger to the United States.

NAACP's Thurgood Marshall scoffs at the threat of Southern segregationists to defeat the Supreme Court edict by establishing private schools to replace public ones. He's probably right. But the biggest threat to desegregation is in perpetuating Negro residential districts. Some way must be found to defeat the banker-builder syndicate.

SOLUTION to that threat lies in the establishment and expansion of Negro-owned building and loan, savings and commercial banks, thus enabling us to by-pass the present roadblock. Ironically, many of the white banks that snoot Negroes have millions of dollars of our money in their coffers which they use to aid the other fellows' nefarious schemes! What are we waiting for?

Our leaders who used to belong to the Civil Rights Congress should have found the testimony of undercover New York City policewoman, Mrs. Mildred Blauvelt, before the Subversive Activities Control Board last week, disturbing. She says the outfit was infiltrated and financed by Commies. Having spent eight years of her police service in the outfit, she should know. Question: why didn't our "leaders" know it? You know, I could name names!

It was a great Democrat victory and congratulations go to the ADA, CIO-PAC, the left-wing Committee for a More Effective Congress and the New Deal Republicans in the White House palace guard. THE REV. Norman Vincent Peale recently stirred up a hornet's nest of criticism for counselling a colored girl not to marry a white youth because he didn't think the match would end happily for either party and that "people generally, both Negro and white, do not look with favor upon interracial marriage."

Mr. Schuyler

Now that the uproar has subsided and emotions have cooled, let us consider the matter with the calm befitting so serious a subject.

I have been observing interracial marriages since the turn of the century, have heard about many I have not seen, and have had extensive correspondence with numerous persons contemplating the step or already in such a union.

In addition I have read extensively in the literature on the subject. I think I know something about it.

If this couple marries it is entirely possible that, as Dr. Peale thinks, they may not be happy.

They might not be happy if both were of the same color, as the records of our domestic relations and divorce courts silently attest.

Moreover, a state of perpetual happiness is only possible for a select few of the insane and assorted cretins and zombies who imagine themselves to be gods or royalty. The rest, as Mark Twain observed, are as unhappy as the sane.

The best any rational person desires is to be complemented so that the two individuals become psychologically, culturally and socially one.

This is unattainable by a single person, male or female, the two sexes having been created to supply each other's lacks. The best we can hope for in marriage is mutual satisfaction and emotional security. That can be achieved whether the man and woman belong to the same chromatic group or opposite ones.

Mutual adjustment is a much bigger problem among those of unlike culture than those of unlike color.

Marriage is likely to be more satisfactory and lasting where the husband and wife belong to the same social class and have similar educational backgrounds.

Unions based almost entirely on sexual attraction are hanging by a slender thread, although admittedly the lack of such affinity is the actual (although concealed) cause of many separations, desertions and divorces.

Sometimes even children cannot hold them together—and another juvenile delinquent is in the making.

However, granting all this, I do not believe from my experience and observation that colored and white individuals should intermarry [illegible] they have the guts to stand up to the social disapproval which they are bound to encounter and the restrictions, rebuffs and difficulties they are apt to meet.

It is a world of reality they are entering not a land of beautiful dreams. Where I have found couples of opposite colors to be of the right stuff, I have always urged them to marry, and more power to them. Otherwise they had better make a more orthodox union more befitting timid souls.

On the other hand, there is no point in criticizing Dr. Peale for stating the truth that such marriages are not looked upon with favor by the ruck of whites and blacks in this country (nor in most other countries).

If they were, there would be more of them, whereas they are actually few and far between, even in areas and countries where there are no laws against them.

In this connection I'll wager there are more interracial marriages in, say, Cleveland, than there are in all Latin America (where jim-crow laws are unknown).

Caste plays its part everywhere regardless of color, so does intra-sex rivalry and jealousy. A dark Malay in Singapore would no more think of marrying an almost-white Eurasian than he would flying.

Personally, I delight in seeing a well-balanced interracial couple, but admittedly, the millennium in mixed marriage is a very long way off.

Wherein He Explains His 'Turn for the Worse'

R. C. WILSON of Toledo, Ohio, reproaches me for having once supported and advocated socialist doctrines, but now singing the praises of free enterprise. This he regards as a turn for the worse.

SCHUYLER

Likewise, he takes exception to some of the critical remarks I have made about labor unions and the right to strike.

It is quite true that I once supported and advocated socialist doctrines. As a matter of fact I was educational director of Local Syracuse of the Socialist party back in 1921 and 1922, when I was also a member in good standing of the Hod Carriers and Building Laborers Union (an organization, incidentally, which reportedly held no election of national officers for fifty years).

With much of the socialist critique of our society I agree, although in general it seems that society is much more complex than the socialists would have us believe.

I read very early not only Marx and Engels' Communist Manifesto, but manfully waded through such dreary tomes as "Das Kapital," "The Class Struggle," "The Ancient Lowly," etc., etc., after working all day mixing cement, climbing ladders with hods of brick or washing thousands of dishes in some hash foundry.

I have wasted uncounted hours at local meetings discussing socialist theories and how best to indoctrinate the masses. I have yelled from soapboxes and ladders about the iniquities of capitalism. I have written, sold and distributed leaflets.

Post 1-30-54

I have sat through union meetings with eight or ten present out of a membership of 500 and watched the ruling clique do its stuff. I am familiar with the history and practices of organized labor in this country and elsewhere.

I rather think I know the score, but then I thought so in 1921, too. In one respect, however, I don't think I have changed: that is to say, I have always been a skeptic.

To me nothing is sacred or above investigation, and sentimentality plays a very minor role in shaping my opinions. Then, too, I have always been keenly aware that there are millions of things I do not know, and I am always trying to find out.

Nor have I changed in my propensity to air my conclusions about anything, no matter how unpopular and unorthodox those conclusions might be. This has riled many of my friends and acquaintances, and undoubtedly will rile more and more, since only a few people seem capable of dumping fallacies as readily as I. Certain human associations grow up around sets of ideas and opinions, and most of us are reluctant, even for the sake of truth, to sever connections which we have found pleasing.

If all one's friends and acquaintances are socialists, laborites, politicians or whatnot, it is not any simple matter to incur their ill-will by challenging the concepts by which they live. Most people choose to remain silent rather than do so, but I regard this as cowardly although undoubtedly expedient.

While, as the Socialists (and the Communists) assert, there is a class struggle going on, there is also class cooperation and class mobility. While the condition of the masses of workers under capitalism is rather Spartan, it has been worse under all other social systems, and is the most dire in precisely those countries with Socialist or Communist governments.

It does not follow that the masses will be better off if all the business, industry, transportation and communication are owned and operated by the people: i. e., by the state (which means by the politicians).

Not only is such a method of conducting economic life more wasteful and inefficient, but without the incentives for personal gain it leads to stagnation. Socialism can work in very small countries with primitive economies, but even there ideas stagnate under the fell influence of intellectual conformity.

How dreadfully dull to live in a perfect society, without fears, without struggle, without prejudices, without causes, without antagonists and without change! That is why the idea of heaven has never intrigued me.

Labor unions, like all organizations, are composed of imperfect men, no more and no less honest, pure-minded and unselfish than others. They are often right and sometimes wrong. They are not and should not be above criticism, and it will be sad day for all when they are.

Nobody writing in the Negro press and few, if any, in the white press have more frequently and consistently written (mostly favorably) on the activities and problems of organized labor, and the need for labor organizing than have I.

Nevertheless, I am aware of the shortcomings, racketeering, hustling, thievery and dictatorial tactics in this field, and have said so. I believe workers must be free, not only from employers' exploitation, but from exploitation by labor leaders as well.

There is still racial prejudice and discrimination in many labor unions and this should be stopped. There are too many unnecessary strikes which may build labor leaders' prestige, but are certainly hard on the striking workers, the economy, and the general public.

I notice that organized labor in the South has been generally silent on the great issues of educational segregation and fair employment practices. Should one remain silent about that? I certainly have no such intention.

The 18-year-old voting age advocated by President Eisenhower has stirred up much discussion. Governor Dewey is doubtful about its wisdom, others are skeptical, even though the experience of Georgia with the lower age limit has been encouraging. Of course there are some curmudgeons who insist that the lowest age should be 28 rather than 18, considering the serious questions the electorate has to consider these days.

GOVERNOR TALMADGE still playing to the wool hat gallery, wants to use the militia and the state police to maintain segregated public schools. It would be interesting if Mr. Gallup conducted a poll in Georgia to determine just what proportion of Georgians are opposed to educational integration. The results might be surprising.

ALASKA'S Negroes, incidentally, are growing more powerful politically. The Governor of Alaska has just appointed a Negro, George C. Anderson of Anchorage, a delegate from the territory to the Secretary of Labor's conference in Washington, to draft a labor bill to present to Congress. This marks the first time a Negro has served the territory. The Governor is a Republican, and presence of Negroes. A colored woman, Mrs. McSmith, on the other hand, is a Democrat.

Senate committee packaging Hawaii with Alaska for statehood has probably killed the chances of both for this session. The South doesn't want statehood for either of the largely colored territories, figuring the new Senators would upset the civil rights balance which is now delicate.

A Scholarly Defense of the Term 'Negro'

WE SEEM to have a great faculty for concentrating on non-essentials, and this is no better illustrated than in the long debate over what we should call ourselves and insist that we be called.

There have been advocates of "colored," "Ethiopian," "Afro-American," "Aframerican," "Ethican," "Anglo-African," "Hamite," "Bronze American," "Negro," "Moor" and other, stranger designations, usually thought up to avoid use of "Negro."

SCHUYLER

Many of the so-called black Nationalists and fervid students of African life are very hostile to the use of the term. Last week I got a release from the African League, 640 Arnow Avenue, New York 67, N. Y., signed by one Father Komanno Jomo, in which the issue is dragged out again.

THIS RELEASE urges the use of African-American instead of Negro because the latter "was cast upon us by the slave masters to destroy, totally, our African identity. The satanic purpose was to kill within us any knowledge of our own history, our culture, our true God; to kill within us any love for the very font of our being: Africa; to kill within us any urge for common UNITY with our black brothers in Africa and the world over."

"Negro," he goes on, "connotes a history devoid of any elements of glory, manhood, heroism, Godliness. It connotes a history that begins in the stench of the slave market and develops to the knot of the lynch rope through lying and stealing and the raping of white women. In essence, the name is an ugly lie and synonymous with 'nigger'."

THIS STRIKES me as being as far-fetched as it is inaccurate. In the first place it is what a group has in power, ability, resourcefulness and courage that counts, not what it is called.

When Angles brought in chains to Rome were called Britons, the name had the same connotation Father Jomo says "Negro" has. In the course of time the meaning completely changed. Why? Because Britons grew powerful, wealthy and almost ruled the world.

The Slavs are another case in point. "Slav" and "slave" were once synonymous, all the Slavic peoples being enslaved by the Germans, Turks, Tartars and other conquerors.

Today, with the Slavs contesting for the rule of the world, everybody forgets their miserable background as slaves and serfs. You can stop calling the inmates of our prisons "convicts" but that would not alter their status.

Calling a maniac in a padded cell "sane" would not change his mentality, his habitat nor society's opinion of him.

THE AFRICANS have traditionally called each other by their tribal or national designations for milleniums but they have enslaved and sold each other depending upon the fortunes of war and the gold to be made.

The term "Negro" was used first by the Romans to designate the blacks who came there from the regions of the Niger River, and who obviously were different from the Egyptians and Ethiopians with whom the Romans were more familiar. It was thus descriptive rather than derogatory.

In the ninth century a noted African wrote in Arabic an essay on "The Superiority of the Negro Over the Whites" which was easy to prove by the corresponding status of the two "races" at that time.

Then, whites were playing a very minor role in world affairs while Negroes controlled powerful kingdoms in Africa, were trading as far north as Scandinavia and as far east as India, and dominated Portugal, Spain, southern France, Sicily and North Africa.

Indeed, one of Mohammad's chief lieutenants in the amazingly successful Moslem wars of expansion was a famous Negro general, Bilal.

"NEGRO" CAME into more general use in the sixteenth century when European contacts extended beyond North Africa and Ethiopia to Negro Africa proper; and observation of the people rendered "Ethiopian" and "Moor" inaccurate as a descriptive for all dark people. It has gradually come into general use.

Contrary to Father Jomo's belief, there is more knowledge of Negro history, and culture, more racial pride and more of a sense of unity with other black people in the United States, where the "Negro" designation is mostly widely used and accepted, than anywhere else I know.

Indeed, Negroes here have been so interested in their African brethren that they have contributed millions of dollars for schools, missions and clinics in West Africa, South Africa and the West Indies. Not a dime has come from foreign Negroes to help us.

WHEN ARTHUR RAMOS wrote on black folk in Brazil, he titled his book "The Negro in Brazil."

When a group of black intellectuals invited me to a party in Rio in 1948, it was sponsored by "The Negro Experimental Theatre." With the growth of nationalism in Africa and the moves toward self-government, I notice that big U. S. and English dailies have gradually shifted to using the word "Negro" rather than the usual tribal designations.

This is as it should be since black people have achieved an unprecedented racial and spiritual unity which is reflected everywhere I have gone or read about.

There are not any legal racial lines in progressive Uruguay, and there are but 50,000 Negroes in the whole country; but when I went to a movie theatre in Montevideo to see the Louis-Walcott fight picture, it was so crowded with Negroes that I thought I was in Harlem!

WE HAD better get it straight that integration or no integration in education, the primary goal of the colored brethren today must be more preparation to take fuller advantage of the personnel needs of American industry, commerce, finance, science, etc.

More important than being integrated into public education institutions is learning how to do well what the American economy needs done.

Mr. Schuyler

We have too many people seeking to be bachelors of art in education, sociology and social work and too few trained to take advantage of the opportunities already available and becoming increasingly more so in our national economic life.

We have a whole swarm of people who have had some schooling, but are functional illiterates; people who cannot spell, cannot figure, are ignorant of geography, and are quite incapable of doing a first-rate job as service employes.

Moreover, this cannot be easily blamed on segregated education, since many of our most capable Negroes holding prominent positions received their early training in Negro schools and colleges.

OF COURSE, every intelligent Negro wants to see American public education desegregated, but when this is accomplished (as I believe it will be eventually) there arises the necessity of preparing to be of value to the economy of this country.

It is not enough just to be able to attend mixed schools. We must, to survive in this land, have more exceptionally trained young men and women, and we must use our money and influence to provide scholarships and training for the more capable ones.

Otherwise, we shall remain in the category of last hired and first fired, not because we are colored, but because we are unable to meet and beat competition.

Tens of thousands of colored boys and girls have attended integrated public schools and colleges, but nevertheless do not have the training to command the better-paid jobs. Too many have been satisfied to learn the bare rudiments, drop out in the second or third year of high school (if they go that far) and then grammer about the difficulty of getting a well-paying job.

They can no longer blame race prejudice and discrimination for their predicament.

JUST LAST week, I learned that one big corporation has announced its readiness to hire trained Negroes in electronics at salaries ranging from $125 to $300 weekly, and with one position open paying $15,000 annually.

I know personally that any colored girl who is a competent secretary can get the highest rate of pay with some of the largest businesses in the country.

If, in addition, she knows another language well, there is no limit to where she can go. Such jobs are going begging. Office work today is largely machine work and whoever is expert in operating business machines need not worry about unemployment.

It is becoming increasingly embarrassing to many Urban League industrial secretaries to be asked to supply highly trained workers and not be able to do so.

This does not mean there are no longer obstacles confronting qualified job-seeker who is highly capable. There most definitely are, but the opportunities already in existence exceed the number of Negroes qualified.

WHEN ONE considers the night schools, training courses, trade schools and other such facilities available (many of them charging no tuition), there is no excuse for our unreadiness. Business is booming in America and will continue to flourish. We have a wonderful opportunity now to break down barriers by rendering skillful and conscientious service. Instead of complaining about our handicaps, we need to emphasize our growing employment opportunities and to urge our youngsters to select very early what they intend to do in life and to prepare well for it. Those who have done so are increasingly reaping their reward.

BACK in mid-May, 1949, when I was marooned for the day by the torrential tropical downpour in the shabby Hotel Des Palmistes in Cayenne, French Guiana, I wrote a column of reflections and predictions on the coming of communism in the USA without the aid of the Communists.

Mr. Schuyler

I held that even if there were no Communists and their swarm of fellow travelers and "dupes, even if there were Soviet Russia and its satellites, even if there were no Socialists seeking collectivism by seduction, totalitarianism was probably inevitable here and everywhere that means dictatorship, the negation of individual and social freedom.

What has led to the impoverishment and stagnation of most European and Asiatic states has been increasingly burdensome taxes, expansion of government bureaucracy, growing interference of the state with private economic enterprise and the glorification of mediocrity through various schemes of so-called social welfare.

ALL OF these preludes to totalitarianism are present in this country today. Through foreign wars and adventures, through expanding militarism, through global charity, and especially huge gifts labeled "loans," the American tax burden now eats up, visibly and invisibly, about a third of everybody's income—and the Administration is seeking to lift the debt limit. The bureaucracy grows apace and, spurred by politically-minded labor unions and assorted welfarists, daily invents new schemes requiring new taxes and new payrollers.

The conduct of business enterprises is outrageously hampered by all sorts of regulations to supply government with statistics, information and income, which add greatly to the prices of commodities and thus to the cost of living. The check-off system of collecting taxes, union dues, social security, etc., necessitates every business hiring additional administrative staff at its own expense, which is passed on to the consumer.

The more shrewd, energetic, capable and thirty individuals who are resourceful enough to boost their income, are promptly penalized by graduated income tax, so that a genius who makes $100,000 must turn over four-fifths of it to the bureaucracy.

THIS WILL lead inevitably to the destruction of the classes in society who make and patronize literature, the arts and good manners, while only slightly lifting the living standards of the masses. This leveling process, which is always downward, never upward, perpetuates mediocrity and is destructive of individual initiative and freedom. It is the anthill society, and of course every anthill has its queen, and in human society, the dictator who always bears some euphemistic title such as President, Secretary or Premier.

In the USA, Government is already the biggest business, employing the most people and squandering the most money. Through patronage (thanks to income taxes and bureaucracy) it corrupts both the legislative and judicial branches (for example, the Supreme Court was loaded with mediocrities by Roosevelt and Truman, to the distress of the legal profession), and increasingly seeks to defy or seduce them.

THE LYNCHING bee on Senator McCarthy was launched by New Deal Republicans and Democrats in collusion simply because McCarthy dared to probe the operations of the Executive branch which it was his sworn duty to do. This is the modern version of the King can do no wrong.

Barring the improbability of a conservative revolution, this trend will continue until the Executive is supreme, business is enslaved, the press is muzzled and representative government is gone. Not a shot will have been fired nor a bourgeois liquidated, but a dictatorship will be here. I expect to see this if I can stay alive until 1975.

THE DEMOCRATS are desperately trying to make an issue of unemployment for their political advantage. In 1939, when after years of New Deal socialist legislation, there were almost as many unemployed as there were in 1930, they did not make an issue of it. Instead, Roosevelt was concentrating on involving us in World War II. In 1949 when there were a couple million more unemployed than there are today (and less employed), Truman and Acheson were seeking to save the day by inviting the attack on Southern Korea. This was finally accomplished, remember, by creating a military vacuum in South Korea and simultaneously announcing that it was outside our line of defense. The North Korean Reds and their Russian mentors were thus suckered into aggression (just as the Japanese were in December, 1941), but Truman called it just a "police action," thus avoiding the ugly name "war." Then a war-time economy was given the green light, unemployment dramatically decreased with swelling military contracts, the Democrats won the 1950 by-election and McArthur was prevented from winning the "police action" which had proved so advantageous to the Washington bureaucracy.

Mr. Schuyler

THE EISENHOWER Administration had scarcely entered the White House than it ended the Korean fiasco, sliced the war-swollen economy, took some of the political wraps off industry and commerce, began cleaning Communists and security risks out of Government (there are still a lot there in trategic positions, however), sailed into corruption, and generally sought to shift the country away from the collectivist lines it had been forced to follow since 1933 when FDR came waltzing into power with a sack full of socialist nostrums.

Since there are more people employed and less unemployed than there were in 1952 (minus the costly Korean slaughter and despite the shaving of foreign aid), we can argue that the Eisenhower Administration has been more beneficial to the American people than its predecessors. Add to that the exposure of the Internal Revenue and FHA scandals, and the actions (not just liberal cliches) of the White House in cutting down color discrimination and segregation, and logic tells us that this is the sort of Government the United States needed for twenty years before it got it.

Philadelphia Pa

HOWEVER, TO return to the question of unemployment, a basic fallacy in most people's thinking is that unemployment is synonymous with misery and distress. If everybody was employed, that would not prove that the country was better off. Everybody is working in Sing Sing and Leavenworth prisons, but that does not indicate prosperity and happiness. Everybody is working behind the Iron Curtain, but poverty and misery are endemic.

On the other hand, employment could be cut in half and the country could be living in clover. There are millions of wives and mothers who are working, but who would prefer to be at home caring for their children and contributing to better homemaking and more gracious living. This would certainly be a great curb on juvenile delinquency and crime. They work because they have to work due to insufficient income of their men-folk. Significantly, the proportion of working women has risen simultaneously with the rise in debt and taxes due to foreign wars and expanding Federal bureaucracy, first under the Democrat Woodrow Wilson and then under Roosevelt and Truman.

There was more gracious, spacious living fifty years ago than there is today, even if there were less gadgets and automobiles. The difference lies in the tax burden which has grown steadily since the Sixteenth Amendment was adopted and became truly oppressive under New-Fair Deal collectivism.

Without it, more people could afford to be unemployed and the six-hour-day could be a reality. What people need is not the right to work (which every convict and slave has), but the right to be lazy!

IT IS shocking to learn that Philadelphia's Pyramid Club, comprising some 350 of that city's Negro elite, honored the controversial physicist, Dr. Robert Oppenheimer, with its 1954 Achievement Award for "unstinting devotion of his great gifts to the end of increasing man's knowledge." Who in the club's board of directors "sold" the others on this ill-advised action which comes close to aiding the Communist conspiracy? Why this sudden thumbing of noses at the U. S. Government which has dubbed Oppenheimer a security risk?

Courier

Mr. Schuyler

I suggest that the Pyramid Club members carefully read "The Secret War for the A-Bomb" by Medford Evans, previously reviewed here, and the current thriller, "The Hydrogen Bomb," by James Shepley and Clay Blair, Jr. (McKay, $3). They will also find disturbing data on Dr. Oppenheimer in the 900-odd pages of the recent report of the Atomic Energy Commission's investigation which even fellow-travelers cannot laugh off.

Sat. 11-6-54

Dr. Oppenheimer leaped eagerly into the research and production of the atomic bomb because of his eagerness to smash the Nazis. When the krauts collapsed and surrendered, he was willing to settle for the Japanese as a target, and was not averse to the smashing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Then he and his associates became suddenly conscience-stricken when the possibility of the A-bomb being used on Russian became obvious.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

As the authors show, this clique sabotaged the production of atom bombs, so that scarcely any more were made until about 1949; launched a nation-wide propaganda campaign against keeping the A-Bomb know-how secret, against its use as a military weapon, against perfecting the H-Bomb, and against development and expansion of Strategic Air Command to deliver atomic weapons to Russian targets. Meanwhile the Soviets were feverishly working on both bombs, their research and production speeded up by secrets stolen by the Rosenbergs, Fuchs, et al.

While Dr. Oppenheimer was at Los Alamos, known Communists and security risks were permitted to work there. Indeed, until Oppenheimer joined the Government, he made continued big donations to the Communist party, continued to associate with and defend a Communist whom he admits asked him to give atomic secrets to Russia, and had many Red friends, including a known (and recently convicted) Comintern agent. His wife, his mistress and his brother were all Reds.

"The hydrogen bomb," quotes Air Force atom specialist, Major General Roscoe C. Wilson, as expressing his concern about Oppenheimer to the chief of Air Force Intelligence in mid-1952. Both Air Force Secretary Thomas Finletter and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg, said they had serious doubts as to Oppenheimer's loyalty. Air Force chief scientist, Dr. David Griggs said: "Dr. Oppenheimer is the only one of my scientific friends about whom I have ever felt there was a serious question of their loyalty." After exhaustive investigation, William Borden, executive director of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, stated that: "More probably than not, J. Robert Oppenheimer is an agent of the Soviet Union." Finally, President Eisenhower cut him off from receiving any classified material.

The AEC's Personnel Security Board then found two to one against Oppenheimer, and later the full commission found against him four to one as an untrustworthy, evasive fellow, "less than candid." Commissioner Murray stated flatly that "he was disloyal."

After all this, the Pyramid Club honors Dr. Oppenheimer!

What price patriotism?

Atty. Arthur Shores Makes Encouraging News in Alabama

BEST NEWS out of Alabama in a long time is the report that the very able Atty. Arthur D. Shores is entered in the May 4 primary, the first Negro candidate for that state's Legislature since Reconstruction days. Mr. Shores is one of twenty-eight seeking the seven House of Representative seats of Jefferson County (Birmingham). Encouraging is the fact that the capable lawyer has received offers of support from a number of the county's white citizens. A brilliant and militant man, Mr. Shores would certainly add lustre to the Alabama Legislature which hitherto has been noted chiefly for its mediocrity, like most Southern State Legislatures.

SCHUYLER

What are the prospects for Mr. Shores' election? Well, it is hard to say. In Jefferson County qualified Negro voters are outnumbered fifteen to one by whites, although there were 130,142 Negroes to 195,985 whites in Birmingham in 1950, with a great increase since then. In the whole State of Alabama there were, in 1950, a little more than two million whites and nearly a million Negroes, and yet there are today only about 30,000 qualified Negro voters in the state.

I understand that there are more qualified Negro voters in Mobile, with only about 50,000 Negroes, than there are in Birmingham with nearly three times that number.

ELSEWHERE in the South is seems to be about the same story as I get it from local citizens with whom I have recently talked. Negroes in the main are doing a lot of talking about freedom, civil rights, democracy and "being treated like a man" but only a very small percentage are qualifying to assume the duties of full citizenship. If there were as much action as there is talk, there could be six or seven million qualified Negroes in the South prepared to vote this year instead of less than one-third that number.

Either local Negro leaders are falling down on the job of schooling their people to qualify for using the ballot or they are so ignorant or indifferent that they do not know how to do it. Were this a problem in calculus, I could understand the difficulty in solving it, but it is nothing more than the old familiar political job of getting out the vote. This requires the setting up of political clubs, doorbell-ringing, stair-climbing, button-holing and instruction in how to qualify to vote. With all the school teachers and college professors we have, to say nothing of tens of thousands of college graduates and hundreds of thousands of high school graduates who swarm over the Southland, it ought to be a simple matter to get volunteers to instruct those Negroes not qualified to vote. How many are volunteering for this work? Not many, if we are to judge by results.

IN PARTS of the South that I have visited during the past year, I have heard over and over again from colored folk how many changes have taken place in their relations with politicians since Negroes began to vote in considerable numbers. In some places it has meant a rejuvenation of political life which in most places had become stagnant and sterile. There is now competition for the available Negro votes and a growing realization that Negroes must be given patronage along with promises.

Consequently one would imagine the colored brethren would be breaking their necks to get to the polls and vote; that no persuasion would be needed to get all to qualify; that it would be a matter of family and community pride to make every potential Negro voter an actual one.

What we actually find is a great deal of indifference, and yet many of the same people who will make no effort to exercise their right of suffrage beef the longest and loudest against jim crowism.

We need scores of capable colored men like Attorney Shores in the various Southern State Legislatures if we hope to see jim crow laws repealed and Negroes holding down some local, county and state jobs. While many whites will vote for intelligent and respectable Negro candidates for office in many parts of the South, the latter will have to depend for some time to come on the votes of Negroes. It is hard to see how they can put any reliance on something that in so distressingly many instances does not exist, simply because of shiftlessness and indifference.

THERE should be a very wide reading of two recent books by eminent Negro writers. I refer to "Africa: Land of My Fathers" by Era Bell Thompson (Doubleday, $3.75) and an "American in India" by Saunders Redding (Bobbs - Merrill, $3.50). So much wearisome drivel has been written about both places, especially about India, that it is refreshing and instructive to have some first-rate reporting and penetrating observations by trained U. S. Negro observers who could not be taken in by the propaganda of either whites or coloreds. Fortunately, neither belongs to the NAACP school of literati so, for a change, we get a realistic picture of two lands too often blacked out by clouds of bushwah.

Mr. Schuyler

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WHILE MISS Thompson's account is witty, observant and sage, it is not as profound as Saunders Redding's. Journeying to all parts of India and Pakistan, lecturing at colleges, arguing with professors and politicians, seeing the things so few outsiders see (and which the professional Indians don't want mentioned), Redding gives us a new view on an ancient land.

For a lifetime I have had to listen to Indian students and intellectuals, resident in the U. S. A., speak patronizingly about the race problem here, about American "materialism," about theories of Indian-Negro cooperation, etc., etc., ad infinitum, in holier-than-thou tones. There has been a battalion of these ambassadors from Hindustan since the end of World War II, led by the irrepressible Madame Pandit. One would imagine that India had become some sort of Shangri-La since the British took off in 1947. Certainly, she aspires to lead the dark world. Reading Redding's book makes one wonder about that.

IT IS only possible to summarize one's impressions of a book which is extremely meaty, but one gathers that Dr. Redding was more than disillusioned by what he saw and heard. The dehumanizing poverty, degradation and injustice over against the empty Communist-colored chatter of the intellectuals, the luxury living of the upper class, plus the incompetence and bewilderment of the politicians with their new responsibilities. The sad plight of the homeless refugees, the streets packed with sleeping thousands at night, the disease, the beggars, the complacent acceptance by the aristocracy of conditions which would shock their opposite numbers here into philanthropic activity, and the teeming malnourished and starving crowding the overpopulated country were all quite depressing.

DESPITE THIS filth and degradation on every hand, Dr. Redding was everywhere baited by the intellectuals and politicians who were usually insulting, pompous, arrogant and condescending, echoing all the Marxist cliches and the latest anti-American Communist propaganda from the Kremlin. They often questioned his integrity and openly doubted his honesty when they were not trying to patronize him. Nothing seemed to be good about America, but every Indian was eager to get here to this "materialistic" land (and rarely does one want to return home).

It must have been irksome to have to listen to Red-inspired chatter about non-existent lynchings in a land where over a million perished in communal riots only five years previously.

Communist ideology is strong in India, with Red cells in all colleges. The literate minority is about ten times more hypersensitive on the color question than any known American Negro and paranoic about the West, colonialism and kindred subjects. Redding's book will not be popular in India (although, or because, he is just) but it is illuminating and instructive to those dubious about India's aspiration to lead the colored world.

All Colored People Should Take Pride in Haiti's Achievement

RECENTLY, a celebration began which has great significance to all colored people everywhere. On Jan. 1 in the historic city of Gonaives, the Republic of Haiti began the celebration of its 150th year of independence, with ceremonies launched by its first democratically chosen Chief Executive, Gen. Paul E Magloire. Bells rang from every church tower in the little country, the entire diplomatic corps from Port au Prince attended a solemn Te Deum at the new Cathedral of Remembrance. Later, an obelisk commemorating the successful fight for freedom was unveiled. Next day the Presidential party motored to Cap Haitien (historic Cap Francois) where ceremonies were held at nearby Breda, home of Toussaint L'Ouverture. Thus was launched a year-long round of ceremonies and festivities in honor of this anniversary.

THIS SESQUICENTENNIAL celebration has meaning to other than Haitians because Haiti was the second territory in the New World to throw off the yoke of the Old World, being preceded only by the United States. Only a few years after this nation won its freedom with the British surrender at Yorktown, the blacks of Haiti under the inspired leadership of Toussaint L'Ouverture, rose up all over France's richest colony, cast off their shackles and took charge. This was something that had never happened before in history. Prior to that time there had never been a successful slave revolt.

What is not sufficiently well enough known is that for ten years Haiti, under Toussaint, prospered, and by 1803 it was as prosperous as it had been under the French. The land bloomed under the ministrations of free black men, and ships loaded with its produce sailed the seas.

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE over in France had terrorized Europe with his triumphant armies but France was broke. It had lost Canada, but it still had the vast territory of Louisiana which embraced the present Louisiana, Missouri, Arkansas, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Oklahoma, with parts of Kansas, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana and Minnesota. The Louisiana territory was vast, unsettled wilderness, not nearly as rich as little Haiti with its vital monopoly of the sugar market of the world.

If he could win back Haiti, re-enslave the blacks and get the wealth of that island, Napoleon felt he could get France financially on its feet again, perhaps conquer the whole of the Western Hemisphere, and then the entire world. It was a grandiose scheme and it might have succeeded.

WHAT STOPPED it from succeeding was little Haiti, its valiant army of freedom-loving blacks, led by Toussaint, Jean Jacques Dessalines and Henry Christophe. Toussaint was tricked, deported and died in a cold French dungeon, but Dessalines, the fierce, ruthless militarist knew what to do. Using the scorched earth policy, harrassing the army of Le Clerc and finally winning the decisive battle of Vertiere, he boldly declared Haiti to be an independent nation on Jan. 1, 1804.

This was more than independence for little Haiti and its black heroes. Napoleon's defeat in Haiti left him as broke as ever and minus part of the flower of his army crushed by disease and Haitian bullets. It forced him to abandon any idea of retaking Louisiana which he had sold to us, or attacking the young, weak United States. It gave ideas of freedom to all the peoples of the Western Hemisphere. Had it not been for free Haiti, Bolivar could never have crushed the Spanish power in northern South America. It was Haiti's president, Petion, who twice staked Bolivar after his defeats when nobody else in the world would help him. It was the example of Haiti which stirred every patriot from the Rio Grande to the La Plata to throw off the imperialistic yoke. What had succeeded in one place could succeed in another, and eventually did.

SO, EVEN though we can be present only in spirit, let us celebrate with the valiant Republic of Haiti its 150th anniversary of independence.

Under President Paul E. Magloire, the Republic of Haiti is more progressive than ever before. All sorts of public works are being pushed: a new metalled road from Port au Prince to Cap Haitien, a big dam which will make cultivable thousands of acres of land, new harbor improvements, new housing, and the second best credit rating in Latin America. Health programs are being pushed and new schools are going up.

Wherever you are, all colored people should take pride in Haiti's achievement in the face of handicaps that have often seemed insurmountable.

Haile Selassie's trip to the U. S. At that time, the Department of State will give sympathetic consideration to the Emperor of Ethiopia." So now the Emperor is due May 19.

PRINCE HALL MASONS of Georgia and Louisiana have given $11,000 to NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, the Georgia State Teacher and Education Association gave $1,000, while the Georgia Negro Voters League gave $200. John Wesley Dobbs, John P. Whittaker and S. L. Greene of Atlanta came up with $100 each. If other organizations and individuals elsewhere equalled that, Thurgood Marshall would not have to worry about money.

All contributors are to be praised for financially supporting this needed effort, but the fact remains that fifteen million Negroes who spend a half-billion dollars for beer alone can scarcely be regarded as generous. If each beer drinker among us had given this NAACP fund one hundredth of what he spent on suds in 1953, the take would have been $5 million. Which suggests the question: "Are We Ready?"

UNITED NEGRO College Fund collected $1,425,000, the largest annual amount raised since 1944, when it was started. The shame is that only a very small proportion of this sum came from colored people. Senators Ives of New York and Butler of Maryland have introduced a bill forbidding segregation or discrimination on common carriers in interstate or foreign commerce because of race, color, religion or national origin, and prohibits any transport official, agent or employe from practicing jim crow. This bill may and should become a law. It probably will.

"Journey Into Wilderness" Is a Book You Should Read

NAMES like Abraham, Coocoochee Micanopy, Osceola, Tuskegee, Apiaka (Sam Jones), and Hallec-Hadjo mean nothing to most Americans today, and yet only 117 years ago everybody who could read knew about them and they were a headache to the U. S. Government. They were the fighting leaders of the Seminole Indians of Florida, the masters of that vast peninsula of untamed swamp and jungle who were determined NOT to obey the Government directives to come in and be deported to Arkansas and Oklahoma. For seven years from 1835 to 1842, they pitted themselves against the United States in the hope of avoiding the fate of the Creeks and the later fate of the Cherokees.

SCHUYLER

During the first five years of the war it cost the U. S. Government the deaths of several thousand soldiers, mostly from disease and exposure. In addition to expenditures of nearly $20 million for militia, volunteers and damage claims, the Government had to maintain from four to eight thousand regular soldiers with all equipment, arms and ammunition, at a total cost ranging from $40 to $80 million. As late as 1841, the United States had 4,000 men in Florida.

On the other hand, and what incensed fiery old President Andrew Jackson, was that at their peak strength the Seminoles had only 1,660 warriors and 250 Negro allies. Many of the Seminoles, however, were heavily tar-brushed. Jackson termed the war as "disgraceful . . . to the American character."

ONE OF the best accounts of the two most hectic years of that war is "Journey Into Wilderness," the journal of Jacob R. Motte. Edited by James F. Sunderman (University of Florida Press, Gainesville, Fla., $6). Jacob Rhett Motte was a Charlestonian aristocrat, a graduate of Harvard, and an Army surgeon. His first campaign was against the Creeks in Alabama, and when that was cleaned up to the satisfaction of the slaveocracy, he was assigned to accompany the troops into Florida.

Most people today have little comprehension of the difficulties of such a campaign or of the larger issues involved, if they know about it at all. This was a desperate conflict. Outnumbered and out-gunned, the Creeks and Seminoles were nevertheless cruel and resourceful foes. They destroyed plantations from Tallahassee south to Biscayne Bay, murdering white men, women and children indiscriminately, often after nameless tortures. These Seminoles were masters of the canebrakes and swamps who could not be starved out because the peninsula abounded in game and fish. The hardships of the soldiers were unbelievable.

THE CAMPAIGN was full of paradoxes. There were whites, Indians and Negroes on BOTH sides. Negro slaves of whites escaped to the Indians and some Negro slaves of the Indians (grabbed from plantations) were eager to escape back to the whites. While the pure Indian Seminoles would have soon surrendered to the whites, it was the Negro and mixed blood element (even more fierce than the Indians) who forced them to continue the struggle to the end. Forced into the remote fastnesses of the Everglades by their implacable pursuers, a handful under Sam Jones (Apiaka) refused to surrender and remained to the end. Their descendants live there now.

The Negro Seminoles wielded an influence out of all proportions to their number (one-eighth of the total) because they were fiercer, better informed and more experienced than their Amerindian allies. They knew the whites, often at first hand from bitter experience, and they sensed that this was a war of removal or extermination in which they might be enslaved or re-enslaved by the whites whose plantations had been steadily established in East Florida from the Purchase in 1821. However, many of the Negroes and mixed bloods (called Zambos in Latin-America) were descendants of Negroes who had fled the Carolina plantations via the Creek country (Georgia and Alabama) and the Okefinokee Swamp.

WITH CERTAIN Creeks, they established a virtual republic in north Florida along the Suwanee, Withlacoochee and Appalachicola rivers ('Way Down Upon the Swanee River is MORE than just a song) as early as 1732.

These rich settlements increasingly became a menace to the approaching slave plantations which, the closer they came, facilitated more the escape of slaves. Similarly the pressure of white settlements in Georgia and Alabama caused more Creeks to join the Seminoles in Florida.

Dr. Motte's journal is noteworthy for its literary quality, its balance and objectivity, for its priceless description not only of the incredible hardships of the Seminole but of the Indian society and its leaders, and observations on frontier white society.

Altogether, this book with its fine index, its extensive footnotes, and its rich bibliography is well worth reading and owning as a necessary background to an understanding of our national background.

WORLD TODAY

By GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

Straw in the wind was action last week of the National Student Association representing 250 U. S. colleges calling for "immediate implementation" of the U. S. Supreme Court decision desegregating public schools. These youths will be tomorrow's leaders in their respective localities.

HAITI, stepping up its drive against suspected Reds, refused a new visa to British novelist Graham Greene last week. Commies there are "underground" but active, frequently encouraged by colored and white tourists from the "pink" parlors of New York, London, Paris, Havana and Mexico City.

Caribbean and Latin America remain explosive areas most susceptible to Red propaganda and machinations. Falling death rate, soaring birth rate, rapid urbanization, paltry industrialization and decreasing food supply spell trouble which leftists eagerly exploit through "political" labor unions. There will be more Guatemalas and Brazils.

OUR JEWISH friends are not always very bright. Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith charged the Army with "anti-Semitism" at Fort Monmouth, N. J., because almost all the thirty-eight Signal Corps employes suspended as security risks were Jews. Army denied charge and the lawyer for most of the men deplored it. Result: two AP columns in the papers whereas previously few people had known the alleged risks were Jews. How dumb can you get?

Wonders never cease! G. D. Scholtz, South African editor of one of Malan's sheets, authors a book in which he holds that "it is highly proper that the Negro is in no way inferior, but can achieve a level of civilization equal to that of the white man!" When that time comes, he predicts it will be "taps" for the Boers, at least as the "superior" race. Ah, me! I can hardly wait!

LaGUARDIA, New York's late "great" mayor, closed a high school for superior children on economy grounds ten years ago. The Tammany regime has just reopened it. Even Democrats recognize that no modern society can function long without uncommon people.

President Should Be Prevented From Leading Us to Disaster

ANYTHING attacked by Eleanor Roosevelt, Senator Lehman, the Americans for Democratic (Demagogic!) Action, the One World disciples of Globaloney and the kept editors of our internationalist press is most likely to be good for America. Such is the case with the Bricker Amendment over which the Congress is now chewing the fat. If this patriotic effort to keep the direction of American affairs in the hands of Americans is defeated, then it is farewell to national sovereignty. Which means goodbye to the American way of life which just happens to be about the best way of life on earth even by the standards of foreigners. This is not flag-waving, but simple statement of fact.

OUR RELATIONS with other nations are determined by treaties or by executive agreements. Treaties have to be approved by the Senate which is elected by the people. Executive agreements do not have to be approved by anybody but the President and the foreign heads of state with whom they are made. Treaties are therefore blessed by public opinion while executive agreements are often made before the people know anything about them, and afterward they can do nothing about them. Of course the President is elected by the people, too, but all of his acts which commit the people to various courses are not passed upon by the representatives of the people. We have what approaches czarism or the irresponsibile rule of one of our big labor leaders.

THE CONSTITUTION is the law of this land, guaranteeing the citizens certain rights, security and protection. The Bricker Amendment simply wants to ensure that no treaty or executive agreement will violate the letter and spirit of the Constitution. That's all. To any American of intelligence and patriotism, that seems reasonable.

The phony argument is advanced that the President's hands will be tied and our foreign policy stymied if he cannot make executive agreements without consulting Congress. This argument has no validity. The President's hands should be tied to prevent him from leading us to disaster, and I believe that either the Congress or the Supreme Court, or both, should determine whether one of these executive agreements violates the Constitution which we have adopted and want to preserve. If the Bricker Amendment is adopted, it will then be possible to impeach a President for violating the Constitution with one of these agreements.

THIS PROBLEM never assumed much importance in the past because the United States ordered its own destiny, made its own decisions, and did what it deemed best for its people. Unfortunately, we are now messed up in the United Nations (that authorized nest of Socialists, Communists, dictators and totalitarians on the East River) which is working furiously to sap the strength, authority, wealth and know-how of this country and eventually control its life through various meddlesome devices. Everybody there is opposed to the Bricker Amendment, of course, along with their "American" friends.

Thanks to the treasonable policies and conspiracies of Wilson, F. D. Roosevelt and Truman (the High Priests of Globaloney), numerous (and disastrous) executive agreements were made which had the force of law, and we were stuck with them. Fortunately the Republicans killed off our joining the League of Nations, but then the nation got weak and trustful and let Roosevelt-Truman lead them astray.

THE EXECUTIVE AGREEMENTS of Roosevelt-Truman got us to feeding and fighting for the whole world, and the next four generations will suffer for it in lives and dollars. Thanks to these agreements upon which the American people never had a chance to pass judgment, the following crimes against the Constitution and the people were committed: (a) turned back the Russian gorilla hordes of Commie-shocked Muscovites who had trustfully surrendered in the hope of escaping Stalin's goons; (b) permitted the Stalinist hordes to take Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Eastern Germany, the Balkans and China in the greatest sucker act in history; (c) refused to either take Berlin or leave a safe corridor between it and civilized Germany; (d) double-crossed Chiang Kai-Shek by going back on the Cairo Agreement and sending doddering old Marshall (who didn't know where he was the night before Pearl Harbor!) to China to turn it over to Mao tse Tung, the Kremlin's celestial Uncle Tom; (e) made the NATO agreement which subjects American boys to foreign laws and jails against their wills for what would be regarded as minor infractions here (while at the same time we are defending these foreigners who are reluctant to fight for their own liberties); (f) and draining off our wealth in gifts to nations who for centuries have done nothing for themselves.

MR. EISENHOWER is opposed to the Bricker Amendment. Naturally, since he has long been one of the architects of Globaloney and as head of NATO engineered many of these crippling agreements. The general who withdrew to permit the Russian capture of Berlin and then made no provision for a corridor to that city (the later airlift cost us at least $1 billion) had better stay out of this controversy. If this nation's freedom is to be preserved, no man or group should be above Congress, the courts and the Constitution.

WORLD TODAY

By George S. Schuyler

Unemployment is up, totaling three million. It was nearly five million in February, 1950, under the Democrats. Present joblessness is five-sixths seasonal, with nearly 63 million working, so there's no cause for panic.

HARDEST HIT, if unemployment continues, will be the workers least necessary to production, especially those who refused to improve themselves at trade schools during lush times. Many of those, if fired, will blame it all on color!

Statistics are deceptive. Much of the recorded unemployment touches people normally not a part of the work force who took jobs to make extra income during the war boom period; such as housewives, teen-agers and retired persons. There is always a certain amount of unemployment.

BIGGEST fund-raising success among us has been the United Negro College Fund which raised its largest amount last year—$1,425,000. This went to thirty-one Negro colleges serving 23,000 students. There is no substitute for the private college. These colleges must be supported voluntarily, and larger gifts are needed in 1954.

Haile Selassie, Ethiopian Emperor, to visit Communist Yugoslavia after touring U. S. A. Wonder what he and Tito will talk about? Perhaps exchange of trade. Both have what the other needs, but Ethiopia is better off than Yugoslavia, which has Malenkov on its flanks.

FRANCO, feeling his oats, is challenging France over Spanish Morocco and the sultanic succession. This may be the next hot spot in Africa. Spain wants both Tangier and Gibraltar, thus controlling the Straits. Most Moroccans, sore at France, are inclining toward Spain since U.S.A. started to rearm her.

Big fight in South Africa between the Liberal party and the Communists over three House Representatives and four Senators (white) for the Negroes. Liberals are against the color line, but most Negro leaders are pro-Communist and Red propaganda is being eaten up by industrialized urban blacks. The Negro voters' choices in succession have been expelled from their seats because of Red leanings.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

A Hod-Carrier Takes Exception to Recent Remarks

MR. JAMES HAMPTON of Sheffield, Ala., a member of the Hod Carriers and Building Laborers Union, takes exception to some of my recent remarks about that labor organization as it functioned a quarter-century ago.

SCHUYLER

I think our readers should read his letter which follows, in part. I found it very interesting and informative:

"I joined the Hod Carriers in 1937. I was a delegate to the convention in St. Louis; an election of officers was held that year; was delegate in Chicago in 1946 and 1951 and both of these conventions held election of officers.

"I also noticed in your writing this statement was also made: 'I have sat through union meetings with eight or ten present out of a membership of 300 and watched the ruling clique do its stuff' . . . For your information a number of the working people can appreciate today some of the sacrifice and hard shifts that these ruling cliques went through with, through these efforts by attending the meetings and helping to maintain an organization has helped many men to educate their children and build decent homes. I would like to try to explain to you some of the good that unions have done down in this section where I live.

"I was born in Russisville, Ala. My father was an ore miner, and worked from sun up to sun down for a wonderful dollar a day. He left the ore mines in 1909 to try farming.

"He left the farm in 1912 and went back to work in the hometown where I now live. We both worked together in the foundry from 4 o'clock every morning to 8 and 9 o'clock every night. We bought a two-room shack next door to this foundry. We both worked together day and night trying to pay for this shack.

"In 1927 along in August, my father was hurt in the foundry, stayed in a hospital about eight weeks. He received $8 a week while in the hospital and died in November of the same year.

"A few days after the funeral, my mother and myself went across the street to the office from the same house which she is now living to see the owner of the company because they hadn't been over to see her. We were flatly told by this company, although my father got hurt in the foundry, they didn't think that was the cause of his death. Although he hadn't lost one day's work in five years until he was hurt that morning.

"She took her case to court, getting one of the best lawyers in the district, she thought. The court granted her $200. The lawyer's fee was $20 because the state only allowed the lawyer to collect 10 per cent of the claim . . . $150 for the funeral and $30 to raise nine children on.

"In 1928, a white preacher from Chattanooga, Tenn. came down and contacted me about a union. I promised him I would help organize a union and I did and lost my job, which wasn't much.

"In 1937 I joined the Institute of Hod Carriers Building and Common Laborers Union of AFL. I was made job steward on the job I was working, also elected delegate to the Building and Trade Council and the Central Labor Union of AFL.

"I had never felt myself being an American citizen until I attended these meetings. I was accepted into these two organizations as a representative of my local union as all the other delegates were accepted.

"Later on I was sent to Knoxville, Tenn., as a delegate to the Tennessee Valley Trades and Labor Council. I met the general counselor of the International Hod Carriers Building and Common Labor Union, Vincent F. Morreale; there again I was made to feel as an American citizen. In this council I outlined to the delegates the many problems we were faced with corrosion and hard shifts that were being carried on by management against Negro officers on the job.

"I found out one thing that the Negroes were not the only ones being mistreated by the management that many white stewards had been fired on account of union activities.

"For your information American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions have done a wonderful job in the South improving race relations. When I joined the labor union, I joined to better my economic condition and International Hod Carriers has done a good job along that line in the South. Nowhere we have a good laborers' local do we have a wage scale under $1.10 per hour for construction labor.

"Now with this Taft-Hartley Law it's very little we can do about labor relation or race relation. I know of three cities here in the South, two who have a population of over 150,000 and one with population of 70,000 with a predetermined wage scale on Government contracts at 75 cents and 85 cents per hour, and at one of these cities, the workers have to pay 60 cents per day to get to and from the job. After rent ceiling was taken off, three-room shacks went from $5 to $10 per week. The only thing happened to the workers was overtime was taken away.

"In another one of these cities last August the construction laborers were organized into a laborers' union to try to get an increase in wages from the contractors.

"Eventually they had to strike, and after eight weeks, one or two contractors gave a 15-cents-an-hour increase . . . We, as members of organized labor that are very active, have received good cooperation from the white workers in the South and feel that you writers should sometimes give the credit for some of the help that they are doing for Negroes. Negroes are not being exploited by unions as some newspapers and writers make people believe.

"They have been helped and if they would take more active part and be more sincere, they would gain more."

The WORLD TODAY

By GEORGE S. SCHUYLER

Sad news for Democrat politicians campaigning against the Eisenhower Administration are the Federal reports of continuing well-being. As of Aug. 14, there were 62,300,000 employed and 3,245,000 jobless. This contrasts with the 5,000,000 unemployed when Truman launched his Korean "police action."

MISSISSIPPI is planning to end public schools to retain segregation, but will that be a "remedy," from the Negro viewpoint? Private schools in the South are desegregating, too!

Jews are beginning to celebrate their tercentenary in this country, the first having arrived in 1654. The first Negro arrived with Columbus, and as early as 1512 there were Africans here.

UNESCO publishes a report on U. S. Negro progress. Average Negro earnings have risen from $400 in 1939 to $1,300 in 1950, and must be far greater now. Death rate declined from 17 per 1,000 in 1935 to 12.6 in 1949, and must be lower now. Average Negro student's school period was extended from 5.7 to 7 years. No wonder nobody is leaving the USA!

Crises' annual education report shows 46,343 Negro students in U. S. colleges in 1953-'54 academic year, with only 1,722 in mixed institutions, and 6,139 graduating last June. There should be greater enrollment next term and more should be taking scientific and technical courses to keep truly abreast of the times. Incidentally, this shows that there is still plenty of work for the United Negro College Fund to do.

SOUTH AFRICA'S Boer diehards frothed at the mouth last week because the Anglican Bishop of Johannesburg, speaking in New York, denounced racial bias in that country. More ominously, the Dutch Reformed Church has refused to vote against the ruling of the World Council of Churches in Evanston declaring racial segregation unChristian. Malan must be chewing his nails!

Atty. Arthur Shores Makes Encouraging News in Alabama

BEST NEWS out of Alabama in a long time is the report that the very able Atty. Arthur D. Shores is entered in the May 4 primary, the first Negro candidate for that state's Legislature since Reconstruction days. Mr. Shores is one of twenty-eight seeking the seven House of Representative seats of Jefferson County (Birmingham). Encouraging is the fact that the capable lawyer has received offers of support from a number of the county's white citizens. A brilliant and militant man, Mr. Shores would certainly add lustre to the Alabama Legislature which hitherto has been noted chiefly for its mediocrity, like most Southern State Legislatures.

SCHUYLER

What are the prospects for Mr. Shores' election? Well, it is hard to say. In Jefferson County qualified Negro voters are outnumbered fifteen to one by whites, although there were 137,142 Negroes to 191,083 whites in Birmingham in 1950, with a great increase since then. In the whole State of Alabama there were, in 1950, a little more than two million whites and nearly a million Negroes, and yet there are today only about 30,000 qualified Negro voters in the state.

Pittsburgh Pa. Post 5-1-54

I understand that there are more qualified Negro voters in Mobile, with only about 50,000 Negroes, than there are in Birmingham with nearly three times that number.

ELSEWHERE in the South is seems to be about the same story as I get it from local citizens with whom I have recently talked. Negroes in the main are doing a lot of talking about freedom, civil rights, democracy and "being treated like a man" but only a very small percentage are qualifying to assume the duties of full citizenship. If there were as much action as there is talk, there could be six or seven million qualified Negroes in the South prepared to vote this year instead of less than one-third that number.

Either local Negro leaders are falling down on the job of schooling their people to qualify for using the ballot or they are so ignorant or indifferent that they do not know how to do it. Were this a problem in calculus, I could understand the difficulty in solving it, but it is nothing more than the old familiar political job of getting out the vote. This requires the setting up of political clubs, doorbell-ringing, stair-climbing, button-holing and instruction in how to qualify to vote. With all the school teachers and college professors we have, to say nothing of tens of thousands of college graduates and hundreds of thousands of high school graduates who swarm over the Southland, it ought to be a simple matter to get volunteers to instruct those Negroes not qualified to vote. How many are volunteering for this work? Not many, if we are to judge by results.

IN PARTS of the South that I have visited during the past year, I have heard over and over again from colored folk how many changes have taken place in their relations with politicians since Negroes began to vote in considerable numbers. In some places it has meant a rejuvenation of political life which in most places had become stagnant and sterile. There is now competition for the available Negro votes and a growing realization that Negroes must be given patronage along with promises.

Consequently one would imagine the colored brethren would be breaking their necks to get to the polls and vote; that no persuasion would be needed to get all to qualify; that it would be a matter of family and community pride to make every potential Negro voter an actual one.

What we actually find is a great deal of indifference, and yet many of the same people who will make no effort to exercise their right of suffrage beef the longest and loudest against jim crowism.

We need scores of capable colored men like Attorney Shores in the various Southern State Legislatures if we hope to see jim crow laws repealed and Negroes holding down some local, county and state jobs. While many whites will vote for intelligent and respectable Negro candidates for office in many parts of the South, the latter will have to depend for some time to come on the votes of Negroes. It is hard to see how they can put any reliance on something that in so distressingly many instances does not exist, simply because of shiftlessness and indifference.

The Enemy Has a Strong Foothold Within All Western Countries

A CONTINUAL Courier correspondent has several times alluded to a prophesy made by me toward the close of the East-West War, 1939-1945, that it would last for seven more years, which is regarded as having been an erroneous one. This view is unsound. The war did not "begin" in 1939 nor did it "end" in 1945. The so-called World War II was just a more violent phase of a continuing struggle for world power, as any careful history of the past two centuries will easily show.

SCHUYLER

Following the surrender of Germany and Japan, there came the war between the Nationalist Chinese forces and the Russian-backed Chinese Reds, the war between the Red and White factions in Greece backed by Russia and the U. S., the Red-instigated civil wars in Burma and Malaya, the war between Ho Chi Minh's Red-backed armies and the French mercenaries in Indo-China, the Korean war, the Red-backed civil war in the Philippines, the civil war in Iran, the grabbing of Poland and the Balkans by Russia in defiance of the Yalta and Potsdam agreements enslaving 100 million people, and minor Red conspiracies and banditry. This was foreseen in my pamphlet, "The Red Drive in the Colonies" (Catholic Information Society, New York, 1947. 5 Cents). If these were not wars, what were they?

Pittsburgh Pa. Post

NOW WE enter another phase of the world struggle eight years after the "end" of World War II. So far the Reds have won and are continuing to do so, largely due to the ineptitude of the United States and the neutralism of our "Allies." The West has lost all China, half of Korea, all of Eastern Europe and is about to lose Indo-China. The defeat of the French mercenaries (mostly NOT French) in the Dien Bien Phu debacle presages the ultimate conquest of that rich land and of neighboring Siam, Malaya and Burma. Shaky Indonesia's Reds have dangerously infiltrated its army and may take over any time. Frightened by the Red conquest of Tibet, Nehru, India's Socialist leader, has been licking the Red boots in continuing ingratiating gestures and has just made the traditional error of signing a non-aggression pact (ask those who have tried it!) with Red China. Nepal, the Red-infiltrated Himalayan kingdom on India's northern border, has hastily followed suit. Burma and Indonesia are as neutralist as France, Italy and the Western European Socialist-dominated states. Desperate to increase its trade to avert starvation in its over-populated land, England is dragging its feet in opposing forthright action against the common Kremlin foe.

WHITE COLONIALISM in Africa was frightened out of its wits in 1942 by the successes of the Japanese in Indonesia and Melanesia which threatened conquest of Madagascar, only 200 miles from East Africa. It should be more frightened now, for if the Reds take over Indonesia, Burma, Malaya and, ultimately, India, the invasion of Africa becomes probable. In all East Africa except Southern Rhodesia, the Indians outnumber the whites and are no less liked by, or scornful of, the black natives. If the Reds take over India, they will have the loyalty of the East African Indians and will aid them with agitators and arms as they have done throughout the world. Belgium has a large and presumably loyal black army in the Congo, but elsewhere the only real opposition will be that of South Africa, the sole country in Africa capable of offering more than token resistance. How long it can do so with ten million antagonistic and rebellious blacks, colored and East Indians is anybody's guess. Most of them would welcome Red invasion as preferable to relentless Boer-British enslavement. So would Negro leaders in East, West and Central Africa, Anglophobes all. Mau Mau would spread everywhere below the Sahara, including the French colonies which are Redder than any.

ONLY A LITTLE less ominous from the American viewpoint is the situation in the Caribbean and Latin America, as the news from Guatemala, British Honduras, British Guiana, Trinidad, the French islands and Brazil indicates. In the throes of an economic crisis and heavily infiltrated with Communists from the labor unions to high officialdom, including the army and navy, Brazil may soon be another China, alarming as it may sound. Mexico harbors a strong Red infiltration and is, indeed, the Kremlin's headquarters in the Western Hemisphere. Right this minute the Brazilian underground army of outlawed Communist leader, Carlos Prestes, is close to the British Guiana border.

Unlike previous world struggles, the enemy has a strong foothold within all Western countries, including the U.S.A., whose very industrial supremacy renders it vulnerable to destructive attack within via sabotage in industry, government, communications and otherwise. This explains the hysterical drive here against further Congressional investigation and exposure of Reds and their dupes in key positions. Hence the hue and cry against "McCarthyism."

Under the circumstances it is tragically ridiculous to assume that the war ended in 1945. It is a continuing struggle on many fronts—diplomatic, economic, intellectual and military. It is a total war, as advocated by Marx and Engels, and implemented by Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin, Malenkov, et al. So far the Reds have been winning it.

Integration Will Be Speeded With Higher Pay

IN THE FREEMAN for May 3, BSCD (Before the Supreme Court Decision) I concluded a piece "Will the South Secede?" with the prophecy that "the South will conclude that since black and white children play together, they can learn together; that if Negro girls can successfully mind white children in homes, they should, if qualified, be permitted to teach them in school."

SCHUYLER

I arrived at this conclusion through study and observation while others devoted themselves to the hoary pastime of ringing the changes on conditions passing or past.

I predict that where the Negro population is somewhat scattered, racial integration in public schools will proceed apace.

Where, as in most urban areas, Negroes are bunched together, it will be arranged so that their children will attend schools where there are almost all colored classes, so the pattern will remain about what it is.

Pittsburgh Courier 6-12-54

THUS, THE pace of integration in urban centers (where most Americans, North and South, live) will be determined by the extent to which housing is integrated and by the ability of Negro families who so desire to leave neighborhoods in which their race predominates.

Low-cost housing projects have tended to perpetuate all-Negro areas, North and South.

At best there is no more than token integration: i. e., a handful of Negro families in an otherwise white project, or vice versa. I see no evidence that either group, as such, wants it otherwise, despite the clamor of "liberals." In but not neighborhoods. Negro districts have tended to expand rather than disintegrate, and housing projects tend to perpetuate them far more than individual family dwellings.

THERE WILL continue to be resistance and opposition to Negroes leaving these racial islands and buying homes among whites in growing garden communities which fringe our cities.

This will be accomplished in the future as in the past by solidarity of white residents, "understandings" of white realtors and hostile mortgage policies of banks, no matter what the letter of the law says.

Consequently, schools in such districts will remain white, and in most places it will be a mighty long time before colored teachers will be assigned to them or colored principals head them. In some areas where Negroes are sparsely settled, some colored teachers may lose their jobs or be shifted to schools where dark pupils predominate.

HOW TO BREAK this down brings us back to what I have been talking about for years: economic power.

More Negroes must get the experience and know-how to move up in the industrial and commercial hierarchy to command salaries enabling them to move to the garden suburbs.

The Negro community in each locality must support credit unions and savings and loan banks which will cover mortgages on desirable homes in these garden suburbs. It also needs one or more investment corporations which will establish or support Negro-owned businesses of various kinds wherever these will make money, so that bigger income will flow to the Negro community (wherever its members may reside), thus enabling more people to get the means to "escape."

If this had been done more in the past, we would be better able to cope with the difficulties confronting us. School integration would certainly be speeded.

WITHOUT intelligent, statesmanlike and determined action on the economic front, school integration will be no overwhelming panacea for all ills. It can serve actually to sharpen the Negro's sense of inferiority, helplessness and indifference, as happened in many Northern cities which long had school integration.

I have noticed that psychological re- in Latin America where there are Negroes than there are here but advanced.

They Criticized Schuyler When He Made His Predictions

IT IS heart-warming to hear the hopeful tone of the speeches our leaders have been making recently about the future of race relations in these United States. The United Negro College Fund's most recent gathering heard Dr. Ralph J. Bunche speak optimistically about the "critical and thrilling" period of transition from segregation to integration, and assure the gathering that the issue "in the natural and inevitable course of democracy will be decided in the only way it can be decided in democracy."

SCHUYLER

Two or three days before that, Dr. Walter White, NAACP executive secretary, told a Louisville (Ky.) audience that abolition of racial segregation was sure to come. His organization has launched a Fight for Freedom campaign to rid America of race discrimination and segregation by Jan. 1, 1963. All of this is a far cry from the gloomy pessimism so often expressed by many of our leaders in the past. Indeed, this writer has been caustically criticized in the past for voicing similar sentiments, but now the others have caught up with him.

BACK IN the February 1930 number of The American Mercury I had the vision to predict the same thing when I wrote in "The Negro Looks Ahead":

"Breaches in the social barriers will become harder to repair with the softening of the Caucasians and the passing of the professional Anglo-Saxons, and will widen with the flow of ambitious bricks.

And again, "Ten, twenty or forty years hence he may not be in possession of complete social equality and what follows in its path, but he will be nearer the goal . . . Thus, on the whole, and in spite of everything, I think it is fair to say that the present strained relations between the races are likely to be transitory." Was that prophetic?

BRICKBATS in varying sizes descended upon my head in 1948 when, after my visit to twenty-eight rural and urban Negro families in Dixie in the course of doing by series, "What's Good About the South?", I wrote in "Views and Reviews" of Nov. 6, 1948: "Most of what is said and written about the South is untrue. Today it is not a place of terror and persecution, nor has it been in many decades . . . For all the faults of the South, it must be admitted that colored people are better off there than any other minority elsewhere with comparable background."

The uproar was terrific then, but now a lot of people are seeing what I saw from a background of close observation on the spot in fourteen Southern states. I foresaw that the improvement in race relations in Dixie from thence onward would be rapid. My "crime" was in saying so, then, and having the statement quoted by Mississippian Hodding Carter over Town Hall of the Air. Many who denounced me then would not be so ready to do so now.

OVER THE SAME medium on Nov. 27, 1951, after pointing to the vast gains that had been made, I said: "America has the willingness to change, and that is half the battle. Give us another twenty years and the problem will be solved as much as it publicly can be where two groups live side by side." Apparently, today the NAACP is more optimistic than I was in 1951, because it foresees full freedom by Jan. 1, 1963, while I foresaw it only in 1971.

Many of those who heard that Town Hall program wagged their heads dolefully and afterward commiserated me for having had to express this viewpoint. However, nobody has scored the NAACP for being more hopeful.

Since then a succession of Negro observers of changes in the Southern picture have developed more objectivity and faith, and can now see more hope for America solving its knottiest problem. For a long time we have desperately needed a greater sense of proportion in appraising the progress of race relations. Too many of our spokesmen once were prone to gaze at the trees rather than the forest. I am glad to see so many coming around to the views I expressed a quarter-century ago, even if they do at times seemingly derive satisfaction from criticizing heatedly what I have said. It is hazardous to be ahead of one's time, but is is also very satisfying.

We're Ready to Guzzle It, But "We Ain't Ready" to Make It!

SOME TIME BACK when Duke Ellington was charged with having told a Negro reporter in a pique that "We ain't ready," a loud whoop went up from many of the more vocal fringes of Aframerica demanding the scalp of the amiable and talented musician. This usually happens when anybody states the obvious. The band leader-composer promptly crawfished, of course, declaring that he had been misquoted. This was a discreet and expedient "out" for which I would be the last to censure him, but the fact of the matter is that he was right the first time.

SCHUYLER

Upon first contact with Aframerica, the stranger is strongly impressed by what the colored brother (a) needs to do, (b) has the opportunity to do, and (c) has not done, while all the time yammering for help. What he has done to improve his lot in the world is as a molehill to what he needs to do.

HAVE WE been ready to control the economic life in the scores of communities across the country in which 10,000 or more of us are congregated? Where is there such a community, aside from all-Negro towns like Boley, Mound Bayou, Taft, etc.? Compared with thirty years ago, there have been marked changes in clerical staffs of stores serving these communities, but not much change in management and ownership.

In almost every other type of community in this country — Greek, Italian, Jewish, Japanese, Chinese — one finds most of the business in the hands of people of the community. The Negro community remains the only one economically dominated by aliens, and this is the oldest community of all, except the American Indian.

HAVE WE been or are we now ready to move into the general business community on a competitive basis and hold our own? To ask it is to answer it. May I inquire how many, say, restaurants, lunch rooms and hotels across the land, catering to the general public, are owned by us? If none, why none? This is the sort of thing we are supposed to be peculiarly fitted to do, presumably from birth, and yet "we ain't ready" here, either.

In communities where Negroes have scores of millions on deposit in banks (which white people are borrowing to establish and expand their businesses), there are numerous opportunities to enter the above mentioned field of economic enterprise "downtown" if the money available is "right," either directly or indirectly, openly or covertly. But "we ain't ready" for that kind of investment, apparently. I notice, however, that we do not lag behind others investing in motor cars, television sets, extravagant "Greek" blowouts and other forms of conspicuous waste.

PROPORTIONATELY we consume more of the juice that gladdens than do our paler brethren, if we are to believe the statistical breakdowns and the testimony of liquor and beer salesmen. Is any of this whiskey, beer, wine or gin manufactured by us (and most of the wages and profits in the industry come from manufacture) or do we even control most of the liquor stores and bars? We are ready to guzzle it but "we ain't ready" to make it, and no very superior intellect is required for that. Some of the best corn whiskey in the land has been and is being made by small, illegal Negro distillers in Dixie, but the legal business seems to be beyond us. Some very passable beer was produced by enterprising sepia senoras during the early years of prohibition for the buffet flat trade, before the Italian mobsters moved in. Today "we ain't ready" to do more than drink it.

Two years or so ago in this column I told about a fully stocked brewery obtainable in an Eastern city for a down payment of a few score thousand dollars. It had every needed facility for manufacturing, bottling, labeling, etc. The owner (with a brewery in another city) was not only willing to sell to Negroes on reasonable terms, but offered to lend some of his skilled technicians to help the buyers to get started right. Having just finished several columns on the gross discriminatory practices against Negroes in the brewing industry (which annually takes a half-billion dollars out of their pockets) I offered to put any interested Negro group in contact with this brewer. How many replies did I receive? Just one!

OPPORTUNITIES are made, not handed out. The fact that we have not made more economic advances is not due alone to segregation, prejudice and discrimination, but due to ignorant, misguided and inept leadership devoted largely to rattling the tin cup and crying in the wilderness.

The only thing that is basic in any society is power, and in this civilization it is economic power. This includes ownership, technical skill, finance and the art of distribution. Politics is simply the reflection of this power, the shadow of the substance. If you don't have the power, politics is of no use, except for manipulation by selfish demagogues who promise the moon and deliver six-pence, if anything. They can't give you anything but love, baby!

But even in politics "we ain't ready." Only a third of the potential Negro vote is registered and votes, although obstacles to voting are now almost nil. Much of that vote is blind because so-called leaders have rarely explained political fundamentals with objectivity but for twenty years have sought to herd their followers into the New Deal-collectivist camp.

We'd better wake up and get ready if we hope to progress at more than a crawl.

Sad News Carries Him Down 'Memory Lane'

THE SAD NEWS that Angelo Herndon alias Gene Braxton had been nabbed in Chicago for allegedly accepting $25,000 from five prospective buyers of the same six-flat building, carried me back down memory lane.

SCHUYLER

Herndon, it will be recalled, was arrested in Atlanta, Ga., in 1932 for leading a "spontaneous demonstration" of unemployed and got twenty years under an 1866 insurrection statute.

Herndon had been recruited by the Reds in Cincinnati, I believe, and rushed down to help the Reds exploit the depression, after they had failed to "sell" me on the deal.

Ben Davis, now in the Federal hoosegow, won Herndon's freedom on appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. When he came triumphantly to New York, one of the Commie "lady" lawyers remarked dolefully, "It's a pity he isn't blacker!"

Much more money could have been collected if he hadn't been light-skinned.

On Aug. 25, 1934, I wrote a "Views and Reviews" column blasting the Red racket.

I started off by saying: "Eleven years ago last June, in a debate with Otto Huiswoud in New York City, I argued the negative of the question, Resolved: That the Negro Should Join the Communist Party. I took the position that in joining this alleged radical party, the Negro would be either wasting his time or inviting extermination."

From that point I rang the changes on the Communist iniquities: i.e., double-crossing of Russian workers and peasants by Lenin, Trotsky, Stalin and company; the ousting of George Padmore as head of Red revolutionary work among Negroes for "black nationalism;" the "Black and White" film fiasco; the "Self-Determination for the Black Belt" absurdity, the attempted opportunistic tie-up with Father Divine which the Daily Worker dutifully applauded.

In conclusion I said, "One local after another closes as the comrades embrace the New Deal or seek the Silver Shirts," and then in passing remarked, "Herndon is out on bail (and will probably skip it like the rest) and the Scottsboro meal ticket will soon be gone . . . The Negro workers pass the Communist soapboxes with chuckles of derision."

You see, some time prior several Red agitators jugged for starting a mill workers' riot in North Carolina, had jumped bail and scrammed to the Soviet paradise. One of them, Fred Beal, later fled the Soviet Onion (it makes people cry!) and voluntarily returned to the comfort and security of the much superior North Carolina state prison!

Well, folks, that was Aug. 25, 1934. The Courier was scarcely on the stands before the fellow-travelers of the day were screaming with rage.

Eugene Gordon, now a Communist hack, but then feature editor of the Boston Post, wrote a scathing letter terminating our association as "an enemy so unscrupulous that he must be given no quarter."

Then came a long letter from Apt. 7-H, 409 Edgecombe Avenue, New York City, N. Y., denouncing me for "your attacks upon the defense of the Scottsboro boys and Angelo Herndon." (Incidentally, Herndon later broke with the Communists and denounced them for exploiting him!)

The signers demanded that I retract my "slanders" and "cease to obstruct the efforts of the International Labor Defense, the League of Struggle for Negro Rights, etc.," Communist fronts all, and so declared later by the Attorney General of the U. S.

A copy of this long letter was sent the editor of the Courier, Robert L. Vann, along with a shorter one in which the signers urged: "We demand the immediate dismissal of George Schuyler from the staff of the Courier."

Only one of these loyal and patriotic Americans ever disavowed this glorious appeal to freedom of speech and press. He was Dr. Channing H. Tobias who wrote to the Courier and to me protesting the use of his name as unauthorized.

The other "intellectuals" have remained silent for lo, these twenty years, except for Dorothy K. Funn, the Brooklyn teacher who recently blew the whistle on Red infiltration of the public schools.

Of course, no disavowal was to be expected from such Kremlin stooges as Louise Thompson, Eugene Gordon, Ben Davis, Gwendolyn Bennett, et al. I shall be charitable and assume that the other signers were "young, unsophisticated" and "didn't know what they were doing" —the customary fellow-traveler alibi.

So . . . you can see why the reappearance of Angelo Herndon's name in the news rang a bell inside this gray head.

The 'Intellectuals' Were Taken In and Brain-Washed

SOMETIMES WHEN I have finished perusing the effusions of some of our weekly editors and columnists, or had a discussion with some of our Talented Tenth, on divers matters dealing with the Reds, security risks, subversion and "McCarthyism," my thoughts turn to the worldly wisdom of Willi Muenzenberg, that almost forgotten benefactor of the Soviet Union. Ungratefully the OGPU murdered him fifteen years ago in France because he failed to return to Russia for liquidation.

SCHUYLER

I think of Willi because I can see so clearly how right he was about non-Communist "Intellectuals" being so useful to the Kremlin as transmission belts for its propaganda and devious devices. They put over the message of collectivism and defend murderous totalitarianism much more effectively than the salaried Party members who simply have to lay down the "line" for them to follow. They do it better because they are "respectable" and thus not suspected, so they have great influence in corrupting the minds of "innocents."

TO GET BACK to Willi: He was a top-flight Red pioneer. He founded the Communist Youth International (which first convened in May, 1920) and became its first president, having "sold" Lenin on this apparatus to hornswoggle the world's youth into the Kremlin camp. In this country, the branch was the Young Communist League, later named the American Youth for Democracy, and to which many of our better-known colored brethren once belonged, but refrain from admitting it.

He next organized the International Workers Aid, which organized the sympathy and solidarity of the world's toiling masses for the Soviet Onion (it makes people cry!) during the horrible famine of the early 'Twenties brought on by ruthless war communism (and cured by Hoover Relief). Over here it functioned through the International Workers Order, a Red insurance set-up which helped finance the Party's legal defense stooges, dupes, and saboteurs fallen afoul of U. S. law.

A high official of the IWO was a notorious Negro Red and the wife of a Negro graduate of the Lenin University, who, for some time, was chief editorial writer of one of our largest Negro weeklies while simultaneously editing a Communist daily in the Middle West. That particular weekly, like several of its contemporaries, was then heavily infiltrated by Reds, fellow-travelers and New Deal Fascists, and the sentiments expressed by its editorial staff were strikingly similar to those found in the Daily Worker.

WILLI MUENZENBERG'S greatest achievement in the interest of Red fascism, however was his discovery of the fellow-traveler, capitalism's greatest gift to the Soviet Union. At a time when the Communist line was "No collaboration with the bourgeoisie," he discovered that the bourgeois intellectuals were the most gullible element of the populace, could most easily be used to help put over Communist propaganda, and thus corrupt, weaken and destroy from within the nations the Politburo marked for conquest. Once he had demonstrated to Moscow how to penetrate the targets through the intellectuals, the world slogan was changed to the "United Front Against War and Fascism," sometimes called the "Popular Front."

Willi launched this drive mainly through the great publishing trust he set up in Germany in the 'Twenties and 'Thirties. He printed the works of mediocre authors which responsible firms with high literary standards would not touch. Aiming at mass consumption, he used cheap, lurid, paper covers, and flattered the faceless with what was dubbed "proletarian literature." He spurred on the cult of unintelligibility, hitherto expressed through the nonsense of Gertrude Stein, Dadaism and unquotable free verse. Thus he boosted mediocrity into importance, so greatly expanding the ranks of those who panted to be classed as intellectuals. Simultaneously, Willi shrewdly cultivated the real intellectual leaders all over Europe who, as a biographer put it, "had fallen into despair over the failure of democracy and who admired the achievements of the Soviet Union without having become Communists (bold face mine. GSS)."

WILLI ONCE cynically remarked: "It isn't difficult to accept money from Moscow and publish newspapers with it. Any idiot can do that. But it's a hard job to get Communist propaganda financed by the bourgeoisie. And that I am doing."

In short, the "intellectuals" were taken in and brain-washed without knowing what happened, and some of them have not recovered yet. Others were cynical and "practical" but didn't join the Party. Others became hidden members, paying dues to their respective cells, while singing the praises of democracy and infiltrating every labor union, church, newspaper, business, factory and organization, including the Government, to corrupt and "capture" it. Very few Negro organizations and institutions have escaped.

Negroes Must Continue to Operate as a Group

AFTER desegregation, what? After all the jim-crow regulations, laws and constitutional provisions are erased from the books, and colored folk are able to both earn and spend a dollar freely, will an interracial Valhalla result?

With white and colored children attending school together for several years, will all the petty discriminations and feelings of inferiority and superiority vanish, along with social barriers based on so-called race?

SCHUYLER

I am disposed to think that this will not be the case, and I believe the colored brethren will be wise if they operate on the same assumption. Unless they are going to turn their backs on history and experience, they will.

I should like to believe that it will be otherwise but one must use one's head as well as one's heart.

It happens that I was born, reared and schooled in environments where there was no "racial" segregation or overt jim crowism.

Few of our neighbors were colored and the overwhelming majority of my schoolmates and playmates were so-called whites. Every business and institution serving the general public were open to all regardless of color.

Occasionally, some Caucasian gamin might "hang the dog" on a black boy or girl but this was of very infrequent occurrence.

The courts were, if anything, rather indulgent, in a condescending way, toward the Senegambian fallen afoul of the law.

It was, in short, an environment conducive to full development of such potentialities as our people possessed, and doubtless similar to what will obtain generally in this country when all the reforms for which we are pressing are realized.

Nevertheless, colored folk remained a social class apart, having their own group society (churches, lodges, clubs, etc.), and hanging precariously on the economic fringes with very little opportunity to rise.

It is a little better now, with more economic opportunities, but not much more in the town where I was raised.

When one visits other countries where the colored brethren are plentiful and where laws and constitutions contain no racial proscription and schools are traditionally integrated, the situation is no different on the whole.

Wherever one goes where whites or near-whites are in control, I think it is significant that the vast majority of black folk are on the economic bottom and are not accepted in white society as a general rule regardless of education and qualifications.

Worse, since there is nothing definite to fight, like segregation and jim-crow laws, a certain fatalism is bred, a general acecptance of the social status quo is prevalent, and group progress as a whole is extremely slow, if it exists at all.

I am thinking now of countries like Brazil, Uraguay, Venezuela, Colombia, Cuba, England and France, to name just a few.

It is highly probable that there will be much more progress among our group here than has obtained in the countries named because white America is more progressive, more adaptable, more democratic and more basically liberal; but socially the two "races" will for a long time remain far apart.

Clannishness will continue for a long time to come, no matter how much it is decried, just as it has elsewhere, and everywhere this profoundly influences economic, social and political advancement. Such are the hard facts of life which we have to face.

For a mighty long time to come colored folk here will have to organize to advance themselves as a group, especially economically.

They will have an opportunity to advance faster without restrictive legislation, but they will have to use economic cooperation in order to do it, just as they have been doing, only more so.

Being a minority is no great handicap when we recall that all societies are run by minorities, but we shall have to continue to operate as a group so that talented individuals may be encouraged and aided.

So while we were properly enthusiastic over the legal gains we have scored, let us have no delusions about the future else we suffer grave disappointment in the years to come.

George S. Schuyler made a special trip to Ossining to interview Dr. Max Yergan. Dr. Yergan had just returned from a round-the-world plane trip when the interview was granted.

Dr. Max Yergan

Finds World Curious About American Negroes

By George S. Schuyler

(Second in a Series)

U. S. Negroes Highly Placed

OSSINING, N. Y.—Recognizing that the esteem in which U. S. Negroes are held depends upon the positions they hold representing their country abroad, I asked Dr. Yergan if he had encountered many in higher echelons.

"I was proud to see in Japan," he answered, "some American Negroes who held responsible and representative positions. Those I saw were mainly part of America's military establishment in the East. In India, I saw several American Negroes in similar positions at several levels, including the U. S. Embassy, the Consular service, American Aid services and the U. S. Information Service.

"In France I saw American Negroes who hold senior positions in the U. S. Embassy and the U. S. Information Administration. This is all to the good. Where Negroes are present and doing a good job, I found a better understanding of America's racial situation and the progress made in improving it. More Negroes abroad effectively representing America at many levels would be to the increased credit of our country."

CALLING DR. YERGAN'S attention to our people's profound interest in India, a colored country, and our concern about whether class and caste distinctions, traditional there, still existed. I asked for his views, knowing of his extended stay in that country.

"I think we should be very clear on this question," he warned. "I have not discovered that India or any other country whose inhabitants are dark, thinks of itself as a 'colored country.'

"In his recent book on India, Ex-Ambassador Bowles went out of his way to refer to Indians, even those who are quite dark, as having Caucasian features and origin. Perhaps Mr. Bowles knows what he is talking about and felt that Indians would accept this as a very complimentary description of themselves. At any rate, Negroes, I believe, would be greatly mistaken if they think that color means closer relations between themselves and 'colored people' of Asian countries. They are first and foremost Asians, just as we are Americans. Color is in no sense a bond.

"There are, of course, class and caste distinctions throughout India. To her credit, however, it should be stated that there is a constitutional provision against caste distinctions; but all responsible spokesmen in India think it will be many years before this provision is fully realized. I think it will be a very long time. Here again, is another indication that color itself makes very little difference. Tradition and human nature are far more powerful than color. Asia is a good example of that fact."

I EXPRESSED curiosity about what the Indian press said about our U. S. color question, and Dr. Yergan replied that it reflected a generally anti-American attitude.

"It plays up all news dealing with U. S. racial discrimination," he explained. "I did not find any articles originating in the Indian press that dealt with basic legal and social progress being made in race relations in America. The left-wing press is scandalously anti-American. The press generally is quite unintelligently anti-American. It falsely calls America imperialistic; it seldom, if ever, puts a finger on Russia, the only aggressive imperialistic power of our day."

How, I asked, does the attitude in these matters differ as between India and Pakistan? He pointed out that Pakistan is currently inclined to be more friendly towards and cooperative with America.

"While I found in Karachi papers news items reporting on racial discrimination here, I found at least one feature article dealing with progress in race relations. Another article referred to what it called 'liberal and intelligent racial policy of America'."

Dr. Yergan observed that while India is the most adversely critical of the United States at the moment, there is such criticism everywhere, especially among the intellectuals, but the ordinary people admire this country.

VIEWS AND REVIEWS

High Court Decision Was No Surprise to Him

THE U. S. SUPREME COURT spoke unanimously and the death knell of racially segregated public education was sounded on May 17, 1954.

Knowing America and the American people, this did not come as a surprise to me, although it may have amazed some people who have criticized me for taking the bullish view toward the nation's capacity and willingness to come to grips with touchy and vexatious problems.

SCHUYLER

Has any other country with a comparable racial, religious or nationalist problem met it more forthrightly and in keeping with the principles of republicanism?

Nearly a quarter century ago, writing in The American Mercury of February, 1930, I reached in "A Negro Looks Ahead" the following conclusions: "The prospects for an early and easy solution (of the race problem) certainly do not appear very rosy" and the Negro's position "remains extremely shaky" but "the Negro will remain in this country . . . He has worked out a technique of survival and progress almost as unbeatable as the exploitive technique of the American plutocracy . . . He has learned one thing well: that the Caucasian is human before he is white, and he ordered his attack accordingly."

Who will deny that the prediction was accurate and the strategy increasingly successful?

I HAD recently concluded a nine-month tour of the South visiting 200 communities (see Courier November, 1925, to August, 1926), and since had noted all the subtle changes occurring year by year, not only there but elsewhere.

I have never been one of those to mistake the trees for the forest nor to generalize on isolated occurrences nor to assume that human nature in America is so much different from that elsewhere, and thus to regard our iniquities as unique.

There was a great uproar following reference by Hodding Carter on "Town Hall of the Air" to statements in my column of Nov. 7, 1948, in which I stated some obvious truths about the contemporary South which were promptly dubbed appeasement and gradualism —as if any great social problem could be solved soundly except by gradual process!

I REMARKED then (six years ago) that "There is less opposition than ever to Negroes voting, and I think it will gradually disappear if Negroes are not misled into voting as a bloc. There is scarcely a city which does not have Negro policemen today."

Not only did I discount the propaganda about widespread terror but declared that "the tolerance on display in the South today is little short of amazing."

There was much more that aroused the ire of professional South-baiters, but it doesn't sound so "terrible" now as it did then. Since that time many others have said the same thing.

The whole atmosphere for acceptance of such a decision as the Supreme Court handed down the other day was slowly being created in the jim-crow areas. If it hadn't existed, the Court would not have rendered the decision it did. I was denounced for prematurely echoing the obvious.

RECENTLY A lady commiserated me for "having to take the position" I did in arguing the affirmative over Town Meeting of the Air, Nov. 27, 1951, broadcast. "Are We Close to Solving Our Race Problems?".

My basic position was that "America has the willingness to change, and that is half the battle. Give us another twenty years and the problem will be solved as much as it publicly can be."

The Supreme Court decision vindicates that faith in the republican system of government. I am glad to see that the NAACP is now even more optimistic than I was and sees full freedom realized by 1963, whereas I set the time as eight years later.

So far as I know the association's leaders have not been charged with appeasing the Southern oligarchy by setting this goal. Nor have they been accused of gradualism by resorting to the slow process of the capitalist courts.

IN "THE Negro Question Without Propaganda," a speech delivered in Berlin, Germany, June 29, 1950, I said:

"In essence, the Negro problem (which has been as much white as Negro) has been one of integrating a previously enslaved and ostracized group of divergent color and culture into the national social structure with due respect for, and with the acquiescence of, the white majority and in accordance with the principles of American federalism, local sovereignty and majority rule.

"The speed with which this revolution developed was too slow for some and too fast for many more; too fast indeed, for the Southern states where the white majority was smallest, and where there were deep-seated fears, tensions and resentments on both sides arising from slavery and its aftermath.

"The intersectional racial adjustment was attended often by physical violence and repression, social ostracism and legal proscription which still obtain although markedly lessening. The record of these inhumanities, while deplorable and regrettable, is amazing not by virtue of these occurrences but because, in spite of them, there has been such unprecedented progress toward social homogeneity and justice in every direction, and within the memory of living men.

"Progressively, the color bar has been lowered here and there, either voluntarily by general agreement in the localities or through legal action in the courts . . . Overruling lagging justice within the forty-eight sovereign states, the Supreme Court of the nation has removed one obstacle after another from the Negro's path. The cumulative effect of these broad, continued and statesmanlike efforts has been improvement of racial relations in geometrical progression . . . American Negroes understand . . . that in the American system lies the hope of all submerged peoples who have the ability and determination to rise to the full stature of free men."

I think that is fitting commentary on last week's decision.

The Times Cried and Booker T. Complied

REPRESENTATIVE A. L. Miller of Nebraska, a life-long and consistent friend of Negroes, who is chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, introduced on June 2, 1954, H. R. 9416 "To provide for the establishment of the Booker T. Washington National Monument."

SCHUYLER

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to purchase and maintain the property at Booker T. Washington Birthplace, a few miles from Roanoke, Va., from is present owner, the Booker T. Washington Birthplace Memorial, and to maintain it as a museum for relics and records pertaining to the noted educational philosopher and to provide the estate with public parks, roads and recreational areas, and so forth.

EVERY NEGRO and white American at all familiar with the life and achievements of Booker T. Washington, his philosophy and its impact on race relations during a parlous period in our history, will applaud the action of Congressman Miller and urge the Congress to pass quickly H. R. 9416 unanimously.

It is difficult to see how the House and Senate will fail to do so, for no more fitting memorial to a truly great American can be imagined.

It is often said that the times make the man, but it is equally true that often a man makes the times. At the time Booker T. Washington soared to prominence the serious state of race relations in this country called for a man of intelligence, sincerity and vision who could make this troubled land listen to the counsel of moderation, benevolence and cooperation to retard and halt the social, economic and political deterioration of the freedmen.

It was what Dr. Rayford Logan has characterized as "The Nadir" of a period which began with the high promise of emanicipation, enfranchisement and guarantee of civil rights and opportunity embodied in the Thirteenth, Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution, Reconstruction and rehabilitation, but had ended with disfranchisement, economic discrimination, lynchings by the scores, wholesale ridicule and lampoonery, deprivation of human rights, enforced segregation and cries of hopelessness from a minority being virtually re-enslaved.

THE TIMES cried for a man with a formula, a message, a philosophy which would be helpful to all and hurtful to none, and Booker T. Washington was the man.

What he said and did challenged the conscience of America of the white man and what he advocated cheered and strengthened the America of the black man.

In pointing out the dignity of labor, the learning of useful skills, the acquirement of property, the fuller integration of the Negro into the developing economic life of the nation in partnership with the whites and the implementation of Christian principles in daily relationships, he preached a philosophy of education and social conduct which helped this nation and has been increasingly appreciated and copied elsewhere.

Surely no man of his time had greater impact and influence, and no man better deserves a fitting memorial to express the gratitude of the American people.

WHEN CONGRESSMAN Miller's bill is passed, another man will deserve credit, too, for his quiet, effective work in perpetuating the eminent Virginian's memory.

That man is S. J. Phillips, president of the Booker T. Washington Birthplace Memorial. It was through his efforts, with the help of the Nehi Corporation which financially assisted him, that the farm on which Booker T. Washington was born was purchased and restored, buildings and rehabilitated and constructed, five million commemorative half dollars minted and sold at a profit to the Government of $1,620,000, a trade school and modern farm established, and a state highway named after the distinguished educator and leader. All this S. J. Phillips has achieved since 1946, with the approval and cooperation of men of goodwill in all parts of the land, of all colors, of all creeds, of all political faiths.

This has been a remarkable contribution by a dedicated man.

The establishment by the United States Government of a Booker T. Washington National Monument will be a belated but fitting tribute to one of America's greatest sons.

(NEGRO) DR. J.A. SOMERVILLE

Scattered Records . . . By Dr. J. A. Somerville

Massachusetts commission against discrimination, of which Elwood McKinney, a Negro, is one member, has induced the Pullman Co. to change its 90-year employment policy and open conductor jobs to Negroes. The company has agreed not to "discriminate against anyone seeking a position as porter or conductor solely because of his race, color, etc."

SOMERVILLE

This decision is the result of a complaint filed by George G. Greenridge, of Boston. Greenridge has been promoted to "carman helper apprentice", a position leading to a conductor's job and previously open only to whites. The 71,000 Negro citizens of Massachusetts are certainly on the alert and have been able through judicious use of their votes to place members of their race in strategic positions where they help to make policy affecting employment and social welfare in city and state.

This latest achievement of the "commission has placed Boston far ahead of Los Angeles, racially-speaking.

In the state of California under a long Republican administration, we have few Negroes appointed to policy making board, and none to any boards of great significence, in spite of the fact that there are over 500,000 Negroes in California.

Something is wrong. Can it be apathy on the part of the Negro voter, or is it the design of those in power and those who aspire to elective office to belittle racial solidarity in politics in order to dissipate any effectiveness such a position might have?

In two assembly districts in the state with large numbers of Negro voters, we have been able to elect two members of the legislature, and they are the most progrssive members of that body. According to our present assemblyman in the 63rd district, it is immoral politics to vote on a racial basis. Is he afraid that we will send another progressive to Sacraento to undo some of the reactionary policies he has voted for?

Mayor Poulson and Chief Parker are reported at loggerheads about matters of personnel and budget as submitted by the chief. The City Charter gives certain powers to the Police Commission which, if exercised, would eliminate clashes between the Mayor and the Chief.

The Police Commission is nominally the head of the Police Department and is supposed to direct its policies. Heretofore, many of the commissioners have taken time to acquaint themselves with the operations of the whole department, making frequent visits to the divisions talking freely with the commanders and the men under their control. By so doing they were able to get a working knowledge of the department. Armed with this first-hand information, they have been able to discuss their findings with the Chief and to enter into his recommendations so that when they finally reached the Mayor, they had the full sanction of the Commission.

However, the Mayor and the City Administration officer look only at figures submitted in the budget, and perhaps in the interest of economy try to make reductions in the items without a true knowledge of the picture.

Those of us who are familiar with crime statistics and their alarming rate of increase are inclined to believe that a drastic cut in the department budget would jeopardize the safety of citizens of Los Angeles, already endangered by under-policing.

The science of crime prevention is becoming more demanding as the population increases. It takes years of selection and intensive training to prepare a police officer for a responsible position, and it would not only be false economy to replace them with civilian personnel, but it would weaken the coordination that is so necessary in efficient police work.

Aside from being highly technical, the work of officers who sit at desks is very confidential, and the assignment of civilians to take their places would interrupt the chain of command and communication in the department. The Police department in the past has had some very unpleasant experiences and disastrous results when police duties were delegated to civilians; and, incidentally, when the civilians get into trouble, the police department gets the blame.

I attended the annual dinner of the Crenshaw Co-Ordinating Council last Wednesday evening. This council is doing a wonderful work in the field of human relations and social welfare. Its membership includes many organizations such as the PTA, Boy and Girl Scouts, Scout programs to combat juvenile delinquency, health, recreation and youth guidance. Various racial and religious groups in the community having as their goal better understanding and cooperation among agencies interested in human relations and youth development are also members.

Mayor Poulson and Supervisor Kenneth Hahn were to be principal speakers. Mr. Hahn outlined the efforts the Board of Supervisors is making to improve social conditions, especially along the line of juvenile delinquency, ending up with advice to parents to do their part in training better Americans.

Assistant Mayor Jack Irwing represented the Mayor, who was in Washington. Mr. Irwing must have misunderstood the purpose of the meeting because he confined his remarks solely to the accomplishments of Mayor Poulson since he took office, stressing traffic, transportation, and taxation problems, without once referring to human relations and social welfare. The Rev. George Lejon Pratt, rector of the Church of the Advent, was inaugurated as president of the council for the ensuing year.

There are over 250,000 Negroes in Los Angeles. On the basis of home ownership and business establishments, they are far ahead of many of the large cities in the country.

SOMERVILLE

Although there is still a great deal of discrimination in employment, they manage to get good jobs. It can be safely said that Negroes living in this city are faring well.

They have advanced rapidly in almost every line of endeavor, except in the field of politics. Here, we find a disorganized, or shall I say, unorganized group? With a potential voting strength of over 100,000, they could easily become the deciding factor in any city or county election and could wield great influence in state and congressional elections.

In spite of this heavy voting strength, Negroes in Los Angeles have not been able to elect a single representative to a city office and over the past 20 years they have sent only one man to the state legislature. Now, what is the reason that keeps Negroes from exercising their maximum political rights and responsibilities?

It cannot be said that they do not have qualified men because the one representative that we have in Sacramento, Gus Hawkins, has proved to be one of the state's most outstanding legislators ever since he has been in office.

Many who value their political rights and duty have either aspired or encouraged other Negroes to run for political offices, but there has been so much apathy among the voters that these candidates fail to get the support they should.

There are several factors involved in the Negro's getting nowheres politically. Of course Negroes register with both major political parties and so it should be. But they fail to realize that neither party gives a tinker's damn about them, and that if we want to get a candidate from our race elected, we will have to do it ourselves, crossing party lines to do so.

Another contributing factor to our getting nowhere is the lack of unity among our socalled leaders. They allow personal likes and dislikes to blind their eyes and motivate their political thinking, forgetting that the election of one man will pave the way for another, and that the other man be someone of their own liking or choosing.

The moment politicians realize that Negroes are sticking together, they will fall in line and support their candidate instead of sending hand-picked emissaries to upset the apple cart in what they consider a loosely organized district.

This brings me to the point that I want to emphasize. In the 63rd district, Lucius W. Lomax, Jr., publisher of the Los Angeles Tribune, is a candidate for election to the state assembly. He has all the qualifications for the office he seeks, certainly more than the present incumbent. We are not supporting him just because he is a Negro, but because he would make a good representative in Sacramento; and you can take it from me that when two or more candidates are running for the same office and one of them is a Negro, I am going to vote for the Negro, providing his qualifications are on par with the others.

In the city of Boston there are only 51,000 Negroes and most of them are newcomers, but they have learned to unite politically, thereby putting Los Angeles to shame by the things they have been able to accomplish.

In 1946 and '48, they elected Lawrance Banks to the City Council. A young Negro attorney is a candidate for the House of Representatives. He is now one of the two Negro lawyers in the office of the State's Attorney General.

Mrs. Pauline A. Schaek is assistant to the director of the Massachusetts civil service. In the State House Henry Elam is executive secretary to the Governors council. Robert Levister is senior inheritance tax examiner. Judge G. Bruce Robinson is on the Juvenile court and Judge Edward C. Gourdin on the municipal bench. For many years Mathew W. Bullock, now retired, was on the state parole board and served a term as chairman of that body.

Appointive jobs in the city administration held by Negroes include a member of the board of street commissioners, a member of the Board of public welfare. Mrs. Beulah Hester and Joseph S. Mitchell are assistant corporation counsel for Boston.

Compare the achievements of 51,000 people sticking together with the looseness of 250,000 in Los Angeles who are getting nowhere as fast as they can. There is no better place to start to show strength than in the 63rd assembly district right now!

The New York Times of Sept. 3, 1954 carried the following news item. "PANAMA — One of President Jose Antonio Remon's last official acts before dropping the reins of government for a week's leave was to direct the Foreign ministry to rectify immediately racial discrimination against United States Negro tourists by the Republic of Panama."

SOMERVILLE

"Two United States Negro nurses desiring to stop off at Panama enroute home from a health congress in Peru, were refused tourist cards by an airline. The airline was complying with Panamanian regulations that Negroes of non-Spanish speaking origin, [illegible] tourist visas though white persons may visit on tourist cards."

Discrimination against American Negroes in Panama began about 50 years ago, shortly after the United States established the Canal Zone in that country and has been a source of embarrassment for United States Negroes living or travelling in that nation.

In the year 1911, this writer crossed the Isthmus of Panama by train spending several days in Colon (now called Christobal) also in Panama City. At that time I found no racial discrimination against Negroes in either of these places.

The population consisted of a mixture of Spaniards, Indians, Negroes and natives of the near Central American countries. There was no color line. Many of the business and professional people were Negroes and at least one of its presidents was a Negro.

During the administration of President Theodore Roosevelt the United States took over the Isthmus as American territory and established the Canal Zone. That was the time when racial discrimination made its appearance in Panama.

During the construction of the Panama Canal the Americans established separate zones for Negroes and for whites. They had separate windows in the post offices and other government buildings, one entrance marked "gold" for white people and the other marked "silver" for colored people. Segregation of the worst kind patterned after the southern states was carved into a country composed largely of colored peoples.

In the year 1923, my wife and I stopped over in the Canal Zone for a few days. I was surprised to find how conditions had changed in the short space of twenty years. The hotel where I stayed on my first visit was closed to American Negroes. The week before we arrived, they refused to give Madame Lelia Walker accomodations at this hotel and it was only because our reservations were made in advance by the steamship line on which we were travelling that we were accepted there.

We visited the post office building and other government places all carrying signs, gold windows for white and silver windows for colored and having separate waiting rooms. It looked as though a railroad station had been transplanted from Atlanta, Ga. to Panama.

In spite of vigorous protests, this condition continued and I have my doubts if it has been wholly discarded now in the American zone. Observing how United States Negroes were treated by their own countrymen, the Panamanians thought that it was proper to do the same.

Realizing that segregation and racial discrimination are out of step with present day thinking, the President of Panama has now issued this mandate to ban discrimination against American Negroes in that Republic. We sincerely hope that the American zone will do the same.

In my recent trip across the country, I tried to find out the political thinking of the people wtih whom I had contact, business and professional people, tourists and taxi cab drivers.

The conversations all had the same connotation that in spite of the glowing reports made in some quarters, business conditions are far from normal. The little people are complaining that it is becoming increasingly hard [illegible] a job and harder still to find one if you happen to be unemployed.

Being politically minded, I tried to find out the causes for this unrest. Many of them put the blame on the present administration, helping the big fellows while the man on the street has to bear the brunt.

A taxi driver was rather vehement in blaming the women whom he thought were responsible for the Republican trend. He caught himself and apologized to the three ladies who were riding in the cab with me. I gather from these rumblings that there may be quite an upset in the November elections and that the voters, if they cannot change the administration this year will at least change the complexion of Congress.

I have been politically out of circulation for nearly three weeks but on my return I find a great deal of activity in the 15th Congressional district. Frank O'Sullivan and Lucius Lomax in the 63rd district are still out in front and are making good headway for the finals in November.

The hardest pull will be during the next 30 days. It will take hard work and a great deal of money to finish the job. If every loyal Democrat will send in one dollar to the Lomax campaign committee, we will be assured of success.

Lem Graves back at his desk

P.4

PARIS — Lem Graves back in town a few days ago, and back behind his same big desk this week, in the Information Service. The former newsman arrived just in time for a spate of work due to the big conference here which saw Germany restored to sovereignty, and also admitted as a member of NATO. Lem took his family to the States on home leave last July after completing more than four years here with a diplomatic status.

Mr. Stewart

Good news about Babe Wallace, who's been in the spotlight at the Folies Bergere these past three years. Babe has just signed an exclusive recording contract with Ducretet - Thomson, and his first chore was the waxing of four songs on a long-playing record — with two songs on each side.

Baltimore Md.

Most interesting, though, is the fact that two of the songs — "Where's That Sun?" and "My Baby Done Left Me" — were penned by Babe and his pianist, Frenchman Eddie Bernard.

— o O o —

AND WHILE the record people here are giving Babe a publicity build - up (got his photo on the new disc, no less), Babe has recently signed an agreement to let a New York publisher handle one of his latest songs — "God Bless Kids and Little Animals."

With mustard?: It didn't quite cause an international incident, but a big sign that said "Hot Dogs" resulted in a few chuckles — and some righteous indignation — last week when the dog show was held at the Palais des Sports. Main trouble was, the hot dog sign was set up next door to a booth occupied by members of the society that prevents cruelty to animals!

And one of the dear ladies lost her temper when a spectator jokingly suggested that the society must be lax in its duties, "if it allowed heat to be applied to the poor little dogs!"

— o O o —

PITY THE poor British. They couldn't win any gold medals or set any records in the Olympics in Finland, because the Americans beat them to the tape every time. So in this off - year, they entered their best athletes in several European meets where there would be no Yanks. So what happens?

Chataway goes out and gets himself a world record in the 5,000 meters. But before he gets through shaking hands with the people who want to congratulate him — along comes Russia's Vladimir Kuc, and lops off four seconds for a new world record. Poor Chris.

And speaking of hard - luck guys, France's Ray Famechon has had his share in the past year. Several months ago hard-punching Percy Bassett, interim featherweight champ, came over here and stopped Ray in four rounds by a kayo. Then recently, along comes Sandy Saddler, the real featherweight king, reputed to be off his form and needing some tune-up bouts.

This would seem to be Famechon's chance. But when Saddler teed off here at the Palais des Sports, Famechon got smacked around for five rounds so badly that his handlers wouldn't let him come out for the sixth heat. It's being freely predicted now that Famechon will quit the championship trail.

AT LONG last! Now that the Nobel prize for literature has finally been awarded to author Ernest Hemingway, all I can say is that if it had been left up to me, Papa Hemingway would have had it long ago! I can think of no other writer in the past thirty years who has influenced and inspired would-be authors the world over in the way that Hemingway has.

I met Hemingway and worked in the same press camp with him during the war. And the thing I remember best about him happened just before the liberation of Paris. While some 250 other war correspondents were buying up all the cognac in sight, and cooling their heels in camp, about 25 miles from Paris, Hemingway organized himself an army and fought a pitched battle with the Germans who were blocking the road to the French capital.

"I love Paris," Hemingway told a group of us later, at the Scribe bar, "and I was in a hurry to see it again. No damn German was going to make me wait on the outskirts — when I wanted to be in the hotel bed I used to have!"

— o O o —

EVER WONDER what American do when they're away from home at election time? Well, I went around to the American Embassy (Press Attache"s office) to see who was winning from who, when the results began to come in.

They were serving coffee and doughnut and being very American. Reporters and Embassy workers—most of whom have been away from home so long they've forgotten how to vote—were watching the three tickers beat out the news with a steady whir.

Like me, most of them couldn"'t have cared less who got a seat in the Senate, or was elected governor. Most of them didn't know any of the candidates personally; they were just yapping and staring because they knew about Harriman and and young Roosevelt and Kefauver from reading the news.

And I was interested in only one name —because of an AFRO editorial. The name of McKeldin. And when I saw that he was elected governor of Maryland, I finished my coffee and got ready to leave.

— o O o —

I DON'T know Governor McKeldin. I didn't even look to see whether he is a Democrat or Republican. I only knew from what I read that he was the man opposing somebody named Byrd—who used to be president of the U. of Maryland. That was all I went to see.

Was Maryland going to send Byrd to Annapolis? Maryland didn't. And when I ran out to catch the bus, I somehow felt that everything looked sort of good to me. I've never voted but once, and it doesn't mean much to me. But apparently it means a lot to folks who read the AFRO—in Maryland.

Free ride: For the life of me I can't figure the Army. Always asking for it. A few weeks ago, U. S. Army authorities in Germany invited the wives of men in Germany to say what was wrong with the service as far as making it a career is concerned. Now Heidelberg has announced that if an Army wife can"t adjust herself to life overseas, she can return home at govment expense!

Attention Manager Brown of the Theresa Hotel, in NYC: Thanks for your nice letter inviting me to try the comforts of your hotel when, and if, I make another trip back to New York.

I have no plans to do so at the moment, but in the meantime, if you make things p'easant for my pal Jimmy Hicks, I'll be obliged to you. One other thing: If you write me again, please send letter to 7 rue du Laos. I almost didn't get the last letter because I haven't lived on Avenue Junot since 1950.

Camille Nickerson applauded

PARIS — Personality of the week: Camille L. Nickerson, professor of music at Howard University, who is on leave for the first semester, sailed for home on November 19 after giving a series of Creole folk music concerts in Paris and several provincial cities of France. She was sponsored by the cultural section of the U.S. Embassy, and her tour was a tremendous success. Newspapers in Paris and elsewhere applauded her, and each audience prolonged her recitals by demanding encores.

All told she appeared 14 times, and gave three radio performances. Limoges, Marseilles, Lyons, Rouen and Champagnele were among the cities that heard her. In Paris she appeared at Cite Universitaire and on the radio. A native of Louisiana, she accompanied herself on the piano as she sang songs that have been handed down for generations by people who descended from early French settlers in the new world.

Mr. Stewart

Afro-American

"IT HAS been a delightful experience," she told me when I visited her at her Montparnasse hotel. "The French people seem to appreciate that I have brought back to them something that originally came from France . . . When I get back home, I am going to do some more writing and more research in the field of Creole music. I feel that my trip has done much to better Franco - American relations."

Another Washingtonian, who has been around town for several months, also left for home late this month. She is Fannie Ball, of 4913 Jay St., NE, a graduate of Freedman's and a registered nurse. From Paris she sends a big hello to her sister, Mrs. Hannah Roane, 1509 West Diamond St., Philadelphia, and the rest of her family.

P.4

Fannie tried to crack one of the toughest nuts in Paris — only she didn't know it at the time. She tried to get on the staff of the American Hospital in Paris, which has never lowered the color bar where nurses are concerned — and doesn't mean to, unless forced to do so. But they told Fannie they couldn't take her because she "doesn't speak French!" American patients in the hospital don't speak French either!

Baltimore Md.

GREGORY SIMMS, of New York, was the baritone soloist with the Paris Philharmonic Chorus and Orchestra in a Bach recital on November 16. Here on a John Hay Whitney grant, he is the regular soloist at the American Church . . . Paris papers have their own version of the Sugar Ray Robinson story.

Sat. 12-4-54

Negotiations are said to be under way for Robinson to return to Paris with a big musical revue — with 100 people in the cast! The show will be called the Robinson Show. Sugar Ray will dance with his wife and sing with a big-name star. One of the biggest orchestras on Broadway will furnish the music. And the pay - off is that Ray will fight Olson for the title — just to make enough dough to finance this theatrical venture in Paris!

Question: What historical monument do tourists flock to most in France? Answer: Versailles! And next to Versailles the most visited spot in France is the Louvre. Fontainebleau comes third. Imagine that! And I always thought that the Eiffel Tower was the biggest drawing card in town.

BUT I SUPPOSE the Tourist Bureau knows better than anybody else — which is where I got my information for the above declaration. And while on the subject, I might as well break the news that 278,492 Americans paid us a visit during the first nine months of this year. That's an increase of 13 per cent over last year. Neither high prices nor changing governments can keep the visitors away, it seems, and next year will probably see a higher figure.

When you stop to think that every American coming over spends at least a thousand dollars, and add to the Americans all the people who come from Britain, Germany and Scandanavia, it's easy to see why France hasn't been doing so badly in the last few years. And from what I can hear, the French prefer tourists to Marshall Plan aid any day in the week. With tourists, everybody gets a little taste.

Incidentally, have you made YOUR trip to Paris yet?

ALL THESE lung cancer stories had the British in a dither for quite a few weeks—until somebody came up with an explanation of why British males have more lung cancer than American males. Figures show that American men smoke (by far) more cigarettes per day than English men—yet have less cancer of the lungs!

The answer, says one authority, lies in the fact that Americans are so nervous and impatient that they light a cigarette, take a few puffs, and throw it away only half-smoked. The British, on the other hand, stay with a fag until it burns the lips. And the bitter end of the cigarette produces the stuff that produces cancer when sucked into the lungs. Get rid of that butt in a hurry!

THE RECENT ten o'clock curfew in Germany will remove teen-age dependents of Army personnel from the streets. At the same time the German police began a clean up of girls who hang around the gates of camps and casernes. For years these camp followers have been accepted as part of the scenery.

They arrived in droves just as many soldiers finished work for the day, and were either driven away in cars for food or drink, or taken for walks to nearby bars and clubs. From now on, however, they'll have to prove that they have jobs — or be hustled out of town.

JOSEPH ATTLES (should have mentioned him earlier) alternates with Fuller as Sportin' Life. Attles was in Paris years ago with the Blackbirds revue. Also from that same musical is Eloise Uggams, now returning as a Catfish Row inhabitant. Merritt Smith has the part of Honeyman.

The mention of Porgy and Bess a bit earlier reminds me that members of the company have settled down for quite a stay in Europe, with a few people actually on the lookout for apartments. At least a half dozen are doubling in night clubs and cabarets. Rumor has it that after the show closes its Paris run in mid-December, a new opera will be premiered. Then a film of Porgy and Bess will be made here. Then Porgy and Bess and the new opera will be taken on tour through Europe.

INCIDENTALLY, "six days shall thou labor" does not apply to the Porgy cast. They work seven days a week — without a day off. Under Equity regulations, they have a maximum of eight performances a week, and as things are now, they give a performance every day, and add a matinee show on Sunday.

This isn't too strenuous, but one or two people have said to me that they could appreciate one day a week when they could forget about the theatre.

Remembers Mattiwilda and Luis

PARIS—The show must go on: Shortly before this column was to be written, I was happy in the knowledge that I had some more good news about that great artist, Mattiwilda Dobbs Rodriguez. I knew that she had been chosen as one of the stars at London's Covent Garden to sing at a special performance before two reigning monarchs—King Gustav VI of Sweden, and Queen Elizabeth II of England — on June 30.

Mr. Stewart

Mattiwilda sang as scheduled. And in the leading role of Rimsky-Karsakov's "Coq d'Or," she covered herself with glory. I was in Paris and couldn't hear her, but I read the reviews from London and they were full of praise of her faultless delivery. I sat down to my typewriter, intending to make mention of all this, because it's news and because I like Mattiwilda both as an artist and as a person.

In Tradition Of Theater

But before I could begin to write anything, my telephone rang — and a voice informed me that Mattiwilda's husband, Luis, had died just before her performance in honor of the King of Sweden! As a matter of fact, she had carried on in the grand tradition of the theater, just after making arrangements for sending the body of her husband back to his home in Madrid, Spain.

So now I am trying to write something about Mattiwilda and Luis — as I knew them in their days of happiness. I think back only a few short weeks ago, when Mattiwilda and Luis were in Paris for the last time, with Mattiwilda's mother. I went to the Raspail hotel where they were staying and I saw Mrs. Dobbs and Mattiwilda — but I didn't see Luis. He was ill, but I didn't know (nobody knew) that the end was so near.

Made Wonderful Couple

I think back to just over a year ago, when Mattiwilda and Luis and I walked down the Champs Elysses and talked about the future. I took the first pictures of them in Paris after their marriage, and they invited me to visit them in Spain. Everybody who saw them together said they made a wonderful couple — but I think I know better than most how close they were and how each complemented the other.

Luis was courteous, affable and easy to know. He was a swell guy and I liked him. Just liking him, I shall miss him a lot. But how must it be with Mattiwilda? She loved him! But I think she will carry on! The show must go on!

Says no jump joints in Paris

PARIS—White fellow arrived in Paris recently from the States and got in touch with Lem Graves—just as Lem was packing to take off on home leave. Seems this fellow wanted to hear some jazz, not just any old jazz, but some "real good American jazz" — meaning he wanted to see some dark faces on the bandstand. Lem, apparently couldn't think of any jumping joint with colored musicians, so he phoned me. . .

Mr. Stewart

I gave the matter some thought, but for the life of me couldn't come up with a suggestion worth bothering about. There just aren't any wide-open jump spots in Paris that get down with it, particularly not in the summer. And not too many in the winter. A jump crowd is a beer-drinking crowd and the people who pay rent have to sell more than beer to keep the doors open.

BUT—WHAT I remembered later and should have told them was that this fellow could have gone to any big cabaret, music hall or theater and seen some of the best colored performers in show business—but none of them were identified with jazz. Colored artists in Paris don't have to play jazz or play the fool. They are not forced into a pattern. And most of them are the stars of the shows in which they appear.

George Carter, of Philadelphia, who works out of the Paris headquarters of the World Assembly of Youth, back on the job here after a vacation at home. Last spring George left for Singapore and India to arrange a youth conference. About half his time is spent in southeast Asia.

HOW WOULD you like to spend your vacation next summer in a nudist camp? In the south of France there's a popular one for men and women, that has accommodations for about 1,000 persons and I've been invited to show off the body beautiful. Somebody else can have my place, however. I guess I'm too old to run around in my birthday suit. I get cold much too quick with nothing but my skin to keep me warm!

Personality of the week: Master Sergeant Luther Williams, El Paso, Texas, stopped over recently on his way to Italy, and we had a talk that brought back old times and many names to memory. Williams is now with a transport squadron (MATS) based at Westover Field, Massachusetts, but during the war he was a fighter pilot with the 332nd.

Got his discharge in 1946 and lit out for South America. Had plenty of adventures down Rio way — but money was somehow hard to hem up. So in 1950 Williams went back into the service, after having tried his hand at professional baseball in Cuba. But he still claims that the place to make your fortune is below the Equator.

ATTENTION MISS F. Blakey, 1625 R St., NW, Washington, D.C.: Sorry, no information on the subject you mentioned. But since you live in Washington, you should be able to get word on what you want there better than anywhere else. Everything of that nature has its beginning in the nation's capital.

Mrs. Anita B. Williams, of St. Paul, Minn. who is a registered nurse out in the Gopher State, wound up her three-month European vacation here this week by taking her son Kenneth to see "Porgy and Bess."

She and her son have been on a very leisurely jaunt through Holland, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, England and France — which is the right way to travel if you have the time and money. During the weeks spent in Paris, the boy was put in a French school, with the result that he goes home with a working knowledge of another language.

Hate to make anybody feel bad, but if you visited our city this summer during either July or August, you should have waited until October. Best weather since the month of May.

WOMEN MINISTERS FIGHT CAVE MAN SUPERIORITY

Around 18 years ago, the late Robert Sengstacke Abbott, owner and publisher of the Chicago Defender, invited the editor of this column to come to Chicago to work. He planned a definite job for her to do and had her to understand that she should devote her time and talent to the mental emancipation and to the civic and social development of women — organized women — all women, of all races.

Mrs. Dodson

You will not find this objective listed in the mast head of the Defender, as you will find others that this far-seeing, consecrated pioneer outlined, (several of which have come true) but his deep-seated purpose was evidenced by the fact that for almost two dcades it has been kept alive conscientiously and religiously, and altho misunderstood by many this editor carried out his instructions.

Although Mr. Abbott has gone to his reward (if it were possible) he must take pleasure in the movement of the women ministers who participated in the World Council of Churches in Evanston last week when they attacked the last bulwark of segregation and discrimination — that bulwark that forms the foundation of the church of the Most High God. The attack came from within the church and was led by women ministers.

THE CHURCH IS RESPONSIBLE

Governor Talmadge of Georgia was right when he said that the church set the pattern for discrimination and segregation. Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse college (as it were) shot the shot that will go around the world when he listed the United States of America with South Africa as the two strongholds of discrimination and segregation — but to the point:

WOMEN MINISTERS seek more femininity in the clergy. Women ministers attending the World Council of churches assembled in Evanston, Ill., discussed formation of an International Committee to fight the "CAVE MAN SUPERIORITY" in the church which denies or discourages ordination to women.

According to reports, the handful of women who discussed their pastoral problems at a breakfast get-to-gether in Scott Hall. were guests of Dr. Hilda L. Ives of Portland, Maine and the Rev. Mrs. Eva Henderson of Medford, Mass., president of the New England Association of Women Ministers.

Such an international committee for the exchange of ideas would be a basis for a world-wide women's organization, described as a dream of the two New Englanders to fight the strong traditional PreJUDICE agaist women ministers.

Rev. Mrs. Henderson said: "We women are sometimes down in the dumps because we are all alone. But we do not despair — there are 7,000 women ministers in the United States and even 30 in England where women are denied positions on the Anglican church govering bodies.

"The greatest thrill for a woman is motherhood, with the exception of the awareness of reality of God, but for women who do not marry — who have not found anyone with whom they spiritually are one — whose husbands or fiances have died — to deny to them ordination seems enslavement of women in cave man superiority."

Others who talked of the challenges to women pastors included the Rev. Jorgelina Lozada of Buenos Aires, Argentina, and Dr. Mossie Allman Wyker, president of the United Church Women, both ordained by the Disciples of Christ, and the Rev. Mrs. Elsie Thomas Culver, whose ordination for the ecumenical (world-wide) ministry set a precedent in both fields of the Congregational church.

Also urging a continuation of fellowship were Mrs. Mary LeFevre of Laurel, Pa., ordained by the church and wife of a Presbyterian minister the Rev. Margaret M. Morton, minister of Christian education at Wellesley, Mass., Congregational church, and the Rev. Fiorence Resor Jardine, pastor of the Letts Iowa Methodist church.

Prejudice is being bucked in the Church of Scotland (Presbyterian) by women was described by Miss Allison Harvey of Edinburgh, an accredited visitor at the World Council of Churches and member of the foreign commission committee.

ARE NEGROES READY FOR INTEGRATION?

Last week I promised my readers that this week I would reproduce the remainder of Nannie H. Burroughs' speech in answer to Lester Granger who said (according to the press) that "Negroes are NOT ready for integration." Miss Burroughs does not refute Mr. Granger's statement but she insists that it is incomplete for he omitted the fact "Neither are the WHITES ready for integration."

Mrs. Dodson

Miss Burroughs asks the question, "How can Negroes be ready?" She admonishes all to remember that this is the first time in nearly a hundred years that a question of basic democracy for the Negro in America, has come up and been acted upon as becometh a democracy. The decision of the Supreme Court came as a surprise and a shock such as the nation had not felt since Abraham Lincoln issued the EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION.

REASON WHY

Just think — a ruling on nationwide justice once in a HUNDRED YEARS. That is why NEITHER RACE IS READY FOR INTEGRATION.

Sat. 10-9-54

American children must be taught TOGETHER in order that the whole nation may learn the fundamentals of democratic principles and processes.

What are the specific needs for this brand-new nation-wide program of education? The needs are GOOD TEACHERS, AUTHENTIC SCHOOL TEXTBOOKS, CLEAN LITERATURE AND SENSIBLE PARENTS, broadening on contacts through organizations, conferences, workshops, Christian teaching, play and clean sports. NO NAME CALLING. In the whole adjustment process the children ... not be impossible, if the parents and other adults have good teaching and living sense.

Of course segregation in public school education should never have been tolerated or legalized in a free nation that was dedicated to become a democracy. Now that integration is here and here to stay, the point is not who is ready for the question, but how can both races prepare as rapidly and as smoothly as possible to live, so as to get the very most out of it for the good of the whole nation.

Again, let us face the question and decide to work TOGETHER on the only answer. Why is it that NEITHER race is ready for integration? We must admit that educationally, the nation started off wrong after freedom came.

Lack of knowledge of the basis of a democracy — not learning TOGETHER in order to live TOGETHER — is the cause of the present dilemma. For nearly a century both races have been too busy teaching RACE PREJUDICE, scorn, contempt, hate, inferiority and superiority, based solely on race, to be ready for democratic learning and democratic processes.

It is not a question of whether we are ready for it or not. It is a matter of what is right and best for the entire nation. America knows that we have all sinned in this matter and have therefore fallen short of the glory that awaits any real Christian democracy. We must get sense enough to integrate ALL basic democratic rights. Stop calling names and making faces. Get right! When we do, both races will get TOGETHER. First teach the fundamental biological likeness of all races; second, teach respect for human personality; third, teach cultural values and contributions made by all races of civilization; fourth, furnish libraries with suitable reading material for children and parents; fifth, correct adverse racial attributes by teaching.

The most hopeful group on which to begin to practice is on the children of the nation. THEY HAVE NO PREJUDICE. All worthwhile education is based on LOVE.

If our children can not make the grade, our hope for a real democracy is in vain. The right place to begin is in the PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Liberty and Justice for all is not a catch phrase. These words put into action, are the very lifeblood of a democracy. Had the home, the school and the church been doing their duty in teaching basic democratic and religious ideals, American and both races, would have been ready for the Supreme Court Decision long before it was handed down.

Had the people been doing right in this matter of public education they themselves would have been the Supreme Court. When people do not intend to do right, they are never ready to do it. Learn now that this nation cannot save its face in WORLD COUNCILS and continue to deny the Negro his basic, human and democratic rights. Remember DEMOCRACY LIKE CHARITY MUST BEGIN AT HOME. The fact that it is not only a matter of face saving, but of gaining a place of RESPECT, EFFECTIVE SERVICE and INFLUENCE among the really free peoples of the earth. The only way this nation can ever do it, is to PRACTICE AT HOME WHAT IT TRIES TO PREACH ABROAD.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY DEMAND EUAL RIGHTS

Last week was "Labor Week." Last Monday was "Labor Day." The pages of all the newspapers were filled with information concerning labor and laborers. Today labor "top the market," yet there is a side that is omitted in the press — a side that is called UNSKILLED LABOR and does not provide a living wage for thousands.

Mrs. Dodson

The high cost of living has just about run labor crazy, and labor, in turn, is charging extortious prices for their work, even those who do the most menial jobs want skilled workers pay. That thoroughness that should go hand-in-hand with the high cost of labor is wanting and small property owners who must have work done are at the mercy of exploiters on all sides. The government, banks and business enterprises are joined together to endorse and put through all kinds of questionable, unfair financial deals.

Much has been said as well as written concerning the important place of women as producers in modern industry . . . The pendulum of public opinion swings back and forth, referring to them as a source of strength and progress when labor is scarce, and utilizing and exploiting them when there is a surplus of labor.

The ancient proverb that the "hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," voices a sentiment that is not borne out by truth as revealed when we leaf the pages of human history. The status of womankind has ever been that of a slave to man and family. Even in the highest of social circles, woman was always a dependent, who had to suppress her individual peronality in order to acquire by flattering and other means, if not hard labor, that which she desired for herself.

The economic changes incidental to industrial expansion and centralization of population did not materially alter the feminie status. Man still was looked to provide food, shelter and clothing and because of feminine dependence upon the male sex for the necessities of life, woman accepted it as her lot to secure these for herself through the medium of flattery and every other method of blandishment that the feminine mind did and could suggest.

One cannot read and analyze either ancient or modern history without recognizing this startling truth — that whatever prominence was achieved by women was largely through the process before referred to rather than through an expression of sheer personal merit.

Industrial development was coincidental with, economic pressure and this, in turn, led to the same unprincipled exploitation of women in industry that they had been subjected to in the scheme of family life. The mechanization of industry was looked upon by the exploiters of femininity as an especial mark of favor by Divinety and meekness, the logical result of home training, made them more subservient to the wish and will of their taskmasters.

Society and the state have failed the women of the world in the past. It is up to the women of today to safeguard their present and future and the future of their children. Today, unless she belongs to the organized class the women in industry must fight the great battle of a living wage and regulated hours. And what chance has she?

To complain to an employer means only a lost job and starvation; to take the pittance he so graciously hands is little better. And so she suffers and submits to innumerable hours of overtime, time clocks that are rung by the boss himself, and works in half-lighted basements, damp and mouldy; unventilated lofts, cold in winter and torrid in summer, subject to lewd recognition from her boss and the Simon Legree tactics of the foremen.

In their ignorance women know not which way to turn. In the great trades of industry, where mothers and daughters of men must toil — everywhere these are the women who must be reached. Whether their appearance in industry be motivated by the necessity of maintaining the family budget, or for lawful-expression and independence, mass production of industry today makes their presence obligatory.

Women united, with God's help, must carry the fight to safeguard their welfare into every city, state, and nation. Organized women have written it in their platforms; they have borne it from the schoolroom and the lecture forums and sooner or later it will be indelibly into the entire public conscience and women will come into their own industry.

AN AFRICAN WOMAN TELLS THIS STORY

In her speech to the World Congress of Women, Mrs. Monica Whately, English journalist and member of the Women's organization, "The Six Point Group," stated, "Now the British Government has forced on the native people of Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland a federation. Six million Africans inhabiting these areas have been placed under the control of two hundred thousand white settlers, who have the sole power to decide what political rights the Africans should be given in Federal assembly. No wonder that the Africans have shown unqualified objection to this Federation.

Mrs. Dodson

HUMAN RIGHTS WANTED

The British Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia, Mr. Huggins, declared that "the white settlers established in Africa will never agree to consider the African as an equal on a social and political level."

He then proceeded to produce in Southern Rhodesia, the infamous regulations on "APARTHEID," South African discrimination. He set up "reserves" for the Negro population, and demanded that they should be subjected to special control and carry special passes.

APARTHEID

What this "Apartheid" means has been explained by the representative of the Federation of S. African Women of the World Congres of Women. Mrs. Whately said: "Take for instance, my home town where there is a population of about 53,000 people, of whom 16,000 are Europeans. Our General Post-Office is divided according to "Apartheid" into two sections, three quarters for Europeans and one quarter for non-Europeans.

The Europeans are served three times as quickly as the none-Europeans. At the railway station too, we have separate entrances and are always served last. In all the public buildings today, you will find one entrance for Europeans and one for non-Europeans.

NORTHERN RHODESIA

In Northern Rhodesia a campaign against racial segregation was launched immediately. In the urban districts the men and women demanded to be served under the same conditions as Europeans in post offices, hotels, shops, restaurants and transport.

The British Governor of Nyasaland hastily applied for troop reinforcements and air force planes to crush the African campaign of "non-cooperation".

These measures, which are against the will of the whole of the population, would be inexplicable if the interest which they safeguard were not taken into consideration. The great mining concessions in Northern Rhodesia belong to two British monopolies who control the rich deposits. In 1952 alone, four of the companies exploiting the copper mines made 30 million pounds profit.

SOUTH AFRICA

White "SUPREMACY" is the means employed in South Africa to maintain the supremacy of the white man's interest. This is proved by the fact that Africans, who constitute 70 percent of the population, only own 8 percent of the land.

Forced into over-populated "reserves" isolated and starving, the native population is destined to provide the super-exploited labor which will enable the Anglo-American companies to draw fabulous profits from the diamonds, gold, and uranium, which is minded there, and to provide troops like those who were sent to fight against the Korean people under UNO flag.

The government of South Africa seems to practice a refined sadism in instituting laws designed to strangle any national movement or any means of democratic expression. These measures not only hit the natives and Indians but also the progressive Europeans.

At any time "they consider opportune," government authorities can decree that a whole section of the African or Indian population shall be displaced and forced to live in another place fixed by the government—a "resrve" or ghetto.

MARRIAGES

A law on mixed marriages makes marriage between Europeans and non-Europeans a punishable crime and is reinforced by the law on "Immorality" which forbids members of different racial groups to live together. It has meant untold suffering for thousands of mixed families, where the mother or father have been forced to separate.

PASSES — The African must always carry on him one copy or more of the twelve kinds of passes which exist, or else he risks being arrested.

SOUTHERN WHITE WOMEN STEP OUT OF RACIAL RUT

If the United States of America is ever to become a true democracy, that will be recognized as such by the world outside of itself — then American women — white and colored — will have to become more articulate along racial lines and more consecrated to the task of making it so, for who has a greater right to work toward that end than women? Are they not the MOTHERS OF ALL MEN?

Mrs. Dodson

It does not surprise me that white women from fifteen southern states met recently in Atlanta, Ga., and declared themselves in agreement with the Supreme Court's decision. I have been patiently waiting to hear from them and I never once feared what they would say.

Being a southerner myself, I am proud that they say, "We accept with humility the Supreme Court's decision as supporting the broad Christian principle of dignity and worth of human personalty, and affording the opportunity of translating into reality Christian and democratic ideals.

"We believe that the best solution to our many problems can be reached when people of all races work together toward a common end, and we urge women to make every effort to bring together individuals in free discussion.

"We are charged with the responsibility of the training and nurture of children and youth. We pray God's guidance upon us as we work to shape right attitudes in the home, in the church, in the school and in all areas of life in which we move.

We desire to build Christian emotional maturity to meet the new challenges to our practice, understanding and creative action."

LEST WE FORGET

No—I am not surprised for I can never forget the INTERRACIAL PLATFORM set forth by southern white women. Nor can I forget the representative group that came to Tuskegee Institute at the meeting of the National Association of Colored Women in July, 1920 to pledge their interest and support in bringing about better conditions for colored women and girls in the South.

This is the origin of the Women's movement. In the beginning of the year of 1920 the women of one of the large denominations of the South became convinced that the existing racial situation in the South was a challenge to Christian faith, and also an opportunity to show the whole world the power of Christianity to settle racial differences and to meet interracial crises every where.

They, therefore, created a COMMISSION for the purpose of studying one whole question of race relationships, the needs of Negro women and children and the methods of cooperation by which better conditions might be brought about.

The commission began its operation by seeking to know something of the attitude and thinking of the leaders of Negro women of the South. An unusual opportunity for doing this was afforded them in the meeting of the National Association of Colored Women in Tuskegee, July, 1920.

In that body of 800 women they found orators, writers, poets, artists, business women, teachers, secretaries, lawyers, bankers, etc. As they listened to the addresses and debates and witnessed the splendid executive ability of these educated Negro women, they realized that in that body was a potential power of which they had little dreamed.

number of these Negro women had been asked to remain after the meeting for a day's conference with the representatives of the denominational commission. This conference was held and was reported to the commission on Interracial Cooperation which financed a meeting for the women in Memphis, Tenn., October 6-7, 1920.

The following Negro women were invited to attend and speak, Mesdames Booker T. Washington, R. R. Moton, George E. Haynes and Charlotte Hawkins Brown. They spoke of "What it means to be a Negro; The Negro and his home and Difficulties of the daily life of the Negro."

The Negro women whose advice had been sought at Tuskegee had been requested to prepare a paper setting forth the things which they considered responsible for some of the unhappy conditions of the day. This they did in a statesmanlike paper of broad Christian spirit. With this and the addresses of the two day conference as a basis, the committee on findings made a report which was unanimously adopted.

RECOMMENDATIONS were made on domestic service, child welfare, sanitation and housing, education, travel, lynching, justice in the courts and public press REPRESENTATIVES FROM THESE 14 STATES WERE THERE — Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Texas, Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Florida.

Mrs. Luke Johnson of Georgia was chairman.

It is long story and a true one. The South has so many poor whites as well as poor blacks, their poverty makes them mean.

A TRIBUTE TO DR. MARY CHURCH TERRELL

With the recent passing of Dr. Mary Church Terrell (at 90 years of age) America has lost one of its finest, most highly-cultured, most representative, and most ALTRUISTIC citizen, regardless of sex or race.

Mrs. Dodson

Dr. Terrell died Saturday, July 2 at Anne Arundel General hospital in Annapolis, Md. She was vacationing at summer home at her summer home at Highland Beach. Mrs. Phyllis Langston, was with her when she was stricken and rushed to the hospital.

Her health had been failing for some time, but the 91-year-old invincible fighter for human rights never faltered nor withdrew from a fight in which the welfare of her people was involved.

Her entire life was devoted to service, and despite the frailties of old age and a weakened body (her mind [illegible] unimpaired) she was activ[illegible] up to the time of her de[illegible]

It was D[illegible] Terrell who led a group of co[illegible] white women citizens to Atl[illegible]a., and camped on the state capitol steps until they were heard by the state Governor Talmage in the interest of freedom of Mrs. Ros[illegible]ee Ingram and her two young s[illegible] She was planning a second tr[illegible] to Atlanta to plead for the freedom of Mrs. Ingram.

Throughout the years of her life "Mollie" Terrell (as her intimate friends called her) always led the group in making intercession with officials — even the President of the United States — on behalf of unfortunate men and women, boys and girls.

There is so much good that can be said of Dr. Terrell, that one is at a loss where to begin and where to end. She was truly a FIRST — "lady to the manner born." She never knew poverty. Her soul was never warped from want. Her spirit was untrammelled.

She was fearless, intrepid and altho she held them under control she had a temper and a caustic tongue, which once seen or heard was never forgotten. Her indulgent father and mother invested heavily in her education and training, from which good fruit was produced.

She was a first colored girl to graduate from Oberlin College, a first to live and study abroad for three years; a first to address an international body of women of the world in three lnguages — English, French and German.

She was a first to serve on the school baord of Washington, D. C., after having taught for a number of years. She helped to organize the NAACP and was one of its chartered members. She was a first in social service during and after World War I, going from city to city and organizing women for social service work.

She was a first to challenge discrimination in Washington's restaurants and achieved success in this instance, she was a first to write her autobiography — entitled "Colored Woman in a white World" with a forward by the late H. G. Wells.

She was a first to win membership in the American Association of University Women, a first to be the wife of a first judge of color, Robert Terrell, and the sister of the late distinguished Republican politician and statesman — Robert R. Church of Memphis, Tenn.

She was the FIRST to be chosen president of the National Asociation of Colored Women (when national associations of colored women were unknown).

She was the first to establish the kindergarten program for NACW realizing culture must be taught at an early age. She was one of the first to lay down $50.00 toward the purchase price of headquarters for the National Association of Colored Women at 1114 "Q" Street, Washington, D. C. In being first she always laid her money down on the line.

The N. A. C. W. was her first and last love altho she made wonderful contributions to all worthwhile causes. She was at the last biennial in Los Angeles, Calif., and was the eloquent, gracious guest speaker at the mass meeting on Sunday.

She would have been present at the recent biennial in Washington for her love and loyalty to the organization has never been questioned. Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower paid a lovely tribute which the white press carried.

She took time out to say, "I am proud to honor the memory and the great work of Mrs. Mary Church Terrell. She was rarely endowed. For more than 60 years her great gifts were dedicated to the betterment of humanity and she left a truly inspiring record."

The name MARY CHURCH TERRELL is synonymous of ALTRUISM.

THEY FIGHT TOGETHER SO AS NOT TO DIE OGEHER

If humanity would live together in trust and in peace, "women must fight together, so as not to die together," was the message of an outstanding social worker to the World Peace Council.

Mrs. Dodson

Angiola Minella, assistant general secretary of the Women's International Democratic Federation, said that "As the consequences of the H-bomb explosion at Bikini become known, the peoples of the world are getting a better understanding of the terrible menance threatening all humanity.

Energies can now be released whose power exceeds all imagination; used for peaceful purposes they can open up marvellous perspectives of progress in humanity; used for terrorism and war, they threaten human life even in peacetime, in an indiscriminate and terrible way.

"If an atomic war were to break out, it would mean not only the immediate destruction of cities, provinces, whole populations, and the condemnation of the survivors and future generations to horrible diseases, but also the threat of annihilation of every form of life, of all civilization over immense expanses of the earth.

"At the same time the pressure exercised to transform the Indo-Chinese war into a general war has made people more clearly conscious that the menace hanging over humanity is present and immediate.

"In the face of this danger, the renewed attempts of the war forces to maneuver aggressive pacts, to sharpen the division of the world into opposing military blocs, and to prevent the peoples from winning their independence from their sovereignty become still more serious. Such a policy must inevitably lead to the unleashing of a world conflict, to a terrible atomic war of general devastation.

If we are to save the very existence of humanity, women must demand with renewed vigor, in a universal effort, the prohibition of weapons of extermination and an end to atomic blackmail and terrorism. Women must stand up against any policy of division and provocation and bring about new international relations that will assure a relaxation of tension in an atmosphere of mutual respect.

In the flashing light of the explosion at Bikini all this became plainer to the human conscience.

A wave of anger and indignation at the employment of weapons of extermination has arisen everywhere. Denunciation of the impending threat and the determination to fight against it, have attained unprecedented breadth and power. Never on any problem, has such a convergence of positions an efforts been achieved in the most different countries of the world and among varied forces.

"No alone millions of ordinary people but scientists, big organizations, parties, parliaments have used their authority to express the will of the public. Distinguished leaders in political life and the most eminent religious leaders, persons of different and often opposing views have taken the same position on this question.

"Women are participating widely in this world mobilization. There are already reports on activities of national organizations; in Australia, Finland, Sweden, Denmark and France; recent congresses of women in Indonesia, India and Norway have unanimously approved resolutions on banning the atomic bomb; the Women's Union of Uruguay has started a campaign on this question; in Italy, the Union of Italian Women addressed an appeal to all women, especially women in the Catholic Action, for discussion and common action.

"In Sweden the orgainzation of co-operative women and individually, leaders of Salvation Army have all expressed themselves against atomic experiments and weapons of extermination. In Great Britain, the National Assembly of Women, the Co-oerative Women's Guild and the Annual onference of Labor Women have declahed themselves for a ban of weapons of extermination.

"The sections of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom in Switzerland, Ireland, Japan, Canada, Great Britain, the U. S. A. and Sweden have protested against the employment of the H-Bomb. In Japan where millions of women can testify personally to the frightful consequences of these weapons through their own sufferings and terrors, groups of women are being set up everywhere in which women from different trade unions and all organizations take part.

The women of the entire world understand more and more clearly that with such a menace before us, every person must act. Every woman must take a stand. They must meet regardless of any differences, they may have, to discuss and FIGHT TOGETHER against a universal danger which menaces every woman, every child, and every country in the world."

Unions Praised by Church Council

AMERICAN workers who have exercised their rights to organize in labor unions "to obtain a living wage and some measure of security for themselves and their families," were commended by the National Council of Churches in its Labor Sunday Message for 1954. P. 6

"Injustice towards workers should everywhere give way to consideration of them as persons. Only where respect for personality and responsible group action prevails do individuals have the full opportunity to grow," states the message.

Mr. Townsend

LABOR, management and owners have the same obligation "to strive under God for good human relationships and the same moral imperative to seek the goal of Christian community," the message says. "In such a climate, Christian principles can effectively influence the relations of management and labor."

It describes the Christian community as one in which people live and work together for the betterment of all. They do not contend to get the better of one another. Striving for material goals alone, to the exclusion of spiritual and moral values, leads to family discord and industrial bitterness.

"However," the council emphasizes, "to struggle for such elementary needs as food, clothing and shelter, for a recognized status in society, and for justice, is the right and duty of all men."

The message recognizes that collective bargaining is a significant part of the worker's experience of Christian community. "Through its stresses and strains, equities can be hammered out so that the values for one side are joined to the values for the other, and common values are realized. As a method by which values are mutually distributed, collective bargaining advances toward the goal of human relations.

Labor unions also provide a sense of economic security for their members in helping to remove the fear of unemployment and poverty, the council says.

"Loyalty to their unions is so deeply rooted in the minds of many workers that security in employment lies for them in reliance upon union activity."

The message notes also the concern of unions for insuring the security of its members in taking up such issues as regular employment, the buying power of workers and the effect of the automatic factory upon employment.

WORD COMES from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions that South Africa's labor unions have become the latest target in the Malan government's drive to widen its program of racial segregation.

The Christian Science Monitor reports "that the unions have six months in which to organize their resistance to the government's impending Industrial Conciliation Bill which, according to its opponents, would stifle the freedom of the unions, divide the workers on racial patterns, and confine the non-white people to the most menial and worst-paid jobs."

It is obvious that labor unions in that section of the world have finally come to the conclusion that segregation, as it is presently being practiced, is dangerous to the future of industrial peace in South Africa. Also the present Minister of Labor is charged as someone who believes in race suicide as a means of self-preservation.

Dat. 5-24

THE WHITE supremacists of the Nationalist Government of South Africa hold to the theory that there are matters far more important than economic theories and that racial survival takes priority. The interesting aspect of this fight, according to the Monitor, is the fact that "not only have 90 per cent of the members of registered trade unions declared themselves against the bill, but employers' organizations representing 90 per cent of the capital invested in industry have said that they will also fight the measure.

"The industrialists are objecting to the racial-segregation clauses of the bill, the ban on racially mixed trade unions, and the reservation of occupations for particular racial groups.

"Under this latter provision, the Minister of Labor would be able to instruct an employer to dismiss all his African workers and employ only white, or vice versa.

The minister's bill has brought the registered trade unions together at a time when they were drifting apart, and the unity that was lost during the past few years is being regained.

"THE OPPOSITION charges Mr. Schoeman, the Minister of Labor, with attempting to destroy the very labor movement which had enabled him to advance from a railway fireman to the post of Cabinet minister.

"'Alex Hepple, leader of the Labor party, who has more knowledge of the bill than any other opposition member of Parliament, has listed the main provisions which have aroused antagonism.

"It encourages breakaway unions," he says. "It offers aid to 'wreckers and disrupters' by giving them a share in the assets. It 'outlaws working-class unity.' It bans racially mixed branches and mixed meetings. It 'nullifies' the effect of the strike weapon, and it introduces a system of racial quotas for jobs."

For those among us who keep inquiring what good are unions, here is a good example of trade union democracy.

Railway Employment Drop

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

THE STEADY drop of railroad employment during the past years—it is now barely over a million as compared with nearly two million in 1920—is cited as a major problem of railroad labor in a study, "Trains and the Men Who Run Them," just published by the Public Affairs Institute.

Mr. Townsend

The study points out that while labor-saving devices are responsible for some railroad unemployment, the key to the problem lies in the gradual but steady loss of passenger and freight business to competitive forms of transportation.

"Thus, we find that railroad union leaders have taken an active part in suggesting ways and means by which the railroad industry can develop a more competitive spirit in fighting for the nation's freight and passenger traffic than it has in the past," the study reports.

Dat. 10-23-54

"AND WE find, also, a certain impatience on the part of railroad labor with what it regards as defeatist, dilatory and uneconomic attitudes of many of the carriers permitting their industry to lose ground."

"Trains and the Men Who Run Them" is an effort to tell the story of the American Railroads—the world's greatest transportation system—through the lives and experiences of the men and women who run the trains, maintain the track and equipment, keep its records and business accounts, and hazard their lives daily in this essential public service."

It deals with railroad pioneer days, the growth of American railroads, railroad labor legislation, the development of the railroad labor movement, the story of modern labor-management relations and the problems facing both management and labor today.

AN IMPORTANT question raised in the study is whether railroad labor, in effect, has lost the right to strike.

It recounts the pattern of recent years during which the railroads have been "seized" by the Government every time a major tie-up is threatened.

These seizures have been almost entirely "token" seizures in the sense that the Government took over the railroads but left management entirely in charge in the persons of Reserve Army officers who turn out to be the presidents of the railroads involved.

This has resulted in the breaking of strikes without the slightest inconvenience to the companies involved and without an incentive for them to come to terms with their men.

Priest Fights for Workers

Sat. 10-30-54

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

ON OCT. 9 Father Drolet will receive the 1954 Clendennin award for distinguished service to labor's rights from the Non-Political and Anti-Communist Workers Defense League.

Just a year ago when the cane workers in Louisiana were on strike there was a man who didn't have to do so, but nevertheless came to their aid.

Mr. Townsend

He was the Rev. Jerome A. Drolet, parish priest of a small church near Thibodaux in Lafourche Parish.

During the strike he visited union headquarters regularly to keep informed and to offer his assistance in the organizing campaign then in progress. He urged the workers of his community to join the union. He issued over his name a circular letter setting forth Catholic doctrine on unionism and making it clear that he was supporting the union's program. He helped in raising funds for the relief of evicted families. He used his vacation to visit New York, Detroit and other industrial centers to raise funds for the workers. He lent the union his own car so that its organizers could get around. He was on call day and night and his life was threatened.

He made a personal investigation of the pistol whipping of a sugar cane worker who wanted to join the union by a deputy sheriff of Lafourche Parish and wrote a moving article of what happened, denouncing the anti-union brutality of Louisiana sheriffs.

"The sheriff swings at you with the butt of his revolver," he wrote. "You try to duck but it crashes into your head anyhow, tears it open, you bleed more. Blood stains your chest, crimsons the floor. The sheriff says, 'Now get the ——out of this parish. I better not see you in my parish any more. I'm tired of fooling around with you ——.' He is still pointing his loaded gun at you.

"You are terrified. You dare not say one word; you pray silently, 'Lord, save me, God help me.' The sheriff says, 'I'll kill you . . .' The seconds seem like hours. You wonder, 'He's done it before, maybe he will kill me.'"

That was the story of Welton Lestrick, Negro plantation worker. Father Drolet supported efforts to get the Department of Justice to investigate the case.

Merger Would Promote Equality

Sat. 11-13-54

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

DAILY newspapers throughout the country have been carrying headlines regarding the proposed merger between the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

It is the opinion of AFL President Geo. Meany that the two groups will be able to consummate the merger by the end of next year. CIO President Reuther was equally optimistic, but set no date as to when this would be achieved.

Mr. Townsend

As a result of these newspaper articles, my office has been deluged with inquiries around the country as to what effect it would have upon Negro membership within the CIO.

FIRST, THE statement made by the CIO-AFL unity committee, which has been preparing the groundwork for the contemplated merger, announced: "It is the unanimous decision of the joint committee of the AFL and CIO to create a single trade union center in America through the process of merger which will preserve the integrity of each affiliated national and international union."

Judging from this statement, there will be very little organic change of the existing unions and those unions within CIO which have such splendid records insofar as the Negro membership is concerned will remain unchanged.

IN FACT, it is my opinion that CIO's attitude on the race question will spill over into many of the AFL unions thereby creating a much better atmosphere so far as the Negro is concerned.

Of course, since George Meany became President of the American Federation of Labor, there has been a notable change regarding the Negro. President Meany has long been known as an advocate of racial equality and

What Our Churches Throughout the Nation Think of Labor Organizations

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

SEVERAL weeks ago I had a very interesting conversation with one of our very prominent ministers, and I was quite amazed at his anti-labor attitude. Thereafter, I spent a few days looking into the policies of the organized church in our country and have come up with some very interesting expressions which I think most ministers should know.

Mr. Townsend

BAPTIST CHURCHES

"We recognize the right of labor to organize and to engage in collective bargaining to the end that labor may have a fair and living wage, such as will provide not only for the necessities of life, but for recreation, pleasure and culture." (Southern Baptist Convention.)

"We reaffirm the right of labor to organize into unions or to affiliate with national labor bodies." (Northern Baptist Convention.)

METHODIST CHURCH

"We stand for the right of employes and employers alike to organize for collective bargaining and social action; protection of both in the exercise of their right; the obligation of both to work for the public good." (The General Conference of the Methodist Church.)

"Collective bargaining, in its . . . mature phase, is democracy applied to industrial relations. It is representative government and reasoned compromise taking the place of authoritarian rule by force in the economic sphere. In its highest form it is the Christian ideal of brotherhood translated into the machinery of daily life. It was proclaimed by the prophet Isaiah, when he said: 'Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord'." (General Board of Christian Education of the Methodist Church.)

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

"Labor unions have been instrumental in achieving a higher standard of living and in improving working conditions. They have helped to obtain safety and health measures against occupational risk; to achieve a large degree of protection against child labor; to relieve the disabled, the sick, the unemployed; and to gain a more equitable share in the value of what they produce. These and other gains which labor unions have done much to win have reached far beyond their own membership and have benefited those who have not shared in the activity." (Board of Christian Education, Presbyterian Church, USA.)

"The right of labor to organize and to bargain collectively with employers is clearly an inalienable right in a democracy and has so been recognized by our Government." (Synod of Tennessee, Presbyterian Church of U. S.)

CATHOLIC CHURCH

"In the first place employers and workmen may themselves effect much in the matter which we treat—(saving the workers from being ground down with excessive labor). The most important of all are workmen's associations . . . but is greatly desired that they should multiply and become more effective. The experience of his own weakness urges man to call on help from without. We read in the pages of Holy Writ: 'It is better that two should be together than one . . . If one falls, he shall be supported by the other. Woe to him that is alone, for when he falleth he hath none to lift him up.' And further: 'A brother that is helped by a brother is like a strong city'." Leo XIII.)

THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH

"We are convinced that the organization of labor is essential to the well-being of the working people. It is based upon a sense of the inestimable value of the individual man."

JEWISH SYNAGOGUE

"Workers have the same inalienable right to organize according to their own plan for their common good and to bargain collectively with their employers through such honorable means as they may choose.

"We believe . . . that democratic participation of workers in the councils of management will not only increase efficiency as the knowledge and experience of workers will be available to management, but it will also prevent many of the tragedies, such as irregularity of employment, and speed up, which are the consequences of the operation of industry from the viewpoint of management alone." (Central Conference of American Rabbis.)

Labor Front

By Willard S. Townsend

TWO LABOR leaders, whom I respect very much, recently released statements concerning labor's interest in racial equality. The first is by Boris Shiskin, director of research, American Federation of Labor, who stated as follows: "Equal opportunity for all regardless of race, creed, color or national origin has been the goal of the American Federation of Labor from the date of its founding. While AFL affiliates are autonomous with respect to their internal policies, the all but complete elimination of discriminatory practices in unions has in a large measure been the result of the determined and effective leadership of the national Federation.

Mr. Townsend

"Until a fair employment practices act becomes the law of the land, real progress can be made toward the wiping out of discrimination in employment by effective enforcement of the non-discrimination clause in Federal contracts. The President's Committee on Government Contracts has been set up to coordinate and assist the efforts of Federal contracting agencies such as the Defense Department and the Atomic Energy Commission to enforce the non-discrimination clause in their contracts. AFL President George Meany and CIO President Walter Reuther serve as members of this committee.

"SINCE ITS formation, the committee has developed a strengthened non-discrimination clause which specifically bars discrimination by Government contractors in all aspects of the employment relationship including hiring, placement, training, promotion, tenure of employment and compensation. Effective and vigorous enforcement of this clause could have very telling effects in a large sector of American industry since a considerable proportion of industrial firms hold Government contracts. Unfortunately, the work of the committee has been handicapped by lack of sufficient staff and the reluctance of contracting agencies to undertake effective investigation and enforcement of the non-discrimination requirement.

"These deficiencies must be corrected if this program is to be truly effective. Despite its present limitations, unions can help this program to succeed by insisting that employers holding Federal contracts adhere to the letter and spirit of the non-discrimination clause and by informing individual employes and applicants for employment of their rights under the clause."

AND THE OTHER, George L. P. Weaver, director, National CIO Civil Rights Committee, who writes as follows:

"Anyone who has ever been denied a job, pay increase or promotion because of his color, religion, race or birthplace will need no explanation as to why the CIO is determined to use every means at hand to eliminate job discrimination.

"In states where there are no FEP laws, the most important resource we have is the non-discrimination clause in all Government contracts, which requires every firm doing business with the Government to give equal employment opportunity to all workers, regardless of race, creed or color. The agency responsible for enforcing the clause is the President's Committee on Government Contracts.

While no one could honestly claim that the committee has chalked up an imposing record during the past year, we are hopeful that these many months of planning will soon bring concrete results."

BASIL DAVIDSON, writing in the July issue of Harper's Magazine, "Africa's Modern Slavery," reports a most horrifying story on slavery in Portuguese West Africa. Mr. Davidson's article should be read by freedom loving people everywhere, because they then can understand more clearly the fertile field that this sort of thing creates for Soviet communism.

Mr. Townsend

However, the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions sheds real hope in its recent report when it points out that at the request of the United Nations Secretariat, the ICFTU has submitted a statement to the UN Commission on the racial situation in the Union of South Africa.

It reiterates a number of facts which were brought to the notice of the International Labor Organization recently when the ICFTU lodged a complaint with that body accusing the South African Government of violating freedom of association.

THAT COMPLAINT cited two South African statutes which quite openly and deliberately introduce principles of racial discrimination into industrial relations. They are the Industrial Conciliation Act (1937), which debars Africans from setting up trade unions empowered to conduct collective negotiations, and from belonging to unions legally recognized under the Act.

The second is the Native Labour (Settlement of Disputes) Act (1953) which empowers the Minister of Labour to enact orders regulating working conditions for African workers, without any reference to trade union rights of Africans.

The ICFTU statement to the United Nations quotes extensively from the report of a recent British TUC delegation to South Africa in substantiation of these charges. The TUC report also shows that the South African Government intends to enforce racial segregation within the trade unions even further. A bill now before the South African Parliament would compel unions with mixed memberships (i. e.: European, Asiatic and coloured workers) to dissolve the parent body and form three separate unions.

THE STATEMENT concludes that "in the field of labour relations and labour legislation with which we are most intimately concerned, the racial situation in the Union of South Africa could be alleviated if the following measures, indispensable for the promotion of better relations between races and for the establishment of a system based on the respect of human rights without any race discrimination, were undertaken:

(a) The bill concerning industrial relations, at present before the Parliament of the Union of South Africa, should be withdrawn;

(b) The Industrial Conciliation Act, 1937, should be amended by extending its scope to cover all wage and salary earners regardless of race or sex, in order to extend to all African workers of other races;

(c) The Native Labour (Settlement of Disputes) Act, 1953, should be repealed;

(d) The Suppression of Communism Act should be substantially amended in order to make it impossible for the Government to use it to impair the freedom of activity of Africans as well as other trade union organizations;

(e) The Criminal Law Amendment Act (1953), directed, as is generally known, against the movement for the abolition of the iniquitous racial laws of the Union of South Africa, should be repealed."

Courier Sat. 10-2-54 p. 6

SOUTHERN industry employed more people last year than during the wartime peak of 1943. For the first time in the South, the number of workers employed in manufacturing exceeded agricultural employment, long the mainstay of the Southern economy.

Mr. Townsend

This is leading to a higher standard of living and greater security in the South—but the Southern Negro is not sharing equally in the shift from farm to industrial economy. Negroes comprise over 25 per cent of the Southern labor force—but they benefited by less than 5 per cent in the shift.

Sat. 10-2-54

Discriminatory employment practices that prevent Negroes from holding jobs for which they are suited by training or ability tend to become fixed and frozen. This makes it doubly difficult to combat prejudice and restore a proper balance.

EARLIER discrimination against women is a case in point. In the early days, women were placed in certain jobs because they could be made to work for less money. These jobs, as time passed, became known as "women's jobs." Today, unions still have trouble getting fair treatment for their women members, largely because of this historic development.

A higher standard of living for Negro and white workers alike benefits the entire nation. Just as an extra bonus, it is also one of the most effective bulwarks against Communist infiltration. Where workers get their fair share of the good things in life, communism does not have a chance.

Few of us know that the North has played a leading part in creating poverty in the South, thereby encouraging discrimination. By blocking the economic development of the South, the North has fostered a need for the cheap labor supplied by Negroes.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

IN WHAT ways has the North made the South into an ill-fed, ill-clothed, ill-housed, prejudice-ridden part of the nation?

Southern manufacturers shipping finished goods North find that it costs them about 10 per cent more than it costs the same shipment to be sent by a Northern plant. Railroads discriminate against the South in fixing freight rates.

In their way, Northern manufacturers are protected from Southern competitors. These unfair practices by the railroads, most of which are controlled by Northern bankers, have prevented the advancement of Southern industry.

Another method the North uses to hamstring the South has been the control of patents. This device has been used to stop Southern manufacturers from establishing plants which might compete with Northern concerns. By threats of lawsuits and other forms of pressure, monopolistic Northern producers have barred enterprising Southerners from setting up industrial plants.

THE SOUTH has also been hurt in its economic progress by tariffs. In an attempt to assist the early rise of industrial production in the North, custom duties were placed on imported manufactured goods.

This economic protection means that the South has to pay higher prices for the North's goods. The South sells its agricultural products abroad in an unprotected market while buying finished goods in a high-priced, walled-off domestic market. This policy is another reason for the backward state of the region.

Woman Bares Biased Conditions in Miner's Hospitals

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

SOME time ago I received a letter from a woman in Bluefield, W. Va., who is the daughter of a coal miner. Her letter reveals a situation in that section of the country which should give all labor organization great concern.

Mr. Townsend

She points out that District 29 of the United Mine Workers has imposed upon the Negro miner the most horrifying conditions. For instance, she writes:

"In Clinch Valley Clinic (Richlands, Va.,) Negro patients have reported that all white persons with contagious and some other diseases, such as polio, venereal disease, insane patients (waiting for transfer to Marion, Va.,) and alcoholics are placed in the Negro ward.

"The Welfare Fund of UMWA will pay for white alcoholics to take treatment at a special Virginia hospital (which refuses Negro patients) but suggests that Negro alcoholics be sent to a state institution for the same. When I wrote the doctor in charge of this hospital for the Negro insane asking if special treatment for alcoholics were rendered there. His answer was negative.

"St. Luke's Hospital Bluefield, W. Va.) takes Negro patients for such temporary things as X-ray and surgery—but the Negro patient must then be moved. A very small Negro-operated hospital (St. Mary's, Bluefield, W. Va.) which is understaffed and very poorly equipped, usually takes these Negroes who cannot remain at St. Luke's until they are ready for discharge. I know Negroes who claim they were still asleep from the anesthetic when removed from the white hospital. They woke up in this little St. Mary's. That is how impatient this white hospital is to get rid of Negro patients.

"Bluefield Sanitarium (Bluefield, W. Va.) houses its Negro patients in an old frame annex on the third story level. Men and women are together in a manner that affords little or no privacy. Both use the same bathroom facilities. Negroes are always addressed by their first names.

"From the Beckley, W. Va., area, a Negro woman is said to have died on the way to another hospital in another town because the white hospitals there operate on a 'Negro bed quota' basis."

SHE CONCLUDES by saying: "I am perfectly aware that unless I can get definite proof, this information will be near useless to you in helping us. I am working toward that goal in the hopes that the hospitals now being built with union funds will not operate on a white and colored basis. I know that if John L.

Tells All About The Development of A New 'Red' Front

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

FROM California comes information concerning the new Communists united front program that is being developed.

According to my best information the Communist party has issued some very specific instructions to leaders as to how the herculean task of taking over the leadership in labor unions is to be accomplished. They seem to have an eighteen-point program—nine points for labor and nine points for political activities.

Mr. Townsend

For labor their instructions are as follows:

"1. Ninety per cent of the efforts of the Communist party must be in the direction of exerting greater influence on industrial workers."

"2. The Communist party must place its main concentration among workers in the shops. A majority of the Communist party membership must return to and become employed in the basic industrial shops."

"3. Existing Shop Clubs must be reactivated and new clubs organized around issues which workers can understand."

"4. The 'test' of Communist party leadership today is that each Communist party leader must give concrete assistance to at least one Shop Club or shop workers."

"5. Communist party members must take their place at every level of local union membership, as stewards, local officers, serving as committee members and working on local union publications."

"6. The Communist party members must use every possible method to bring about the united front on the broadest possible basis."

"7. The fight for the united front must focus on the important day to day problems of the workers."

"8. The attack on the Communist party by the U. S. Government must be associated with these problems—speed-up, lay-offs, discrimination, etc., so that the working class will understand that the ruling class intends to eventually declare the whole trade union movement illegal."

"9. A continuing effort must be made to promote maximum unity between white and Negro workers (in practice, this becomes a segregation in reverse)."

Sat. 1-16-54

FOR LIBERAL organizations:

"1. They are actively to work in building shop and community PAC organizations (not only at election time, but on a year-round basis centered on local community problems)."

"2. They are actively to promote united political action programs within other liberal organizations (NAACP, ADA, Urban League, New York Liberal party, for example)."

"3. They are to play an active part, as trade union members, in the clubs and committees of the Democratic party."

"4. They are to promote united labor action in election campaigns and for pro-labor legislative programs."

"5. They are to champion the formation of pro-labor blocs in Congress, State Legislatures and City Councils."

"6. They are to work actively in the 1953 municipal elections (in those cities affected) to forge united action for pro-labor candidates."

"7. They must begin now to prepare for the 1954 Congressional elections by working toward broad unity of labor and other liberal organiations on a Congressional District basis throughout the country."

"8. While all this activity takes place, they must continue their efforts to influence labor toward a more independent role in political affairs."

"9. In short, the Communist party will re-enter the 'mainstream of labor' to effect a united front, 'a marriage of convenience, not love' with the prospect of capturing control of the CIO from within and in so doing to have the people as well as the vehicle for its People's party."

WITH THIS advance notice of Communist skullduggery, labor leaders, I hope, will recognize at a glance this new attempt to invade the ranks of organized labor and as well, the Negro community.

Fore-warned is fore-armed.

Leaders in Struggle For Justice and Equality for All

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

THE National Conference of Christians and Jews seems to have run afoul the basic policies of the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Several weeks ago, James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO, at the request of President Walter Reuther, directed a letter to Lewis W. Douglas of the National Conference of Christians and Jews in which they pointed out that the CIO could not, with any degree of consistency, give them cooperation. Mr. Carey's letter was, indeed, very interesting, and illuminating as well. He said in part:

Mr. Townsend

"Our organization is fully committed to the abolition of racial segregation and discrimination. Our procedures do not permit us to indulge in partial application of this principle. Therefore, we find it impossible to successfully cooperate with organizations who deal with this subject on a varying basis."

STRIKING AT the very core of the seeming hypocrisy of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Mr. Carey continues:

"We attempted, about two years ago, through a series of meetings with representatives of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, to arrive at a working understanding on this question. A number of meetings were held and our respective programs were discussed. We placed before representatives of the National Conference of Christians and Jews the evidence submitted to us that some of their constituent bodies, especially in the South, openly engaged in discriminatory practices, such as excluding Negroes from their deliberations or according them only limited participation. We advised, at that time, that we could not affiliate ourselves with organizations that permit racial discrimination in their constituent bodies.

"The entire situation is very much to be regretted. We have been reluctant to send out official communications regarding this condition. When there are inquiries, however, I feel it incumbent upon me to inform our affiliates about this condition. In the absence of a forthright policy statement by your organization against race discrimination, we, perforce, advise them not to participate in National Conference of Christians and Jews sponsored affairs."

I THINK President Reuther and Secretary-Treasurer Carey are to be commended for this very honest and forthright position. This is the sort of thing I spoke about last week regarding George Schuyler's attack on some labor organizations.

It is because I believe that men of good will who have a sincere desire to wipe out racial bigotry might well do so by making it known to the world by condemning those who are parties to such practices. Labor organizations free from the ravages of racial animosities have been reluctant to attack other labor organizations who flagrantly espouse racial hatreds.

It has always been the so-called autonomy of international unions that has been the hiding place for unions which are unwilling to adhere to the precepts of human decency. Hence, we have had in years gone by our racketeers and racial demagogues, all operating in the name of organized trade unionism.

It gives one great satisfaction to know that as we enter into the year of 1954 we have such men as George Meany of the American Federation of Labor and Walter Reuther of the Congress of Industrial Organizations as leaders in the struggle for justice and equality for all, regardless of race or color. This is something to look forward to.

Wilkins' Post Viewed With Concern He Can Ill-Afford to Let His Foot Slip

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

THE APPOINTMENT of Atty. J. Ernest Wilkins to the Department of Labor as an Assistant Secretary caused many politicians and labor leaders to raise their eyebrows when the announcement was made last week. While I know of no particular interest that Mr. Wilkins has taken in labor, we must acknowledge that he is an able man and so far as I can ascertain, he enjoys a very excellent record as a lawyer. Reading an editorial in the "Chicago Daily News" they point out that Mr. Wilkins is the first man of his race to get a sub-cabinet position in any administration.

THIS IS UNTRUE, but certainly can be overlooked.

The records revealed that the first sub-cabinet position to a Negro was given to Bill Lewis of Boston during the Taft administration.

What is important and worth noticing is the fact that with all the fine preachments from politicians over the years, it has taken them more than forty years to get around to the point that an appointment such as this could be made.

MR. ROOSEVELT with all his fine statements concerning the darker brother failed to do so. Mr. Truman, who, I understand, had pledged to put a Negro in the White House as an administrative assistant during his campaign, failed to keep his promise after the election.

And so, we must applaud President Eisenhower for the appointment of Mr. Wilkins, not because as the Daily News points out in quoting Edwin A. Lahey "that it is an effective answer to Kremlin propagandists about racial discrimination in America," but rather one of recognizing the ability of an able barrister to make a contribution to the welfare of our nation.

One of the interesting commentaries on the appointment of Mr. Wilkins is found in the "Chicago American" of March 8, by no other than Westbrook Pegler, himself. Mr. Pegler avers "that Mr. Wilkins himself said his appointment was an honor to his race. He also said he believed the fact that his being a Negro would help his work for the Government abroad."

IT IS THIS statement that gives me reason for concern. I sincerely hope that Mr. Wilkins does not consider an appointment of any kind an honor to his race because in doing so, he is simply acknowledging paternalism and I am quite sure he doesn't choose to be guilty of that sort of thinking.

The disquieting fact is that during this period when all fair thinking people in America are dropping the idea of race, we find appointed to one of the highest positions in Government a man who still retains such a view.

As I understand it, Mr. Wilkins as Assistant Secretary of Labor will be charged with international affairs. Having worked in this field for quite a number of years both here and abroad, our new Assistant Secretary will find that the matter of race is very delicate and calls for some rather sound understanding.

Wherein He Throws a Punch At the Dining Car Union

By WILLARD S. TOWNSEND

IN THE Saturday Evening Post, April 10 of this year, was an interesting article concerning the railroad dining cars.

In addition to being very informative to this writer, it is also quite frightening.

Mr. Townsend

Frightening because unlike Nebuchadnezzar of old who needed a translation of the writing on the wall, the thinking that went into this article is quite clear and understandable.

For many years Negro youth found summer employment on these cars and in the sleeping cars in order to complete their education. We have many eminent doctors, lawyers, teachers, clergymen and statesmen whose early years were spent working on some of the nation's railroad dining cars.

NOW THE writer of this article points out that the increased deficit of operating dining cars has caused the railroad management to take a new look with the view of bringing cost into line, even at the expense of causing unemployment.

According to the writer, the railroads started to use dining cars in the 1880's as a means of building good-will.

But from where I stand, it seems to me that the railroads are no longer interested in good-will but rather in profits.

For instance, he points out that on the New York Central's Empire State Express which runs from New York to Cleveland, they formerly used six waiters.

NOW THEY are using three.

On the Santa Fe's California Limited similar reductions have been made. The New Haven Railroad has introduced a new type of diner and in many instances are using women waitresses.

Many various devices designed to reduce dining car personnel have taken place in the last few years, and many railroads are thinking in terms of abolishing the service altogether.

Continuing, the writer observes that "old-time dining car waiters have been observing with apprehension all these changes in equipment and thinking. It looks like fewer jobs and perhaps the beginning of the end of an era."

THIS STORY unquestionably is a public relations job for the railroads . . . a "softening up," so to speak, of the public in order to accept in a not too far distant day when they will board a train minus a dining car.

What really concerns me is that many of these fine dining car employes are paying monthly dues into certain types of labor organizations who are making no attempt to mobilize the public for the impending struggle.

The Joint Council of Dining Car Employes who seem to spend most of their time raiding other unions might do well if the many thousands of dollars they are wastinig in such activites could be directed into a channel of sound public relations which would be helpful to their membership.

IT WOULD seem to me that a word to the wise is sufficient because if they continue as they are doing now, the dining car employes who have entrusted their future economic welfare into their hands will go the way of the Negro hotel waiter of yesteryear.

"Little Chautauqua" — a series of programs for the entire family, will be presented the last week in July, the 26th to the 30th, in the Undercroft of St. Andrew's Episcopal Mission. Funds raised will be used to pay for a moving-picture projector and related equipment to be used, principally, in work with the young people. Plays, opera, a pianologue, scientific demonstrations, rhythmic patterns, and a magician will be seen and heard during the six-day season.

On Sunday, June 20, members of St. Andrew's Mission Sunday school began using new equipment in the form of blond chairs constructed especially for the younger children. These chairs were provided by the Episcopal churchmen of St. Andrew's Mission, Dr. Charles M. Ford, president.

This was the first major undertaking elected by the recently organized churchmen. Seen enjoying the fruits of their labor were beginners classes I and II, two of the largest groups in the Sunday school, and their teachers. The children seemed greatly impressed and their appreciation was shown both in countenance and by words. Some of the Episcopal churchmen were present to see the happy youngsters seated in the chairs for the first time. The men have stated that additional equipment will be provided by them as they continue to work on this long-term project.

Personals

Mrs. Gwendolyn Kenney, the president of the Tuskegee Chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Inc., returned from Durham, N. C. on Monday after having spent a profitable and enjoyable weekend attending the national convention of that organization. The other delegates who accompanied Mrs. Kenney to the meeting were Mrs. Mildred Cabiness, Mrs. Mildred Carter, Mrs. Elaine Thompson and Mrs. Louise Hines. Dr. Howard Kenney was the driver for the group who made the trip to Durham and back to Tuskegee in the Kenney's station wagon.

Mr. and Mrs. Marzell Dixon are the proud parents of a baby girl born July 21, at John A. Andrew Memorial Hospital. They have named the new arrival Marla Louise, the first name a combination of the father's and mother's names, the latter's being Ella, and Louise is for the maternal grandmother, Mrs. Louise Long who came down from New Brunswick, N. J., for the event.

The Dixon's have two other children, Donna, 7, and Anita, 3. Dixon is an instructor in the school of engineering, having come to Tuskegee Institute two years ago upon his graduation from Rutgers University. They are also from New Brunswick.

Miss Clarice Dibble, sophomore at Sarah Lawrence College, Miss Ann Dibble, senior at Vassar, and Mr. Robert Dibble, sophomore at Howard University Medical School, have returned home for the vacation period. They are the daughters and son of Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Dibble.

Miss Kate Bulls, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Bulls Sr., has returned to her home from the Nursery Training School, Tufts College, Boston, Mass., where she will be a sophomore next year. Miss Bulls will leave Tuskegee again soon, when she will go to Portland, Ore., to take home her niece, Jolie Elsberry, to her parents who live in Portland. Jolie graduated from the Tuskegee Institute Nursery School this spring. Her mother is Mrs. Ethel Bulls Elsberry.

Mrs. Delia Hemmons Freeman who has been confined in the John A. Andrew Hospital since the latter part of May is much improved, according to members of her family. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. W. Hemmons and came to the hospital from Louisville, Ky., where she and her husband, Mr. James Freeman, have made their home.

Mr. and Mrs. Scott E. Johnson of Huntsville, Tex., and Mrs Ethel Ruth Hunter, their daughter who lives in Texarkana, Tex. visited Tuskegee. They are on their way to New York, N. Y. where Mr. Johnson will attend the NEA convention. He was a popular figure among principals who attended the Principals' Workshop at Tuskegee Institute during the 1953 summer session.

Miss Clarice Dibble, sophomore at Sarah Lawrence College, Miss Ann Dibble, a senior at Vassar, and Robert Dibble, sophomore at Howard University Medical School, have returned home for the vacation period. They are the daughters and son of Dr. and Mrs. Eugene Dibble Jr.

The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. DuBose was visited by his mother, Mrs. Lucy Pinkard, of Birmingham, and his sister, Miss Gwendolyn DuBose. Miss DuBose teaches in the Chicago, Ill., school system.

Dr. and Mrs. Clarence T. Mason, their daughter Karen and son Clarence, are now comfortably situated in their lovely new home near the Catholic School on the Montgomery Highway. They have accomplished an entirely new look in modern structures in the wide building program which Tuskegeeans are proud to see going on, and the Mason's spacious home is admired by all who see it.

THE NAACP INVITED BOWLES to address a 3-day state conference at Peekskill. Channing H. Tobias, chairman of the board of directors of the NAACP, was so sore when he learned that Melvin Tapley, head of the Peekskill branch, had invited Bowles, he called off the whole conference. In the call he also threatened to take the charter from the Peekskill branch. Tapley's only defense was that he believed in a democracy that everybody should have a chance to speak. Bowles had even publicly said that he had refused hotel accomodations offered by Tapley, and had refused to eat with him. How stupid can one get?

ADULT "RUFFIANS" caused the trouble in Baltimore and Washington schools recently, according to the statement that pupils from the schools in these two cities made to the students in New Rochelle where they had been spending several days watching integration in being. One student said: "A few parents started agitating, so pupils stayed away from school." Other students said adults called them "chicken" and threatened them, so they stayed away from the school. The evil and the meanness behind these student riots will all come out, just sit and wait.

SEGREGATION IN CHURCHES is getting a lot of criticism these days. Friday Arthur DeWitty sent me a clipping from the daily paper, showing that Dr. Truman D. Douglass, leader of the Congregational Christian church, said in Rockford, Illinois, that the churches are "condoning segregation, and that Christianity is the most materialistic of all faiths."

He continued:

"It may almost be said that the churches, together with a few reactionary and stuffy social clubs, are the only remaining institutions in America in which segregation is even legal."

When I said that at a statewide meeting of leaders in Dallas several months ago, Rev. Merrill Booker shouted, "It's a lie!" DeWitty reminded me of that by putting a notation down below the clipping.

RAILWAY SEGREGATION was attacked jointly before the Interstate Commerce Commission last week by the NAACP and the Eisenhower administration. The NAACP had filed charges against 12 roads that operate from north to south. Attorney General Herbert Brownell contended in his brief that discrimination between passengers because of race violates the Federal Constitution and the Interstate Commerce Act. He said the Education decision of May 17 was applicable. He also referred to Justice John Harlan's famous dissent in the Plessy case, in which he said, "The Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens." We said when the May decision came down that the principle of school segregation was wrong, that it would make segregation in all phases of our lives untenable. The basic principle now is applied on the interstate level, but the same general principle will be ultimately applied on the state level and be based upon the fundamental rights of citizens under the Federal Constitution. Seven railroads filed answers, claiming that segregation as long as it is equal, is legal and according to state law.

The Attorney General's brief pointed out some of the states through which the roads operate require segregation, others forbid it, and some have no laws on the subject at all. Then it quotes from an opinion by Justice Frankfurter, in which he said that interstate commerce was unreasonably burdened by "imposition upon national systems of transportation of a crazy-quilt of state laws."

THE CHRISTMAS SEAL SALE has started to raise money for the Houston-Harris County Tuberculosis Association. If you have not been sent seals, go by or call the Houston-Harris County Tuberculosis Association, 612 Bagby Street, CEntral 8623, and get your seals. There is no law that requires you just to give a dollar, you can give $5, $10, $15, or more, depending upon how you have fared this year, and how much you appreciate the need of work against tuberculosis.

SOMETHING NEW UNDER THE SUN showed up last week, when Mrs. George C. Farish, Republican candidate for the State Legislature, Place 3, breezed into our office. I told her I did not think she had a chance, but I certainly admired her pluck, and I like her unquenchable enthusiasm. She is a grandmother and proud of it, why not give her a hand on this brave venture?

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS to the number of 11 will be on your ballot. We told you before we are supporting 10 of them, and only against one, i. e., No. 8, which provides for election of county officials for four years instead of the two as of now. You can still get some rather ornery county officials, and it is better to keep on electing them for two years, so you can get at them, than it is to put them in for four.

MINORITY HOUSING seems to still be a bugbear to most people. A few days ago we saw an announcement, saying the National Association of Home Builders had put two people on the Minority Housing panel. You guessed it, they were both white, and there are no Negroes on said panel, so far as we know. How are you going to have a Minority Housing panel and exclude representatives of the minority?

THE HEALTHIEST BABY can enter the Carnation Contest that is being carried on with this paper even now and win. Yes, entries even now will be eligible to win the top prize of $300, as well as any of the other prizes. Clip out the blank in the paper, send the picture of your baby, and, of course, you will buy a can of Carnation milk. If you don't have a picture, call our office, maybe we can make a suggestion as to how you can get a picture.

UNUSUALLY GOOD are the comments that Dr. N. M. Christopher is making in his column now on the education decision. The coming one, for instance, deals with the responsibility of principalship, and the great number of responsibilities that the principal has in his thankless job. It makes clear how the principal's work in the school affects not only the school population, but affects the whole community.

REV. HAYES' STORY: In a sentence, he was enticed to enter the school board race by Mrs. Christie Adair of the NAACP and Attorney M. W. Plummer, then they deserted him. In extensio it is about as follows: Back at the early part of this year he dropped into The Informer and expressed his interest in the school board race, and said he might enter. We told him he was doing right to start early, and if he were going to run be sure to come back and let us know ahead of time. We never saw him again. But he says that he did go before the Council of Negro Clubs, headed by M. L. Ward, and told them that he was available to run, and they promised to let him hear from them. He says he never heard from them again. He says several days before the time for the filing to close, he had a call from Mrs. Adair, telling him that since the Supreme Court's decision the matter was open, and that he should go down and file for the school board. He said he was ill and in bed with a minor operation when Mr. Plummer called him, about a day before the final date for filing, and urged him to get up and go down and file lest he miss out. Then he said the next day, which was the final day for filing, Mrs. Adair and Mr. Plummer called and said he had put them in an awful fix, that they wanted him to file for Position 5. He said he pointed out that K. C. Brown was in Position 5, and he would not bother another Negro. He said they urged him to go on and file for 5, on the assumption that K. C. was not going to run in the race. But he rightly refused to enter a race where there was another Negro candidate. It is easy to believe that the Reverend naturally thought that the NAACP secretary was speaking for the race, when she urged him to run. It is most unfortunate, because Rev. Hayes is qualified in every way for the candidacy, but without having previously organized his own race behind him, and having put them in a position to trade with liberals for support of him in exchange for support of liberal candidates, he won't have a chance in this election. I'd say that Mrs. Adair and Mr. Plummer's idea, about his running, was all wet. You can't elect people on sentiment, even sentiment that grows out of the Supreme Court's decision, you have to elect them on votes, and you have to organize the voters in order to corral the votes.

SEGREGATIONISTS DON'T GAIN, despite the facts that the Democrats seem to have taken over both houses of Congress. It is the liberal wing of Democrats that seem to have won in this election. The vast majority of the Democrats who have swept the Republicans out of office are already committed to the same principles that Ike espouses on this matter of segregation. Another angle of the Southern segregationists' loss comes in the fact that the Republicans, having lost control of Congress, the rebels are now likely to get the reprisals from the Democratic Congress from which they defected to support Ike in 1952.

LABOR IS COMFORTABLE again, now that the Congress is Democratic again. Labor got all of its beneficial laws under the Democrats, and they just feel better and more secure when the Democrats are in Congress. Also Labor feels pretty certain that no hostile law is going to be passed by Congress as long as it is Democratic.

RICE ON THE TSU BOARD is something that we might digress to consider for a moment. As we understood it, Rice, though an alleged Republican, showed every evidence of being in favor of Governor Shivers' candidacy for reelection. Hobart Taylor, who has repeatedly been alleged to be his rival for a position on the TSU board, supported Yarborough. BUT Rice and President Lanier hate each other, now how are they going to mix them in one board meeting? To further complicate it, it is suspected that President Lanier, who should stay out of politics, nonetheless was quietly supporting Shivers. Will there be a stalemate that will leave Rice where he is?

SCHOOL PROBLEMS are becoming increasingly difficult, as the new school board will find come next January. Recent research developed the figures that show there has been a 6½ percent increase in school enrollment since last year. More significantly, the greater proportion of this increase has been in the Negro schools, where the children were literally popping out of the windows in 1953. We might as well face it, the citizens are going to have to stand for more taxation, if they are going to take care of their school problems any time soon, and if they hope to keep in sight of the school population's increase in the next 10 years.

TUBERCULOSIS OR "CONSUMPTION" used to mean death to anybody who had it. Today, if it is recognized any time early, and if the patient will go for treatments to a proper sanitarium, tuberculosis is not fatal. Two important things are due for attention now, one is that people should go for treatment to the tuberculosis sanitarium as soon as they find that they have it, and two, we should give all that we can to provide for the protection and the healing of the people who have tuberculosis.

BURLESQUING NEGROES is the charge being leveled at KYOK Radio Station now. Last week we received telephone calls, and other people complained to us verbally that KYOK had brought a white woman in, who really ridicules and embarrasses Negroes with an exaggerated brogue, which she and the KYOK people seem to think represents the way Negro women talk. It is submitted that if KYOK wants a Negro woman's voice on the radio, in all decency since they claim to be a Negro station, they should hire a Negro woman and let her talk in a natural voice. It is doubtful whether "even in Georgia" KYOK could find a Negro woman that talks like that phony that they were parading on the radio last week at night.

A LOT OF FUN for all was had at the R. W. Hilliards' home Friday night. He staged a bridge game for Coach Henry Arthur Kean. I was playing with the coach, and Dr. Hartshorn and Mr. Hilliard were playing against us. To dispose of the playing part, when Mr. Hilliard went back to help his wife fix some refreshments Dr. Crump, who had come with the team from Tennessee A & I., took his place. They had great elation over the fact that they set us three tricks, which was one of the rare times that we were set all night. That Kean is just lucky at the table, and the cards ran with us, and somehow we bid them unusually well. But the game was for fun and no score was counted. Mrs. Hilliard, who knew all of the men, sat in the living room and chatted with us, and I discovered that she has a very quiet sense of humor. The youngest boy is entirely uninhibited, and anybody that likes children would have enjoyed his natural boisterousness. The daughter, who is a year or so older, is a little more suppressed, but when she went back to her quarters she forgot us, and was squalling out one of her favorite songs, which her mother wanted to holler back there and make her stop. I told her she was just being herself, she was home, and she had a right to sing what she wanted to. The larger boy came in and went out for a comparatively short time, then came back.

In the meantime, Lawyer King, who was in school with Mrs. Hilliard, and who was in the Army with Dr. Crump, came by to get Dr. Crump, and he stayed to visit for a while. Mrs. Hilliard had been telling some jokes on him, and he responded by saying that she had been blackmailing him about a letter for years. Just about the time they left, Coach Durley came by. He was in for a ribbing from both Dr. Hartshorn and Mr. Hilliard for even having the nerve to play Tennessee. There was no indication from Durley that he thought it was impertinent to play Tennessee, or that he feared that he was going to lose.

Henry Arthur Kean and I played on the Varsity together at Fisk the whole time I was there, while he was in attendance at the school. We also played basket ball on the same team, as we were classmates. He was the best broken field runner that I have seen anywhere.

A PECULIARITY SHOWS on the letterhead of the North Side Citizens Committee, which sent out a plea for the reelection of Mayor Roy Hofheinz. Listed, presumably among the people who belong, were M. L. Ward, whom we thought lived in Third Ward; Sid Hilliard, whom we also thought lived in Third Ward, and Rev. C. D. What are these people doing on the North Side Citizens Committee letterhead?

FROM THE DEAD FILES my secretary resurrected the other day a letter, dated October 31, 1939, addressed to R. R. Grovey, with a copy to me, in which C. W. Rice was challenging our position in advising the Negro workers to join the A. F. of L. and CIO. In that letter Mr. Rice admitted that he was advising the Negro workers against that, and added: "I have advocated that Negroes form their own independent union." The soundness of anything, including advice to working men, usually is only proven finally by the passage of time. Today Negroes have climbed to the highest level in the leadership of both the A. F. of L. and the CIO, whereas those who followed Mr. Rice's advice and set up independent unions have paid great costs and beaten themselves to pieces against the law.

A TEXAS COURT DARED hold that a Texas statute, providing for separation of Negroes and whites is contrary to the Constitution of the United States. The Third Court of Civil Appeals was one of the first of the many Southern courts that we are going to see in the next five years knocking out the segregation laws of their states. This one was over the boxing law prohibiting mixed bouts.

THE EVIL TRIANGLE which has already snuffed out the life of Dr. Clifford Leroy Adams, the alleged lover of Mrs. Ruby McCollum; and the life of Mrs. McCollum's husband, who was found dead the day after she shot Dr. Adams, has more recently reached out and snatched a young editor and author in the person of William Bradford Huie, who was attempting to write the story behind the case. Huie was convicted of contempt of the court that was handling the trial of Mrs. Ruby McCollum, and sentenced to six months in jail, or a $750 fine,, by Judge Harold W. Adams.

As we remember it, Mrs. McCollum went to the office of the dentist one Sunday morning and shot him. She was tried and convicted of the murder of her white lover, but the Supreme Court reversed the case on the ground of due process. However, before she could be tried again, it was claimed that she had developed "prison psychosis," and Judge Adams appointed one Dr. Frank A. Fernay, a psychiatrist, to determine whether she WAS mentally off. Here Huie comes in the picture, when it is claimed that he tried to influence Dr. Fernay, and also allegedly pointed out a connection between Dr. Adams, the deceased, Judge Adams, presiding over the court, and one A. K. Black, who was former Florida State Attorney, with lottery, gambling and bolita rackets. Questions that will have to wash up to the surface later are: Who killed Mrs. McCollum's husband? Who was afraid to have another trial of Mrs. McCollum? What's going to happen to Huie, is he going to be freed?

BUTTON IN HER HEART.— Katherine awoke the other morning and said, "I'll have to stop wearing this jacket." The jacket doesn't go even halfway down to her waistline, so I said, "It's too small, huh?" She said, "No, a button from it cut into my heart!" The jacket was open and there was not a break on her skin, and not even a bruise or a red spot, but I nonetheless said, "My, my, that must have been an awful pain, to have a button cut into your heart!" Katherine squenched her eyes and wrinkled her nose in what she thought was a demonstration of great pain. I thereupon expressed greater sympathy and everybody had a great time. Make-believe and exaggeration are used by all of us, though adults are usually a little more clever in their use of it.

COACH DURLEY came off fine in my book in his conduct of his game Saturday. He restrained himself and sat on the bench throughout the game, except in the few instances when he stood up on the line. Once I saw his team penalized by 15-yard penalties twice in very close succession, so as to entirely kill the rally that TSU needed badly. But Durley sat it out! The assistant coaches still don't believe that the people came to see the boys on the field, and not them. Their trips on the field did not take any advantage of the opposition, in fact, most of the trips did not do anything for anybody, except the assistant coaches who wanted to be seen. In most of the first half the officiating was good and the placing of the ball was quite acceptable. But on the very end of the first half, and also the second half, the placing of the ball was just bad. The head lineman did not act as though he had any rights in saying where the ball should be placed. One time the Grambling team advanced nearly a yard across a white line. The lineman marked that spot and started to walk in on a line that would run through that advanced spot and parallel to the white line. The referee came into the pile-up and stopped on the opposite side of the line, about 14 inches. The lineman, seeing the referee over there, actually curved his walk over to that spot where the referee was; although he had marked the advance spot and knew what it was, he never even suggested to the referee that the spot was on the other side of the line nearly two yards away. What was bad, the lineman had indicated to the men working with him on the line to mark the spot that he originally chose, and they had to make all the changes, after he curved over to accept the referee's erroneous line. Most of the errors were again against Grambling, but I don't honestly think there was a single instance where these seeming deliberate blunders on the part of the officials made any difference in TSU's favor. Every touchdown TSU made was made by efforts of the players. I think I am going to ask the commissioner to assign somebody to sit on the 50-yard line and watch the way the officials place the ball. Of course, it may be that these particular officials don't see very well. The referee called for a measurement at least four times when it was obvious even to a nearsighted person that a first down had not been made. If that was an attempt to show impartiality, why go to such extremes in that regard and then fudge on nearly every other time he put the ball down?

DURLEY HANDICAPPED. — I wonder if the people watching TSU play realize how handicapped Durley is in getting his men in condition, and keeping them in condition? Where youngsters have access to the city, most of them living outside of the dormitories, and those who don't live outside being able to slip out, it is very difficult for a coach to ever know really what condition his best players are in.

I BEG TO DIFFER. — I support The American Civil Liberties Union, but as I have said before, there are times when I differ with it in its attitude on some individual issue. Recently a Communist candidate in New Jersey was denied a place on the ballot through court action, and the ACLU has entered the case to try to get the Communist put back on the ballot. Now ACLU recognizes that the Communists in this country are a part of the Soviet conspiracy. But it claims that the Communists over here are also a "political agitational movement." In its view we ought to make a distinction, and therefore let the Communists run for office in the interest of the "political agitational movement." I hold that the political agitational movement is a part of the Soviet conspiracy and can't be separated. But granting that they are separated, I think we could agree with ACLU and okeh this Communist on the political agitational movement, and then immediately apply the conspiracy aims of the Soviet and cancel him out as a candidate, anyway. What sense would it make to know that a guy is a part of a Soviet conspiracy to destroy us, and then to get all idealistic and let him run for office on the ground that there he is running in the "political agitational movement" side of Communism? A snake may be running for food, but he is still deadly and you don't let him get in your bosom or anywhere else close to you.

The mayor followed the statement by telling the commission to abandon any idea of public hearings, as had been suggested by the chief, and to have the integration take place right away, or to relieve the chief and appoint a successor. You guess whether there will be integration in the Fire Department of Los Angeles or not!

STUDENT STRIKES COLLAPSE in what seemed like a formidable rebellion against the Supreme Court's decision last May, and the movement of the authorities in Baltimore and Washington toward integration was left nakedly showing what it was: namely, merely a big wind with nothing behind it, and which wasn't going anywhere. The key to the situation was that the city officials and the school officials held firm. The Milford situation was not a student strike, it was a mean display of the bitterness and the littleness of the adults of the community, led by a preacher whose name was Bowles.

REV. BOWLES DEFLATED. — It can be said with certainty that Rev. Bowles and his National Association for the Advancement of White People are not going to go far in the northern, western and border states. The NAAWP will have its best chance in Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Caroline and Virginia, and I wouldn't bet on their getting very far there. But however much life they may show at first, the NAAWP will peter out surely, as the Ku Klux did. It was conceived in evil and fraud, and it is based upon racial hatred. It can't last long in a republic.

THE CROSBY ELECTION FRAUD has seemed from the beginning to be blown up out of proportion to its significance or importance. Here are some Negroes, who for the first time are serving as election officials. They don't know the law, and they don't know the customs and practices. Nobody was sent to teach them, and nobody was sent to work with them in their first experience. One view says that many Negro voters, who were in other precincts, because they preferred to go to the box run by Negroes, where they would be more at ease, did go to this particular election office to vote. Probably some smart guy, who maybe had lived somewhere else and learned the bad and crooked part of voting, decided to cast an extra vote by voting in the name of a man who was not there and who was away. Or maybe the man who was away was not well known to the people who were registering the poll tax list. Or maybe there was one smart guy among those who were supposed to make the record, and maybe that one was behind this matter of getting somebody to cast a fraudulent vote. The point is that this being their first experience, they could not be presumed to be a gang, or to the cog of some political boss in the area. I rather think of them as unfortunate people, bewildered in the hands of the law.

CHURCHES PLAN TO END SEGREGATION in the nation's capital, according to a 6-month program submitted this past week by the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., to its 235 member churches, and to probably 250 churches in Washington that are not members. The federation properly apologizes for being laggard in this matter of racial inclusiveness in the fellowship of the church. The movement is not limited here to education only. This movement reminds us that not a single bishop in the Houston area has yet taken any public, positive stand on this question of racial integration. Why don't the Negro denominations petition the white ministerial organizations and the bishops to use their power in this matter of Christian treatment, and in the matter of upholding the now-established law? We believe it is time that steps be taken to make loans available to the small they are.

LONGSHOREMEN AXE 5 PER CENT PLAN after 50 years of its use and a series of charges of misappropriation and failures of those, who run the ILA, to make the benefits go evenly around among the men through the years. There is disappointment among the officials and many of the citizens, because the 5 per cent plan was voted down, but from the men's standpoint it is natural. Those in there established and bought businesses, but the businesses don't seem to have prospered enough so that the income from them, added to the $15 plan, would be sufficient to carry on. How long are the men expected to pay the 5 per cent under the guise of building up businesses and benefits, when would these things catch on so that they would support themselves? We know some ILA unions out in our area here that have done pretty well without the 5 per cent plan.

OUR CHILD, what will he be, a crook, a thief, a ne'er-do-well, or an upstanding man? It is evident that good parents don't necessarily produce good children. Neither does providing governesses and all the advantages that go with wealth make good men or women out of children. I have come to the conclusion that the only gift that parents can make to the children is of themselves. That means taking the time to play with the child, to take it with you and to keep it with you. Children learn by observing, and by copying, more than any other way. The only way that the parent can give the child the things that will orient it and help it is to let the child get a chance to actually go with the parent and be with the parent much of the time. This most of us feel we are too busy for. So we leave the job to the school, to the Sunday School, to tutors, and to governesses and baby-sitters. Or we send them off to boarding school. We don't really know the child, and the child doesn't really know us and what we stand for.

PATIENCE IS A VIRTUE which few of us have enjoyed. I have advocated, since the May 17 decision by the Supreme Court, holding segregation contrary to the Constitution, that Negroes should possess their souls in patience. Instead it seems that we are bent upon tearing ourselves to pieces over every little bauble or loop that has anything at all to do with integration, or with an attempt to continue segregation. Think of the suffering and the worry that Negroes throughout the country went through over the student riots at Baltimore and Washington. We suggested that our readers not get themselves excited, and that if the authorities in the two cities held firm, as they seemed to be doing, the student riots would blow themselves out and end. As to Milford, Delaware, we said that we had taken a temporary setback, but it was definitely a temporary one, and that we had not heard the end of Milford. We were prepared to continue calm until the Supreme Court issues its implementing decision, but it looks as though the NAACP may be able to right the matter much sooner. The point is that the worry and the frustration, that many of our readers have gone through over Milford, was a waste of time, and we would not have wasted it if we could just have had patience. I don't care who objects, or who says we will not get rid of segregation in schools, we will get rid of it and not anything or anybody will stop us now. I mean by "us" not only Negroes, I mean the majority of Americans.

seems that the interest in the minorities is not nearly as keen and virile as it is here in America. When I remarked that the Catholics are far ahead of the Protestant churches on this matter of integration, the boys almost overwhelmed me with statements that in countries where the Catholics dominate and are sometimes 90 to 95 per cent of the Christians, they say the Catholics do practically nothing for minorities. These boys were not Communists and they are not even counted as leftists, they are merely piling facts on me. I don't argue back, because I don't have any facts to refute what they say. I listen and when they are through, I point out that nonetheless the Catholics are still way ahead of the flock in America on the matter of integration in schools and in churches.

ATTEMPTED INTIMIDATION was the characterization put upon the act of the Dallas School Board recently, when they sent a white principal to replace a Negro principal, temporarily absent from his school. But looking a little further I see the school board pulling the rung from under themselves. Having sent whites into Negro schools, how are they going to complain against accepting Negro teachers in white schools, when the Supreme Court hands down its implementing decision?

SCHOOL BOARD INCUMBENTS in Houston should be voted out, always excepting Garrett Tucker, who is not running to succeed himself. Neither Mr. Delmar nor Mr. Wells has shown that he understands himself to have been elected to administer the school affairs for the benefit of the children, in accordance with the needs and desires of all of the people of Houston. These gentlemen give every evidence of believing that they were elected to make the schools over in the image of their thinking and their biases. Dr. Ebey is a sore point to most Houstonians, but I insist that his removal was not on proper grounds. At least one of the incumbents openly and publicly admitted that he was opposed to establishing a Negro school at its normal place, because it might be offensive to a few whites. The majority of the board joined in an unworthy attempt to establish the same junior high in a spot unfit from every angle for the children. The school buildings are no longer the place for public meetings and debates, as they were in the days of our parents, they can now only be by those who tink and say exa what the incumbents think a believe in. Our children are n permitted to discuss or debate th subjects afforded by the Unite Nations, because the incumbents take the narrow view that our children should be permitted to debate only the things that are pleasing to the incumbents. The schools are intended to train our children to live in a world of any divergent causes and issues, but they won't get such training under men like the incumbents.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS should not be forgotten in the November 2 election. Voters will be offered the opportunity to vote on 11 amendments. We are in favor of, and recommend our readers to vote for, all of them except the 8th one, which would provide for 4-year terms for local office officials. We were asked the other day whether or not Amendment 4, to transfer Confederate pension funds, not needed to pay Confederate pensions, to the state building fund would not be depriving the old Confederate soldiers and their dependents. Confederate soldiers are almost all gone, and so are most their dependents, so that the money involved in this amendment is excess. It would be put to the good purpose of building, first, a State

GOVERNOR SHIVERS said in a speech in Alabama last week that conservatism has to be alert to meet the needs of all the people, regardless of race or color. Rather surprising doctrine coming from a man now stamped as a Dixiecrat. But at the least, it seems fr this corner that is 50 years too late, and maybe we'd say t is 80 years too late, dating back to emancipation. Und the guise of states rights the Southern states will never in get freedom to discriminate against Negroes as they e fit. They had that right for 80 years and muffed i at's their fault.

SPECULATION as to what Gov. Shivers really has in the back of his mind always intrigues me. One thing, of course, is to try to get support outside of the South for his states rights idea, by enlarging it to cover more than the special privilege to discriminate against Negroes. Currently, there is no question but what Governor Shivers is the spokesman for the conservative governors of the South. conservative governors of the South. He has an eye out to get as much as he can from the Democratic party in a trade to get the insurgent governors back into fold. But the governor is a comparatively young man, and the question always arises as to what is he aiming at for himself into position to be put up as the vice presidential candidate? With his having led a rebelling in 1952, I don't believe he would be acceptable to the majority Democrats for either role. Well, 1956 doesn't offer much in the way of choice for him, with no senatorial race coming up, unless he does have ambition on the presidency or the vice presidency. I have always felt that he took the wrong turn when he decided to identify himself with the Dixiecrats, but I still say that he is resourceful, and he has not yet been proven to be a chump in politics.

THE CONTEST FOR the most healthy baby, to be selected by the Carnation Milk Company, closed, so far as entering is concerned, as of November 17. As of now the final judging is set for December 3, which is Friday night, at 7:30 at the YWCA on McGowen, (Houston.) Yes, sir, that's set for the finals, and the judges will point the finger and say to this or that baby, "You get the $300 prize, baby!"

WE ARE THANKFUL for the blessings He has bestowed upon us as a people. In the first place, Americans generally enjoy a high standard of living and have better health facilities than any other nation. In the second place, Negroes of America have special reasons to be thankful at this time, for the Supreme Court decision of May 17, and may look hopefully forward to what may come out of the argument to be presented December 6 before the Supreme Court.

NAACP vs DAVIS LEE was the subject of an editorial in the Dallas Morning News last week, according to their own discusion, it should have been Jonas L. Jewett vs. Davis Lee. Obviously, Mr. Jewett was expressing his personal opinion, and is nowise in a position to express the official position or attitude of the NAACP. That the Dallas News would strain Mr. Jewett into being the spokesman for the NNAACP, as against Davis Lee, shows how hardly put to it the Dallas Morning News is to justify its quoting and carrying, with approval, the words of a convict, and a man who has been entirely discredited in his own race. The statistics of employment of Negro teachers in northern states will improve, as well as the changed condition in the South will show that in many communities Negro teachers will be kept in full number as integration taes place. The Dallas Morning News seems to want to discuss our new situation in the framework of the old situation of hard and fast discrimination. But the truth is that "those days are gone forever", in which, the conditions the Dallas Morning News would like to obtain now, used to obtain.

EDWIN C. WASHINGTON, JR. of the NAACP, visited our office for a chat Thursday. Mr. Washington looks like a man in about his mid 30's. He has recently taken the job of field representative for the southwestern district of the NAACP. One had to admire his courage in coming out to look the bete noir over. He had never met me, and instead of standing on somebody else's views, he decided to come out and have a look-see himself. I liked what I saw and heard of him. I told him why I am at war with the working staff of the NAACP, but I assured him that it was not personal and there was nothing in it that would keep me from supporting any worthwhile project that the NAACP is engaged in.

THE GREAT BOOKS PROGRAM I missed the other night, because I had a command date to take my wife out to another function. But lo and behold, the lady stood me up! She called home, after it was too late for me to go to the other function, or to the Great Books program, and said she was detained and could not make it. Isn't that just like a woman?

OMEN OF THINGS TO COME is the fact that West Virginia State College had two Negroes on its football team this past year. It is not unusual for Columbia, New York, Yale, or Illinois, but West Virginia's is the beginning of the practice in the South of using any of its students.

SEGREGATION ILLEGAL in public service was ruled by the California attorney general a week or so ago. The attorney general ruled that public officials must act within the limits set by the non-discriminatory principles of the California constitution, and that where over a long period of time there appears a systematic exclusion of a certain race, the court will conclude discrimination. This all came up over an attempt by the NAACP to get Negro firemen into the departments of Los Angeles and Oakland, respectively.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW ORLEANS. — The National Democratic Committee held its victory celebration dinner in New Orleans a week or so ago, attended by Negroes and whites freely. From the standpoint of changing traditions, this was far more important than the election of Attorney Butler as chairman of the said committee.

USING THE LAW TO LYNCH the rights of Negro lawyers, fighting for their people in Louisiana, is a new approach by the Dixiecrats. When two lawyers filed suit to recover the interests of Negroes in a school that they have put money and property in, the resentful whites snatched the Negro lawyers before the bar, on the ground that they have "stirred up trouble and influenced Negroes to trouble."

THE "BURLY BRUTE" has come back in the Dallas Morning News again after many years of absence. Twice last week the Dallas Morning News blazoned across its front pages the charge that "Big, burly Negroes" had attacked "little bitty" white women, in each instance by invading areas and neighborhoods that Negroes do not normally go into. The first story said it was either a light Negro or white man, but the second story made it Negro definitely, although there seemed to have been no definite description of the alleged assailant. Why has a paper like the Dallas Morning News reverted to type, such as was carried when Monk Gipson was lynched in Edna probably 50 years ago. (Incidentally, Monk Gipson was subsequently cleared by the white father of the family that was killed.)

MORAL RE-ARMAMENT CAME alive last week in a debate in the House of Commons. There Member John McGovern told the House that "In the world struggle which is taking place today Moral Re-Armament has been the one unifying force presented as a superior ideology that is answering Communism and stopping the rot in the West." Finally, we are beginning to get some idea of what this Moral Re-Armament is all about.

SHOTGUN PEACEMAKERS are neither needed nor desired at Negro football games. Shotguns are used by hoodlums, or by police to quell gang wars or riots. Therefore, police who carry shotguns into a Thanksgiving festive crowd of people, whether loaded or unloaded, are the type of people we'd rather not have at the game at all. Anybody who brings and displays a shotgun at the game, and are willing to pay for the head. Police, dumb or otherwise, are not unhinged.

KILLING THE GOOSE that laid the golden eggs seems to have been the function of the present school board. (1) It is morally reprehensible to sell tickets for which there are no seats, this the school authorities did knowingly. (2) It is downright vicious to refuse to take heroic steps to provide seating space and comfort to patrons of the system's football teams. (3) It is said that Rice Institute could have been rented for the occasion, except the school boardin members of the helped to get a negative. (4) Bleachers, hastily added at the stadium, were pitiably inadequate, and the school authorities were not too active nor anxious to get these few.

THE BOARD'S GENEROSITY with the seats of Negro patrons is most startling and painful. Not only do they preempt the best seats at the 50-yard line for whites, but now it comes out that the whites, for the most part, pay only regular admission and no special admission to go into the section. On the other hand, Negroes who go into the grand stand on the same level, but at a less advantageous spot, have to pay an extra entrance fee. It is also said that men who are conductors on the bus are given seats in this choice space for nothing, even when Negroes who want, and are wiling to pay for the seats, can't have any.

THE LINKS CHARMED THE LUNKS again Sunday night at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Martha Davis. They had let every member (here they included the Lunks in the pot) draw a name and then give a gift, not to cost more than 25 cents, to the person whose name was chosen. Well, if you have to be told that the imp in everybody came out, you have no experience in life. One lady got a beautiful box with the wording on it: "The only real toilet water." When she opened it, there was a miniature glass toilet filled with green water. Another gentleman got a box with the fine engraving saying. "Coat hanger and a cigarette lighter that will last for life." When he opened this box there was a nail and a match. Maybe you will understand if I tell you that Jimmy Law is the unofficial announcer on such occasions. If anybody on earth knows what Jimmy is going to say next, I'd like to meet him.

Mrs. Davis has the finest home in "Sugar Hill" or in Houston. I never discuss food at such affairs, I eat it. John Davis was relegated to the oblivion, the Links always put upon the husbands, and only got his place in the sun turning on a glaring lamp and going around taking pictures all night.

Incidentally, John and Jimmy played Beauford and me again. When they took up the score, John and Jimmy had won the first rubber and were ahead of us. But in the second rubber Beauford bid and made a slam with us vulnerable, and kicked us ahead, where we stayed.

A MERRY CHRISTMAS to one and all! But to really enjoy your Christmas, do something for somebody who needs it, but has no right to it, and keep your act to yourself. You'll be surprised at how much that will illuminate your whole Christmas day.

NORMAN THOMAS turned 70 the other day. For a great number of years he ran as candidate for President on the Socialist ticket. But I remember him best for the lectures that he used to give back in the '20's, about the same time that Max Eastman did. They were introducing them the Communists, when nobody over here knew anything about them. Norman Thomas has been a free man in his thinking all of his life, and he has consequently been a just and fair man.

PRISON SEGREGATION is being attacked in a federal court by Ben Davis, one of the 11 Communists convicted as being in a conspiracy to overthrow the government. He has filed a suit in the federa court in Washington, D. C., asking that Attorney General Brownell and the director of prisons be compelled to discontinue the "unlawful and unconstitutional practice of segregation." Brought by somebody else the suit would have had great promise, but the odds are that a Communist isn't going to get very much support in this movement to knock out segregation in the prisons.

A WHITE CHRISTMAS is what the S. P. railroad station thinks means Christmas "only for white people." There is a large Christmas tree in the living room for the whites, one in the ticket office on the white side, and one is the dining room, exclusively for whites. There is nothing in the Negro waiting room or dining room in the form of Christmas decorations from the station proper. Indeed, the report is that they now only clean up the Negro waiting room two or three times a week. This is not in the tradition of those who originally built and controlled that station. The old timers believed in separation, but they made serious effort to be fair to both groups.

EXPLOSIVE AND INFLAMMABLE could be applied to the new technique that Sheriff Willis V. McCall (of the Groveland notorious case, where he shot up Negro witnesses who were unarmed in his care) used when he ousted all the children of a family from a white school, on the ground that they looked to him to have Negro blood in their veins. In New Orleans old-timers will point out to you men on the street, who are passing for white, who are the brothers of other men whom you know as Negroes. It has been estimated by some that there are probably two million Negroes who are passing for white throughout the nation. This estimate does not include those who have always been counted as white and never had to cross over. If the law-enforced agencies of the South adopt Sheriff McCall's procedure, there will be a bitter fight between so-called whites of the South on the question.

NAACP PINKED WITH REDS again are writhing in embarrassment at Louisville. The six now under indictment for allegedly stirring up riots in connection with the home of one Wade, a Negro who has a home in a white neighborhood, are said to be Reds, and at least two-thirds of them are not only members of the NAACP, but high in office in the local chapter. Any way the local chapter acts will be wrong. If they vote to suspend them, pending their clearing themselves, they will seem to be deserting their friends and members in a tight spot. If they keep them, they will let the NAACP be stamped as harbingers for Reds. My point is made again that the NAACP should not fool with Reds, and should never permit them to be a part of their membership. You can't do business with Communists, sooner or later some of our smart, thickheads will learn that.

CHRISTMAS SEAL DONATIONS are the best possible way for one to help people who need help, and get the Christmas feeling of taking joy to others. The Christmas Seal fund is running short, and we invite our readers to do as we are doing: namely, we are giving, both personally and on the part of our paper. A small gift will go a long way to help free some poor child, or even an adult, from the ravages of tuberculosis today. There is more happiness in giving on Christmas than there is in receiving.

ST. LOUIS AND CATHOLICS are taking the lead in desegregation in the Missouri area. As far back as 1948 the diocese of St. Louis was praised for its courageous introduction of desegregation in the St. Louis Catholic schools. At that time, though, the public and St. Louis generally would not let Negroes use the swimming pools. Today the public schools have got in line in St. Louis, and many of them have quietly installed integration. But their leadership has inspired 110, of the total of 177 districts in the state of Missouri that have Negro pupils, to begin desegregation. That's more than three-fourths of the districts that heretofore were solidly segregated. These are public schools that we are talking about. Although we give them credit for following the line of the Catholics, we have to give the Catholics credit for leading.

DROPPING FORWARD PASSES is so prevalent among our school kids that it was a revelation to see the Abilene boys freeze onto a pass, if it came anywhere neear them, and HOLD ONTO IT. As important as forward passes are, I often wonder why coaches do not find a way to give special training to their ball hawks. Every time I see one of our school kids run along and cavalierly stick out his fingers, to let the forward pass slither through the fingers, I feel like boiling him in oil. What good is it to run, if you don't have the ball? All the receivers I see down this way seem to be imbued with the idea that they must run, if they get near a pass, whether they catch it or not. The important thing is to catch the pass, because the ball is already forward when the receiver gets it; and if he catches it, even if he doesn't gain another step, he has gained. But if he drops it, it has cost his team a down and maybe the opportunity to score. Coaches should never let boys become receivers until they prove that if they get near a ball they will catch it anl hold it, by actually doing it in practice. When I used to play end, the test was whether you caught the ball, whether it was near the ground or high in the air, your job was to catch it and hold it. Timing is important to both the passer and to the receiver. Having ends run straight out and wait for the man to throw the ball to them on a straight run is obsolete. The end must either brush the tackle, as if he is blocking for a back to circle his end, and then suddenly break down the middle, to be at a given spot at a given time; or if he runs straight out, then he has to suddenly cut back to center or to some other agreed upon spot, where the passer will already be throwing the ball leading him. The next timing is on going for the ball. Often the receiver is in the midst of two, and sometimes three, of the opposition team. The important thing is to gauge when the ball will reach a certain spot, and to jump to that spot to meet it at that instant. The end that plays basketball has a good chance at timing here, and if he is a jump center, he will usually beat his opposition and take passes with them all around him. Maybee I ought to go out and hire myself to one of the high school coaches of ends.

Another thing that burns me up is to see an end get sucked in and let a play go outside of him. "End" means that the player is always on the end of the play or end of the line, and that no play goes outside. There are always 10 other players inside to help catch a man, but there is nobody outside to help catch him. Often ends go down the field under punts, and they cut in so that the man carrying the ball can get outside of them, and that means that the runner is likely to rush down the sidelines with nobody to hit him. The end's primary function is to keep the play inside of him always. I played end three years and never had my end circled for a touchdown. That wasn't any great skill, it was a stubborn refusal to let a play go outside of me; because if the guy scores on the inside of me, 10 other guys are responsible, but if he gets outside, you as the end, are responsible. Next time I am going to talk some about playing halfback. No, I want to talk about how the end should stand, and also tell him how he can play his position and never get off side.

NOT A WORD was carried in my local daily papers of Vice-President Nixon's statement to the nation that it must get rid of segregation and discrimination, if it wants to win the good will of the many peoples over the world, most of whom are dark. Yes, there was a purported story on Vice-President Nixon's speech, but that significant passage was omitted in my daily papers. Now the Vice president is the second highest personage in our national government, and anything he says is more or less important, particularly on policy. Also, the matter of segregation and discrimination in the South is of constant importance to the people, so that it just isn't cricket or logical for a daily paper, serving the South, to omit such a significant statement by the Vice President of the United States. It was diametrically opposed to the pattern of life of the South, and yet there not only was no editorial comment, but the story in the Houston dailies did not even carry the statement. Can't you see why the South has been able to go on with its abusive and indefensible discrimination so long, the pulpit and the daily papers have kept a smoke screen around the discrimination involved in segregation, and they have lied and lied and lied.

THE CHAOTIC CONDITION among the longshoremen in New York has obscured the fact that longshoremen elsewhere than New York have signed contracts getting increased pay, and giving them work from Boston around the southern coast to Brownsville. I got this information from the March issue of THE ILA VOICE, the mouthpiece of the old ILA. The same was sent to me by a leader of the longshoremen on the local from Houston.

THE PICTURE CLEARS with this information. Since two-thirds of the ILA are outside of New York, there is a sufficient group of men to carry on alone, or to be an attractive plum for John L. Lewis' organization or any other they want to join. From this angle it looks as though the ILA in New York is going to have a tough fight to hold the bargaining power against the newly formed A. F. of L. union, supported by Governor Dewey. The ILA won the first election between the A. F. of L. and the ILA in New York, but the A. F. of L. claims that there were 4,300-odd fraudulent votes, and held up the results of the election being put into effect. Now it seems that the maneuver is to force another election, when the ILA probably has lost strength.

NOT RESPONSIBLE could be the verdict of all Americans on General Frank H. Schwable's giving away under the torture of Communists and falsely swearing that America was dealing in germ warfare. It was most regrettable that the officer should have broken down, but I don't believe that any of us are in position to judge him for breaking down. I seem to remember that some priests, also some bishops, and some of our ablest reporters have been forced to break down and confess guilt against themselves that was not true. The fault is not Schwable's, the fault lies in the lap of the Communists for violating all international rules in thus abusing prisoners.

CLARENCE CAMERON WHITE had the unique distinction of being honored in the South, when his composition "Elegie" won first prize in New Orleans. The occasion was the final concert of the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony. There were a number in competition. The prize was $1000. It was the first time a Negro had been so honored. He was also given the keys to the city of New Orleans in a ceremony at Xavier University.

I walked toward the YMCA for food on Bolls (in Dallas), a mother and a 2-year-old tot crossed my path on Cochran. The baby was crying with outraged righteousness, the mama was leading her by one hand, while she had a switch in the other, and marched grimly across the street. When I smiled knowingly, the mother mumbled that the 2-year-old had gone six blocks alone, that included crossing Bolls and other streets. I tried to pour water on the troubled scene by saying that she at least had plenty of nerve, but Mama wasn't having any of that, and when baby pulled back she got three or four more licks on the little chubby target for switching. My enemies would say it's my baby mind that made me able to realize that that tot was probably thinking how inconsiderate parents can be, while the mother was still smarting under the fear that she had sustained when she discovered that the tot had disappeared from home.

A little later I turned in on State, going to Mrs. Esther Dyson's, and there were probably four or five little kids that had somehow gotten the top off what looked from the surface like a manhole Yes, you guessed it, one adventurer had climbed down in this space, which fortunately was not much deeper than his height, and which had an opening to the street where the water was forced to pour into it from the street. The other adventurers on the surface were becoming nervous, and saying to him his mama was coming and he'd better get out. So as I stopped to peep in, he started his climb out and was helped out to my relief, at least. Why did he go in the hole? Well, again my baby mind makes me know that he was curious, and he did not think of the danger of possibly not being able to get out.

Sunday, as I came along to the office on Lathrop street, there was a baby about 2½-years old, who had a little bit of a broom straw on the end of a stick that might have been her baby broom, with which she was hitting a small white ball that probably was a golf ball. Some way it had come through a gap in the gate outside on the driveway of the property, but had not gotten to the street. The baby was out hitting the ball to knock it back through the gap in the gate into the yard, while Mummy stood watching. It doesn't take much imagination to realize that the baby had somewhere seen Mama was out and was watching she wanted to play some golf herself. Now if the ball had come off the driveway into the street, she would have followed it without a moment's hesitancy, fortunately, Mama was out and was watching her and would have been able to have stopped her in that instances.

The protest was called for when Congressman Powell found that the servant group was 100 per cent Negroid.

McCARTHY'S APPROACHING VISIT will inevitably make those of us in Texas reappraise this matter of McCarthyism and its relationship to Communism. There is no question but what the Communists went underground during the war by infiltrating most of our organizations. With the Hydrogen bomb it is not very difficult to get Americans frightened as to what could happen if the Russians should paralyze our resistance by the Communists who infiltrated our organizations. It only takes a hint of this to frighten almost any of us today. McCarthy hasn't given hints, he has been outriding Paul Revere, and been shouting louder than a megaphone with electronic qualities.

It isn't necessary to say that McCarthy is only out for publicity.

It is sufficient to say that McCarthy's method of recklessly charging anybody and everybody, without any proof, and of walking over their civil rights, has made him an issue, today looming bigger than Communism itself. I think today the bubble aura of hero-worship of McCarthy as our protagonist against Communism has burst, pierced by the recklessness of McCarthy himself. I don't believe anything can be done to put him back on the wall whole again as the man that we want to follow or to worship. I won't try to hear Senator McCarthy when he comes to Houston. I would not have an open mind if I heard him. I can remember that he called General George Marshall a traitor. I can remember that he accused Mrs. Annie Lee Moss, an innocent, simple woman, of being a Communist, without any proof, and had her dismissed from her job and exposed to public disdain, only to have his charges blow up completely in his face, when he turned and ran out of the hearing room, because he couldn't face his own music. I believe the Army's published record against McCarthy and the attorney for his committee, Cohn. Finally, how many Communists has McCarthy dug up by his own efforts, or convicted by evidence that he gathered himself? Negroes don't have to be frightened by the issue of Communism, because the whole world knows where they stand with regard to Communism.

CALLED DIE-HARDS — Ben Davis, mayor of Mound Bayou, Mississippi, an all-Negro town; and Percy Greene, editor of the Jackson Advocate, a weekly, have protested most vigorously a recent editorial in Ebony. The Ebony editorial seemingly said that these two leaders in Mississippi were trying to hold onto segregation and exploit it to their advantage. Ben Davis finished Fisk in '09, the same class of Bill Dawson, then went on to Harvard and finished law, then went into Mound Bayou where he has been ever since.

Despite his training, I have never heard of his taking any public position on issues that affect the race. Percy Greene I have known for the last 12 years. He has taken a lot of positions, but when it comes to taking an issue straight-out against segregation, he always reneges, saying that it would hurt him in Jackson. I imagine it is these characteristics that have prompted the Ebony magazine to call them die-hards.

WALKER'S CONVICTION stirred Dallas Negroes as they have not been stirred in many and many a year. I was there on the week-end, and I literally did not go anywhere, but what somebody brought up the case of Tommie Lee Walker. I heard everything, from the charge that the state never proved the man guilty to the statement that there was a witness, who was prepared and ready to testify that no Negro killed the victim, Mrs. H. C. Parker. I never could get "het up" over the things that the people told me.

But I was impressed with the fact that W. J. Durham and young lawyer Turner had gotten more acclaim, in a suit where their client got death, than most men get for winning cases. That argued that the majority of the Negroes felt that there was something wrong with the trial. I also thought that as long as the death penalty is only given to Negroes who rape white women, and that white men practically never get any conviction at all for raping Negro women, there is something wrong with our trials and our courts. It seems to me that this one-sided conviction by the courts of justice argues that an outside bias creeps into courts and tilts the scale against Negroes.

I was also impressed with the fact that there were so many deputies on hand in the courtroom, despite the fact that there had been no demonstration. To me all of these policemen in the courtroom could not help but emphasize the racial issue in the trial. Why assume that the jury, or any other court people, would be free of the so obvious implication? Also there is the same hue of off-color to District Attorney Henry Wade's saying to the accused, who sat alone in a white-dominated atmosphere, "I'd be glad to walk the last mile with you, Walker. And I'd be glad to pull the switch on you". That statement in the atmosphere that surrounded the trial would not do much to help Negroes' faith in the impartiality of American justice in the South.

I FORGOT. — Not long ago I had a statement in one of my columns commending Mrs. Susan McAshan for the contributions she has made to the community. I listed a number of things that she had been wholly or to a large extent responsible for. I forgot to mention that she had made a substantial contribution to building the Blue Triangle Branch of the YWCA on McGowen street. You guessed it, the ladies of the Y almost took my head off for the omission.

CHEAP TRICKS still serve as the basis of C. W. Rice's news of those he hates in his Negro Labor News. In the February 4, 1950, edition of The Informer, page 10, I carried (in the Ram's Horn) a sub-title "FUN FOR ALL". Under it, four years ago, I told all and sundry:

Theodore Hogrobrook staged a surprise birthday party for Mrs. Hogrobrook at their home on Winbern Monday night. Among the guests who came and went were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Radley, Mr. Alvin Johnson, major domo of the Elks Rest, Dr. and Mrs. Howard Wright, Attorney and Mrs. Morris Bogdanow, President and Mrs. R. O'Hara Lanier, and the Wesley. There was good talk, a little dancing, and some bridge. First Mr. Johnson and I played Mr. Bogdanow and Mr. Hogrobrook. These two beat us that rubber. Then Dr. Beal replaced Mr. Hogrobrook (Dr. Howard Wright took Mr. Johnson's place) and we continued to beat Dr. Beal and Mr. Bogdanow. The final score for the Wright-Wesley side was 2910 as against 780 as the total for the opponents on the other side. Bogdanow said he hadn't played in 7½ years, and and in those who have be[illegible] to harass President La[illegible] with being a Communist, or at least subversive have relied heavily upon the fact that President Lanier's name appeared as being a member of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare, the predecessor of the Southern Conference Educational Fund. Repeatedly we have pointed out that President Lanier's name became associated with the organization at a time when nobody had any reason to suspect it of being subversive at all. But the boys were bent upon using that to smear Dr. Lanier, and they were heedless.

But on the hearing that Senator James O. Eastland conducted in New Orleans a week or so ago, the star witness said that Mrs. Durr had used her influence to get Justice Black (her brother-in-law) to speak as part of the plot "to deceive professors into joining the conference". Also Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt had been inveigled into making the address before the opening session.

The same star witness, Paul Crouch, told the committee, "Armed with the magic of the Roosevelt and Black names many university professors, who did not suspect the organization, were brought in".

Now keeping in mind that President Lanier, like Mrs. Roosevelt, Mrs. Bethune, and a lot of others, had been interested when the movement first took place to set up this youth group, and that the group was only found to be subversive years afterwards, you can see how radical and unbased the charges were of Communism or subversivism against Dr. Lanier on this account.

It doesn't help the position of these reckless boys who have been throwing around the charge of Communism to find that now Martin Dies, who is the predecessor of McCarthy, is today saying that even many of the people who joined the Communist movement were "innocent people". For instance, when he appeared on the program, "Meet the Press", February 28, 1954, he said in answer to a question on Governor Shivers' idea of the death penalty for membership in the Community party, "I don't agree with that because the things we must always consider is that there were a great many innocent people, who were inveigled to join the Communist movement. I'd say, for instance, that 80 per cent of the members of the front organizations were non-Communists. Now I think that whatever we do, we must safeguard the rights of anyone who was a gullible and unthinking American, and who joined an organization".

I think President Eisenhower, in his talk last Monday night, showed the whole nation how hysteria has permitted the unscrupulous men among us to divide us and get us at each other's throats, by the clever ruse of calling people Communists without any proof or facts. I never did believe that there could be any real immunity to people recklessly and publicly calling people Communists. So I set out to build a file and a record, and I don't find anything that seems to even suggest immunity for such recklessness. On the contrary it seems now to me that a few more pieces and the jig saw puzzle will fall into place, and show it is absolutely libelous to so label a man publicly.

Just as I believe in the right of the press to investigate Communism or subversivism, I believe in the obligation of the press to oppose reckless invasion of civil rights without wavering.

SOLID ACHIEVEMENTS on the part of President Eisenhower and his associates may justly be claimed now in the matter of aid to Negroes in civil rights and otherwise. A lot of things have been done in the 18 or 19 months that Eisenhower has been in office. Among them is the opening of theatres, cafes, and most of the hotels in Washington to Negroes. Now under urging from the President, the schools are ready to begin integration. Discrimination is being taken out of government contracts. Ike has appointed Negroes to high government jobs, probably higher than any that have come to Negroes under any other administration and best of all, Ike has made no public speeches about his efforts with regard to civil rights, and has in no way tried to capitalize on it, while on the other hand he has worked at it personally and quietly. But the big thing is that most people are going to give Eisenhower credit for the Supreme Court's decision, knocking segregation out in education. President Truman did more to make segregation unpopular, but more actual progress against segregation has come in the Eisenhower administration.

MIXED MATCHES are permitted in Texas if the game is baseball, but mixed matches are forbidden if the game is wrestling or boxing. Yet white wrestlers leave Texas and enter competition with Negroes in other states. How long will it be before the general principle that segregation is inherently wrong will be applied to these sports?

WHAT OF STATE PARKS, are they now open to Negroes on an equal basis? What ground is there for closing any of these parks in a city to the Negro citizens of that city.

THE SCHOOL PROBLEM is not basically integration, integration is merely a problem of adjustment in emotions and psychology. The basic school problem for the South is due to the fact that there are not enough buildings, not enough books, and not enough busses and other facilities for the school population, and the school population is growing by leaps and bounds, whereas the South's ability to raise funds is not getting any bigger. The problem can be pointed up this way, integrated or not integrated the Southern states are going to have a headache to supply sufficent schools for the school population. It would speed the solution of the real problem, if the two races could get together and decide on how they are going to work out this integration angle of it, so that the major thought can be given to the bigger one of finding sufficient funds.

STATESMANSHIP IS NEEDED for an immediate and easy solution of the integration problem, but I am of the opinion that it is needed even more for the solution of the real problem of furnishing sufficient schools for the population. In education, church leaders, YW and YMCA leaders, and those in other fields that have had experience with interracial problems, should be selected by the governor or somebody to serve with their counterparts from the minority race to sit and talk this thing out, to make and prepare plans for integration. My wife told me she heard an old hillbilly down in Mississippi or Alabama, in answer to questions right after the Supreme Court's decision, say that the integration should be brought about by putting the kids in the first grade together. It seems like a lot of sense to me. Once the two racial groups get together on the integration procedure it will be easier for them to go on to the bigger problem, which is a problem that will be lasting not today or tomorrow but over the next 20 years, probably; for it is certain that our school population will continue to increase and we will still be playing catch up for another decade or so.

THE SEEDS OF DEMOCRACY are as often the seared bones of the martyrs to the cause as they are the victories of those who win here or there. We should not take pleasure at the Supreme Court's decision in the education cases without remembering to say a word of silent prayer for Charles Summer, Thaddeus Stevens, Senator Fessenden and men of that ilk, who fought to establish the amendments which have given us the victory. Then there are the martyrs who were lynched by night-riders, the Ku Klux Klan, and others who in the dark of the night rode down the Negroes who had the courage to fight for the rights of all in the South. This innumerable legion must always stand as a black border of the victory that we now hug to our souls.

Often I think that W. E. B. Du-Bois is today too friendly with the Communists, but I never have been able to lose my respect for the man, who in the days when it was almost worth his life to speak up for Negro rights, wrote about them, and talked about them, day in and day out, anywhere and everywhere. No, I don't forget the great Richard Allen, nor the numerous others who were lost to history because of man's refusal to honor courage in a black body. So as we partake of this great benefit, let us remember to be humble in memory of those who paid a great price that we might ultimately and in this day get the victory.

AN ENCOURAGING GAIN was shown this past year in the number of physicians that we have. 7,276 were graduated, and 3,855 died. That gave us in all 218,522 physicians in the nation. That is a net gain of 4,970. It means that we now have one physician for about every 10,000 people. The 4,970 were practioners, and part of them resulted from releases from the Army. From our standpoint it is pleasant to report that more medical schools are opening up to Negroes now, so that our share of the increase is also enlarging greatly.

PRICE DANIELS sent me a copy of the Congressional Record in which he made a speech on "Supreme Court Decisions on Separate Schools" in the Senate on May 18, in which he differed with the Supreme Court's decision. When I read the tripe that he has in this speech, I can see why he lost the Sweatt case and the Tidelands case the two chief cases that he had to handle during his administration as Attorney General for Texas. Basically, Price Daniel said that the purpose of segregation was: "First, to furnish equal opportunities and privileges and services for the children of the two races. . " Price Daniels comes from the town of Liberty, Texas, and the schools are so unequal in Liberty that you can't compare them at all, and in other sections of the county Negro schools are a disgrace. Price Daniel could not name, to save his life, one school system in the South that is segregated that is not discriminatory against Negroes. The laws that he talks about which provided for segregation were mandatory as to the separation, but never required equality. How do you expect to get statesmanship when men who are chosen to your Senate will dare get up publicly and make the type of untrue statements and half-true statements that permeate this speech?

IS FRANCE'S GESTURE of belatedly giving to Indo-China independence and equal status within the French Empire too late and too little? France has stubbornly fought up her war energies and those of America, trying to hold colonial control of Indo-China, until the Communists have won over the people of Indo-China and won over a great deal of the land itself. We have felt that America should have refused its aid to France in Indo-China, until France granted the independence and equality that is now offered, after we have used up our energy and jeopardized our security by possibly having to go to war. Those who have been on the scene recently say that Vietminhese hate the French so bitterly now that any grant of freedom at this late date will do little good. They have given the Communists a chance to ingratiate themselves with the people.

PATIENCE IS A VIRTURE—It is very hard for any of us to be patient, particularly during times when there may be action and events that are of concern to us. But on this matter of desegregation there should be no real concern at all among Negroes. Any desegregation that goes into effect now is just that much gain to the Negro. On the other hand, any opposition to desegregation now does not set the Negro back at all. Houston!, Texas

As a matter of plain truth, we have gained a whole lot just by the Supreme Court's deciding that segregation is contrary to the constitution. In some cases whole states have already taken steps to bring their practices in accord with that decision; particularly in border states or in far western states. In some other instances large cities have desegregated completely just on the announcement that segregation is illegal. On the other hand, in some towns there has been violent opposition to desegregation. Okeh, why should we be excited about it, the issue is not made and will not be made until the Supreme Court of the United States issues its decision, saying how and when segregation must end. Even those who are most vocal about opposing desegregation now know that they will have to yield, when the Supreme Court hands down its decision. Sat. 10-9-54

It is necessary for Negroes to wait patiently until sometime in the spring of 1955, when the Supreme Court of the United States will hand down its decision implementing the decree of May 17, which held that segregation is contrary to the Constitution. We hope nobody will assume that on December 6, the day set for argument on the question of how the Supreme Court shall put its decision into effect, will be the day of the decision. Anybody with that notion is doomed to disappointment, because the decision of the Supreme Court should be unanimous, or nearly unanimous, and it certainly is going to take time after the argument for the court to get together. Soon after the December 6 argument, the court will adjourn for the holidays. It isn't likely that as soon as they return they are going to be giving their opinion on this important case.

But the whole point here is that Negroes should not be disturbed if no desegregation had taken place since the May 17 decision. Having waited 85 years, surely we can wait now until next spring, thus giving the Supreme Court a chance to make authentic the plan as to when and how segregation must end in the schools. So again I am pleading with our readers to let the columnists and the demagogues rant about the whites, who here, there or yonder have arisen en masse to oppose desegregation, I am asking the readers to possess their souls in patience and just wait until the Supreme Court settles the thing once and for all. I warned the readers that there would be disappointment, and there would be outbreaks and opposition, because no change ever takes place without embarrassment. It is foolish to expect that a whole area as big as the South and some of the border states are going to be able to accept desegregation, without there being outbursts of opposition here, there and yonder. P. 10

I have felt that we should not push our luck in this area by being frantic or forward to try to settle this thing during the twilight era between the decision of May 17 and the coming decision of next spring. I have suggested to the lawyers that I have seen, including most of the youngsters who have been admitted to the bar, that they not take cases to court on the question of desegregation in this twilight period. Some have done it, anyway, and have gotten just about what I told them they would get, namely, a refusal by the judges to pass upon the matter as long as the Supreme Court is still weighing the subject. I suppose we have to realize that youngsters have to learn for themselves, and we have to be patient with them as they butt their heads against walls that they could avoid.

COMMUNISTS TRICKS are pushed at us constantly. Yesterday I received a package through the mail, with no indication of where it came from at all. Even the postmark was blurred so that you saw "Berl--" suggesting that it might have come from Berlin. You open the package and look through it to find very excellent printing and the photography is excellent. The three separate pamphlets seem to be one on Chinese children, referred to as the New China; one on African children, entitled: "That They May Live - African Women Rise," the third one is "Children Come First." Nowhere do they put on the literature anything to indicate who is getting it out, so you have to dig through it to find out who IS getting it out and what it is about. Then you discover that it is Communistic material entirely.

I can see how many gullible Negroes who get this material will go into ecstasies over how well the babies are treated in the Communist area. They probably would not realize that this is pure Communist propaganda, and that babies are not treated as they show in the pictures.

At other times I get literature across my desk in the name of liberty or civil rights, and you have to read 'way down in it before you either see somebody you know is connected with Communism, or see something else that will finally show that it is Communist stuff. Personally, I believe anything that the Communist send out is just propaganda. Don't think these advances by the Communists are idle, how do you think Ben Davis got hooked in by the Communists? How do you think Roberson got himself all twisted and snarled with Communism? How do you think Du-Bois got himself tainted with Communism? I have heard tell of people right here that I know, being mixed with Communists, they are people who under any ordinary measurement you'd count as decent, sensible people. You know, the NAACP did not finally break with Communists until a year or so ago. The NAACP still gets jolts now where in some of these un-American hearings it comes out that the guy who is up on the question of Communism has been or is a vice president or some big official in the NAACP. So far most of these vice presidents have been in locals, but they might just as well have been in the main organization, because the policy was that they would accept membership and help from anybody until a year or so ago. You can't do business with Communists, and the only way to handle a Communist is to let him alone.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS now contain clauses which require every contractor to give equal opportunity of employment regardless of race, religion, color or national origin. Sure, there are no teeth to this thing, except that the power to give better opportunities for Negroes generally. It is a good thing for all Negroes to know about this clause, because in local areas, far removed from Washington, there may be government contracts where Negroes are not given a chance. All they have to do is to write up to the President's Committee on Government Contracts at Washington and give the facts.

"UNCONSTITUTIONAL IN TEXAS," Governor Allan Shivers is reported by the Los Angeles Times of September 28 as having said of non-segregation. We wonder if that isn't saying in essence that Texas has withdrawn from the United States; for on May 17 the Supreme Court of the United States said, in a unanimous decision, that segregation was contrary to the Constitution of the United States and therefore void; now how can non-segregation be unconstitutional in Texas?

MORGAN AND TATE are having it over the question of the case of the Tyler citizens to open the state park. A couple of months ago the question was raised as to what happened to the case. Attorney Tate wrote that the lawyers had been stymied for the want of plaintiffs, after the federal court had held that all of the remedies in the state court had not been exhausted. Now Mr. Morgan writes that Mr. Tate and the other lawyers had Dr. P. E. Matlock, J. R. Register and Rev. J. W. Preston of Tyler, all of whom went to the Tyler State Park to get permission for a picnic and were turned down on the ground of race. He also says that he has information that Mr. Kirk of Austin, together with others, attempted to enter a park near Austin to use the swimming pool, and were turned down for the same reason. Finally, he says he has information that the late President Rhodes and others attempted to go to Caddo Lake Park near Marshall, and were turned down on the same ground. Now we await the rebuttal from the lawyers.

INDUSTRIAL RACE - RELATIONS REVIEW sent us Number 1 of Volume 1, covering July, August, and September 1954, and we find it something new in labor magazines. If the other editions follow this first one in quality and in range, it will be a real contribution not only to the field of labor, but to literature and to race relations in general. It will be published quarterly in Philadelphia, with Joseph V. Baker as publisher. The editors are Bernard R. Strange, Allan Powell, Ralph H. Jones, Russell Brown, and Barbara Harris.

Reveal Adults Behind School Riots; Forced Children To Participate

(Editor's Note: This week's column was written for Walter White by Clarence Mitchell, director of the Washington bureau of the N. A. A. C. P. Mr. White is recovering from a heart attack.)

Sat. 11-6-54

Children from Baltimore have confirmed what most of us believed to be the truth about the recent upheavals in those cities in connection with integration of the schools. One of the white students from Baltimore said at New Rochelle, New York, that adults started the agitation and even threatened some of the children with anonymous telephone calls.

There is a widely accepted belief that if children are left to themselves they do not have trouble making interracial adjustments. This was beautifully illustrated in Baltimore when the school trouble was at its peak. In the heart of the neighborhood where racial feeling is supposed to be at its worst, here was a hotly contested sandlot base ball game between colored and white boys.

Spectators were cheering their favorites and there was not the slightest evidence of friction. If the players knew about the threats of possible race riots and gang fights that were being passed around over telephone wires at the time, they did not act like it.

The testimony of the Baltimore children in New Rochelle supports the practical truth that prejudice must be taught to young people. We should also add that prejudice must be continually reinforced if it is to live in the sun light of modern education.

A child leaving a home that stresses the inferiority of colored people sees well-dressed and orderly nonwhites on his way to school. In the class room he is taught about the importance of democracy and the place of the United States in world affairs.

His prejudice is likely to wilt considerably if he is in the hands of skillful teachers who tell him the truth about the races of man. This means that the schools themselves must do an increasingly vigorous job in giving children information about their fellow men.

Another ugly fact confirmed by the Baltimore school children was that most of the agitators were not parents and the signs used in the demonstrations were handed to children by "professional" race baiters.

The NAACP's observers and the Baltimore police department had noted the trouble making techniques used in disturbance. Now that the children also speak of it, the question arises, "why did most of the stories in the southern daily press ignore this angle?"

If the NAACP and the police department could learn that most of those causing the trouble were small time bigots rather than parents, why was this so difficult for professional newspaper men to get the same information? If they did know the agitation was artificial what was the reason why this was not printed?

Without answering these questions directly one is safe in saying that too many of the white newspapers wanted the Baltimore incident to be an example of why integration in the schools would not work.

Many of them were bitterly opposed to the Supreme Court's decision and in their zeal to justify their opposition they became blind to obvious facts.

Fortunately, they now have a second chance to line up with the forces of law and order. If they spend more time telling about the success that is accompanying integration it is very unlikely that disturbances like those that occurred in Baltimore and Washington will be repeated.

Merchants Of Hate

By JAMES W. IVY

(NOTE: While Walter White is convalescing from a recent heart attack his friends will contribute guest columns.)

Chicago Ill.

Few will deny that many people, especially in the border states and the Deep South, are very angry about the May 17 decision of the Supreme Court outlawing racial segregation in the public schools. But what is much more disturbing is the rise of a hate group to exploit this anger.

Just recently there came into the hands of this columnist two hate sheets, both mouthpieces for continued segregation in the public schools. One is Bryant Bowles' THE NATIONAL FORUM, organ of the National Association for the Advancement of White People (NAAWP); the other, which calls itself "The Nation's Anti-Communist Paper," is published in Union, New Jersey.

Sat. 11-13-54

Both sheets are peddlers of hate. And both profess to have discovered a sinister tie up of Jews, Negroes, and Communists in a common front to break down white supremacy.

THE NATIONAL FORUM reveals its editor, Bryant Bowles, the founder of the NAAWP, as a miserable little man with a disgusting conception of democracy and Americanism. Bowles, who was arrested once by the Baltimore police on five charges of false pretense, is apparently trying to recoup his fortune and to make a splash on the national scene by cashing in on sporadic opposition to the Supreme Court's May 17 decision.

In Milford, Delaware, where he had the most success, he seized upon the newly inflamed fears of credulous small-towners and rural folk who seem to believe that entrance of Negroes into public school classrooms in some way presages entrance into their homes.,

It is weird that in 1954, the age of the hydrogen and atomic bombs, the United Nations, and at a time when racial superiority is intellectually bankrupt, that a troglodyte like Bowles crawls out of his racist cave to preach white supremacy and race hate.

Bowles' bedevilment with white supremacy has a cold, sadistic quality and little of that moral frenzy which animated two of his predecessors in the Deep South, the late James K. Vardman of Mississippi and Tom Walton of Georgia, Bowle's white supremacy notions are degrading, dirty; in fact, almost pathological from the sheer weight of their querulous insanity.

"Total mongrelization is NAACP goal," he yells. And in the mid-August 1954 issue of his paper he features on the front page pictures of a Negro "king" and a white "queen" at the 25th anniversary celebration of Los Angeles City College and warns that this is "a preview of what the Supreme Court's anti-segregation ruling ultimately means for parents everywhere." He then adds:

"Actually, the disgraceful spectacle at Los Angeles City College should provide a lesson not only to the parents of Los Angeles (many of whom originally came from the deep South) but to parents everywhere."

"The real damage," he warns, of mixing whites and Negroes in the classroom, "will be done on the psychological front. The child will be conditioned at first to accept the mere presence of Negro students in the classroom. Later he will be taught that all races are equal in ability and intellectual capacity and that there is no essential difference between the various groups. He will be inoculated against the evils of 'bias' and 'prejudice,' and trained to look upon any manifestation of racial pride or consciousness as anti-social, if not criminal."

Perhaps the president of the NAAWP does not know that this is precisely what decent Americans want and believe in. This equality which Bowles affects to despise is the profound moral conviction of every decent man and woman. What distresses him, apparently, is that the majority of Americans do believe in equality and that the NAACP (not the N. A. A. W. P.) has been so successful in helping America to live up to its ideals.

What group backs the other hate sheet, COMMON SENSE, this writer does not know, But the group, judging by its paper, is vicious, unprincipled and a monger in half-truths.

They have dared to claim that the May 17 decision of the Supreme Court "actually carried out a 1921 Resolution of the Communist International."

Such crackpot minorities as the NAAWP and COMMON SENSE, with their vile and vulgar rhetoric, cannot stop the onward march of racial democracy in America. They cannot hinder it much, since they are frustrated groups fighting hopeless rearguard actions.

Mississippi Led States In Lynchings, Illiteracy

By HENRY LEE MOON
Director,
(Public Relations, NAACP)

For decades the state of Mississippi led the union in only two respects — lynchings and illiteracy. In practically every other field, and certainly in all areas of human welfare, Mississippi consistently managed to wind up as No. 48 among the states.

And now the white supremacists in that state have come up with a new device by which they hope to halt the march of progress. Specifically, they are resorting to extra-legal means in a concerted effort to forestall the desegregation of public schools. As yet there have been no reports of lynchings, nor of beatings. A new, less gruesome, but potentially quite as effective method has been devised to put the screws on Negro leadership which opposes segregation.

Chicago Ill.

Two national officers of the NAACP on recent trips to that state have encountered enough instances of economic pressures being put upon local and state NAACP leaders to indicate there is a concerted state-wide plan

Evidences of these pressures began to crop up in various parts of the state following announcement of the organization of County Citizen's Councils to maintain segregation.

Earlier, 100 Negro leaders, summoned to the Capitol by Governor Hugh White, astounded the governor by rejecting his invitation to join in the support of a "voluntary" school segregation plan. Following that meeting, Governor White said: "I am stunned! I had believed that a certain element representing a vast majority of the Negroes would go along. Now, I'm definitely of the conclusion that you can't put any faith in any one of them on this proposition."

Failing to cajole Negroes into acceptance of segregation, white supremacy elements in the state have undertaken to make it even more difficult for Negroes to secure money or credit. In this way, they hope to scare off or starve the leadership into submission.

Upon return from a recent trip to the state, Clarence Mitchell, the NAACP's able Washington representative, reported several instances of these pressures.

The automobile liability insurance, required by the state, of one NAACP leader was suddenly cancelled. Banks and other creditors who formerly allowed plenty of time for payment are now demanding prompt payment of outstanding bills. His income tax returns are being investigated by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. This man and his wife have taken precautions to avoid the fate of Harry and Harriet Moore in Mims, Fla., on Christmas Night, 1951.

The president of a recently organized branch, a small businessman, was recenty called in by the local banker and asked to show the books of the NAACP. In reply, the Negro leader asked the banker to cite the law which would require him to show the association's books. The banker then threatened to "tie up" the man's business and run him out of town. Whereupon the businessman promptly prepaid a small note owed the bank.

A veteran of World War I, leader of another Mississippi branch, reported attempts made to intimidate Negroes who petitioned the local school board to end segregation.

Despite these threats, pressures and reprisals Negro leadership in Mississippi has not taken to cover, Mr. Mitchell reports. They are prepared to make sacrifices to end segregation.

However, as these pressures grow greater there is need for more powerful moral and financial support for the victims of these economic purges. There is need for a substantial fund to help finance militant Negro leadership in Mississippi when local resources are denied to them.

(Public Relations NAACP)

Suddenly we were silent — strangely silent and serious.

Less than an hour ago we had been gay, almost frivolous, as we released balloon after balloon, each laden with messages of hope for the peoples of the satellite countries. It had been fun feeling the tug of the hydrogen-filled ballrooms seemingly eager to get on their way across the nearby border.

Chicago, Ill.

We watched them as they soared upward and out of sight, drifting steadily eastward towards the communist-dominated lands.

At the launching site we had picnicked on knockwurst, sauerkraut, rye bread and huge steins of the best German beer. It had all been great fun.

Sat. 11-27-54

But now it was different. We were standing directly in front of the Iron Curtain. There was no laughter now, no gaiety as we listened intently to the hushed voices of the security agents who had accompanied us. Our instructions had been explicit:

"Do not leave the rest of the party, please follow the instructions and warnings of those guiding you." This was no place to stray from the group.

We were on a crest overlooking a valley through which ran the border separating Germany and the West from Czechoslovakia, the beginning of the Communist-dominated land mass extending from the point eastward some 5,000 miles to the Pacific Ocean.

There was, of course, no "curtain" neither metal nor textile. But the separation was no less position, the barrier no more penetrable, our guides explained.

It was just before dusk when we arrived. The sun, which had been unseasonably warm and bright, was settling gently behind us. From where we stood we could see the long shadows in the valley and on the slopes beyond. At this point the border is a field-stone fence of the type common in upstate New York and in New England.

Immediately in front of the fence, stands a modest sign in German indicating the frontier. On the far side lie barren fields bordered with a ploughed strip, possibly 30 feet wide. It was explained to us that this strip is kept freshly ploughed so that the Czech patrols could tell from the footprints if anyone had crossed.

In sight also were an observation tower and a former school building which had been converted into headquarters for the border guard. Through field glasses we could see the frontier militiamen Barely visible in the dimming light of early evening were the barbed wire fences which, our guide told us. were electrified.

And beyond these lay the five-mile no man's strip in which residence is forbidden and into which entry is permitted only to authorized persons.

This, then, was the reality of the Iron Curtain which we had come a long way to see under auspices of the Crusade for Freedom. There it was before us —a grim barrier erected to shut off half the peoples of the world from the other half.

Behind the curtain, millions of people yearned for freedom from toalitarian rule. Through it, a few persons still manage to escape despite the precautions of their prison guards.

Twilight departed and darkness descended over the scene as we back toward Munich.

It was not until hours later that gaiety returned to our party when we stopped for dinner at a lovely inn in the peaceful town of Passau overlooking Austria across the blue Danube. Even then we could not forget the grim reality of the Iron Curtain and the many peoples who live in despair in that vast land.

Friends Inquire About Life After Death, And Promised Land

How does it feel, several persons have asked me, to be so close to death that pulse, blood pressure and breath were apparently ended and then returned to life? Does one feel any differently about life itself? Did one see or feel any new experiences which alter the pattern of one's thinking?

Defender

Having gone through such an experience recently, I wish I were able to report some exciting visions of whatever world there is after death. Unhappily, I cannot.

P.9

After a short period of unconsciousness in an oxygen tent I did not learn until many days later how close the end had been. The only deep emotion I can report is that of unlimited joy that at so exciting a period of human history I have been allowed time to witness and participate in this rapidly changing world of ours.

Some friends with the utmost sincerity wrote warm and moving letters which drew an analogy to Moses who was permitted to see but not allowed to enter the Promised Land.

Sat. 12-25-54

I have already seen much of the Promised Land and expect to see more of it in the years to come as segregation in all of its phases continues to crumble.

Other friends have chided me, saying that it is my own fault that I suffered a heart attack because of the years I had not worked at a more temperate pace. Possibly there is some truth in the accusation. But had not a host of Americans, living and dead, been willing to work without compromise or thought of self over the years the status of democracy would not be what it is today. There are many less fortunate than myself who have given their lives for the cause of freedom, ranging from the days of Frederick Douglass to Harry Moore.

What more can I say than to express gratitude that a crisis has passed and "many more years of participation in the struggle for human freedom" are now promised me by the doctors.

To each and all of you who have sent, by one means or another, your good wishes and prayers, I am deeply grateful.

Journalism's Top Hatchet Men Out To Aid Segregated Schools

Other methods of intimidation having failed, a propaganda campaign aimed at Negro teachers has been somewhat belatedly launched in anticipation of the Supreme Court's ruling against school segregation.

An avalanche of soberly written and lengthy editorials from Southern newspapers increasingly stress the fact—or, more accurately, the allegation and speculation that integrated schools may mean the loss of jobs by many Negro teachers. Not only is this being pointed out in the South as an ominous consequence of the Negro's fight against segregation but Southern newspapermen like W. D. Workman, jr., of the Charleston, S. C. News and Courier are writing articles for Northern papers in the same vein.

Workman, for example, wrote in the New York Herald Tribune on January 10 that "thousands" of the 113,000 Negro teachers in the South "are likely to lose their jobs . . . if the Southern states were to follow the example set by the non-segregated states of the North, East and West."

He then attempts to bulwalk his thesis with statements that New York with a population of 918,000 Negroes in 1950 employed fewer than 3,000 of them as teachers while South Carolina with 322,000 Negroes listed 8,845 or three times as many.

How sound is Workman's argument? In the first place, so far as New York is concerned, no one knows how many Negro teachers there are because a state law forbids classification by race. Thus Workman's figure of "fewer than 3,000" is wholly a guess.

In New York City and other large cities and towns colored instructors are now so readily accepted that a few pay any attention to race while the acute shortage of teachers during recent years has made qualified teachers the object of search to fill vacancies created by resignation, death or new schools.

Even if one accepts Workman's estimate as approximately accurate, why haven't more Negroes in places like New York gone into teaching? The answer for them is exactly the one for whites—they make more money in other occupations. Only the other day, headlines were made by the resignation in New Jersey of a white high school science teacher with a master's degree because he could earn much more money driving a truck.

Garment and needle trades workers in many Northern cities, protected as to job security, upgrading and wages through union collective bargaining, today earn more than many teachers, white as well as colored in Mississippi. Automobile and steel workers as well as many Federal, state and municipal employees enjoy larger salaries than many high school principals.

Dan Temple Graves of the Birmingham Post-Herald gleefully quotes Workman in support of his argument that "segregation assures employment to thousands of Negro teachers who will have no such assurance if it is abolished" and adds that "The NAACP answer to that will be an FEPC." As to the latter, he might conceivably be right for once. Fights for laws against racial discrimination are an absolute necessity and the NAACP will not cease fighting for them until they are achieved.

But what Southerners like Workman and Graves carefully ignore is the fact that America's appalling and irremediable shortage of teachers estimated by the National Education Association to be a minimum of 160,000, makes it utterly impossible for America to refuse to utilize every qualified teacher regardless of race or color. It may take a little time to establish this. But such is the American passion for education of its children, neither race nor color will stand in the path of progress, despite the bleatings of men like Workman and Graves.

Ex-Ambassador Chester Bowles' Book Pictures Democracy At Its Very Best

If you can possibly spare four dollars, may I suggest —no, that's too namby pamby a word—insist that you invest it forthwith in a book which will pay you dividends many times the value of your initial investment.

The book is AMBASSADOR'S REPORT by Chester Bowles who, until the recent change of administration, was our ambassador to India. Harper's publishes it. It reads as easily as an excellent novel.

It gives you the feeling or having travelled with the Ambassador and Steb, who is Mrs. Bowles, Cynthia, aged as to years thirteen when the family went to India but understanding as much as one twice her years and the two younger Bowles.

Theirs was a presentation of democracy at its very best.

The reason this was true is that the Bowles family dared to be themselves. They did not calculatedly ignore protocol and the excruciating stuffiness which makes the life of diplomats a horrible regimen of formality.

(I well remember how the United National representative of a certain country who was a warm and human being in New York carefully left at our hotel five calling cards with the upper left corners folded downward to signify his recognition of our arrival in his country.)

The Bowles refused to live in the grandiloquent American embassy, renting a modest house instead. The children rebelled against attending the very proper school for the children of diplomats, choosing a public school. They pedalled their bicycles to school instead of riding an embassy automobile.

At first, these and other non-conventional behaviors were attributed by a skeptical Indian government and people as being skilled American public relation paganda.

That is, until everybody Pandit Nehru to the most lo village dweller discovered that wasn't a pose but exactly what the Bowles family had done in Essex, Connecticut, USA.

What makes AMBASSADOR'S REPORT one of the most important books of our time is that Chester Bowles integrated himself into the life of the people of Asia as naturally and completely as his family did without ever once losing either the perspective or the responsibility which was his as ambassador of the United States.

Pandit Nehru immediately recognized in him an entirely new type of representative of the West. He soon abandoned his skepticism and accepted the new envoy with full faith as another human being of intgrity who, like himself, held unshakable faith in the democratic process but also repudiated superiority and colonialism.

He tells of how the United states, passionately anti-colonial in theory although its financial interest are not so pure of either motive or practice, has replaced Great Britain in the minds of Asians as the chief protector and expander of colonialism in Asia and Africa. He makes clear as well how convinced as well as distorted is Asian opinion of the race problem in the United States.

I could imagine no more instructive nor valuable course in contemporary history than AMBASSADOR'S REPORT. If you can't afford to buy it or are unwilling to make the necessary sacrifice of something else, go to the library and get it. You'll learn more about what is going on in Asia and the world—and what may happen tomorrow—than in any other way.

Segregation Subject Put In Background As The Walter Whites Sample Teas

Are you, like me, one of those to whom tea is tea? Or who go into the grocer's and take whatever brand he recommends or whichever you have heard extolled on radio and television or in newspaper advertisements? If you are, you probably haven't gone wrong because tea experts declare that most of the popular brands are good values. They have to be or they wouldn't stay at the top very long.

But if you have the time and inclination—or happen to be married to one who has the latter along with a modicum of expert knowledge — there are exciting fields of exploration into the lore and variety of teas from all over the world. So for this once will you allow me to write about tea instead of segregation?

It all started when my wife asked me what I thought of tea as a Christmas present for friends we love. I was dubious until we arrived at the office in lower Manhattan of one of New York's most famous importers of tea and coffee.

It was a rather small office. From one window one looked at a gray wall and clouded skies which could have been London; out of another at lower Manhattan's towers which was unmistakably the New World.

In the center of the room was a largish table, high in the middle with a delicately balanced apothecary's scales located in its exact center. Around its lower edge were placed a dozen wafer-thin porcelain cups without handles.

My wife and I joined the professionals at the revolving table to suggest the blends which would combine to form the tea we wished for our friends. Minutes stretched into hours. But such was the distinctive aroma of each tea from Assam or Malaya, from Ceylon and those parts of China still free from the Communists or those from which previous and dwindling quality.

The table revolved like a Lazy Susan as two experts—one a gay, greying, gangling American and the other a quiet Englishman—sat hunched over the circling table. From small tin boxes bearing the fabulous names of plantations in India, Ceylon, China and Malaya, teas were carefully lifted and weighed on the scales down to the last leaf. Close by was an ornate copper and brass heater with two intricately shaped kettles of boiling water. Also a three-foot high copper object shaped like a very proper and angular hourglass which might be vulgarly called a spitoon. Into it each tea taster spat each teaspoonful of tea after he had rolled it around his mouth to determine its flavor and quality.

stocks had come to the United States before 1950, time was forgotten.

Over each collection of leaves was poured boiling water. We emulated the experts in gently stirring the brew to inhale the heavenly but varied perfume which rose to caress the nostrils. And then each of us lifted a teaspoonful of tea from each of the dozen cups to swirl it around one's palate for comparison with the others.

Eventually we miraculously decided on one combination as best of the scores we had tested. With gracious condescension, the two experts—kept long past their dinner hour—leaned over again to sniff the brew and sample its bouquet. Startled, they raised their eyes in recognition of my wife's selection.

"That is a good choice. One of the best we've ever tasted," they exclaimed in ungrudging acceptance of a new member of the clan. Forgotten seemed to be the quite frank suggestions of earlier in the evening that we go elsewhere to buy beautifully canistered cans of another tea which relies more on packing than quality.

We were glad that we had answered our hosts' question as we departed of whether there was anything else they could do for us. Our reply had been, "Yes, we'd like a cup of tea—to drink!"

Uncle Tomism Of College President Arouses Ire

For the time being the name of the college president and the school over which he presides will not be divulged. But one of the most incredible and vicious examples of Uncle Tomism of recent or even of remote years has recently come to light in a southern state.

In that state Herbert Wright, youth seretary of the NAACP, had been welcomed in numerous white colleges, universities and high schools. The student bodies in those shools had manifested keen interest in an approval of the NAACP's fight against segregation in education.

But here is what happened in one of the Negro state colleges. Its president, as well as the principals of several Negro high schools, were terrified lest permitting an NAACP spokesman to talk to the students get them in difficulties with prejudiced members of the state legislature, particularly when appropriations for those schools were pending.

But despite the opposition of the president, Herbert Wright did talk at a meeting of the students who received him warmly and with none of the fear which paralyzed their president.

As soon as Wright had departed, the college president called in the local Federal Bureau of Investigation to request that all students who had been present at the meeting be investigated for presumably "subversive" thoughts and activities.

The strategem, relevant of McCarthyism at its worst, was temporarily successful. Being hauled on the carpet by FBI agents during trying times like these is a painful experience even for those completely innocent.

To be presumably accused of disloyalty and to have it on reord in FBI files that one has been investigated do not augur well for the future of any American citizen.

Should he read this column the college president will know who is being written about. But he is either ignorant or forgetful of the fact that many leading Americans are on written record endorsing the work of the NAACP.

Among these is the famed J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, who decared that "Equality, freedom, and tolerance are essential in a democratic government. The NAACP has done much to preserve these principles and to perpetuate the desires of our founding fathers." P. 11

In due course the identity of the college president, who went further than even the late Senator Bilbo or Gov. Herman Talmadge, who knew better than to impugn the loyalty of the NAACP will be made known.

His thoroughly despicable action is one of the most convincing arguments yet produced as to the harm done by segregation. The sooner such educators are retired to pasture and thereby deprived of the power to intimidate students entrusted to their care the better it is going to be for all concerned.

Washington Newsman Writes Book On Service Integration

Lee Nichols is a quiet affable, pipe smoking, bespectacled United Press correspondent in Washington. By some strange strength he has resisted the malady which infects far too many Northerners who go to the nation's capital to live and work—the sickness of Jim Crow and surrender to the manifold pressures which the silent as well as the vocal Dixiecrats have inflicted until quite recently in social, political and other ways.

Neither a crusader or conformist, Lee has quietly and perceptively watched and recorded the ebb and flow of racial patterns and, somewhat amazingly has found in Washington's sometimes fetid racial atmosphere, a deeper devotion to his Quaker and democratic principles that all men are equal and should be treated as equals.

Possibly more remarkable is that Lee has never permitted his deep convictions to distort his equally strong reportorial objectivity.

Pat 2-27-54

For this reason his exciting story of how segregation in the Armed Services has been almost wholly eliminated during the past decade, BREAKTHROUGH ON THE COLOR FRONT, just published by Random House in New York, is one of the most important books not only of 1954 but of this era.

In 235 fact-packed pages he relates how years of unremitting, often apparently hopeless, but uncompromising opposition to segregation has inexorably forced the total reversal of national opinion on the issue.

BREAKTHROUGH ON THE COLOR FRONT won't, unfortunately, make the same size headlines in Russia, Asia, Africa, Latin America or even Europe which bloody fights between and Negro American troops during the first and second World Wars caused.

Journalism today always plays up conflict over agreement — unhappily, a group of men beating up or otherwise maltreating another man makes more exciting news than their treating him as a fellow human being. Dulles and Vishinsky agreeing on an issue today is a dull and unnewsworthy item; calling each other crooks makes headlines.

So will Lee Nichols' account of how the United States armed services' really democratic transformation make no headlines.

But the book can and possibly will do an enormous good in reporting how not only the services themselves but even communities such as Brownsville, Texas (where the notorious 24th Infantry explosion occurred) and Biloxi, Miss., are reshaping their racial policies.

Certain heroic names stand out in Lee Nichols' book while some are missing. Among the former are Franklin D. Roosevelt, James V. Forrestal, Stuart Symington, William H. Hastie, Mrs. Roosevelt, and Harry S. Truman.

Among the latter are many others like Admiral Chester Nimitz, Robert C. Weaver, Clarence Mitchell, Harold Ickes, Oscar Chapman and a host of others never known to the public—white and Negro—who learned through grim experience as well as rational thought that race prejudice in times either of peace or war is a stupid, unnecessary, divisive and expensive contradiction of democracy and Christianity.

President Eisenhower comes off much better in BREAKTHROUGH ON THE COLOR FRONT than would have been the case in 1948 when he testified before a Senate committee that segregation could never be ended except through the "slow processes of education." In the miraculously brief period of five years courageous and affirmative action had done the job.

To his credit he had moved the clock forward after entering the White House. Lee Nichols has written one of the most gallant and hopeful reports of how democracy can be impremented which has yet been done.

Primary Elections In N. C. And Alabama May Prove Historic Events

It is natural that the phenomenal eleven Supreme Court decisions undergirding and expanding civil rights in eight days command the headlines of the world.

But two other contemporary events may be proved by time as being as significant of fundamental change as the Court's decrees.

These happenings are, of course, the primary elections which have just taken place in North Carolina and Alabama.

The most decisive is the one in North Carolina where former Governor W. Kerr Scott decisively defeated Senator Alton A. Lennon who was running for the term after having been appointed last July to fill the uncompleted term of the late Senator Willis Smith.

Lennon was a mediocre legislator who faithfully voted straight down the line as a conservative Southerner and enemy of civil rights.

As governor, Mr. Scott followed a liberal course as far as the exigencies of North Carolina politics permit.

To the surprise of almost everybody, including Frank Graham, at the time president of the enlightened University of North Carolina he named the courageous educator United States Senator.

Gov. Scott publicly welcomed Marian Anderson to the state, recognized Negroes in every possible fashion as full-fledged citizens of the state, fought for the nomination at Chicago in 1952 of Adlai Stevenson

As was expected, some of the same below-the-belt tactics on the race issue which defeated Frank Graham were used against Kerr Scott.

The final tally showed Scott winning by a margin of 25,966 over Lennon and by 11,812 votes over the combined total of Lennon and five other candidates. Thus no runoff will be necessary.

Of major significance is the fact that both the North Carolina and the recent Alabama primaries demonstrated that Negro citizens are using their ballots as well as legal weapons to win more freedom.

For the past two years, the North Carolina State Conference of NAACP Branches, led by Kelly Alexander of Charlotte, and Charl McLean of Winston-Salem, have conducted an unremitting campaign of registration and voting. The successful campaign was aided measurably by contributions of two New Yorkers, who insists on remaining anonymous, which were made to the NAACP.

This campaign which was aided by ministers, teachers, businessmen and others resulted in close to 200,000 Negro registered voters in North Carolina who supported Scott over Lennon.

Shortly before the North Carolina primary Kelly Alexander told me that close to 200,000 Negroes are now registered voters in that state. How many of them voted in the May 29 primary is not yet known.

For sometime to come it is probable that both Negroes and white voters in the South will have to choose between candidates whose records on civil rights are far from perfect.

But the U. S. Supreme Court decisions against segregation in education, housing and recreation will never be fully implemented unless and until enlightened voters of both races make it politically unhealthy for candidates to flout or attempt to circumvent the Court's decisions.

It is highly significant that a national news magazine reported recently that the reason so few Southern members of Congress commented on the epoch-making decisions is the fact that the number of Negro voters in their states is steadily increasing.

As practical politicians, these legislators, whatever their inner fury at the Court for its decisions, decided they had best keep their mouths shut.

Bunche Probe Is Example Of Attempt To Suppress Independent Thinking

What is it like to appear before a loyalty board?

Like millions of other Americans I have read accounts, many of them violently opposed in content and treatment, about hearings before such boards. Also, like millions of Americans, I had watched with fascination the objective and orderly probings of crime by the Kefauver Committee and the quite different approach of the current McCarthy-Army shenanigans in Washington.

But it wasn't until Ralph Bunche was attacked by two ex-Communists that I had opportunity to see such a board in action.

My appearance was at my own request after I had characterized any aspersions on Dr. Bunche's complete loyalty as "shocking" and "an unseemly farce."

So far as the International Organizations Employes Loyalty Board is concerned I found it to be made up of able, serious-minded Americans who were passionately devoted to the highly difficult responsibility which had been placed upon them. I was assured repeatedly that the same careful protection of rights of the individual which was given to Dr. Bunche was given equally to the most humble and menial American employee of the United Nations.

The current nationwide criticism of the tactics of men like Senator McCarthy, it seems to me, made the Board even more conscientious in the performance of its duties. As is known all over the world, the Board promptly and unequivocally dismissed the fantastic charges against America's most distinguished diplomat.

But what troubled me as I left the hearings were these circumstances.

How far can democracy, however strong, permit professional ex-Communists to fling charges against Dr. Bunche? How close is the United States coming to a police state when individuals whose only claim to recognition is that of willing acceptance of Communist doctrine and discipline can make a career and livelihood of appearing on a per diem basis as professional witnesses against Americans who have contributed at great sacrifice as much as Dr. Bunche has towards preservation of democracy?

As I looked at the six members of the Board who had been separated from their professions and businesses to pass judgements on other Americans I wondered how far the process will eventually go.

Are we in danger of half of the population of America sitting in judgement on the other half?

Again, with no criticism of the International Organizations Employes Loyalty Board, which was merely doing the job assigned to it, I wondered how much of the attack on Dr. Bunche was motivated by determination of the nonothings to suppress all independent thinging and waken those who speak of human and civil rights.

American Negroes not long ago wisely and unequivocally denounced and declined to participate in a Communist-front "defense of Negro leadership."

It would have been most absurb to have been sucked into such an obvious attempt to save skins of frightened Communists. But the time may be close when Negroes who have spoken out and worked against racial bigotry on the basis of American principle and not as stooges of the Communists will need to take concerted action against those who would destroy them for speaking out.

There are those — both white and Negro — who would gladly destroy those who have been the strongest bulwark of democracy by their sacrificial efforts to cleanse democracy of its racial sins.

Ike's Backing of Meek For Illinois Senator Puzzling

"Blessed are the Meek" may have been made a potent campaign slogan in this year's Illinois senatorial race through the inexplicable endorsement by Mr. Eisenhower of the isolationist pro-McCarthy Republican candidate, Joseph T. Meek. Meek's smug acceptance of the President's blessing, given only one week after the Citizens-for-Eisenhower committee bluntly refused to endorse Meek or contribute to his campaign, was of a piece with McCarthy's comment of March 10th on the President's first open criticism of the Wisconsin senator.

McCarthy, it will be remembered, acidly remarked that at last the President had come around to agreement with himself. Informed of the President's letter stating that Mr. Eisenhower "looked forward with anticipation to greeting you on January third as the Junior Senator from Illinois," Meek followed the example of his Wisconsin mentor by observing that the Eisenhower message now means that the party is "united" and had "closed ranks from top to bottom."

In more explicit detail, the G. O. P. candidate appears to believe that President Eisenhower now agrees with Meek's opposition to foreign aid, amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act, support of the United Nations, orderly procedure in congressional hearings, broader trade, housing, social security and health programs as well as Meek's ardent support of the Bricker amendment which would have greatly restricted the President's treaty making powers.

What utterly puzzles this commentator is how a man of such unquestioned integrity as President Eisenhower could permit certain of his Republican associates to persuade him to sign such a letter.

Even when the realities of politics are recognized one wonders himself to a scheme which can only tighten the iron bands of the arch conservative wing of the G.O.P. on party policy which is diametrically opposed to every one of the principles for which Mr. Eisenhower believes in with his whole heart.

When one remembers the decisive manner with which General Eisenhower directed strategy during World War II, it is hard to believe that the same man, hating as he does the amoral tactics of McCarthy, should have welcomed the certainly not anti-McCarthy candidate into the inner circle of White House-approved candidates on the very day that Senator Ralph Flanders of Vermont, a loyal supporter of Eisenhower, brought up his measure in the Senate to censure the Wisconsin Junior Senator.

One obvious facet of G. O. P. strategy is seen in the developing optimism of Republicans that they may be able to hold on to control of the Senate and even possibly the House in next November's elections. The tragic suicide of Senator Lester Hunt of Wyoming, who was virtually certain of re-election, the untimely death of Blair Moody of Michigan, who was believed almost certain to defeat Senator Homer Ferguson, and the refusal to run again of Senator Edwin Johnson of Colorado put the three senatorships at least in the doubtful column and probably in the Republican column.

This shift of the political scene has obviously strengthened the hand and hopes of the Republican rightwingers and brought such pressures on the unhappy Eisenhower that he believes himself forced to go along with the Dirksens, Capeharts, Brickers and even the McCarthys.

Endorsement of a candidate with a record and philosophy like that of Meek of Illinois argurs ill for liberalism in the Republican Party and for enlightened leadership for the nation at a time of the gravest peril it has ever known.

Says U. S. Still Blundering Way Through Asian Dilemma

Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review of Literature recently spoke with characteristic knowledge and sound judgement as a guest on my radio program regarding the reasons for the precipitous decline of American and European prestige and influence in Asia during the past 18 months.

Cousins has made five trips to that part of the world during the past three years. He knows — and is known by — Asians ranging from Prime Minister Nehru to peasants in remote villages.

For these reasons Cousins' opinions are highly important. He expressed strong belief that the white Western world is losing the battle for the minds of Asians — and possibly of Africans tomorrow — because of immaturity of judgment and lack of perspective more than because of the accusations of capitalist support of colonialism and white rule which Moscow dins into the ears of Asians interminably.

In its efforts to build a European Defense community, the United States supported France's war to hold on to her colonial possessions in Indo-China, believing and hoping that France in return would join the EDC. France's recent rejection of EDC crushed those hopes.

Now the United States is seeking in desperation to forge a South Eastern Asia Treaty Organization with, of all nations, France as a participant. SEATO is another attempt at another military alliance made up primarily of white colonial powers which Asia, except Thailand and the Phillipines, with Pakistan as an "observer," refuses to have any part.

Cousins does not believe that all is lost in Asia yet. But he does believe that the swift deterioration of white prestige during the past few years in that strategic area of the world poses the gravest crisis of recent world history. This commentator would like to append two comments to Cousins' far more experienced opinion.

Every visitor to Asia in recent years knows how belligerently race-conscious Asia is. In his magnificent Ambassador's Report Chester Bowles tells of his discovery as soon as he arrived in India that "almost invariably (it is) the case in any Asian press conference or forum, the number one question was, 'What about America's treatment of the Negro?' "

But Secretary of State John Foster Dulles took an all-white staff with him to Manila to create a SEATO. This omission, which Communist and non-communist Asians will be sure to notice, is not altogether Dulles' fault.

Until quite recently the State Department did nothing to recruit competent Negroes in dealing with a world which is two-thirds colored. And it isn't doing too much now.

The second comment is this. In 1949 President Truman asked this commentator to give him a report and recommendations after an around the world tour with Town Meeting of the Air, especially about the deteriorating situation in Asia.

One of the recommendations was that the United States give encouragement and aid but in no manner attempt to dictate an economic — not a military — alliance between the non-Communist countries and peoples of Asia.

Maybe the plan might not have worked, such was the three-century long suspicion of the white world. But there was also a possibility that it might at least have lessened the suspicions and tensions which the fiasco of the Indo-China war settlement and other developments in Asia have created.

It may well prove true that lack of vision over the years in permitting foreign policy to be formed by career diplomats and political appointees instead of by Americans like Norman Cousins, Ralph Bunche and Chester Bowles may turn out to be the Achilles' heel which could lose Asia and Africa to the free world.

Near Violence Marks Opening Of Schools

The threatened mob violence of some of the white parents of school children in White Sulphur Springs, Greenbrier County, West Va., inevitably caused headlines while the peaceful integration of the schools in many other counties of the state went comparatively unnoticed.

But out of the welter of emotions and prejudices which have exploded in Greenbrier Co. certain patterns of what appears to be deliberate fomented trouble begin to emerge.

T. G. Nutter, veteran and beloved West Virginia lawyer who is president of the state conference of NAACP branches, and Willard Brown, Harvard Law School graduate and president of the Charleston, West Va., branch of the NAACP, went to White Sulphor Springs shortly after the threats of white parents to throw Negro students bodily from the non-segregated school to which the Board of Education had ordered them admitted.

They reported great tension in the town similar to that when two Negroes were lynched there in 1931. They also reported the presence of a number of persons who were strangers to the residents of White Sulphur Springs, who were engaging in acts of vandalism against the property of some Negroes.

But the Negroes of the town, Mr Nutter reports, were angry, not afraid, which is in marked contrast with 1931. A few of them were about to ask for repairs to the Bolling School, located at Lewisburg, nine miles away from White Sulphur Springs from which Negroes had formerly been restricted. But the overwhelming majority wanted no patched-up Jim Crow schools.

In marked contrast with Greenbrier County—whose resort hotels may find that the recent episode may cost them dearly—integration proceeded without incident and in complete peace in many other parts of West Virginia including such towns and counties as Franklin, Taylor, Flemington, Brooks, Barbour, Wood, Wheeling, Wellsburg, Fairmont, Webster, Pendleton, Grafton and West Grafton.

The outbreak at White Sulphur Springs poses a very grave problem for both the state and federal governments. Deliberate efforts to prevent compliance with the Supreme Court decision constitute as subversive an act as that of a Communist spy seeking to undermine and overthrow the government.

It will result, unless handled swiftly and courageously, in causing other lawbreakers to attempt the same tactics.

Finally, as Walter Carrington of the Harvard Law School who has just returned from the World Assembly of Youth meeting in Singapore pointed on his return, faith in American democracy zoomed to an all-time high when the Court's decision was handed down on May 17; it began to plummet downward when Louisiana, Georgia, South Carolina and now White Sulphur Springs, West Va., blared defiance at the U. S. Supreme Court.

He is convinced that acts like those of the mobbists in West Virginia who inspired their children to protest can utterly destroy the benefits which America has gained from its great strides forward towards human equality.

But there is hope from the rest of West Virginia and from other parts of the nation including the deep South that such incidents will prove the exception instead of the rule.

Oratorical Proficiency Will Not Be Deciding Factor In N. Y. Race

Since the days of the Franklin Roosevelt oratory has been considered a political asset essential to success of candidates to a degree which in 1954 begins to appear to be all out of proportion.

Even Adlai Stevenson's defeat in 1952, despite his superlative command of the English language and oratorical skill did not puncture the myth that the politician with the greatest ability to charm an audience is the one who wins. This is strikingly illustrated by New York's gubernatorial and New Jersey's senatorial elections where four candidates of proven ability are being weighed by political writers not so much on their records as on the circumstance that none of them possesses the oratorical gifts of a Franklin Roosevelt, an Adlai Stevenson or a William Jennings Bryan.

Speaking skill has unquestionably been an asset to public leaders from the days of Demosthenes in Greece and Cicero in Rome down through Disraeli, Parnell, Daniel Webster, Winston Churchill, Adolph Hitler and Huey Long.

But in contrast to these who used words for good or ill is an equally distinguished and successful list.

A list which proves that content instead of delivery has as often caused voters to elect to public office such men as Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson, Herbert Hoover, Harry Truman and Dwight Eisenhower.

New York's and New Jersey's voters in November will choose a governor and a senator for reasons other than oratory.

This fact makes the repetitive emphasis on Averell Harriman's alleged inability to rouse an audience to emotional heights somewhat dubious.

Senator Irving Ives has a voice somewhat more vigorous than quiet, introspective Harriman. He drives home his points with greater assurance.

But neither Senator Ives nor his most ardent supporters could call him an irresistible speaker either on the platform or radio and television.

He is more of an extrovert while Harriman ponders each question before him with painful care, often giving the appearance of unconsciously talking aloud as he probes for the most informed and accurate answer.

In New Jersey the crucial senatorial race will depend for decision on calm and quiet presentation of facts by two honest cancision on calm and quiet presen-publican, talks with restraint, the impact of his words coming not from purple prose but from the patent integrity and scholarly presenation of his material.

The vicious attacks which have been made upon him by the extreme right wing of his own party and the McCarthyites have added fire to Case's voice and speeches.

But his ingrained gentleness is such that he is incapable of doing a Billy Sunday on his audiences.

Charles R. Howell, the Democratic Senate candidate, lacks Case's polish but possesses a homey, down-to-earth approach to his record. Each has voted according to his conscience on controversial issues and refused to follow slavishly his party's leaders when he believed those leaders to be wrong.

Facts, therefore, and spellbinding will determine the outcome of New Jersey's paper-thin close race for senator.

Mellifluous phrases fade quickly from memory, but what the elected official does after he takes office is what counts.

In Congressional Elections Anything Can Happen—And Will

Recent objective nonpartisan surveys of the trend of political thinking as of October — less than a month to 1954's crucial congressional elections — seem to indicate that almost anything can happen — and probably will — on Nov. 2.

William Luben, who is famous for the accuracy of his political prognostications, reports in a series for the Scripps-Howard papers that although a very high percenage of those who voted for President Eisenhower in 1952 would do so again today, many of them do not transfer that admiration to other Republicans.

Possibly most startling of his reports is that the important farm vote is reaching in 1954 the position which the Negro vote began taking at the urging of the NAACP around 1924 — voting for men and measures and not for political labels.

Another very significant survey has been made by the New York Times which reports that Democrats were counted sure winners of eleven Senate seats in Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Texas, Virginia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Arkansas and North Carolina; that Republicans are believed almost certain to win in New Hampshire, Kansas, Nebraska and South Dakota.

As for the 20 other senatorial contests the Times reports that Democrats are believed to be ahead in fourteen races and Republicans in six.

For the purposes of this column I would like to concentrate on those states in which the Negro vote holds the potential balance of power, provided he goes to the polls on November 2 to exercise it.

These states include Massachusetts where the very close race between Senator Leverett H. Saltonstall, Republican and Foster Furcolo, Democrat, is reported by the Times to be exceedingly close; New Jersey where a bitter internal factional fight in the Republican Party between those who supported Senator Taft for the Republican nomination in 1952 and those who today favor Senator McCarthy.

What seemed like a certain victory for Liberal Clifford P. Case now is reported to be a very close race between him and Charles R. Howell, Democratic candidate.

Unemployment problems and dissatisfaction of farmers with administration policies are reported to be crucial issues in Ohio; polls in Michigan indicate that what looked like a shoo-in victory for Senator Homer Ferguson is not so certain; while the outcome in Illinois between Liberal Senator Paul Douglas and anti-FEPC Joseph T. Meek, who is backed by the Chicago Tribune, is reported to be so close that the Negro vote could be the decisive factor in that state.

The Times reports that in California, with its increasingly large Negro vote, the race between Republican Senator Thomas H. Kuchel and Representative Sam Yorty grows closer as the campaign progresses.

In addition to the above states, Rhode Island, Delaware, West Va., Minnesota, Kansas and Oklahoma where the Negro vote may be decisive.

The choice afforded to the Negro by both parties is a difficult one to make.

President Eisenhower personally has courageously gone forward against various forms of racial segregation and discrimination. But both the Republicans and Democrats have been incredibly derelict so far as the 83rd Congress is concerned on these issues.

Here's The Inside Backstage View Of "Person To Person"

Would you like to know what precedes appearance on Edward R. Murrow's famous and popular Person to Person television program?

Until one has been through the experience it is hard for him, as he sits before his television set Friday nights, to comprehend the immense amount of thought and technical preparation which goes into such a program.

There is the first immense amount of research done by Mr. Murrow and his staff even before a guest is tapped.

This seems to include reading whatever has been written by or about the guest, interviews with those who know him, and numerous conferences on what phases of his career would give within the space of thirteen and a half minutes a picture which would justify his selection.

A week or so before the program engineers visit the home or apartment of the guest. Many hours are spent in selection of the best camera angles, location of cameras, lights and loudspeakers and other details of that sort.

Two days before the broadcast the engineers virtually take over, installing extra heavy cables to handle the enormous amount of electric power needed for television cameras and lights, telephone linesmen install the necessary wires while a flock of workmen affix scores of extra lights.

On the day of the broadcast the guest has luncheon with Mr. Murrow and members of his staff to discuss content of the program. It is a very relaxed occasion.

Around five o'clock in the afternoon a tentative script of the program is brought to one's home by one of Mr. Murrow's top associates.

After discussion he leaves to return shortly afterwards with a finished script which is the basis of rehearsals and instructions as to where one sits and what one does once the program is on the air.

As you probably know, there are two guests on Person to Person each Friday evening. But one never knows whether he will be first or second.

Thus both guests have to be ready at 10:25 p.m. to proceed with the program on the basis of the clearness of the signal.

There is little time in such a schedule for make-up, supper or for relaxation. But once the program starts it goes so swiftly under Ed Murrow's skilled guidance and wonderfully warm personality that the show seems to be over almost as soon as it begins.

After the klieg lights are turned off and one has opportunity to mop some of the perspiration and make-up from his face Mr. Morrow chats with his guest over the loudspeaker which is now in truth a person to person arrangement.

On the night my family appeared Mr. Murrow was relaxed, gay and apparently satisfied with the evening's performance. But there wasn't much time for conversation because of the telephones.

It was one of the most gratifying and revealing experiences of the evening to learn how many Americans listen to such a program.

With all the talk about the obsession of American viewers to television programs dealing with crime, sex and soap opera, it was startling to receive telephone calls, telegrams and letters from all parts of the United States after an appearance on Person to Person.

So if Ed Murrow ever invites you to be on Person to Person, I recommend that you accept.

Inferiority Causes Whites to Rebel Against Integration

The outlook was alarming for the time being — and, not having heard very much of the deep South as yet, it is still too early to relax vigilance. But both published reports and on-the-spot investigations by NAACP investigators indicate that the back of rebellion against the Supreme Court's decision is crack[illegible] if not broken.

One of the contributory factors is exposure of the criminal record of Bryant Bowles, Florida-born-ex-Marine who founded the National Association for the Advancement of White People.

Whatever weaknesses American have, they are offset in the long run by a deep sense of moral rectitude. Just as the late and unlamented Ku Klux Klan had within itself the seeds of destruction in the alcoholism of William Joseph Simmons and the moral turpitude of Edward Young Clark in Georgia, Americans insist on at least minimum compliance with basic moral principle among those who aspire to leadership.

Delaware's Attorney General H. Albert Young's action to revoke the charter of the NAAWP and to exact a financial accounting of the five dollar membership fee (three dollars more than the NAACP membership) may eliminate the rabble-rousing Bowles from his "racket."

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at the College of the City of New York whose basic contention that segregation does harm to both Negro and white children, has made a detailed report on what he found at Milford, Del. Once again it has been made clear that it was not white superiority but inferiority which caused the trouble there.

Two stories, simultaneously amusing and significant, came out of Milford. One was a vehement protest by the young daughter of the superintendent of schools to her father because there were no Negro children in her class. The other dealt with a white student who asked his mother what would happen to the eleven colored students after they were returned to the colored high school 18 miles away at Dover. When his mother told him that she had heard the students would refuse to attend, the segregated school and thereby not have to go to school, the child complained, "Mother, why wasn't I born colored?"

It is now quite apparent that the conflict in Delaware, West Virginia, Baltimore and Washington was not altogether accidental but instead it was part of an organized plan to create trouble in the upper Southern and border states to "demonstrate" that the entire country, and not only the deep South, was opposed to integration.

It is also clear now that these outbreaks were designed to influence the U. S. Supreme Court in its deliberation of the nature and extent of the decree which will be handed down following arguments scheduled to begin on December 6.

But out of these episodes come increasing evidence that much needs to be done to activate white and Negro public opinion which, as Baltimore, Washington, Milford and White Sulphur Springs have demonstrated, is more ready for the abolition of segregation than anyone would have believed [illegible]

Lionel Hampton Turns Reporter; Gets An Encouraging Story On The South

If there is any human being in the world who brings with him more enthusiasm and atmosphere like a fresh breath of air than Lionel Hampton, I don't know him.

Hamp, as all the world knows him, has just completed two of the most phenomenally successful tours of any musician in recent history — one through Europe and one through the Deep South.

For the past two days I have been regaled and given new strength and courage by the hilarious stories he has been telling me about the new spirit of fighting for freedom which he has found throughout the South often in most unexpected places.

The story began in Houston, Texas in 1941, when Hamp and I talked far into the night after all-day sessions of the 12nd Annual Conference of the NAACP. Hamp assures me that he was a bit skeptical when I told him then that Negroes would be attending the University of Texas within our lifetime.

He tells me now that he was willing to go along with such a concept and do everything he could to achieve it but that he felt I was somewhat on the impractical and over-optimistic side as to the time it would take to do the job.

The next episode occurred just before Hamp began his recent southern tour. He invited my wife and me to be his guests at New York's Apollo Theater.

"I want the real down cats to know more about the NAACP," he gave as one of the reasons for the invitation. That night even Hamp outdid himself. His introduction and his warm welcome vouched for us with the audience, and we had the best time we ever remember having had. I made some remark to the audience about Hamp's interracial, international orchestra making "more harmony than the U. N. General Assembly" which Hamp tells me was used by some of the promoters in the South. I am proud they did so.

What raised Hamp's enthusiasm to an all-time high was the spirit of both Negroes and whites throughout the South for the finishing of the job of emancipation. When one spends many hours at a desk piled high with appeals against barbarity, discrimination and segregation it is inevitable that moments of bewilderment and discouragement should occur. But when one with Hamp's intelligence and enthusiasm — "I covered everything from college professors to the pool halls," he told us — brings back such a report which affirms one's o w n experiences, one knows that a new wind is rising and will not be stayed.

One of the most interesting and amusing of Hamp's stories deals with the commanding officer of a southern military installation. Two Negro officers went to the commanding general of the camp to report a case of discrimination.

The brigadier general listened attentively and then hastily told the officers, "Now, don't go writing to Walter White — we'll straighten this out." Two days later the case was straightened out.

Hamp is lining up top figures in the entertainment world to help raise the modest budget of one million dollars a year — and, much more important, to get the story over to every American — to complete by January 1, 1963, the centennial of the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, the job of wiping out color prejudice in the United States. You will be hearing more from him and from the rest of us about this later. With Hamp's unbounded determination and enthusiasm, we know the job will be done.

Sees New Threat To Housing In FHA Profiteering Scandal

The most tragic consequence of the expose of scandalous profiteering in the FHA is that the little American as always, will suffer most.

Particularly will this be true of Negro Americans who need decent housing most.

It took years of constant effort during the Roosevelt administration by the NAACP and others to force the FHA to remove from its manual a provision requiring lending and mortgaging agencies to comply with restrictive convenants.

Since the provision was removed and the United States Supreme Court outlawed any action by governmental agencies to enforce covenants, the FHA has notoriously played ball with banks, strict Negro homeowners to ghettoes.

What may prove to be most hurtful is that the real estate lobby, which has fought Federal aid to housing and profited most from such assistance, may benefit most from the thievery which is now being revealed.

Even more ironic, as the New York Herald Tribune points out, "it took a government 'selling' program to get the builders interested" in the legitimate, as well as the illegitimate, profits they could make in construction of desperately needed postwar apartment buildings and to help families repair and improve their homes.

The government selling drive, of course, was directed only at honest profits; chiseling building contractors, banks, mortgage companies and real estate dealers, assisted by bribed FHA officials, needed no urging or direction to the loot.

FHA approval of 90 per cent of the cost under Section 608 enabled such theft as this case which apparently has been duplicated many times.

Approval by the FHA would be gained for an apartment house to cost one million dollars, of which some $900,000 would be borrowed from a bank, mortgage company, or insurance company at the 90 per cent rate guaranteed by the FHA.

Then the building would be constructed at a cost of $600,000; the builder pocketing the balance of $400,000, after he had "taken care of" the bank of FHA representative who had approved the project.

It appears that in many if not most cases even that the profit wasn't enough. The loot was entered as "capital gains" instead of income on income tax returns, the tax on the former being about half the latter.

On top of that, tenants in the new building were charged rent on the basis of a cost of one million dollars instead of the $600,000 actually spent.

Mind you, these real estate dealers, contractors and lending agencies were those who bitterly assailed public housing as "socialistic."

They are the ones who have financed the powerful lobby which had all but whittled the Federal aid to housing program down to a pale carbon copy of the program which has given American citizens, but not enough of them, decent homes for the first times in their lives.

Not only was heartless profiteering practiced in new construction but thousands — maybe many thousands — of homeowners were high pressured by unscrupulous salesmen of building supplies, contractors and other chiselers to borrow money under Title I for repairs, some of them needed, others not.

Under this section a homeowner was permitted to borrow up to $2,500 on single family dwellings and up to $10,000 on multiple family houses. Some contractors, FHA agents and banks were of course, honest. Many were not.

Because their needs were more acute, minorities and especially Negroes, were particular targets of such crooks. Provided, of course their homes were located in all-Negro neighborhoods. In many cases the cheapest of materials were used to provide the maximum of profit to the chiselers.

But what is most evil and dangerous of all is the fact that the exposure of such scandals may enable the enemies of all public aid to housing to kill even the inadequate program of housing proposed by the Eisenhower administration.

All the good which Federal, state and municipal aid to housing has done will be forgotten in the welter of charges and countercharges which will fill the newspapers during the next few weeks.

That is, if we the people fail to let our Senators and congressmen know in no uncertain terms that we want stealing stopped and housing continued.

Writer Credits Those Who Helped In School Battle

I am still breathless from the Supreme Court decision. My first reaction on learning that we had not only won but won unanimously was to quote Joe Louis' famous phrase "I glad I won." Whatever Joe's remark lacks in grammar, it gains in effectiveness.

The greatness of the victory permits an ample portion of credit to everybody concerned. The top credit of course goes to Thurgood Marshall, Spottswood Robinson, James M. Nabrit, Robert L. Carter, Charles L. Black, Elwood Chisolm, William T. Coleman, Charles T. Duncan, George Hayes, Loren Miller, W. Robert Ming, Constance Baker Motley, David E. Pinsky, Frank Reeves, John Scott, Jack Weinstein, Harold Boulware, Jack Greenberg, Oliver Hill, Louis Redding and Charles Scott — the attorneys of record who fought the long, brilliant and successful battle.

All of these men and women are united in tribute to two other great lawyers who carved the beginnings of the path which has been widened straight through to the Supreme Court of the United States.

One of the two lawyers is Arthur B. Spingarn, veteran and modest president of the NAACP who for 27 years served without compensation or much recognition as the one-man legal committee of the NAACP.

The other, of course, is the late Charles H. Houston, predecessor of Thurgood Marshall as special counsel of the NAACP, who died long before he should have because of overwork in the first of the cases attacking segregation and discrimination in education, which included the Gaines case in Missouri and the Donald Murray case against the University of Maryland law school.

Major credit goes also to the courageous parents and pupils who risked death, arson, economic retribution and mob violence in both the towns and rural areas like Clarendon county, South Carolina and Prince Edwards county, Virginia.

One of the greatest factors was the leadership of the late Louis T. Wright and of Channing H. Tobias as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the NAACP who resolutely resisted all of the pressures from innumerable sources to pull punches and to compromise on this basic issue.

And then there were the NAACP Branches which raised funds, carried on an incessant campaign of public education and refused to be deterred or intimidated by those, both white and Negro, who declared, "The time ain't ripe."

Next come the thousands of Americans of both races who gave the money, dimes to dollars, to $250,000 for the five cases and of countless other legal and other steps against segregation, disfranchisement and the ghetto.

Closely cooperating with these NAACP Branches — especially during the past few years — are the labor, church, fraternal, business, press, radio and television groups.

An assist should be given, and is hereby given, to the pressure from within and outside of the United States created by the denial of justice based on color.

All of these helped to create a new climate of opinion to permit the court to reverse the iniquitous decision of its predecessors in the 1896 "Separate but Equal" decision in Plessy versus Ferguson.

I do hope I haven't overlooked anyone to whom credit is due. If I have I extend my apologies. We have together moved the horizons of democracy immeasurably forward and, as a result, we live in a better and cleaner world.

Memo To Vice President Robert Nixon, Chairman Government Contracts Committee

My dear Mr. Vice President:

May I take this means of calling your attention and that of the committee you chair which was appointed by President Dwight D. Eisenhower on August 13, 1953 to note and take corrective action to wipe out job discrimination based on race, creed, color or national origin.

Here is a verbatim advertisement which appeared in the Washington Post and Times-Herald of Monday, April 26, 1954 in which there is not only glaring discrimination but racial segregation as well. I don't remember having seen anywhere so glaring and devastating an example of differentials based on race both in jobs which are available and salaries or wages paid.

From the statements which you have made since returning from your world tour, it is unnecessary for us to point out to you that the publication in the newspapers of the nation's capital of such evidence of racial discrimination is fodder for the Communist propaganda mills.

We believe that the existence of such painful differentials and the publication that they exist should be a matter of concern irrespective of what critics of American democracy may say.

There are many highly trained Negroes in Washington who have been educated not only in the public schools of that city but at many of the nation's leading technological and other schools.

We believe that no greater service could be rendered by your committee than to direct its vigorous and continuing efforts to the elimination of these differentials to the limit of the power

We recognize that your committee is limited in its functions to those employers who hold federal contracts or subcontracts. We believe that this kind of evidence warrants more vigorous action than your committee has yet shown and also puts a solemn obligation upon the Congress to enact an FEPC law with genuine enforcement powers. — Respectfully, Walter White.

White Says There Should Be Checkup On Who Gets Credit For What In Politics

But it is now clear and even

No American who has had even slight contact with politics is surprised at the exuberant claims of political national committees to blow up accomplishments somewhat out of proportion to the actual truth.

Thus it is routine to expect propaganda — even this far ahead of the 1954 congressional elections or the 1956 presidential one — from the Republican National Committee.

If one has no other knowledge of the facts, he would believe from the GOP handout that the Republican Party initiated and was wholly responsible for the famous Thompson Restaurant decision and the commendable abolition of discrimination in Washington restaurants.

The fact of the matter, as every informed person knows, is that this case was initiated in 1950 and, such being the time it takes for litigation, happened to be decided after the Eisenhower administration came into power.

A brief as friend of the Court was filed by the Justice Department under Attorney General James McGranery in 1952.

As a glaring example of the vast gap between both the intentions and the promises of the Republican Party and those of President Eisenhower, the attitude of the GOP leadership in Congress is unashamedly exposed by the assurances given by the Senate Republican leadership to Southern Democrats that Republican senators will join in tabling the Lehman-Ives anti-discrimination amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

The bipartisan amendment is almost an irreducible minimum in fulfillment of Republican pledges to abolish racial and religious discrimination in employment. It is most emphatically not a substitute for a strong FEPC with enforcement powers, hearings on which were inexplicably postponed by Republican Senator H. Alexander Smith of New Jersey.

shamelessly admitted that Republican Senate Majority Leader William F. Knowland of California and others who share his views are determined, unless public opinion forces them to change their views, to join Dixiecrat senators in killing the anti-discrimination amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

What adds insult to injury is the assertion that Senate liberals of both parties are using this anti-discrimination amendment to force Southern senators to oppose other proposed amendments to the Taft-Hartley law. This is a vicious insult to Senators Ives, Lehman and other stalwart champions of civil rights.

To return to the Republican propaganda sheet, another effort to blind Negro and other voters to the failures of the 83rd Congress is the boast that Archibald Alexander, Governor of the Virgin Islands, and Dr. F. D. Patterson, former head of Tuskegee Institute, have been invited to the White House for dinner. The claim is made that "this is the first time that Negroes have eaten in the White House as guests of the President since the administration of Theodore Roosevelt."

Simple inquiry would have revealed that a number of Negroes, among them Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune and this commentator, were guests at the White House during the presidency of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The editorial from the weekly newspaper accurately states that "colored voters are more alert, intelligent and numerous than ever before and they are learning by deeds the difference between promises and performances." It is suggested that the Republican propagandists might clip this statement and keep it constantly before them in the writing of future campaign material.

They need also to remember that President Eisenhower is not running in 1954 and may not run in 1956.

President Eisenhower Tells His Stand On Human Equality At NAACP Meeting

One of the great things about democracy is that often when the skies seem darkest determined fight for principle brings a break in the gloom. In exactly one month one of the most inspiring meetings which has ever been held in Washington — matched possibly only by the Easter Sunday concert in 1939 of Marian Anderson at Lincoln Memorial—was organized.

President Eisenhower by his presence and his off-the-cuff speech made unmistakably clear where he as President and as an individual stands on the issue of human equality. He thereby made clear to the anti-civil rights wing of his own party as well as the Dixiecrats that he has no intention of retreating but instead is going to move forward until every vestige of discrimination and segregation based on race which he has power to eradicate is eradicated.

Longer and more specific speeches were made by Dr. Ralph J. Bunche; the veteran fighter for human equality, Senator Herbert H. Lehman of New York; Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge; and Dr. Channing H. Tobias, who conceived the idea of a ten-year concentrated fight for freedom.

But as Dr. Tobias himself pointed out in his eloquent closing words, the most important speeches were the concise ones made by delegates to the conference from all over the United States. One after another they told in quiet but determined language what each is doing and what he proposes to do in his own community.

Their earnest resolution to do the job was further manifested by the fact that the conference was organized within a period of a single month. Although it was held in mid-week, a time difficult and expensive for most of the delegates to leave their jobs, they came to share in a great rededication of human freedom.

I was privileged to escort President Eisenhower back to his automobile. He expressed in warm—almost emotional — — terms his gratitude for being invited and permitted to share in the meeting. His one regret was that the most blinding television lights he or I had ever faced prevented him from seeing beyond the first few rows of the Departmental Auditorium so that he was unable to see the faces of the attentive audience.

One of the highlights was Dr. Bunche's deviation from his prepared speech when he told of his many encounters with race prejudice dating back to the time when as a boy of four or five he visited Knoxville, Tenn. Having been born in Detroit, he innocently entered a city park near the home in which he was staying only to be ejected angrily by a white policeman.

Many of the delegates told me afterwards that they had always thought of Dr. Bunche as an austere professor and diplomat but that his warm and engaging recital of how he had battled race prejudice with courage, wisdom and humor gave them a new picture of the man.

The most concrete manifestion of the determination of those who attended the meeting was the pledge by four of the seven NAACP regions to raise along with others a total of $500,651 towards the one-million-dollar annual goal for the next decade.

Spot Check Reveals End Approaching For Segregation

The Greenville, South Carolina PIEDMONT has been conducting door-to-door spotcheck of opinion on a possible U. S. Supreme Court decision banning school segregation.

While the results can hardly be classified as revolutionary, some of the answers must have startled the editors and the South Carolina population, particularly the whites.

But even those opinions which follow the traditional Southern pattern are more temperate than would be imagined in the light of the incessant attempts of Governor Byrnes to stir up resistance to a decision against segregation.

One housewife voiced a hope which she obviously does not believe will be fulfilled that "some way should be found to keep segregation."

A man in Dacusville, a suburb of Greenville, brought up the hoary old Biblical justification of inferior status for Negroes by asking, "What can we do? If God meant for us to live together, he would have made us one color."

Governor Byrnes' propaganda has found root in some quarters because one Greenvillean declared that South Carolina should "abandon the public school system and give state aid to private schools, then everybody send their children to whatever private school they prefer." Quite manifestly the gentleman is no lawyer since he does not realize that the court would never permit any such use of state funds.

Enough white and Negro South Carolinians have thought the matter through and reached the conclusion that segregation is near its end and there is no way of averting such termination of separate schools. Harold McGee, for example, is quoted as believing that the Supreme Court will rule against segregation and declared that elimination of segregation in schools "is coming in our generation." In a guarded refutation of the validity of the Byrnes argument another white citizen declared that "the state cannot give up its moral responsibility for education of the children, despite political manipulation of the laws of the state."

Negro citizens had thought the matter through more clearly and spoke with greater courage. One mother declared unequivocally that "I think my children would get a better education in a non-segregated school" while another stated that "I've been to both segregated and non-segregated schools, and I think I learned more and got along better in the non-segregated one. Non-segregation will insure equal facilities."

Inevitably, there were a few who possibly fearing repercussions on their jobs or elsewhere, voiced such sentiments as, "Leave the schools as they are. They're getting along allright." Or. "If the facilities were equalized I would be satisfied. There are many things that our schools need more books, classrooms, better teachers." Or, "Let things stay as they are. There might be too much trouble if things were changed."

But the majority of the Negro parents, even though they were talking to white reporters in South Carolina, were not to be intimidated.

Mrs. J. G. Adair, for example, unequivocally declared, "The schools can't be equal as long as they are separate. Mixing the children is the only way to get equality."

Possibly one of the greatest and most significant changes is the fact that Southerners of both races are daring to speak out more thoughtfully and courageously than any of us would have dreamed possible even five years ago. As President Truman once remarked "In a few years we'll wonder what all the shooting was about."

Columnist Gives Full Impressions Of 45 Negro Organizations In Texas

"I would appreciate any comments you might want to make," A. Maceo Smith of Dallas, Texas writes me, "on the statement which has been drawn up and released by 45 Negro organizations in Texas."

Because the statement represents one of the most complete an detailed breaks with the past which has come out of the South, I am giving Maceo my comments via the printed instead of the typed word.

To understand the importance of the statement of principle of the Texas Council of Negro Organizations, a brief glimpse at the not too distant past is necessary.

It was only a very few years ago that some powerful — and sincere — Negro leader in Texas believed that the ultimate and most desirable goal of the fight against educational inequality was securing deluxe segregated grammar school through graduate school.

Such was the influence of some of these individuals that those who repudiated the separate but equal doctrine encountered tough going in advancing that principle.

There is no trace whatever of the separate but equal philosophy in the TCONO statement. "We are opposed to segregation in education, and we believe and insist that this applies to private schools as well as public education," the statement asserts.

"We further believe that the principles of non-segregation apply to pupils assignments, teacher assignments, appointment of supervising officers, and the governing boards of all schools, colleges and universities in the state of Texas. We oppose gerrymandering, transferring or any other device that may be used to maintain or promote segregation in public schools."

This is the unequivocal position taken by the 45 business, church, teachers', political, fraternal, agricultural and educational organizations whose membership includes the overwhelming majority of the Negroes of Texas.

The statement is far more than a mere affirmation or re-affirmation of abstract principle. It is a model of specific recommendations of what the church, educators, businessmen and public officials can and should do in implementation, however, the U. S. Supreme Court may rule, of full integration.

It gives sage advice to both Negroes and whites that "public behavior be tempered to accept the forthcoming decision peacefully and in good faith."

One of the implementing procedures which is spelled out in excellent detail is the increase of registration and voting along with the integration of qualified Negroes throughout the governmental structure of Texas.

It urges appointment by the governor of a commission on human rights armed with the authority of the state government to promote respect for and observance of civil rights of all citizens of Texas.

Especially specific procedures are itemized in the fields of housing, health, welfare, labor, employment, legislation, business and economics. I have read the document carefully several times. I can find no addition which is necessary.

There, Maceo, is your answer.

with others a total of $500,651 towards the one-million-dollar annual goal for the next decade.

He thereby made clear to the anti-civil rights wing of his own party as well as the Dixiecrats that he has no intention of retreating but instead is going to move forward until every vestige of discrimination and segregation based on race which he has power to eradicate is eradicated.

Longer and more specific speeches were made by Dr. Ralph J. Bunche; the veteran fighter for human equality Senator Herbert H. Lehman of New York; Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge; and Dr. Channing H. Tobias, who conceived the idea of a ten-year concentrated fight for freedom.

But as Dr. Tobias himself pointed out in his eloquent closing words, the most important speeches were the concise ones made by delegates to the conference from all over the United States. One after another they told in quiet but determined language what each is doing and what he proposes to do in his own community.

Their earnest resolution to do the job was further manifested by the fact that the conference was organized within a period of a single month. Although it was held in mid-week, a time difficult and expensive for most of the delegates to leave their jobs, they came to share in a great rededication of human freedom.

I was privileged to escort President Eisenhower back to his automobile. He expressed in warm—almost emotional — — terms his gratitude for being invited and permitted to share in the meeting. His one regret was that the most blinding television lights he or I had ever faced prevented him from seeing beyond the first few rows of the Departmental Auditorium so that he was unable to see the faces of the attentive audicence.

One of the highlights was Dr. Bunche's deviation from his prepared speech when he told of his many encounters with race prejudice dating back to the time when as a boy of four or five he visited Knoxville, Tenn. Having been born in Detroit, he innocently entered a city park near the home in which he was staying only to be ejected angrily by a white policeman.

Many of the delegates told me afterwards that they had always thought of Dr. Bunche as an austere professor and diplomat but that his warm and engaging recital of how he had battled race prejudice with courage, wisdom and humor gave them a new picture of the man.

The most concrete manifestion of the determination of those who attended the meeting was the pledge by four of the seven NAACP regions to raise along

Columnist Shares Letters With 'Twisted' Southerner

Please let me share with you an exchange of letters which may possibly explain the psychopathology of some of the people who form the following of certain overpublicized "leaders" of today's American public opinion. I wish it were possible to reproduce the semi-literate, meandering handwriting of the first letter which cold type can not convey. Please accept my word for it that this is a scrupulously exact copy of the letter. Written in pencil from Charleston, S. C., and dated March 26, 1954 it reads :

"Walter White
NAACP

Say Walter, I am writing you these few lines to tell you I think you are repulsive. When you speak of McCarthy you are speaking about Joe; you are talking of a gentleman. First of all he is white and your race is black. . .that picture of you and that other Negro with the President is laughable. Our President sure has lost his value. That man with you is under 17 counts. You are very frindy with, Rosevelt and Harriman, the old goats. So Hurrah for Byrnes.

Miss Frances Fleming
84 Cannon St"

So help me, that's what the girl said!

Here is my reply. I am quite certain it will do no good whatever but may possibly cause intelligent Americans to understand what sectional hatred and inferiority can do to human beings.

My dear Miss Fleming:

Because my parents schooled me in the old fashioned but still sound tradition that a civilized person does not address another person whom he does not k n o w by his first name, I am obliged to decline your offer of familiarity and friendship (please note that there is an "e" in friend) so that I cannot so soon achieve a first name basis. Furthermore, I would not want you to risk physical danger in South Carolina by making written overtures to one "whose race is black."

I fear also I cannot agree with your quite subversive and disloyal assertion that President Eisenhower "sure has lost his value" by voicing at the Washington Freedom Fulfillment Conference unequivocal support of the Federal Constitution and being photographed with Dr. Channing H. Tobias and myself. While it is true that the President consorted during the campaign with your embittered and superannuated governor, Mr. Byrnes today writhes with frustration and fury because he has learned that President Eisenhower is not a bought puppet of himself and other Dixiecrats.

As for Senator McCarthy being a "gentleman," permit me to suggest that you read. . .or have someone read to you. . .the report of the United States Senate Committee on the weird activities — financial and otherwise—of the junior Senator from Wisconsin. If the revelations in that report and others regarding Mr. McCarthy's official and private behavior are correct, I greatly fear that your definition of a gentleman and mine are widely disparate.

I note you conspicuously affix a "Miss" to your signature. Since you did not send me a photostat of your birth certificate. . .if they were issuing them in South Carolina when you were born, I am unable to determine your age. But whatever your age may I recommend in friendly fashion (please note I again include an "e") that you continue to worship Messrs. McCarthy and Byrnes from afar.

Finally, your reference to "Rosevelt" (the name is spelled with two "o's" not one) and Harriman" as "old goats" seems to suggest certain Freudian aberrations in yourself which require the services of a psychiatrist. Is there one in Charleston? He would discover an interesting pair of patients in you and Governor Byrnes.

I am proud to have been 'frindly' with the late President "Rosevelt" and to be "frindly" with another great American, Averell Harriman.

Respectfully (but not too much so)
Walter White

There Now!

MEMPHIS—"It's jes' like ah allus says," cracked Cat Eye as he lolled in the shadow of a Beale Street building, seeking shelter from the sapping heat of the late noon sun, "Heap sees, but few knows."

"Now you take them white folks down there in Mississippi . . . couldn't nobody told them that them cullud folks they call "their Negroes" would have upped and openly taken a stand against segregation."

Cat Eye was referring to a Mississippi occurrence which rocked the Avenue of the Blues to its foundations when it was announced.

The thing came out in the wash when the Governor of Mississippi sought to get the Negro leaders of the state to announce acceptance of a program of voluntary segregation in the schools . . . thus setting a pattern for other Southern states and showing the easy way to defy the U. S. Supreme Court's attempt to make democracy work.

With traditional blandishments, one hundred acceptedly representative Negroes were summoned to a meeting. They were given a rather high-sounding group name, with the word "Advisory" very conspicuously placed. The Mississippi Governor who issued the invitation, through advance press releases and other indications, gave the impression of a man who had it made.

Then, he was given a rude awakening. It takes Cat Eye to tell it.

Fire Don't Burn

"Yeah, Man,' a heap of these white folks got their heads buried in the sand, and ain't seein' and hearin' nothing but what they want to b'lieve 'bout us cullud folks. They been tole that all Negroes are happy, that all Negroes like to dance, that all Negroes are jes' crazy about watermelon.

'They believe all us Negroes crave fried chicken and cat-fish all the time, and that all they got to do to get us to something is say 'Let's,' and we'll say 'Where?' They expect Negroes . . . all Negroes to go to 'grenada" (start grinning) every time they grunt . . . and say 'yas-suh' to ever'thing they's fer, and 'nawsuh' to ever'thing they's erginst.

"An' some of 'em go so far as to expect a cullud man to say fire won't burn him if a white man don't want it to . . . and that water won't drown him if the white man says it can't . . . right now.

"It's jes' like that cullud newspaper lady down there on Beale said, 'No matter how long you has to endure it, you jes' can't get used to a tack in your shoe . . . even if you do have to grin and bear it.' But it don't make sense fer a man to see the tack stickin' in your foot, and then expect to say, 'Naw-suh, it's all right . . . Ah'm used to it . . . Ah wuz raised with it there . . . an' ah' wants to keep it . . . even though the doctor says it ought to come out and that he'll take steps to get it out . . . yas-suh, ah'll vote to ask the doctor to stay 'way fum mah doah'."

Educating White Folk

The Governor of Mississippi was quoted as saying he was "stunned" by the refusal of the Negro leaders to accept his suggestion to take a stand for "voluntary segregation."

Instead they suggested "voluntary integration." Like a petulant child, the Governor has subsequently announced that he is calling on the police powers of the state to enforce segregation, and that he's not inclined to continue his program of "equalization" of Negro school faciliities supported by the state.

Cat Eye opines, "That Governor, now . . . Ah got er idea how he feels. He's jes' like a white man what's done offered one of his cullud "hands" a suit of his half wornout clothes. He goes and has the suit sewed up, cleaned and pressed . . . an' puts it on a hanger. Then he calls the cullud brother back of the store 'an announced that he has a gift for him. When Sat'day night rolls aroun' and the store is crowded, the whtie man calls out for the cullud man to come up to the front of the store and see the fine suit he's got for him.

"All the other cullud folk gather 'round. The white man unwraps the hand-me-down suit. Ever'body sorts of grunts to theirselves . . . and stands back and wait to see what the favorite cullud man is go' do.

They know he's 'sposed to make a speech at the camp-meetin' the next Sunday morning. An' they knows he's 'sposed to be outstandin' and serve as an example to the rest of 'em.

"An' he knows that they don't have no respect for no preacher who wears hand-me-down clothes in public . . . specially when his congregation done held a shower for him, and made arrangements to dress him up in the latest.

"So, there he stands . . . lookin' at this white man's hand-me down suit. His work is cut out for him. Either he takes the old suit and brings himself down in the eyesight of his own folks . . . or he turns the suit down and gives the white man a little education on how Negroes today feel about being played 'cheap.'

"Y'see, what most white folks need to be educated erbout is that cullud folks ain't no differt from them. We want the same things they want.

"An' we got the same feelings they got. An' any Negro is less than a man an' is tellin' a lie when he says he's content to take the bones the white folks throw him . . . no matter how much the bone is polished and dressed up . . . an' no matter it it's a little higher bone. As long as enybody else is eatin' meat, the cullud man craves meat too."

With these words of ebony wisdom, Cat Eye shifted his position in the shade of the building and took up another topic. In the meantime, the Governor of Mississippi is still "stunned" by the realization that Negro leaders say one thing in the kitchen, but entirely another thing at the Big Gate . . . they have to . . . or other cullud folk won't listen to 'em.

Gabriel's Last Note

A blind and aging atomic-age Gabriel blew a couple of colored notes from a golden trumpet in the hearing of Beale Street the other night, and the blues stood still.

William Christopher Handy, world-famed "Daddy of the Blues," had returned again to the place where the indigo tunes were born, Beale Street, where other blind men also used to sing, "I'd ruther be here than any place I know."

It was the occasion of the seventeenth annual Beale Street Elks Blues Bowl Game—a combination, triple-decker extravaganza of color, charity, and colored high school football.

Conceived and executed since its inception by Lt. George W. Lee, the Blues Bowl Game is now "a Memphis institution," so said Mayor Frank Tobey, as he presented the keys to the city to Mr. Handy, while thousands of white, black, brown and beige dwellers in the vicinity of "Blues Ground" (Beale Street) looked on and smiled with something like a tearful mist in their eyes.

Sat. 12-18

TEARFULNESS was especially noticeable among the white spectators. To them the occasion was tinged with sadness. To them the 81-year-old Handy, sick now and blind, was an enfeebled but grand symbol of bygone days, redolent with the colorful pageantry of a place and a people writhing in the process of growth.

The vast concourse of white folk present at the game came primarily as a tribute to Handy, the composer-musician who had captured the spirit of a great folk expression, set it to music, and handed to Memphis and the Mid-South a solid chunk of fame in which everybody could share.

The white spectators felt something of the gloomy premonition of the blues, as they listened to the goldenly sad notes which leaped skyward from the mouth of Handy's trumpet—they wondered if this was Mr. Handy's last visit to the low grounds of the blues.

THEIR NEWSPAPERS had played it up that way. So, the white folk came to the game and brought their children—they wanted them to share the sight of living history. They wanted their offspring to see an earthly Gabriel before he shuffled off the mortal coil and moved into another region to give hints to that other Gabriel, whose trumpet sound would also shake the world.

The white spectators went to the seventeenth annual Blues Bowl Game out of appreciation for a great personality.

SAM, THE CLAM

But, Sam-n-Them (cullud folks to you, Mr. Jackson) didn't seem to be moved by similar sentiments.

Except in a few conspicuously noticeable exceptions most of the cullud folks present appeared to have the reaction of a small, rainbow-hued kid spectator who wanted to know, "Whyn't they get on with the football game? I didn't come out-chere to listen to all this ole talkin' and goin' on—and furthermore that ole cat don't blow enough horn for me."

The youngster spoke out of the depths of the abysmal ignorance in which the vast majority of God's chillun are wallowing when it comes to an enlightened appreciation of W. C. Handy's significance and contribution to American culture and glorification of Negro group expression.

WERE IT NOT for Lt. George W. Lee, novelist, essayist, businessman, politician, and Beale Street's greatest intellect, most of Mr. Handy's greatness would have been lost completely to Memphis, the city he gave international fame.

Mr. Lee was one of the skimpy handful of Memphis Negroes who had the historical knowledge, the social insight for the present, and the spiritual feeling for the past, who could see the desirability of seeking to preserve something important in the local environment and build a worthwhile tradition.

Except for this skimpy handful, the vast majority of "your folks" in these parts, as Cat Eye would call them, are as silent as clams when it comes to showing appreciation for the man who froze the blues on paper.

AS CAT EYE puts it, "You cain't 'spec' no 'preciation fer Mr. Handy outta your folks.

"They's dumb to the facts 'bout the man. Ef they's got some book-learnin', they scorns the blues and ever'body connected with 'em. Ef they ain't eddicated they jes' sings the blues theirselves, and wonders howcomes the white folks wants to take-on so over jes' anuther Negro who's been singin' 'em a long time.

"They don't know an' won't believe that the blues represents anything important in the life of cullud folks. They don't know that the only main way cullud folks used to talk wuz thru singin'—that when the ole time cullud man sang, "Ah hates to see that evening sun go down," he was lettin' his soul git some relief fum bein' skeered o' the dark o' night—fum bein' troubled in mind over a black an' uncertain future an' expectation of tomorrow—fum bein' worried erbout keepin' things sorta under control in the onliest places where a cullud man's got a little freedom—with his woman an' with his play. These here new Negroes ain't hepped to the real happenings in the hearts of their own folks. So, they has to wait fer the white folks and one or two smart fellas like George Lee to make 'em even listen a little to facts erbout somebody like Mr. Handy, or somethin' like the blues."

Everybody's Doing It . . .

"Man, don't it burn you up to hear some white man [illegible]-talkin' er-bout he ain't got no prejudice 'gainst us [illegible] folks, an' then see him turn right 'round an' get [illegible] mad when he hears that some cullud folks is [illegible] next door to him?"

[illegible] Eye, long-accepted Beale [illegible] uncle and judge advo- [illegible] interracial matters, [illegible] penetratingly at his pal, [illegible].

Cat Eye was somewhat sur- [illegible] to hear this outburst [illegible] from his usually [illegible] friend.

[illegible] was, as a rule, [illegible] or too high to [illegible] himself of any sneak- [illegible] suspicious he might har- [illegible] concerning white and [illegible] relations. That was [illegible] Cat Eye's province.

[illegible] was wine-sapped [illegible] running with the [illegible] in the middle [illegible] nearly a full minute [illegible] silence Cat Eye [illegible] to a reply. [illegible] chunked a [illegible] hard [illegible] the outside of the [illegible].

[illegible] All don' know whether [illegible] man like that is any [illegible] than one of your folks [illegible] stans' here at the back [illegible] with a lot of other black [illegible] and swears that he hates [illegible] white folks . . . an' then goes [illegible] to Mister Charlie's place [illegible] grins his guts out all the [illegible] the man is looking at him."

Continuing, the Eye waxed [illegible] with "Cullud folks have got jes' 'bout as much prejudice under their skins as white folks got under their's. They's jes' mos' time steered to let Mister Charlie know it. Negroes ain't no little pieces o' God broke off without no prejudice.

"But they got the advantage of havin' the white folks' meanness played up so much, till ain't much notice give to what they's hidin.' You'd be surprised how many Negroes don't want to mingle with white folks 'cause they don' lak 'em.

"An' the thing that knocks me out 'bout cullud folks' prejudice mos' is that they's more prejudiced 'gainst each other than white folks is. An' to prove it . . . look how mad the average Sam gits when one of his own friends gits a little better break than he gits on the job . . . or when he seems to be gittin' 'long better with the white folks than other cullud folks . . . or when he figgers some other cullud man is making a better showin' than he is.

"FIRST THING you hear him say is 'Look at that hincty son-of-a-so-and-so, actin' lak he's so muchin' much . . . he ain't no more'n me . . . he's still er Sambo jes' lak ah is.' We even gits prejudiced at each other 'cause one's feet's is too big, er his mouth is too wide . . . er his hair is nappy . . . er his skin is too dark."

Cat Eye was making the trenchant observation that all God's chillun, white, black, blue or grisly, are just about the same under the skin.

He was pointing out something that the sociologists have long noted . . . minority groups tend to display the same prejudices against each other that the majority harbors toward the minority representatives.

In short, Cat Eye was saying, Negroes look at each other through white folks' eyes.

ANOTHER KEEN point he aimed at the Bird Breast was: "There ain't no diffrunce 'twix white folks and cullud folks 'cep tin' a diffrunce in position.

"One's up and the other'n down. Switch places an' cullud chillun would be marchin' to keep white kids outta their schools. Only the cullud young'ns would be worse . . . 'cause they's more ignunt. The more ignunt a man er woman is, the more liable they is to kill you in the name o' God, and go up to the Judgment Seat singin' 'Halleluyuh,' an' swearin' they wuz right. They goes thru life so narrow-minded till if they fell on a pin, it would blind 'em in both eyes. An' that goes for black as well as white eyes.

They's lak cockroaches what think kitchens wuz made fer their personal convenience. Some folks think the world wuz made fer them alone . . . an' you find most folks of all colors feelin' that-away . . . now, what chubet!

LET DEATH DIE DOWN

Cat Eye stood at the entrance to the Beale Street poolroom, and let his ebony-tinged countenance register deep disdain.

He had been listening to the more or less guarded remarks of varied and sundry Beale Streeters, as they voiced their reactions to the death of "Mister Crump."

Fabled and fabulous Edward Hull Crump was an unmistakably Southern white man of the old school traditions of the New South, who had done more to cut the modern pattern for the urban Negro of the Mid-South than any other single individual. He did it in the course of building a bigger and better place of "good abode" out of the once rough little river-town known as "Memphis on the Mississippi." In the process of cleaning up the city, Mr. Crump had of necessity dropped a liberal quantity of his cleaning fluid upon the black, brown and beige segment of the populace.

Result: the birth of the blues and the fixation of a pale personality to dominate every tar-brushed waking moment under Beale Street's indigo skies for almost half a century.

It was Mr. Crump who inspired the sire of the blues, W. C. Handy. It was Mr. Crump who supervised the rearing of those indigo offsprings, the blues, until they were grown and had travelled around the world . . . bringing Beale Street a questionable, but solid fame, and leaving the remainder of colored America to conjure with the name . . . "Mister Crump"!

Cat Eye was looking at some of his associates with disgust this day—the day of the long-expected, but still numbing announcement that Mister Crump had shuffled off the mortal coil, and gone the way of all flesh. Cat Eye, Beale Street historian, interpreter, poet, Greeter, and outstanding "man about the Avenoo," was of the firm conclusion that too many of the street's habitues were "talkin' nothin' but trash," as they plunged into nebulous personal reminiscences about real or fancied impressions of Mister Crump.

Cat Eye summed up virtually all the stated reactions with: "These fly Cats kill me with all this after-dark-talk 'bout what they say they know 'bout Mister Crump. Most of 'em don't know nothin' but what they heard. An' ever'body knows that 'I Heard' and 'They Said' are two of the biggest liars in the world. And now that the 'Man' is dead, a lot of these dumb blokes talks like they thinks it's er second 'mancipation. Never heard so much back-gate talk 'bout one man's death, since Roosevelt died. What they oughtta do is let death die down.

HE DONE DONE IT

"Mister Crump done done his wuk here in Memfus. An' you can't take it 'way fum him, he done a good job. He stopped Beale Street from bein' the killin'est street in the world, and made it half-way decent. 'Course in the process a lot of half-slick cats and chicks had to go, but the place's er whole lots better since Mister Crump 'nounced that he wuzn't gonna have 'no easy riders here.'

"No that don't mean that a lot of otherwise pretty good folks didn't get their feathers sorta ruffled at times 'bout the way Mister Crump handled things. But all in all can't nobody say the 'Man with the walking-cane and the bushy brows' didn't 'bout give Memfus all the law allows in the way of a clean town—a healthy town—a quiet town—and a pretty peaceful town. Cain't no right-minded man or woman deny that. He bribed the town with good government. An' Ah don't know nobody who didn't want to be bribed with that 'ceptin' folks who wanted to eat high on the hawg without gittin' up off their own haunches.

"An' all this talk 'bout Memfus is gonna be er wide open town ergin—an' let the crap-shooters, easy-riders, an' other kinds of hustlers come outta their holes and take over ergin—is jes' so much stuff, hatched out by a bunch of chumps who don't know they never had it so good already.

"One thing is certain, Mister Crump's good reputation ain't gonna be killed by the 'mouth-pills' of too many back-alley doctors—they oughtta let death die down—and play it cool. Now whatchubet!"

The Welfare Blues

Cat Eye was disturbed. He put down the newspaper he had been reading and looked off into space. He didn't like that big headline at all. It read: "Welfare Funds Bring Hardships . . . Commissioner Says Economy Cuts Necessary."

Now, Car Eye wasn't himself in need of any welfare funds. He was doing pretty well. Beale Street afforded him a couple of legal hustles that kept him in spending change. In fact, he usually had enough left over to drop a little bit right regularly here and there.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

FOR INSURANCE, there was "Bear" Wilson's widow. She had been left with a houseful of little kids when "Bear" got messed up in a car accident. And there was the Eye's old, unmarried aunt, who after working as a cook and wash-woman for some of the town's white families, had managed to buy herself a litle three-room shotgun house down in Happy Hollow community, but had to have welfare help to eat and otherwise meet her simple needs.

Sat. 11-22-58

Cat Eye usually supplemented her funds with small contributions . . . he gave her the "church dues" she said she had to have. He remembered too a couple of Beale Street blind men, who managed to make it, when passersby dropped their small change into their cups on Saturdays.

Those headlines in the paper about the cutback in Welfare funds which the Welfare Department was putting into effect meant something personal to Cat Eye. As the symbol of the real Beale Streeter . . . the habitue of the black, brown, and beige ghetto who had managed to work out a way of life that provided at least the minimum essentials for survival in a raw competitive struggle colored by deep tints which Beale Street piquantly calls the blues, Cat Eye had a fairly sneaking suspicion of the import of those ominous headlines.

IT FILLED him with apprehension and a nagging sense of a special brand of deep blues. Driven by a need for expression, the Eye, in order to strike up a conversation, showed the headline to Bird Breast who was dozing his way out of a hangover on the barber shop shoe shine stand . . . and had to be nudged a couple of times before he was partly conscious.

"What you think that means?" asked Cat Eye. Without waiting for an answer, he went on: "It's sho' a whole lot 'o folks gonna be messed up with this kind of carryin' on. A lot 'o po' folks who can't he'p theirselves is gonna be put out to beg right here in the beginning of a hard winter.

"Now, ah knows there's a lot 'o shif'less jivers on them welfare an' relief rolls. An' some'n oughta be done 'bout 'em. But, Ah bet they won't be huet none much. Cause they's hustlers. An' they ain't gon' do nothin' but act like rats and scuttle to some other fat field fur hostlin'. But it's the po', ignunt, helpless folks what's gonna be really huet. They ain't got no hustle. They's the ones what's been worked to death for nothin' an' when they got ole, sick, down, an' couldn't git jobs, they had to turn to welfare. They never had no chance to save nothin' fur no rainy day." 'Cause ever day of their lives is been a rainy day. They wuz struck out 'fore they picked up the bat. They's jes' victims of the system.

"AN' WHEN Ah says "system," Ah'm talkin' 'bout the set up fur po' folks in genrul. An' that goes fur po' white folks as well as po' cullud folks. The "system" is geared so as to let 'em git jes' so much an' no more. Don' keer how good times git in genrul, some folks jes' cain't git ahead fur 'nuff to look out fur theirselves complete. They's allus gonna be hard times fur some folks.

"Don't mek no diffrunce how they tries to trim them welfare rolls . . . no diffrunce how hard they tries to run down an' corral them eidge colt papas (men who desert their families or fail to support dependent children) . . . no diffrunce how they argues that the welfare folks don' have the money to pay the bills, they's still gonna be them welfare blues.

"An' ef the Welfare folks shifts 'em outta the way, then other po' folks is gonna have to skimp even more to keep their kinfolks and friends from starvin' and freezin' all at once. An' even with that a lot of 'em is gonna end up in the workhouse fur stealin' and knockin' folks in the head . . . or fur drinkin' canned heat or liniment an' fallin' out in the street. 'Course, a lot uv 'em is figgerin' on gittin' in the workhouse or jail as soon as possible.

"AN' WHAT'S rough erbout is, a lot uv them folks on welfare would he'p theirselves ef somebody would give 'em a job. That's what Ah says 'bout these here Republicans . . . an' all that talk 'bout "individual enterprise" and stuff. They fergits there's a whole passel 'o folks been too busy tryin' to "prize" some groceries frum under the rock 'o the system to indulge in any other enterprise. Hunh-h-h'."

Cat Eye shook his head dolefully, as he looked at Birdbreast dozing off into another session of deep slumber . . . and murmured, "A little sleep . . . a little slumber . . . a little foldin' of the hands . . . that Bible was right."

Editorial Writers Study Political and Race Issues in Dixie

Star, p. A-3
Washington, D.C.
Oct 10 1954

By the Associated Press

ASHEVILLE, N. C., Oct. 9.—The National Conference of Editorial Writers, completing a one-day study of the South's economy, today turned its attention to the region's political and racial problems.

Coming here to explain the many sides to the complex regional problem were Senator Fulbright, Democrat, of Arkansas; a Louisiana Republican leader, John Minor Wisdom; and a political scientist, Dr. Alexander Herd of the University of North Carolina. They are scheduled to discuss: "The Two-Party South—Fact or Fable?"

Billed for the racial discussion were Harry Ashmore, executive editor of the Arkansas Gazette; Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, and George Mitchell, executive director for the Southern Regional Council.

Tonight, George V. Allen, Ambassador to India, will close the conference with an address on "The South in World Affairs."

Two Democratic Governors, Herman Talmadge of Georgia and Robert Meyner of New Jersey, touched on the racial issue yesterday with a discussion on the Supreme Court school segregation ruling.

Gov. Talmadge, declaring the court had overstepped its constitutional bounds in the decision, asserted it would mean the end of Georgia's public school system, which he said is founded on a constitutional provision requiring segregation.

Gov. Meyner, defending the decision, predicted the courts would not demand overnight action in the Southern States in changing the racial pattern in schools.

He reported New Jersey was confronted with the same problem in 1947 when it adopted a new constitution and he said it has completely eliminated segregation since then.

The Negro In America

(From the Lynchburg News)

ONE FACT has stood out as indisputable in recent years when the Communists have made every attempt to appeal to the American Negro for support on the ground of racial prejudice. The appeal has been almost wholly without effect in this country. There have been individual Negroes who were embittered to the point of disaffection, but they have been so few and so without general influence on their fellows as hardly to be on the national scene. If the arguments of the Communists have had any effect it has only been in some international body and chiefly on theoretical grounds or as a result of distorted information, and then not on the Negro.

Dr. Ernest E. Neal, director of the Rural Life Council at Tuskegee, not only confirms his view, but goes much further. Dr. Neal was one of nine Negroes in a United States delegation to a social study conference that was held in India. Russian propaganda had, he remarks, convinced some Indians that the educated American Negro would easily be induced to accept almost any role offered him outside of the United States. The Negro members of the United States delegation demonstrated the falsity of such a claim. They acted and spoke like any other loyal Americans. They were in fact, "America's best example of what human beings can become when they in a country which is dedicated ti the proposition that all men are created equal."

DR. NEAL points out that there are 82,000 Negro college students in the United States. They are not the "wards of a government to serve the purpose of the government. They elected to go to college to develop their own careers." Like any other Americans, if they feel they they are being denied their rights, they can bring suit in a Federal or local court to recover them. The government, Dr. Neal believes, does not appreciate the use it could make of the Negro "as a foil for Communist propaganda." The world should learn that the American Negro "has tried his future and the future of his children to the American creed." Negroes are not only willing, they are eager to tell the world what the "basic meaning of democracy as it has developed in the United States' is and what it has meant to them. They represent something that the Communists do not have to export — a group of people who have learned through years of experience and struggle the meaning of the brotherhood of man and the dignity of the individual."

It has been widely held that the Negro is our greatest liability from the point of view of Communist propaganda. Dr. Neal holds the opposite opinion — that he is our greatest propadanda asset, only we have not made use of him extensively for that purpose. The conduct of the American Negro whenever he has been sent abroad as our representative bears him out in his statement. The American Negro has confounded Communist claims and expectations everywhere — on the battle field or in the international negotiations. He has fully proved his loyalty and his patriotism.

Georgia vs. Klan

(From the Atlanta Constitution)

Georgia has a "loyalty oath" requirement, and all who belong to subversive organizations must answer up or take the risk of being caught and exposed.

The list of such organizations which Georgia will use is the one prepared by the attorney general of the United States, with the aid of the FBI. All organizations on it are listed as un-American and as being hostile to the American system of government. Some are under the heading "subversive." Others are listed as un-American outfits which "adopted a policy of advocating or approving the commission of acts of force and violence to deny others their rights under the Constitution of the United States." 2-20-54

Under this heading comes the Ku Klux Klan and its imitators.

Officials who will administer the new loyalty oath say they will not ask employes about Klan membership. They will limit the inquiry to the subversive, and let the un-American slide.

We can understand. It might be embarrassing.

But, for the record, let us note that the State of Georgia did revoke the Klan's charter. And the State of Georgia did unmask the Klan.

So, on the record, Georgia, too, admits the Klan is un-American.

A lot of people join organizations in their youth, or in a fit of political fever, and are afterward sorry and wish very much to be forgiven and to forget it all. Right now we think highly of Communists, such as Bentley and Chambers, who have recanted and said they are sorry for having been Communists. They've become heroes of a sort.

But, anyhow, the Klan is listed with the attorney general's un-American organizations — along with the Commies and others of such low degree.

We just wanted to make this note of it.

The Military's Example

(From St. Louis Post-Dispatch)

Since segregation has been banned from the ranks of the armed services, it was logical for Defense Sec. Wilson — with President Eisenhower's support — to order an end of segregation in all schools on military posts by Sept. 1, 1955.

These schools are on 21 Army, Navy and Air Force establishments in Southern and Border states. Most of them are conducted by local school boards. If these boards cannot continue this function as agents of the Federal government, regardless of state laws on segregated schools, then the United States Office of Education is ready to move in.

It would be heartening if all of the local boards could continue their service to the military establishments—especially as the example of the Defense Department and their experience under the new rule might induce second thoughts about the increased democracy, efficiency and economy which a similar policy could bring to their own civilian schools.

Slaps Gov. Talmadge

(From Macon, Ga. Telegraph)

GOV. HERMAN Talmadge's assertion that he will call into use the state militia and state police to enforce segregation, should the Supreme Court rule adversely, is one of the more unfortunate statements of the entire issue.

It cannot be expected to have any favorable influence upon the thinking of the nine justices now considering the case.

Nor can it be expected to provide any assurance to the people of Georgia who want to see segregation continued that a practical, peaceful, workable, legal means will be found to continue it.

Such statements can only be calculated to incite bitterness, miscontent, and misunderstanding — all of which will make the ultimate solving of this problem more difficult, if not nearly impossible.

Suppose, for exampe, in an effort to counteract Governor Talmadge's threat, President Eisenhower issued a statement that he would employ Federal troops to see that any anti-segregation ruling wer enforced in all states which refused to abide by the Supreme Court's decision.

President Eisenhower will not be so unwise as to threaten federal force, although some states may defy the highest court of the land.

But it is equally unwise that the chief executive of any state threaten the use of his own military forces.

What an industry employing 150 men would mean to your community is graphically shown in an article on file with the Tuskegee Chamber of Commerce.

The benefits include:

A plant investment of $200,000.

An annual payroll of $500,000.

33 retail stores.

The support of a thousand people.

A 22 room school house and 18 teachers.

Public investments.

Sales and service for 400 cars.

$100,000 annually for the railroads.

Opportunity for 24 professional men.

A taxable valuation of $2,500,000.

Yearly Markets for $350,000 in agricultural products.

An annual expenditure in trade of $1.5 million.

The heart of the matter is that a new factory, be it large, small or average, is the surest and quickest way to absorb surplus labor and raise community income.

All payroll and profit will not be spent in the immediate community in which it is produced, but it can be safely figured that not less than 75 per cent of payroll will be spent at retail, 6 per cent for consumer utilities, 7 per cent for rent, insurance and other finance items, and 10 per cent for professional and personal service.

Profits may or may not be spent in the community depending upon the headquarters and type of business.

And if there is anyone who does not believe that an average payroll of $200,000 per year works miracles in any man's community, just let such person visit any one of some 200 Southern urban centers that have made one or more such acquisition since the last war.

There it will be learned that by this method, and by no other, can Southern income be materially raised above its current subnormal level.

Recently we were reading an article whcih revealed how momentous has been the month of April in American history. George Washington was inaugurated as our first President, April 30, 1789. Abraham Lincoln was mortally wounded by an assassin, April 14, 1865, and died the next day. We entered four wars in April. The Revolutionary War began in that month with the battle of Concord and Lexington; the Civil War began with the firing on Fort Sumter in April; the Spanish-American War began in that month with the ultimatum to Spain, and our declaration of war against Germany was in April, 1917.

This week we are publishing the supplementary list of qualified voters in Macon County. . . which reminds us that a typographical error in the story of the original list two weeks ago made it appear there were many fewer voters in the county than is really the case. The original list was slightly more than 3,600. The list this week brings the total for the county up to near 3,800.

The price was higher in slavery times, but not much.

One of Birmingham's leading citizens has come on an old record of sales from the wind-up of his great grandfather's estate in North Carolina in 1858.

There are items from 10 cents up. Some wheat was sold at 97 cents a bushel, some land at $13.50 an acre, a gun for $200, 14 sheep at $1.33 each, six hogs at $6.55, a cow and calf for $17.60, a bay mare for $157.88.

The human beings came higher. A Negro "man Peter" sold for $599, a "boy James" for $290, a "boy Bob" for $470. The women brought less.

One Negro woman and two children, "Angelina, Dolly and Moses," sold together for $168.60. That was a little more than the bay mare brought but less than the gun.

Time — and the advancement of colored people — march on.

What would Thomas Jefferson, the liberal Democrat, be thinking of the desegregation decision?

He was for a much more extreme segregation than Southerners want today.

"Nothing is more certainly written in the book of fate," he is quoted on page 91 of Prof. Bernard Mayo's "Jefferson Himself" (Houghton Mifflin), "than that these people are to be free; nor is it less certain that the two races, equally free, cannot live in the same government. Nature, habit, opinion, have drawn indelible lines of distinction between them. It is still in our power to direct the process of emancipation and deportation, peaceably and in such slow degree as that the evil will wear off insensibly and their place be, pari passu, filled up by free white laborers. If, on the contrary, it is left to force itself on, human nature must shudder at the prospect."

This Jefferson quote couldn't get itself printed in New York. The sage was not only a segregationist but extreme. He thought there would need to be deportation.

That is impossible now, but certainly you can say Jefferson would side with the South against the public school desegregation decision.

I am obliged to my long-time friend C. B. Hewes, widely-liked Washingtonian and diplomat, a University of Virginia graduate, for pointing out the Jefferson words.

Does it humiliate Miss Ava Gardner, who is featured in the current Collier's, that her one-times seem to be so amiable about it, so nobly reconciled, not the least death-pale? Apparently not, but it humiliates lusty Americans that Hollywood takes its love so lightly. The belles dames have no mercy but the pale warriors don't want any, being otherwise engaged, and palely, like the dames.

"Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye. . . ."

One who keeps great silence as the South struggles with the fateful desegregation decision is James E. Folsom.

Mr. Folsom's eagerness to have his henchman, Senator Todd, made commissioner of agriculture and thereby, through control of the County Boards of Registrars, to say who votes in Alabama, especially what Negroes vote, is understandable in a man who dreams of new Constitutions and eternal powers.

It is understandable but not endurable. Not by States' Righters and anti-Folsomites on the State Democratic Executive Committee, and not—if their wits are about them — by Hill-Sparkman people. They may be duty-bound to love Mr. Folsom now but they don't have to love him forever.

There's no room for Hill and Sparkman in what Mr. Folsom may be planning.

Dixie Editor Says New Day Dawning For Southern Negroes

ATLANTA — (ANP) — A new day is dawning for the Negro in the South, a Southern editor predicted here last week.

Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution, made that prediction in an address before leaders of the Methodist Church.

Addressing the denomination's new board of social and economic relations meeting in the Allerton hotel, McGill warned that there "may be sordid incidents of violence" before the Negro wins complete first-class citizenship.

"The Negro who expects a favorable Supreme court decision to bring about an end to all discrimination and prejudice is, of course, due for a rude awakening" he said.

Resistance to equal rights for Negroes remains strongest in areas where the "old plantation economy remains, and in rice and cotton areas."

(The plantation states were Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi. The cotton and rice states are Arkansas, Louisiana and North Carolina.)

The liberal editor denounced a Georgia plan to abolish public schools as "preposterous in extreme." He pointed out it would place a financial and educational burden on the state which would be costly for a long time.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Ga. has vowed he will abolish the schools if the U. S. Supreme court outlaws segregation. Five cases challenging segregation now are before the high tribunal.

Before Lincoln's Log Cabin

On his way back to rest and home in Georgia, the President of the United States paused at Hodgenville, Kentucky. There he made a pilgrimage to the birthplace of Abraham Lincoln.

It is a place that quickens the mind and stirs the heart of every American who sees it.

One looks there at the primitive log cabin, mud-chinked, small and pitifully bleak. It stands there beneath the great canopy of carved and pillared marble. In the cabin there is a bunk built into a corner. Skins of animals were its only coverings.

There on that rude bunk, in the deep of a frontier Kentucky winter, with a log fire burning in the mud and stone chimney, that great and patient woman, Nancy Hanks Lincoln, came to the greatest drama the world and mankind know—the birth of a child.

One may go there and look at the cabin and feel the presence of history pressing in on one's heart like a weight. The eyes sting with the salt of tears.

So it is no wonder the President was moved.

Words

Standing there before it, seeing the gleaming marble and the ancient logs, the man who lives in the great White House which knew the tread of the man who was born in that cabin; who knows, now, some of the loneliness and sorrow which the child born there on the animal skins was to know; who sees as he walks down the upstairs corridor of that White House the room and the long, ugly bed where the gaunt Lincoln slept and worried and sought to know what was right . . .

Standing there the thirty-third President of the United States said of the sixteenth president—who had come out of that bleak cabin, made habitable only because love was there: "You can find in no instance when he stood up in public and excoriated another American. He never pounded the table, or struck a pose as pseudo-dictator."

Mr. Eisenhower described Lincoln as a great leader who never fell into the false habit of "striking a Napoleonic attitude at any time or under any provocation."

Those are the words that came to Dwight D. Eisenhower.

He was warning the nation about Joe McCarthy.

He was saying to his party that its leaders should not follow the McCarthy line and excoriate other Americans as members of "The Democratic Party of treason."

It is a pity he lacks Lincoln's great gift of puncturing his opposition with a jest or a well-turned phrase. But, even so, we can be grateful for the fact that he warns the nation of the dangers of accusation and of fear; of the evils which result when an army is made into a political force and the necessity of opposing those who pound tables and pose as a pseudo-dictator.

All the while, paradoxically, the GOP leaders are preparing a fall campaign of movie shorts and slides on "the party of treason."

Traitors?

It has been, of course, the Democrats who saved the President from the Bricker amendment. That's pretty good for traitors.

It was the Democrats who enabled him to pass two-thirds of his legislation last year. That's pretty fair for traitors.

It is the Democrats who have saved the foreign policy thus far and who will save him again if war comes. That's rather good for traitors.

It is the McCarthy sickness which has made this great powerful nation, victor in two world wars and producers of the atom and hydrogen bomb, afraid of its shadow and distrustful of its government and of one another.

This is, it so happens, Confederate Memorial Day.

That was a war the people didn't want. It came because extremists and fanatics, of both sides, putting their own ambitions above all else, made Americans hate and fear one another.

This is not a time for hate or fear.

And it is a time to be strong, not afraid.

Lincoln and Robert E. Lee both have left us a lesson to learn.

The Lie Loses In Alabama!

Alabama has given us a national story.

In a time when "the lie" seems to have so much strength, with many preferring it to truth, the news from the Alabama Democratic primary which gave United States Sen. John Sparkman a clear marjority over all his opponents is like a hand under the heart.

Voters of the state repudiated vicious and false campaign methods thrown against Sparkman. In the eyes of the race-baiters, in the minds of the old hard core of Dixiecrats, who in 1948 took over the political machinery of Alabama and had the Fascist-like effrontery to refuse to place the names of the party's nominees on the ballot, Sparkman had committed the unpardonable sin. He had not only accepted the second highest honor within the gift of his party, the vice presidential nomination, he had agreed to a reasonable, compromise platform. Because he did not join them in hate they hated him.

History

To be sure, not all those who opposed Sparkman were Dixiecrats. But it was this distorted mentality which was most articulate with the smear, the lie and the cry of "Nigger! Nigger!" And this force did not need to stint financially.

There was spent for Sparkman's opponent, say Alabama newspapermen of character, a tremendous sum of money. They point to an almost unprecedented use of the most expensive television time and to other obvious costly procedures.

They don't know where the money came from. They believe it came "from Texas." There are men of wealth in this country, and seemingly most of this type seem to hail from the Lone Star State, who did not learn anything from Hitler. Their counterparts in Germany helped Hitler to power because he helped them get rid of some things they didn't like. They believed they could control him. Once in power, he made them captive and, eventually, destroyed them.

History, like lightning, rarely strikes twice in the same place, but, again like lightning, it often repeats itself in devastating manner. These "Texas millionaires," who are legendary in our time, might well look at history.

Alabama repudiated them, refusing to be bought.

Jim Folsom

There was another half to the Alabama primary which also has national implications.

"Kissing Jim" Folsom, who went out of office four years ago with so many charges of corruption against his administration that political soothsayers said he was forever dead, led the ticket for nomination to the governorship.

It is a story with national implications because his large lead over the field indicated discontent. His vote was a protest vote. It was a protest against the state government, against the national government, and against all the vague and undefined forces which the faceless voters feel, but cannot see.

Folsom's opposition showed photostatic copies of letters which they said he had written while governor in which, they charged, he was asking for a kick-back from those persons doing business with the state. Thousands of voters ignored these. I asked a Birmingham News man why. He, strongly opposed to Folsom, said, cynically:

"I guess they thought they might as well vote for a fellow who was open about it who covered it up."

This hardly explains it, but there was evidence in the campaign that there was resentment against the special interests which for so long have been privileged and which have dominated the state's politics in most elections.

Certainly none can deny the Folsom vote was revealing of a state of discontent with government and conditions.

So, out of Alabama, we have evidence that the old smear tactics, the cry of "Nigger! Nigger!" and the lie do not always succeed. A fine and able senator was renominated against strong opposition. And, in addition, we have evidence of discontent.

Is it confined to Alabama?

Getting Down To the Bananas

Abraham Lincoln, a much quoted man, had a saying, when confronted with a complex problem: "Let's try to get down to the bananas."

It grew out of one of his stories about a small boy who went to the circus. He first ate bananas. He then had peanuts and popcorn. He drank pink lemonade. He consumed pork sandwiches and had more pink lemonade. He then became very sick.

After a while he lifted a tear-stained face and said to his anxious father:

"Papa, I guess I'm about down to the bananas."

The Supreme Court's segregation decision was made more than a week ago. The nation hasn't yet got down to the bananas. In fact, the present climate was best spelled out by a Georgia editor who wrote, "There are almost hysterical appeals for calmness."

It will be some time, because of the political agitation and the deliberate activities of those who do not wish the issue to be met calmly, before we get down to the bananas.

The Bananas

There are certain obvious conclusions.

In some areas the problem posed by the court's decision cannot, in the foreseeable future, be worked out to satisfy both races.

This fact may as well be accepted along with the fact that in the Southern border states there will be many areas of almost immediate compliance.

New policies will be needed to make the school systems meet the court decision, and the decisions which are at least a year away.

The court has not "ordered" anything. It has laid down a broad principle of interpreting the 14th amendment. Not until a year or more will we have a complete decision.

There is now a rush to hold meetings, to investigate—to plan. Is it not now obvious, to our shame, that such meetings, such investigations, such planning should have been made months ago? But they were not. So we must, by all means, have them. And we must hold to our historic goal of building a public school system which will give our children as good an education as that received by children in other areas.

Policies

When we do get down to the bananas—when we do begin to shape policies—we can do so only on a local and community basis.

This means that segregation of the races will continue for many years in many communities in the South. This will be so because of litigation, and also because in a great many—most of the rural areas—there will be a voluntary acceptance of segregation now that the law does not require it. In most of these areas the NAACP will have difficulty in carrying out its announced and unfortunately timed plan of finding "at least one" to challenge such voluntary acceptance.

They still do not quite understand the South or the Southern people, white and colored. For many of these the basic objection was not to the separate school itself, but to the law requiring separation. Legal separation implied a stigma.

An important "banana" to "get down to" is the fact that the South itself does not know, because it did not plan and investigate ahead, what its problem is.

The reason for this is the tremendous out-migration of Negroes in recent years.

For example, more than 40 per cent of all Southern counties have less than 10 per cent Negro population. Obviously then, in almost half the South there is almost no real segregation problem.

Less than 10 per cent of the Southern counties have more than 50 per cent, and this usually runs around 51 and 52 per cent. Here, of course, the problem is real and acute and in these counties there will be segregation for a good many years to come.

The impact of the ruling, when finally applied, will, as we can see quite plainly, not be felt evenly throughout the South.

There is every reason for calm planning and an attempt to know what each local problem is. And we have time to learn it.

Ike's 'Put Out,' With Reason

Searing, sapping dry winds of a long, hot, hard-dying summer are producing a little bit of hell on earth for most of the nation's farmers, more especially the corn, dairy and beef cattle men.

The plaintive cry for help goes up, North, East, South and West.

And, like a lot of Moslem muezzins in their towers calling on the faithful to look toward Mecca and pray, the governors of the afflicted states are looking toward Washington and calling for aid.

In Washington a muchly harassed President of the United States is reported to be somewhat out of humor — not with the farmers, who he knows should, and must, have aid, but with the governors.

The governors are the ones who, during the campaign of 1952, demanded for Ike that he get the Federal Government out of their hair. They talked about states rights and the sovereignty of states.

"Let us alone," they said, "and we'll take care of ourselves. Let's get rid of all this socialism and all this spoon-feeding of the people."

The President, who is a trusting man, liked the sound of this.

Jolts 8-13-54

The President had not been in the White House long enough to wear the shine off the leather seat of his office chair before the Texans were bellowing at him to help . . . with subsidies from all our pockets . . . to maintain meat prices. It had been the Texans who had demanded loudest of all to be let alone.

Now come the state pleas for aid to the drought-afflicted farmers.

What reportedly has the President a bit miffed is that not a single state has, in any manner, offered to assume the responsibility to its own people.

Not one governor has asked the legislature to meet and raise extra sums of money to provide relief for the farmers of his state.

Nor is there any report of any one state which has diverted surplus funds in the treasury to its own distressed farmers.

Not One

Not only this, but nowhere has any state leader said, "This is our own affair, and our own people. It will be creeping socialism, which we have so strongly condemned, to take federal relief money from all the people for our own. And since we have said we don't believe in that, we will take care of our own."

To a man, they who talked so much about what they called the "socialistic practices" of the Truman and Roosevelt administrations have come forward with loud pleas for federal aid. Not one has suggested local government act in the emergency.

The farmers must have aid. And here we have a perfect picture of our problem. Federal aid of this sort is, of course, socialistic in principle. But, it is even better capitalism. The real strength of the Democratic Party has been that it recognized that when any portion of the people of this country were in poverty or distress it was a national problem. And it was mighty good capitalism, sustaining the profit system, to take federal funds, collected from all the people, and remove what was a drag on the operation of an efficient capitalist system.

That's what we shall and must now do with the nation's farmers. But, Ike would have felt better if just one teeny-weeny governor, who talked so big in 1952, had stood and said, "The farmers of this state are in trouble and this state will take care of its own."

Instead, they all hollered to Washington.

It's a fine illustration of why local state government, the real mudsill of the nation, isn't as strong as it might be.

"States' Rights" in our time have come to mean little more than loud political demands at the national conventions. "Rights" also require the states to assume responsibilities. It is most significant that now when the farmers are in distress all the governors have thought of is "Washington," and no state action whatever.

Postmortem Political Essay

Late returns of Thursday from ballots cast the day before in Georgia's Democratic primary continued to add to the triumph achieved by Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin in the nine-candidate campaign waged for the gubernatorial nomination.

In a very real sense it was even more of a triumph for Gov. Herman Talmadge whose strategy and organizational strategy are etched deeply as the political hallmark of the Griffin victory. Since he was the political force most responsible for the achievement, it requires analysis. It means, first of all, that Gov. Talmadge has a state organization and influence much greater than any ever attained by his late father, Eugene Talmadge.

Nominee Marvin Griffin thus becomes the first major product of the governor's state organization. Tactics and strategy were directed with great skill, with the governor himself tirelessly on the job.

Constitution 8-10-54

Comparison

A comparison of the political skills of Gov. Herman Talmadge and his late father is unavoidable. It reveals the greater shrewdness and adroitness of the present governor.

When Eugene Talmadge sought to select and elect a governor of his choice, he did so openly and with planned fanfare. It reacted as such moves generally do. When Herman Talmadge determined, with a certain ruthlessness, to by-pass a closer and more loyal friend and support Mr. Griffin, he did so with great astuteness. While his friends publicly insisted, and he refused to deny or confirm, that he was backing Griffin, he himself went privately and energetically to work.

He had one basic objective. It was that M. E. Thompson was not a strong candidate and could be defeated with ease if the race could be reduced to a two-man contest . . . Griffin vs. Thompson. The race was so reduced. And it revealed Thompson as one of those hollow shells we used to hear about in the old days of the prize ring.

Because of the large field of entries in the race for governor, there was a cloud of uncertainty over it. The Griffin forces were clearly alarmed as the final day neared. The strength of Tom Linder, commissioner of agriculture, seemed to be mounting at their expense. It now is obvious the Griffin headquarters did not know what, exactly, Gov. Talmadge was doing. With proper sagacity, since the organization was his, he alone managed it, knifing Linder.

When the votes were counted, it became apparent the Thompson vs. Griffin idea had been sold to the exclusion of all else.

Substantial

Nominee Griffin's popular vote margin over M. E. Thompson was substantial, but not nearly so great as was his unit vote majority. Here we come upon a second factor. Candidate Charlie Gowen disemboweled M. E. Thompson in a substantial number of counties. In evaluating the results, it is only fair to say that even had this not been true Marvin Griffin would have been the victor. The effectiveness of Gov. Talmadge's organization, untested until this race, would have brought its first gubernatorial candidate home in front, regardless of Gowen.

It is an organization which crushed out what little was left of the old Ed Rivers set-up. Nominee Griffin is a product of the Talmadge political mechanism as Ellis Arnall was of that of former Gov. Rivers. Nominee Griffin has no organization, and it will be interesting to see if he attempts to create one. The governor can, if he wishes, prevent it. He has ahead of him a U.S. Senate campaign and a good guess would be he will hold all the reins.

All major candidates stood on a similar platform . . . for segregation and retention of the county unit system.

Fred Hand, though deserving, was unable to obtain any support from the organization. He thought he had a promise of hands-off. He and the others were destroyed by the successful sale of the idea that only Griffin could defeat Thompson.

Gov. Talmadge's organization stands, presently, in complete control. How it proceeds with its first major protege will be interesting to watch.

Willie Mays, Tris Speaker

When the amazing Willie Mays went back to the center field wall in the eighth inning of the first World Series game, his back to the ball all the way, and caught Vic Wertz' terrific smash, I remembered a quiet table and a talk with a gray-haired man — Tris Speaker.

Tris Speaker was maybe the greatest natural outfielder of yesterday—as the versatile Mays is one of the better ones today. (Poets, philosophers and baseball fans always talk of yesterday and tomorrow).

He could do what Mays did—start with the crack of the bat, run with great speed, and at the right moment turn and catch the ball. Mays was off when Wertz' bat smashed into the ball. Millions of television fans could see what the frantic fanatics in the Polo Grounds could see—namely, that Mays never took a look to judge the ball. He simply started running. At the wall, with his back still to the ball, he turned his head, leaped and hauled down the ball. But, and this seemed largely to have been overlooked, he threw the ball and was able to hold a Cleveland runner at first base. A great run, a tremendous catch and a quick, remarkable throw.

Greatness

Here was a perfect example of why some competitive athletes are superlatively great and others simply good, routine performers. The superlatives have that mysterious synchronization of reflexes which enables them to do two things at once—to see and to act. In fact, for the great ones possessing this instinctive timing of brain, eye and body, to see IS to act.

How could Willie Mays turn his back to the ball with the crack of Wertz' bat—and go to the far reaches of center field and there judge the ball so perfectly if it were not for this?

Tris Speaker is named on all the great teams of yesterday. They called him the "Gray Eagle" and he had some of the eagle's swiftness of wing and eye.

Once in New York I talked with Tris Speaker, then out of the game, and asked him if he could explain how it was he could start running with the crack of the bat and never look around until it was time to turn and pluck the ball out of the air.

"I don't know," he said. "The sound of it maybe, and then, too, you generally study the batters until you know about where they will hit. I guess it's experience."

The Best

It was that, of course, but it was more than that. Other outfielders studied batters, too, but they were not Tris Speakers. In his time he was the paragon of perfection. Willie Mays was not able to make his headlong flight with his back to the playing field merely because of the sound of the bat, which indicated it was a solid smash. He has what Speaker had—that split-second advantage—that perfection of coordination which enables him instinctively to act. He could run to a far distant point and turn and not merely catch the ball, but also get the ball away and hold a runner on first.

The baseball philosophers long ago determined that the all-time outfield would be Ty Cobb, Tris Speaker and Babe Ruth.

What they will do tomorrow remains for the morrow. But if the amazing Mays continues on his merry way he will be a difficult man to keep off the great all-time teams of the future or the past.

The Giants have been midgets for a good many years. The legend of the old Giants lives on —of John McGraw, the Little Napoleon, who called every pitch his pitchers made and every move by the hitters, and who made the Giants as fabulous in their time as the Yankees in our own.

Now, something of the old legend comes back. There is a lot of series left, and tomorrow, as they say, it may rain. But the Willie Mays boy made a catch which was in the old manner when there were Giants in the earth and McGraw was their manager.

'Oyez! Oyez! Draw Nigh and—'

At high noon on the first Monday in October, as is the custom, page boys in the nation's great temple of justice which houses the Supreme Court drew apart deeply crimson velvet hangings.

Then appeared the Chief Justice of the United States, Earl Warren, and following him the eight Associate Justices.

Hardly were they settled in their seats before the court bailiff called in almost ritualistic language which has come down to us from the ancient courts of Britain in which justice for man and his property was established:

"Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! All persons having business before the honorable, the Supreme Court of the United States, are admonished to draw nigh and give their attention, for the court is now sitting. God save the United States and this honorable court."

Included, too, in this traditional proclamation is a borrowing by the early British pleaders from the French . . . Oyez, (hear ye) coming from the old French "Oyer," to hear.

The "October term" has now begun. It will not adjourn until June, 1955.

The Court

There are those who do not "like" this court. This has always been true. It always will be so. The court makes decisions. In all decisions there are losers . . . the plaintiffs, the defendants . . . someone is disappointed, angry or resentful.

Even presidents have fought with the court. Most historic of such battles, though there have been many, was that of Andrew Jackson. His dislike for the Chief Justice John Marshall was great, and bitterly vindictive. Half the lawyers in America joined Jackson in hatred. Yet today's American bar reveres Marshall and history does well by him. (Let today's partisans, including the bar, remember history. When a court deals with great change in a nation's development, the future will write the real decision. And it often reverses contemporary popular opinion.)

"First Day" was, as is customary, routine.

But "First Day" was the only easy, brief session the October term will know. A most diverse set of legal problems will come before the court. Let's look at a few. One involves a dead Indian. . . . Another must determine the fine point of whether dressed poultry in New York is a manufactured product or an agricultural commodity. Trivial? Not at all.

Indian

The "dead Indian" case is one of pathos and importance. He was a much-decorated hero of the fighting in Korea, bearing the name John Rice. His widow sought to bury him in the Iowa metropolis bearing the Indian name—Sioux City. The cemetery refused because John Rice was an Indian and not white. The widow sued, contending the restrictive clause violated the 14th Amendment.

There are cases with more important sounds to them. Does Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalist government have immunity from suit without its consent? I think so. The court will determine. There are anti-trust cases, one of sedition, fair trade, and so on.

And, of course, there are the segregation cases on which arguments will be heard in December. So far the court merely has laid down a broad principle. It has said it is not constitutional to segregate on the basis of color. Some time next year it will hand down directional opinions in the cases before it. There is a great hope the court will not attempt to fix any specific number of years, for nationwide compliance, since this obviously will require longer periods in some areas than others. There is a hope the court will recognize good faith and the need for time in which it may work.

But no matter what the emotions, or the likes or dislikes, whatever the states do eventually must come within the constitutional directives. There is only one alternative and that is secession by armed force. Therefore, every state should be seeking to avoid violence in word or deed and to find a way to live within the Constitution.

J. Edgar Hoover On Communism

J. Edgar Hoover, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation (the FBI), sends me a copy of his analysis of "Where Do We Stand Today With Communism in the United States?" That thorough analysis in question and answer form, made at the request of the American Legion Magazine, contains these points:

"Has there been a decline in recent years in the number of Communists in the United States?"

"Yes. In January, 1947, there were approximately 74,000 members in the Communist Party in the United States. In July, 1948, the top 12 Communist Party leaders were indicted on charges of violation of the Smith Act. . . . On Oct. 14, 1949, the Communist Party leaders were found guilty. . . . By January, 1952, party membership totaled less than 32,000 and as of Sept. 30, 1953, it numbered approximately 24,000."

Blow

"Has there been a corresponding decline in Communist influence . . .?"

"I would not say . . . it had declined in direct ratio to the decrease in members. . . . On the other hand, prosecution and incarceration of leading functionaries . . . (and) public exposure have neutralized the influence of many members . . . these factors have been a damaging blow to the over-all influence of the party."

"Do you think the public has been getting a fair picture of the danger from Communists within this country?"

"I feel the press, radio, television and congressional investigating committees have done much in recent years to educate the public as to the nature, operations and objectives of Communism. . . .

"Is it not true, however, most Americans are hazy when it comes to Communist fronts . . . ?"

" . . . Communist fronts are organizations of disguised character which the Communist party uses to further its aims. They would appear on the surface not to be under Communist control and their ostensible objectives would seem entirely legitimate. . . . It is highly important that any person 'Stop, Look and Listen' before he allows his name to be used."

"How can communism be fought most effectively in America today?"

Spotlight

"I have always felt that an alert, informed citizenry is our most potent weapon against communism. The vast majority of Americans are patriotic, loyal citizens. They abhor treachery, deceit and any forces which would deprive us of our freedom and democratic liberties. . . . through the schools, churches, press and radio, the public should be given the facts about communism. NOT THROUGH DEMAGOGUERY OR APPEAL TO THEIR PREJUDICES AND FEARS, BUT THROUGH A CLEAR, FACTUAL, TRUTHFUL PRESENTATION, THE PUBLIC SHOULD CONTINUE TO BE INFORMED OF THE REAL PURPOSES, OBJECTIVES, LOYALTIES AND METHODS OF THE COMMUNIST PARTY. (Capitals our own.) Because Communist strategy is based on deceit . . . communism cannot flourish under the spotlight of truth. . . . "

" . . . What ways are open to the lone individuals?"

" . . . These are some of the things an individual can do . . . Learn the facts about communism. . . . Through such media as the press and radio keep up with Russia's stand on matters of foreign policy. The Communist Party in America will take the same position. Sudden reverses in Soviet policy will cause members of the party to make sudden similar reversals. . . . CONDUCT NO PRIVATE INVESTIGATIONS OF SUSPICIOUS PERSONS OR ORGANIZATIONS. LEAVE THAT TO TRAINED INVESTIGATORS WHO ARE AUTHORIZED TO PERFORM SUCH INVESTIGATIONS.(Capitals our own.) Learn as much as possible about America—its history.

Barren Area For Commies

There goes on in New Orleans, La., a Senate investigation of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., to determine whether or not it is a Communist front.

The average person in the South never heard of the organization.

It is, and has been, entirely ineffectual.

Almost certainly it includes in its small membership fellow travelers, if not actual well-concealed Communists. It is some sort of carry-over from the old Southern Conference for Human Welfare which, after an honorable and worthy beginning, was subjected to slow infiltration by the Communists of the thirties and, in its latter years, did in fact become a Communist front.

It began well and with a first-rate membership of outstanding patriotic Southerners. The idea was to examine Southern problems and to develop a direction directed toward analysis and solution of them. Communists in Birmingham used its first session to agitate the race problem. During the war years camouflaged Communists managed to infiltrate it. Other members, disgusted, gave up the fight and withdrew and finally there was good and sound reason for the Attorney General of the United States to list the organization as subversive.

Southern newspapers led the fight which at last brought about its dissolution. The whole story is an excellent and typical one of how Communists inflitrated many decent organizations and took them over when other members threw up their hands and withdrew, leaving the organization name to those who wanted it for Communist propaganda.

Resistance

But, the story also illustrates how effectively the South, including its Negro citizenship, refused to be deceived or drawn into the net. Once the fellow-traveling front men had control of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare "name" they made an intensive drive for Negro membership. They did not get it.

At last, under heavy fire, and unable to attract membership, the Communist party itself seems to have withdrawn its encouragement, and the organization folded in dishonor.

There is a second chapter, and a likely tie-in.

Homer Chase, of New Hampshire, who for a number of years was a Southern Communist organizer, this week has been subpoenaed for a hearing in Washington. Chase was in the South during the last years of the Southern Conference for Human Welfare and attempted to co-ordinate a drive for Negro membership in the party itself. He had the assistance of several of the fellow-travelers of that organization, but he, too, registered a failure.

Wallace

Last gasp of the fellow travelers directing the Southern Conference for Human Welfare was during the Henry Wallace Progressive Party campaign in 1948.

Wallace had become a dupe and his party had become the captive of the Communist apparatus in New York. Inspired and urged on by this leadership, the guileless Wallace made a Southern tour, well surrounded by fellow travelers and worse. Their whole hope was to agitate the race problem.

To effect this, helpers were sent in. A Negro dentist was sent into the South and set up practice in Atlanta, Georgia. He at once became active in the Progressive campaign. Paul Robeson, notorious follower of the Communist line, was given a Southern speaking schedule.

The tour and the campaign was a failure.

The Southern Negro, and his leadership, refused to be taken in.

Homer Chase remained around for some time, always known to and watched by, the FBI and local newspapers. He was not too intelligent and his efforts soon took on an almost burlesque, cloak-and-dagger-like atmosphere. He set up a Karl Marx study club conducted by a young woman. It was exposed. Soon the Commies higher up called in Chase and apparently put him on the shelf in New Hampshire where his mother, also an avowed Communist, is resident.

The South had proved an almost barren field of operation. Whatever the Southern Conference Educational Fund is proved to be, it has never been more than it now is, a skeleton, unknown organization of no known effectiveness. Even New Orleans was but occasionally aware of its existence.

Never Doubt Democracy, Says McGill

31a w-white

We must never allow our frustrations to make us doubt the democratic way of life and we must have enough faith to believe in our government which gives so much and allows so much freedom even to those who would destroy that freedom, Ralph McGill, Editor of the Atlanta Constitution, told the students of Spelman College on Tuesday.

In this country there is a failure to realize that since we are in a position of leadership whatever we do is an international matter, McGill went on. It is of utmost folly and blind stupidity for some of our leaders, local as well as national, to attack the Supreme Court decision which is coming up on segregation in education and beyond education. He declared it to be a frustrating experience to run into a stubborn and willful person without vision to see what the future means and what it demands in these very trying days.

He called attention to the fact that never before have we been in the position that we now find ourselves because for nearly 700 centuries there was a balance of power in Europe so that we never had to worry about that, but now with the balance of power dissipated, we stand with two great ideologies face to face and our only hope lies in the act that we are a Christian nation.

According to McGill, we should get hope from the fact that the Russian press is launching a crusade against religion to remind members of the Communist Party that the Christian religion is not to be believed in and that Communism is anti-religious. He also told the students that it will be up to all of us to blend the right sort of Christianity with public opinion and determination to rout our frustrations if we are to get through this crisis in the right way.

McGill predicted that there is going to be either a temporary control of atomic weapons, a temporary cessation of fighting, or we are going to have another way. However, short we may fall of the Christian ideal, he said, "I am glad that we are a Christian nation, subscribing to Christian ethics.

With Ear to Patient's Chest

A diagnostician, putting his ear to the hairy chest of the South, can hear enough murmurs, burblings, wheezes and croakings to come up with a fairly confident political prognosis.

In the first place, the basic question no longer is whether the South, after a great surge for Gen. Eisenhower in 1952, will return "for good" to the Democratic Party in 1956, a sadder but wiser prodigal son.

As of now the answer to that question is, "Yes, it will return to what the party leaders refer to as the 'house of our fathers.' But it will not come to stay.' The prodigal will return sadder, perhaps wiser, but will sign no long-tenure lease."

Basic

The basic fact about Southern political leadership in the Deep South is that for a long and undetermined period it is going to be something like that ancient story of the shipwrecked Irishman who drifted to the shores of a land unknown to him.

"Is there a government here?" he asked as helpful natives assisted him to drier earth.

"There is," they said.

"I'm agin it," he said.

That's what it's going to be like in the Deep South for some time to come, insofar as the present articulate leadership, stirred by the Supreme Court decision on segregation and touchy over what it inordinately feels to be "interference" in general, is concerned.

This leadership did not like "that man" in the White House in the latter years of Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration.

It even more rabidly disliked "that man" in the White House when the occupant was Harry S. Truman.

Within a few months after Dwight D. Eisenhower was "that man in the White House," the Deep-South political leadership was in full cry against him. Appointment of former Gov. Earl Warren to be the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court was denounced by the more demagogic as a plot against the South's segregation traditions. When the Georgia state Democratic convention was held in September to confirm the primary results, the condemnation of President Eisenhower as an enemy of the South was more bitter, crude and rude than that formerly reserved for FDR and HST.

More than ever before, this particular leadership will demand of the court and the party that they each show proper "respect" and make no compromises, while the leadership itself swears it will make no compromise whatever.

In Texas, Gov. Allen Shivers, while still protesting he is a Democrat, frankly advocates a policy which would destroy the two-party system if carried to its ultimate conclusion. (His plan is nominally that of Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina). Gov. Shivers demanded the South play a "balance of power" role in each presidential election, abandoning any party affiliation, and bargaining with each for the best offer.

Chaos

If one region can do it, so can others. And if this should come to be the political formula in America, then the two-party system would go down the drain and regional politics would be substituted for national politics. That this would soon reduce itself to chaos and irreparably weaken the nation is beyond dispute.

Our time seems to be one when a great many political leaders are thinking not in terms of being Americans, but in terms of a state or a region. This is nothing new in American politics. Old political ghosts walk a long time as do old historical ghosts. Sometimes, to be sure, they are twins.

But history also shows that such thinking and such action, when carried from the field of threat to deed, has resulted either in disaster or dead-end stagnation of government and deterioration of those caught in it.

The question, which only the future can answer, is whether or not we can afford the luxury of substituting state or regional welfare for the national. In times past we have been able so to do. But never before in all our history have we been placed in such a position as now—with what is free in the world face to face with a powerful tyranny. And so, the question can't be answered save in the years — or generations ahead. Presently the answer seems to be "we can't afford it."

The Boss Sends For Mr. Crump

In 1909 in Memphis, Tenn., a Negro bandleader leaned against the cigar counter in Pee Wee's Beale Street Saloon, writing lyrics for a campaign song.

He and his band had been hired by a reform candidate. But wide-open Beale Street didn't want reform. At last William C. Handy finished the lyrics and called his band out of the back room, which was an unofficial "office" for unemployed musicians. His song was titled "Mister Crump." And it read:

"Mr. Crump won't 'low no easy riders here,
"Mr. Crump won't 'low no easy riders here;
"We don' care what Mr. Crump won't 'low
"We gon' to bar'l house anyhow,
"Mr. Crump can go catch his self some air . . ."

Late last Saturday Edward Hull Crump, 80 years old and for many long months sick and weary, did indeed go "catch his self some air" . . . the air which blows about that mysterious place called eternity.

Death came for the boss.

The Last

William C. Handy, once his tune and Beale Street votes had helped elect Mr. Crump mayor, was a mite embarrassed by the lyrics which suggested His Honor go catch some air. So, he wrote new ones, in Pee Wee's saloon, and they, with the old music, were called "Mr. Crump, or The Memphis Blues."

After 1909 no one in Shelby County or Memphis, Tenn., ever told Edward H. Crump to go catch any air. He was the boss. He had defeated an old-time, picturesque boss who rode a mule bare-backed to the city hall office every day. Ed Crump was more efficient. He moved into the county courthouse, where the new offices were, and from that time on his machine ran the county and the city.

It became a model which the bosses in other machine cities used to visit, admire and study. Ed Crump won some 27 personal campaigns for office. He elected every county and city candidate his organization put forth. In all his record was some 115 elections won against no defeats.

How efficient was he? Completely!

In 1922 two well-known men announced early for mayor, each hoping for Crump's support. He was silent until the night before election day. Then telephones began to ring in all the precincts and cars began to take men on hurried calls.

"Rowlett Paine is our man," was "the word."

The next day Paine was overwhelmingly elected.

Benevolent

Crump didn't stuff the boxes, although his men could have done so if needed. He produced the votes. He was the most benevolent of the city bosses—as he is the last. The day of the state, county and city machines is done. Shifts and growth of urban populations are one reason. Social service agencies obtain coal for the poor family; provide legal care, arrange for medical attention. These, and other favors, were used by ward bosses to win and hold votes.

Crump early in his political career went into the insurance business. (It is interesting to note how many politicians, in all states, once they are elected to office, find the insurance field attractive.) He did not allow any wholesale "inefficiency" in the handling of county and city money. Memphis' tax rate is the lowest in Tennessee and, for that matter, in the nation.

As a young political writer I twice had talks with him. Once, I remember, he asked me: "How many votes will we need to offset middle and east Tennessee?"

"Up there they told me they'd need about 50,000 majority, Mr. Crump," I said.

He nodded. "That's what they told me," he said.

I recall Shelby County turned out a majority of more than 53,000 in that race.

Advancing years, the death of his mother and a favorite son turned him more to religion. He did reform Memphis and Beale Street.

Now the real Boss has sent for him.

No one knows, of course, which party will win control of the [illegible] in tomorrow's voting. Politics, never an exact science, is the less so now because of the substantial increase in the independent vote. P. 1

But of one thing we may be sure—and a little ashamed for the President, and yet a little sorry for him, too, as President, being the head of the party, must support it. It is not surprising that Mr. Eisenhower had to retreat from the previously announced position—that he would not take an active part in the campaign and that neither he nor his administration would give a blanket endorsement to Republican candidates. That he would have to do this, should the Republican party and its campaign progress through him and his endorsement, was a foregone conclusion.

Never before in modern political history has a party so openly revealed its panic and distress as has the one now in power. For two weeks now the Republican leadership has been openly in a state of funk.

Some feels a sense of shame for the President in that he accepted the speech written for him which parrots what Vice President Nixon has been saying—that electing the Democrats would be to turn the Congress and the government over to left-wingers.

I prefer to do my own chores. But this position by the President and the Vice President is so shameful and false a thing that it needs answering. So, I think it might be well to let The Washington Star answer up. The Star was one of President Eisenhower's stanchest supporters. It has given him unstinted assistance and encouragement. But the Nixon line, adopted by the President (although he must have suffered inwardly), was too much to take.

So The Washington Star, an Eisenhower-Republican newspaper, reminds the Republicans of just what "radicals and left-wingers" it would be who would run the Congress if the Democrats win. The Star reply (a magnificent bit of satire) ran along these lines:

The 'Reds'

"Lyndon Johnson and Sam Rayburn, a well-known pair of Texas radicals, would take over as majority leader of the Senate and speaker of the House. Carl Hayden (of Arizona), a man to be watched if there ever was one, would become chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

"The vitally important Armed Services Committee would fall into the hands of that suspected stooge of the Kremlin, Dick Russell of Georgia.

"The situation with respect to the Foreign Relations and Finance committees is positively frightening. For the ranking minority member of each of these is another pinkish gentleman from the Deep South—Senator Walter F. George of Georgia. And to make this picture even darker, or redder, Senator George presumably could move up as chairman of only one of these committees. If he should choose to stay with foreign relations, that would mean that the finance chairmanship would be taken over by that notorious leftwinger from Virginia, Senator Harry F. Byrd."

Editorially the paper went on to say that Mr. Nixon presumably would deny that he was referring to any of these Democrats and that it is nonsensical to attempt to put such words in his mouth. It added that "it is not much more nonsensical, however, than what he actually did say."

To continue in like vein:

Senator William J. Fulbright of Arkansas, a liberal but certainly no radical, would fall heir to the important banking and currency chairmanship.

One of the most conservative of all Senate Democrats, Senator John L. McClellan of Arkansas, would replace Senator Joe McCarthy of Wisconsin as chairman of the Government Operations Committee.

Americans ought not to use McCarthy's tactics to make our citizens fear one another. That the President and Vice President should do so is a substantial shock.

'The Old Man
Atlanta, Ga.
And the Sea'
Fri. 10-29-54

Far out at sea, bone weary, with even his soul seeming to be dry and tired within him, the old man sat in his tiny boat, his big fish hooked and lashed to it, and watched the first shark come, a huge killer, ravenous—a Mako.

He killed it, finally, getting a harpoon into its evil, ugly head. But he knew this was too good to last. Others came. He sat waiting, too worn to move, feeling the pain in his cruelly cut, raw-gashed hands.

"But man is not made for defeat," he said. "A man can be destroyed, but not defeated. . . . Now the bad time is coming and I do not even have the harpoon . . . don't think, old man," he said aloud. "Sail on this course and take it when it comes."

Soon "it" came. They were, he saw, "galanos," the scavenger sharks.

This scene, on which turns one of the masterpieces of our time, "The Old Man and the Sea," is the basic thesis of Ernest Hemingway's writings—which yesterday won for him the 1954 Nobel Prize for Literature.

He would have had it last year, said members of the Swedish Royal Academy of Literature, but for the fact of Sir Winston Churchill's tremendous series of wartime memoirs. The award comes to a man who, more than any other person, has influenced prose and fiction style in this, the 20th Century. It is perhaps significant that it is the same theme—man's immortality of spirit—which flows through the best books of William Faulkner. Faulkner's latest book, "The Fable," an allegory based on the Passion of Christ, closes with almost the same lines as Hemingway's old Cuban fisherman says out there in the lonely reaches of the sea when, at the moment of his life's greatest achievement, the scavengers and the fates begin to destroy it.

Hemingway and Faulkner tower above their American contemporaries as cathedrals rise above chapels. They qualify to stand with the great of other nations and with those of other bygone years.

"The Old Man and the Sea" is rich with symbolism. The best and most significant of it comes after the great fish is caught, after the great success of a humble life has been ruthlessly destroyed, with the scavenger pack coming in after the killer shark has struck first. It is so in the lives of men and nations. There always is the pack of jackals or scavengers.

Starved, cruelly used, half delirious, the old man, defiant and proud, managed somehow to bring his boat to shore and reach his bed. There the young boy, who worshipped him, brought him love and loyalty, and the strength these qualities provide. Together they planned to go out again when the old man was well—the symbolic new life replacing the old and taking with it the courage and integrity which the old man had expressed through his life—man can be destroyed—but not defeated. A man must express through his daily life what is within him—what sort of man he is.

Hemingway

Well, anyhow, it is good to have him win the Nobel Prize. And it is about time. Certainly, after "The Sun Also Rises," "A Farewell to Arms," "For Whom the Bell Tolls," and "The Old Man and the Sea," and—

Assuredly after such short stories as "The Killers," "The Snows of Kilimanjaro," "Big Two-Hearted River," "The Undefeated," "A Pursuit Race," "Fifty Grand," "My Old Man"—and many others as fine, the prize is both merited and belated.

Hemingway is such a giant, in a time when there are many pygmies about, that those who envy him cannot do so quietly, but must become shrill and angry—and also revealing. (As they do about Faulkner.)

If he does not get himself killed in some exploit on sea or land, there will be other books to come. At 56 the juices in him have not dried up.

And so, we join in the salute to him—a really great writer.

GOP Future

Once, and only once, since the surrender at Appomattox and the ascendancy of the Republican Party in national politics has a President's party lost control of Congress in the midterm elections and yet won the next presidential election.

That once was, of course, 1948. After the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1945, the split in Democratic ranks widened, and the Republicans won control of the Congress in 1946. Two years later, Harry S. Truman astonished not merely his opponents, but most of his own supporters, by winning handily over the "sure thing" candidate—Gov. Thomas E. Dewey.

Therefore, while politics is not an exact science, and no generality is true (not even this one), the presumption remains that the party which next Tuesday elects a number of governors and obtains control of Congress will be in a much better position to win the White House in 1956. Jour. 10-31-54

This explains all the sound and fury; the heat and passion of the campaigning which, on the day after tomorrow, will determine control of the Congress.

The President

So great are the stakes that the Republican Party leaders have demanded, and obtained, presidential participation on a scale unprecedented for an off-year election. President Eisenhower has never wanted to associate his own personality and leadership with an outright partisan appeal. The President was not blind to the fact that while his own majority was more than six million, his party barely managed to win an edge in the Congress. It was not even a working majority. The non-Eisenhower Republicans openly have resented this comparison, but now, with the chips down, they have come, hat in hand, demanding that the President make a national campaign and that he give blanket endorsement to all GOP candidates.

This the President has done. He has done so despite the fact that he earlier made a public announcement that neither he nor the party would make an over-all partisan endorsement. Both he and the party, he said, would give public support only to "good men" who would support administration programs. Unworthy Republicans would receive no official pat on the back. The President also had allowed himself to be quoted as saying he would not participate in the campaign on a personal basis.

Both these promises, sincerely made and reflecting the man's deepest feelings, have been abandoned as the campaign developed and Democratic strength began to rise.

Predicament

This has committed the President personally. Since he has embraced all the Republican candidates, some of whom he dislikes heartily and recognizes as charlatans who wish only to use his popularity for their own ends, he also has placed his own popularity and influence in the scales.

He is not alone in this predicament.

In Illinois the Democrats face a stark fact. If Senator Paul Douglas is defeated, Adlai Stevenson's influence in the 1956 convention will be greatly depreciated. (GOP Candidate Meek, in Illinois, has a public record of opposition to almost every single Eisenhower principle.)

In Ohio, Gov. Frank Lausche, who, being human has an interest in the 1956 Democratic convention, will have less influence there if his appointee, Senator Thomas A. Burke is defeated.

In New York, polls taken by Republican newspapers indicate Averell Harriman to be running well. He is not a favorite to win. But if he runs behind Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr., who is campaigning to be attorney general, it will be FDR Jr. who will be dominant in New York party circles.

Franklin Roosevelt Sr. was able to "rub off" some of his own magic and popularity on Democratic candidates. No president before or since has been so able.

We will know more late Tuesday night.

The Teacher's Proper Job

Some of us run away from life, as some run toward it. Some of us cannot face realities, but escape in alcohol, drugs, or nervous breakdowns.

The nation's psychiatrists and psychologists, in recent convention, state a melancholy fact—a third of all our people "don't feel well." No germ, virus, malignant or benign tumor, or infection of any kind lies at the root of their trouble. They simply "do not feel well."

That a third of a nation of almost 155,000,000 persons should be so classified is an appalling fact.

We must certainly assume that from these come most of the alcoholics; takers of drugs, and those who overcrowd the mental institutions.

Education

There are among these, to be sure, many who have been "educated." Indeed, some of the more spectacular cases are from the so-called "good homes" and from the "college graduate" class. That is, of course, precisely when they become spectacular cases when they publicly are involved in alcoholism or drugs, and are seen on page one of the newspapers. But, by and large, the great majority of this "don't-feel-good" one-third of our population is of high school or less educational level. But this "level" is not at all the answer, as presently we shall see.

In his address to the recently adjourned Public Education Assn., Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard, suggested that better use be made of liberal arts college graduates as public school teachers. In this connection he asked for "more sensible" handling of certification rules.

This recommendation received wide notice, as it deserved. At a time when the flood of elementary and high school pupils is increasing, giving due warning to our colleges, it is frightening to note the number of teachers is declining.

Also, in the Pusey address were passages which go more directly to our one-third of the nation which produces most of the expensive problems of alcoholism and mental care. He said:

"I am mindful of a woman teacher beside whom I once sat during a rather esoteric discussion of education. . . . The school in which she worked was in what we refer to euphemistically as a poorer district. It was desperately poor indeed. Furthermore, it was rent by the turmoil of a large migratory movement, fraught with dislocation, poverty, racial tension, and marred by almost every known kind of delinquency. . . . I remember her leaning to me . . . and saying quietly, with what must surely have been incredible understatement, 'This discussion does not have much to do with the situation where I live.' I shall never forget that woman's remark." The discussion had been of books.

Proper Job

But, though books were no wise at fault . . . the discussion was: Dr. Pusey continued:

"The teacher's proper job is not to engender familiarity with the commonplaces of life, but to quicken awareness of its finer reaches and possibilities. . . . Perhaps in the end what I am trying to say is only that poetry with its reach and with its concentration is as relevant in educational discussion as is psychology."

None can deny that. It will continue to be more true as our cities grow and as all of us become more directly dependent on the processes of industrialization.

Man tends to feel, and be, lost in the great urban jungles. More and more dependence on trade unions, manufacturing and trade organizations and governmental bureaus and services, national, state and local, is ahead of us. We don't like this trend, but it is inevitable. The individual will become more and more submerged and, therefore, more and more dependent on his inner self. He must be better prepared to live—to be able to rationalize himself with what happens about him. He must be able to have something more than a material life. Lacking it, man comes to "feel bad."

No only must we have more teachers, we must enable them to do their proper job.

The Crisis in U.S. Education

Problems of American education have not become less critical—there are no indications whatever they will be less difficult or less urgent in the years ahead.

First of all, there is the appalling problem of numbers.

Next year—just a few months away—our elementary school enrollment alone will be increased by at least a million more children. And as the birth-rate has continued to rise, an increase of at least 1 million more elementary pupils per year may be expected in the foreseeable future.

The four million births in 1953 set a new record for the United States. And, thus far in 1954, another record is being set which will be well ahead of 1953.

The effect of the rising birth rate in America is just now beginning to be felt at the high school level. By 1960, less than six years from now, there will be four high school students where there have been three now; by 1965 there will be five.

Crisis

These figures, sobering and provocative as they are, do not constitute the whole crisis:

While elementary and high school enrollments are going up, the number of persons preparing to teach is going down. Since 1950 enrollments in elementary and high schools have risen 24 per cent and 10 per cent respectively. In the same period the annual output of elementary and high school teachers has dropped 26 per cent.

That is the major portion of the crisis—an assured, substantial increase in pupils—a frightening decrease in the teacher supply.

This prospect of large increase in elementary school enrollment had long been apparent from the birth records of the past several years. Most school people saw it. They sought to get something done. But the people, the taxpayers, somehow insulated from the facts of life in their own country, surrounded though they were by the facts of growth in all the cities, towns and hamlets, were largely unwilling to pay the price in bonds and taxes. A few stop-gap moves were made here and there—but almost nowhere was a full job done. The physical plant problem is an integral part of the crisis.

We still have the opportunity to be prepared for the flood tide of students which soon will be at the doors of our high schools. It is already engulfing our elementary schools. But our school people now know that over the next 10 to 15 years the nation's capacity for educating high school students needs to be increased BY AT LEAST TWO-THIRDS. In the more rapidly growing communities the need for increased facilities is staggering.

Tide

Flood tide enrollments will begin to reach the colleges about 1960—less than six years from now. We already know—with no guesswork involved—that for every student in college today there will be at least two in 1970. In states where population increases are most rapid—Florida and California for example—there will be at least three college students in 1970 for every one today.

The problems of educational facilities thus presented—classrooms and teachers—are appalling. More alarming, however, is the prospect that, in our sometimes frantic efforts, the quality of education will be neglected. Some regions may be so short-sighted as to place upon their young people an educational handicap which will make them less able to compete with those of states or regions.

We have slowly but surely allowed the profession of teaching to become less attractive. Low pay is one thing. A second is that teachers no longer occupy the place in the community they should enjoy by virtue of their profession.

Politics, politicians, attacks on the public school system, which is the backbone of the American way of life, refusal of state, county and city residents to face the facts and pay the bill, all have served to drive teachers from the classrooms and teacher-training schools. We must face up and it grows late.

Confesses A GOP Past

As a very young boy I held my first and only political job. It is necessary to make a confession about it. It was a Republican appointment. I was hired to assist in bringing in voters who were too old or crippled to make the journey to the polls on foot.

I was given a list of names and street addresses. Our vehicle was a surrey with the fringe on top. There was a Negro driver. It was my job to go to the designated house, ring the bell and notify the Republican voters therein that the carriage awaited without.

My instructions were to lend a hand to the arm of the more feeble. It was a pleasant job and no king on any throne was prouder than I, aged 10, riding on the front seat of the Republican surrey bringing in the sheaves. It was not until Woodrow Wilson came along that I learned the error of my ways and was, before voting age, confirmed as a Democrat.

Political procedures improve.

That assertion can be made with assurance. And also out of experience.

Women Voters

Bringing women to the ballot box has had an over-all good effect. By no means all of them vote as do their husbands or families. Indeed, a careful survey will show that the large increase in independent votes comes from the feminine registrants.

They bring, too, more idealism. It was the ladies who provided the great majority for Gen. Eisenhower in 1952. It will be they who turn against him if they decide he has failed them.

As a college student I was in the gallery of the Tennessee House of Representatives when it ratified the amendment permitting women to vote and provided the necessary majority to make this right the law of the land. Later I sat in on an interview with the famous "Suffragette," Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt. For her and other literally battle-scarred women it was a moment of great jubilation and victory.

Newspapers and speakers opposing the amendment had held up pious hands and said that dainty and fragile ladies should be protected from the coarse and crude atmosphere of the polls.

It is precisely this they have changed.

Again, the 10-year-old boy, who rode in the surrey and assisted ancient and garrulous Republican gaffers to the polls, can recall some of the coarseness. There was a miasmic fog of beer and bourbon and tobacco smoke which hung over the polls. Also, the floor was likely to be slippery here and there from tobacco juice. Most of the poll workers had bottles hid out behind convenient doors or in closets.

Voting Sites

Firehalls and empty storerooms were the usual precinct voting sites. In larger cities elections in some wards actually were held in saloons. I recall well my Calvinist father, who was, of course, a teetotaler, calling my critical attention to those men who were seen taking nips between voters or refreshing themselves during the dry hours of counting the votes.

Drunks were plentiful. It was, in truth, a man's business, but it was not being conducted in a manner of which thoughtful men could be proud.

The women have had a salutary effect. The voting places of today are not at all those which existed in the so-called "good old days."

There is less adherence to party labels by the ladies. They may lay great store by the label in their coats or dresses. But they will cross party lines because of the grocery prices, a war in Korea, or the threat of one anywhere else. There is no doubt whatever but that they constitute the hard core of the steadily increasing independent vote.

As America moves increasingly toward larger and larger urban communities, and as rural America, as we knew it 40 years ago, disappears by the increase in industry and the spreading network of highways, the women, God bless them, will become even more important politically.

The Tourists And Terrorists

On the day Puerto Rican terrorists from the festering, exploited slums of New York fired automatic pistols into the House chamber in the nation's capitol, the Miami Daily News carried a story with the headline: Tourist Boom Spreads Joy and Dollars in the Caribbean."

The greatest flood of winter visitors in history was at full tide, said the News, filling up hotels, aircraft, ships, and beaches in Nassau, Cuba, Jamaica, Puerto Rico, Haiti, Trinidad, Cuba, to a lesser extent the Dominican Republic, Mexico and Panama. It was estimated that from Miami alone some 3,000 and more tourists departed by air each week for the islands which decorate the historic sea called after the Carib Indians which Columbus found there . . . which sea is to the new world what the Mediterranean was, and is, to the old.

In all these islands, and in some of the lands to the South, investors from this country, usually joining with local businessmen, have built hotels, resorts, and places of entertainment for tourists — the one crop verdant of spirit and money, which is never ruined by moth, weevil, or beetle.

Annual Harvest

With this annual harvest of the tourist crop, the islands which have no real natural resources, and those which are dependent on the speculative crops of coffee and sugar, are improving their economic status.

It is this fact which has caused the handful of fanatic nationalists to be stirred to greater measures of terror and fanaticism by the jailed leader, Pedro Albizu Campos. His gunmen have murdered Puerto Rican officials; his thugs sought to assassinate the Governor, Munoz Marin; his killers tried to blast their way into Blair House to slay President Truman. His crazed pistoleers have now made a bloody shambles of the House of Representatives, wounding five. Their plot to fire at President Eisenhower has been discovered . . . .

There are now many industries in the islands of Puerto Rico. There are lavish hotels and there are those of substantial size catering to the average tourist. All these, Pedro Albuzi Campos tells Puerto Rico, are "ours." It is typical rabble rousing.

Would-be-dictator Campos is, as aforesaid, in jail. So, for a time, was the late Adolph Hitler and the late Joe Stalin. But, there is a difference. Puerto Rico was a wretched outpost of Spain. The people were treated even worse than those in Cuba. Yellow fever, malaria and other diseases kept the population down to about 600,000. After the United States took over Puerto Rico, having in mind the Isthmus of Panama and a probable canal, the population climbed rapidly as health controls and medical care became effective. By 1920 the population was above 1,000,000. By 1950 it had climbed above 2,000,000. Until the last decade the culture and language of the island remained Spanish. That slowly has begun to change. Spanish, of course, is the dominant language. But more English is spoken and the people now feel more a part of America than of the Old World.

Nationalist Party

In March, 1952, the Nationalist party was even more impotent than in 1932 when the overwhelming defeat caused its neurotic psychopathic leader to resort to terrorism. The pro-United States party polled 82 per cent of the more than 500,000 votes cast last March. The Nationalists were just one of the ineffective splinter parties. It was this bitter blow which inspired Campos to more terror.

It is estimated that in New York the extremists do not total more than 100 to 200. They are in the form of a secret society and, as such, are a threat as murderers in ambush. Pedro Albuzi Campos does not seem, for all his skill at rabble rousing, to be another Hitler or Mussolini.

Huge projects are underway in Puerto Rico. Vocational schools do well. There is unemployment, but more industry and diversified crops are planned. In a space of 3,500 miles there are 327 varieties of soil. Luis Marin's program, "Bread, Land and Liberty," has a real hold. With any luck he will bring it off. The terrorists are not gaining in numbers. The tourists are.

Need for a Praying Man

Secretary of State Dulles is a praying man.

At Caracas, Venezuela, he likely is spending more time with his prayers.

There is reason.

He also must feel lonely and frustrated beyond measure. He is up against an almost impossible situation in Latin America. At best he can hope for a stalemate—such as he obtained in Berlin. At home senators from his own party nag at him and undermine his policy because it does not agree with their own.

And — worse — the people of North America, as a whole, have no slight idea of the problem.

Few North Americans are aware, for example, that Latin America is the world's fastest growing area. By 1950 its population passed that of the United States. It now equals that of this country and of Canada combined.

We in the United States, bedazzled by our own bigness and our burgeoning cities, almost never recognize the fact that four of the seven largest cities in the Western Hemisphere are in Latin America. After calling off New York and Chicago we must go south of the Rio Grande River and add Mexico City, Buenos Aires, Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo and then back to North America again for Los Angeles.

All the world is growing.

Only the mentally blind, looking at the history of man's beginnings, fail to see that from the time primitive man first began to chip away at rocks to make better tools people have been changing their conditions.

The pressure of growth is doing things to all of us—everywhere.

Rate

Since the rate of population increase in Latin America is about 2.5 per cent each year, about twice the world average — the pressure there is greater.

Last year Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's favorite brother and confidant, returned from a mission to Latin America and made a report. One paragraph of it said:

"If this rate continues, Brazil's present population of 53,000,000—already more than that of the United Kingdom or of any Latin nations in Europe—will double in about 35 years. Within 50 years Latin America's population . . . may reach 500,000,000."

It is important to know which way Latin America, where population growth is so great, is going. There is not much reason to be concerned with the northern borders, save that hostile aircraft can reach us from bases in the Arctic. There is real cause for concern in the South.

Conspiracy

German Arciniegas, Latin America's able historian, notes in "The State of Latin America:" "A vast conspiracy against democracy, liberty, and respect for human rights has been set in motion in Latin America . . . it is in direct opposition to the history of a huge region that, like the United States, was conceived in freedom . . . this is one of the regions of the future . . . given education, well-being, and opportunity—three things they have been denied—the people of Latin America could play a major role in the world of tomorrow."

They will play a major role.

And Secretary Dulles, being an informed man, knows this. He knows, too, that in this century there has been little stability in that region. Republics have turned to dictatorships—and back again. They have gone from black shirts to red. At the meeting in Caracas most of those present represent military dictatorships. There is very little democracy there. Costa Rica did not send delegates because of this fact.

Guatemala's government is almost wholly Communist.

Through her Russia seeks to take over the economics of the region and drive out U.S. investments. These latter now total an estimated $6,000,000,000. Only Canada has more U.S. dollars in her industry and business.

Latin America's people, her mineral, metal and petroleum products are at stake.

Yet, few North Americans think of Latin America in any terms save those of cruise ships.

It is a further ironic fact that as we participate in Caracas to ask for unity of democracy against totalitarian encroachment, Europe and South America worry about our own problem of being able to beat down McCarthyism.

Background Of Assassins

Historian German Arciniegas described Puerto Rico as an "island of coffee and sugar hanging suspended between the world that was Spanish and the English world . . . with two major cities, San Juan and New York. . . ."

Today Puerto Rico and the assassins who shot up the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States overshadow the vital Inter-American Conference at Caracas . . . which was the purpose of the desperate demonstration, born of fanaticism.

On the day following the sound of gunfire and the sight of bleeding, wounded men in the House Chamber, Governor Luis Munoz-Marin flew to Washington personally to express his, and the Puerto Rican peoples' distress. He was sincere. So were most of the people. Puerto Rico has ceased to be merely a land of sugar and coffee, suspended between the Spanish and English world. The old Spanish culture slowly is receding before the magnificent new hotels, the new industries . . . but it is little more than a beginning.

In 1947 President Truman signed a bill giving Puerto Rico the right to choose her own governor. On November 2, 1948, Luis Munoz-Marin was elected governor and the islands attained a commonwealth status.

At the moment of victory he said of the defeated Nationalist wing:

"The proponents of nationalism prefer the despotic government of their own to the democratic rule of those removed from them."

Nationalist

The assassins who sprayed their automatics into the House Chamber demanded freedom for Puerto Rico and for the "martyred Albizu Campos."

Not one North American in a thousand ever heard of the man whose mystic powers for rabble rousing are unmatched, even by the late Huey Long and others skilled in the trade of making raging fevers to burn in men's brains.

From men who know Puerto Rico and from writings concerning the islands and its problems comes a substantial picture of Albizu Campos.

At Harvard he studied law. Extremely sensitive and self-conscious, he left behind him a record of neurotic antagonism. At a university long used to students of color, and lacking in any discrimination, Albizu Campos was from the start belligerent and resentful, insisting on reading into almost every contact some slur against him. Highly intelligent, possessed of great powers to sway persons who feel a sense of injustice, as thousands of Puerto Rico's poor did feel, he became a ruthless and cynical demagogue.

Terror

He attired his followers in black shirts, insisted on a sort of military discipline, and secretly armed his most trusted members. He is not, himself, religious, yet he used the Catholic religion of his followers "more as a weapon of combat than of conviction." He began with high hopes of success. His first test was in 1932. His party put up candidates for election.

Even then, with the always depressed islanders feeling the pressure of world depression, he and his candidates polled only 10,000 votes.

He then turned unhesitatingly to terror.

Two of his fanatics shot down the chief of police of San Juan and were, themselves, killed. On October 30, 1950, five of his fanatics attempted to break into the residence of the governor and assassinate him. A month later, November 1, 1950, two members of the Albizu group attempted to shoot their way into Blair House to kill President Truman. Albizu was then jailed in Puerto Rico. He still is there. This has added intensity to the fanaticism of his followers.

In Puerto Rico the extremists number not more than 2,000 — perhaps less — in a population of more than two million. Most of the terrorists are in New York. San Juan has a population of about 275,000. But Puerto Ricans in New York's worst Harlem slums number more than 700,000. They are tragically the prey of rabble rousing politicians and Communists.

Since God Made the World,

A short time ago I was briefly in the Ozark mountains at Fayetteville, Ark., where is located the progressive and progressing university of that state.

It is one of the Southern states which has, for some years now, permitted Negroes to enter its graduate schools of law, medicine, education and so on. At the end of 1953 an even 142 had been graduated. On the evening of Jan. 31, 1954, at the midyear commencement, 61 graduates of this mixed group, including others in the processional, sat in the ordered rows by class, and came forward with the others to receive their diplomas. Most of them were in the school of education, and there were two in law and one in home economics.

"You notice the Negroes?" a trustee asked me, as the several hundred persons graduating moved across the stage.

I said I did.

"Four years ago," he said, "I was bitter and sure it wouldn't work. But, all I can say is there has been no incident. They have been well behaved. There has been none of the 'mingling of the races.'

"It still seems strange to me, but I have reached the conclusion it is better for a state to do it this way. If the state has something to award it should treat all its people alike."

I nodded, without comment. It was new to me. Arkansas could comment. It was their show. I just looked.

But, I could not help thinking of the many, many paradoxes in what is called "The South."

Arkansas

Arkansas is making great industrial progress. She has more raw materials than most of her sister states. To her has been given oil in quantity, and a great supply of bauxite ores to fill the melting pots of the huge aluminum plants of the nation. Coal is there, too, as are other minerals for mining.

Driving from the hill country, which begins at Little Rock, where the alluvial soil left centuries ago by the Arkansas and Mississippi rivers begins, and stretches all the way to Memphis and down into Mississippi's great Delta country, one sees the slow revolution which is going on in the Southeast.

Once the hill country and the valleys and hollows of the ancient and still majestic Ozarks, were filled with the independent individualists, the subsistence farmers and their families who grew their corn and wheat, tanned hides, made shoes, sheared the sheep, carded and wove the wool.

Today they are like hill country — everywhere — turning to "broilers and layers," to beef cattle on the low hill pastures, and to maintaining small farms while members of the family drive to not-too-distant factories to work.

Eisenhower And Lincoln

There is no intent here to compare him with Lincoln . . . but there are parallels.

Dwight D. Eisenhower, President of the United States, talking with the press but a few hours ahead of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, suggested that political parties with small majorities speak softly and declared his need of the Democratic Party in the government.

This outraged Sen. Joe McCarthy, columnist David Lawrence and others who speak for, and represent, the extreme right wing, or "Old Guard," of the Republican Party.

Lincoln faced a similar problem.

The extremists in his Cabinet and in the Congress, as well as the hostile elements of the press, were saying that the Southern leaders should be tried and hanged or imprisoned. They were crying for a conquered province status.

Lincoln stood against it. He was saying the Union needed the South and its people and that they should be brought back into the Union without unnecessary humiliation or punishment.

Senators and congressmen, as well as Cabinet members, went about crying for the hangman's noose, for prison and for the most extreme and cruel forms of revenge.

Treason

Today, Sen. McCarthy's voice and, to a somewhat lesser extent, those of Jenner and Velde, along with some elements of the press, join in saying that the Democratic Party is "the party of treason."

"The party of treason . . . the party that sold out America . . . the party that brought in the Communists . . . the party of disloyalty. . . ."

It has a familiar ring. It sounds exactly like Thaddeus Stevens and Charles Sumner of 1865-75.

But the President, speaking over the heads of these men, said that the Republicans, in office with a small majority, should speak softly. He needed the loyal American faith of the Democrats. Without them and their loyalty the government, with a bare majority, cannot go on.

He knew, for example, that Sen. Walter George, who brought forth the Democratic compromise in the Bricker fight, was not a traitor because he stood there as a Democrat when he presented the compromise which saved the Republican Party from defeat.

The President, being a decent man, was trying, as did Lincoln, to deal with men driven by the lust of personal power. It was the excesses of Sumner and Thaddeus Stevens which drove the frustrated actor Booth to murder and thereby delivered the nation into the hands of the extremists. President Eisenhower obviously recognizes the danger of the extremists in his own party.

Loyalty

On the day the President so spoke, suggesting the extremists in his party cease their loud shoutings, it was revealed that of the 534 persons released by the State Department only 11 were in the security risk status. Yet, the extremists have been saying to the nation, "We have fired 2,200 for disloyalty." They were going out for their Lincoln Day speeches with this lie. It was a deliberate attempt to further their charges that the Democratic Party is the party of disloyalty and of treason.

An angry "security officer" shouts that the people aren't interested in why they were fired . . . they just wanted to be rid of them. Actually, most were fired for inefficiency, for drinking and for other causes. But the Thad Stevenses and the Charles Sumners of today are saying all had been fired for "security" risks. They sought to make the firing of a drunk appear as the discovery of a traitor.

It was, and is, a fascistlike lie—just as Thad Stevens and Charles Sumner used it to destroy the decent and reasonable policy of Lincoln.

The American people are loyal —Democrats and Republicans alike. They are confronted with men who would use, and foment, fear to attain unusual political powers for themselves. President Eisenhower sees it for what is.

33 Million More Babies!

We should have suspected it well before we did — the pressure for baby sitters being what it is. But, we didn't. We had to wait until the statistical boys put it before our eyes.

Postwar babies have changed our lives . . . and our markets.

And as the teen-age crop of the years ahead grows up, that change will be the more marked.

There are now 160,000,000 of us in the land of the free, and the home of the brave . . . and one is being added about every 12 seconds.

Since 1920 these are the figures:

1920 (July 1)	106 million
1930	123 million
1940	132 million
1945	140 million
1950	152 million
1954 (Jan. 1)	161 million

Fortune Magazine, in a bouncy article about what this means to markets, calls attention to the fact that the population of the United States has grown as much in the past three and a half years as it did in the entire 10 years of the thirties.

Meaning

In this brief span of less than four years the American market has been enlarged by populations the size of that of Texas and Nebraska. And we keep going up.

Admitting the possibility of error, Fortune peers into the statistical future and ventures, "with fair confidence," the following estimates:

1955 (July 1)	165 million
1960	175 million
1965	185 million
1970	195 million
1975	206 million

How far away is that? Well, look around. We now are beginning the year 1954. That means the population of 206 million, with all its staggering implications, is only 21 years away.

Politicians, merchants, manufacturers, editors, farmers—all of us had best be thinking on it. And all of us had best think about the farmer. He must feed all the great increase.

We haven't been thinking about the fact there are already 66 million more Americans than there were a few years ago. That's why state legislatures, Congress and cities are caught short today. That's why we need planning for that future . . . in streets, schools, parks and everything having to do with the lives of people.

Today there are still wistful old codgers, and moronic young ones who ape them, who keep batting around with the idea that taxes are too high merely because politicians wish them to be. The plain facts are, as the Eisenhower administration illustrates, there are millions more people and they must have services of schools, housing, sewers, roads, jobs, medical care and so on . . . and they must have an Army, Navy, Air Force, and carry on research in the arts of peace and war.

'A Bulge'

All that costs money. Now and then there are pundits who naively write in one column for a lowering of taxes and in the next for new roads, parks, and general governmental services. The Eisenhower administration is going to let 10 per cent income taxes drop, as the Democrats legislated, and then find the lost money somewhere else. The administration has cut jobs, practiced economy, and trimmed all possible fat. Maybe it has trimmed too much. The armed forces say our security is in decline.

But—they cannot really cut taxes. And this administration likely will have to borrow more in 1954 than any administration in recent years.

On the other side of the economy, the 33 million new babies born during the past nine years will affect every possible market—cotton for diapers, dresses, pants, cowboy suits, food, shoes . . . ask the papa with three or four kids what the bills come to. This stupendous increase which Fortune calls "a bulge" of 33 million, will grow up to buy houses, and so on.

Does Ike Plan Middle Party?

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 16—Those now close to White House sources say here that President Dwight D. Eisenhower has determined to create and lead what might be called a middle party which will, he hopes, attract the support not merely of the progressive wing of his own party, but the conservative members of the Democratic and, he believes, the votes of those who put him in office a year ago while at the same time giving the Republican Party the barest of majorities.

To be sure, the President largely has had the support of these elements in his first year in office. But now, these sources point out, he is cutting the cloth to fit the new concept of a middle party. This he did not do before.

He has, in a very real sense, gone to work on an Eisenhower platform. His State of the Union message was followed by a press conference on Wednesday in which he reaffirmed his determination to push his program. He was careful to make it his and did not identify it as Republican. The State of the Union message contained much which complimented the old New Deal policies so furiously and unreasonably opposed by the extreme right wing of the GOP.

On Security

Then on Thursday the President came strongly forth in another message asking for substantial increases in Social Security payments and an expansion of coverage.

This, it is felt, cuts the legs from under some Democratic comeback power, as there was a substantial fear on the part of millions of Americans that Republicans would like to weaken the system as, indeed, many would.

Sources citing the President's new determination to push the Eisenhower policy, with the unannounced additional purpose of creating a middle party which would have enough public opinion to influence the Congress, point out, too, that there has been no further talk of creeping socialism in the field of public power. There has been instead a seeming retreat from the policy announced a year ago which then was determined to sell all public power systems.

These same sources say that the Eisenhower plans in the making call for many, smaller instances of "creeping socialism" instead of the larger and more dramatic ones. Advisers now working with the President reportedly have pointed out that development of the many local watershed programs would give this form of government aid a much wider national distribution and would provide it with greater local and state appeal.

Watershed problems are many and include dams, reforestation, conservation, and other forms of "creeping socialism."

School Problem

Also reportedly ahead in this Eisenhower middle party plan is one in the touchy field of school aid, including a special, temporary one for the South in the event the Supreme Court rules out segregation but provides, as expected, a substantial transition period. This is all very hush, hush, but the story goes that the Congress possibly may be asked by the court to provide remedial assistance in the complex problem. The administration is thinking about proposing federal aid to the states involved, all of it to be handled by local school officials. Experts also are at work on plans for a national program.

These are just some of the plans talked about as being part of the planning. The President will not, of course, talk about or admit any middle party plan. But what he reportedly hopes to do is to create one by a combination policy which will attract the conservative-progressive support from both parties and thereby to construct by 1956 a very real middle party strength. He would like, they say, for the public itself soon to see and recognize the existence of this sort of party.

Since God Made the World!

A short time ago I was briefly in the Ozark mountains at Fayetteville, Ark., where is located the progressive and progressing university of that state.

It is one of the Southern states which has, for some years now, permitted Negroes to enter its graduate schools of law, medicine, education and so on. At the end of 1953 an even 142 had been graduated. On the evening of Jan. 31, 1954, at the midyear commencement, 61 graduates of this race marched in with others in the processional, sat in the ordered rows by class and came forward with others to receive their diplomas. Most of them were in the school of education, but there were two in law and one in home economics.

"You notice the Negroes?" a trustee asked me, as the several hundred persons graduating moved across the stage.

I said I did.

"Four years ago," he said, "I was bitter and sure it wouldn't work. But, all I can say is there has been no incident. They have been well behaved. There has been none of the mingling of the races.

"It still seems strange to me, but I have reached the conclusion it is better for a state to do it this way. If the state has something to award it should treat all its people alike."

I nodded, without comment. It was new to me. Arkansas could comment. It was their show. I just looked.

But, I could not help thinking of the many, many paradoxes in what is called "The South."

Arkansas

Arkansas is making great industrial progress. She has more raw materials than most of her sister states. To her has been given oil in quantity, and a great supply of bauxite ores to fill the melting pots of the huge aluminum plants of the nation. Coal is there, too, as are other minerals for mining.

Driving from the hill country, which begins at Little Rock, where the alluvial soil left centuries ago by the Arkansas and Mississippi rivers begins, and stretches all the way to Memphis and down into Mississippi's great Delta country, one sees the slow revolution which is going on in the Southeast.

Once the hill country and the valleys and hollows of the ancient and still majestic Ozarks, were filled with the independent individualists, the subsistence farmers and their families who grew their corn and wheat, tanned hides, made shoes, sheared the sheep, carded and wove the wool.

Today they are like hill country — everywhere — turning to "broilers and layers," to beef cattle on the low hill pastures, and to maintaining small farms while members of the family drive to not-too-distant factories to work.

Change

Only the blind cannot see, as they drive across the country, how we are moving swiftly toward an urban and a suburban nation with all the pressures on schools, social services and the mechanics of cities which they inevitably bring.

Arkansas, with more resources, and a mixed culture of the plantation and hill country economy, is a typical state in transition.

There are many tales in the Ozarks.

There was the census taker who found a mountain cabin in a cove and an old man rocking on the porch. He told his mission. "Go ahead, son, ask your questions."

"What is your name, sir?"

"James P. McLaughlin."

"How do you spell it, Mr. McLaughlin?"

"Spell it any way you please, son. I'm a non-scholar."

Out of the old plantation region comes an old song:

"The rooster's crowed,
The big bell's rung,
Git out'en this bed, old lady!
Go fry that side meat
What I done brung
And get my breakfast ready."

The old tunes linger—the old ways die slowly.

But change, which began when God completed the world and rested on the seventh day, has never ceased.

The Tablets Of Ike Law

A lot of people these days seem to be waiting like the Israelites at the foot of the mountain called Sinai, impatiently waiting for Moses to come down, again, clothed in fire, to give them the tablets of law. They forget he has already come and that, anyhow, if he were to come again, it would not be possible to improve on the originals. But, still an increasing number of people wait patiently for someone to tell them what to do.

Every time there is a presidential message they gather their chairs about the television and radio screens and wait for the tablets of the law. And always they are disappointed. To be sure, during the great war Roosevelt and Churchill often seemed to be clothed with fire from Sinai. Their words rolled with thunder and forked lightning flashed from them. But, that was war.

Once the tides of the war turned, the people got a little tired of both Roosevelt and Churchill. The former died. The voters of Britain turned the latter out.

And, Now—

Now, the Republicans are revealing that not even they considered President Dwight D. Eisenhower's State of the Union and budget messages to be written on tablets of everlasting rock. There were 25 Democratic senators and 25 Republicans who joined to give him a smashing victory on the St. Lawrence Seaway bill. There were Republicans who quit him to foul up the Hawaiian statehood bill and link it with Alaska. We may see a complete shift on Alaska.

The budget message didn't please all the Republicans. The Grand Old Party chieftains by no means received it as the law from the White House Sinai. Some are after it in the manner of Master Shakespeare's Shylock, each demanding to be allowed to carve off his pound of financial savings. There will be more of the same.

The fight on the Bricker amendment is some of it. Some won't accept Ike's rejection of the bill.

What we are seeing is a working of the unique system of government, often invisible, called "federalism." The British are unkind enough to say that our system of government at times resembles nothing so much as a headless duck waddling all about the place. What they can never understand, with their unitary system in which the Prime Minister must resign every time he and his party fail to carry a measure, is the tug of war between the central and local powers.

Explanation

It is best explained by a simple fact.

Ike doesn't run this year.

But a third of all the senators and all the House members must go to the hustings and influence people. And so, when the White House hands down the tablets of stone they read them very carefully. Some go running away uttering war whoops of opposition. Others flee like the gentle gazelle. But each measures the law on the tablets of stone against what he thinks his state or congressional district will think about it when the electorate thereof goes to that little curtained booth to vote.

Since Ike doesn't run this year, the GOP candidates will be campaigning without his enormous prestige. Some of them already feel quite lonely and afraid.

Whenever they read about the railroad shops letting off 641 men in their district; about an obsolete mill closing; or learn the dismal intelligence that the farm implement business is off because farmers are waiting to see about prices, they get the political palsy and wake their spouses in the dead of night with nightmarish groans.

They, like a lot of plain citizens, keep calling on Moses to come down off some handy Sinai with plans to restore boom times and still keep peace in Korea. And the Democrats—well, they are like the Tarbaby Uncle Remus told about. They just keep sitting in the middle of the road — saying mighty little.

Don't Hand Segregation Issue to Radicals, McGill Asks

AUGUSTA, Jan. 6 (AP)—Ralph McGill, editor of The Atlanta Constitution, declared here today the South must not turn the issue of segregation over to radicals and firebrands as the destiny of the Negro in the South was placed in the hands of a few radical members of Congress during Reconstruction days.

The editor, in an address to the Augusta Women's Club, said he personally hoped the Supreme Court would rule in favor of leaving the separate school system just as it is today. But, he did advocate rational thinking about the case should the impending decision go against the Southern position.

McGill asserted the "problem will be troublesome for a while but let no person say the answer will be "blood in the streets" or violence.

"Segregation has now reached the point where no one gains anything by shouting likes and dislikes. It has gone past that."

McGill asked, "suppose the decision does go against the South?" "In the first place," he declared, "There will be no immediacy. Time will be given the various states to work out the matter of unified educational facilities."

AKA's Support Civil Rights' Bills For City

Mrs. Marian Oldham, chairman of the American Council on Human Rights Committee of the Gamma Omega chapter of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority, announced at last Saturday's meeting that her committee is putting forth every effort to make St. Louis citizens conscious of the important proposed ordinances to be voted on by the Board of Aldermen on November 19.

Mrs. Oldham urged every one of the 70 members present to contact the president of the board along with his own alderman and as many others as they can write, visit or phone so that they will vote favorably on Board Bills 13 and 14. During the week, the sorority membership agreed to concentrate on canvassing their own neighborhood and alerting other organized groups as to the importance of letting their aldermen know that they favor these ordinances and urge their adoption.

Delegates of the National Alpha Kappa Alpha Boule were elected Mrs. Thelma Sutton will represent the graduate chapter at the December Boule in Nashvil'e, Tenn., while Mrs. Vivian McField will be the delegate to the summer Boule in August, 1955, in San Francisco, Calif. It was announced that two members will be on the December nomination slate of officers, namely: Miss Evelyn H. Roberts, now Central Regional Director, will be a nominee for the office of Supreme Grammateus, and Mrs. McField will be among those seeking membership on the 1955 nominating committee.

Two Alpha Kappa Alpha women will appear on a panel at the Town Hall meeting on Sunday, November 21, at St. James AME Church at 4 p.m. Mrs. Valla Abbington, chairman of the NAACP Committee on Housing, will tell of the effect of Integration in Housing and Employment on the St. Louis Public Schools, and Dr. Ruth Harris, Director of Elementary Education, will present the Program of Integration in the Public Schools. This meeting is open to the public.

At the close of the meeting the sorority went on record of endorsing public housing integration.

Commission approves ACHR in 5-year evaluation report

WASHINGTON

The American Council on Human Rights released this week printed copies of the report of its commission on evaluation headed by Dr. Howard H. Long, Dean of Central State College in Xenia, Ohio.

The 123-page document represents an intensive analysis of the program and operation of the six year old Greek-letter project.

The ACHR is a cooperative program of six national fraternities and sororities: Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

IT WAS CREATED to mobilize the resources of its six member organizations in a joint effort toward equality of justice and opportunity for all citizens.

The emphasis of the council's program has been in the field of National legislation by the United States Congress and executive action by the President and the departments and agencies of the Federal government.

The headquarters of the project is in Washington, D.C. Elmer W. Henderson is its national director.

The council has been in the forefront of efforts to obtain a national fair employment practices bill; safeguards for minorities in housing and other social segregation from the armed services and other important developments in recent years.

Numbers of the evaluation commission in addition to Dr. Long were: Enos S. Andrews of Philadelphia, Kappa Alpha Psi; Mrs. Vivian E. Cook of Baltimore, Alpha Kappa Alpha; Miss Patricia Roberts of Washington, Delta Sigma Theta; James N. Saunders, Washington, Alpha Phi Alpha; Mrs. Josephine C. Smith of Washington, Zeta Phi Beta and Mrs. Lorraine A. Williams of Washington, Sigma Gmma Rho.

Dr. Paul Cook of Miner Teachers College was the researcher for the study. Mrs. Bertell Collins Wright of Montclair, New Jersey, is president of the council.

The study covered the direct social action program of ACHR; detailed its activities in the field of housing; analysed its program in education and public relations and its local councils and included a chapter on its method of operations.

IN EVALUATING the work of the Council the Commission stated in conclusion:

"In summary, therefore, we find that ACHR has operated unusually effectively. One is a bit astonished at the record it has made and this record gains emphasis because it was established incidentally, to the operation rather than as a planned accumulation for an occasion such as this survey.

American Council Of Human Rights Releases Report

FIGHT AGAINST BIAS

The headquarters of the project is in Washington, D. C. Elmer W. Henderson is its national director. The Council has been in the forefront efforts to obtain a national fair employment practices bill: safeguards for minorities in housing and other social legislation; the elimination of segregaton from the armed services and other important developments in recent years.

Members of the Evaluation Commission in addition to Dr. Long were: Enos S. Andrews of Philadelphia, Kappa Alpha Psi; Mrs. Vivian E. The study covered the direct social action program ACHR; detailed its activities in the field of housing; analysed its program in educaton and public relations and its local councils and included a chapter on its method of operations.

SUMMARY OF WORK

In evaluating the work of the council the commission stated in conclusion:

"In summary, therefore, we find that ACHR has operated unusually effectively. One is a bit astonished at the record it has made and this record gains emphasis because it was established incidentally to the operation rather than as a planned accumulation for an occasion such as this survey. It would be difficult to find any organization that has done so much with so little, on the one hand; and it may be equally as difficult to find an organization with so much unused potentiality as resides in the 100,000 men and women who back the organization on the other. One is likely not to envisage what this potential really means in terms of getting things done. It follows then, that any notion of diminishing the work in any way would seem to be quite out of place. This is the time for new resolves to go forward to greater fruitfulness.

"Finally, there is every reason to be heartened. Since 1948 many things have happened that could not be anticipated at that time. Although ACHR cannot claim sole credit for what has transpired, certainly we think that no one can read what has gone before without appreciating that it has played a highly important role in what has taken place. We have noted several events such as the elimination of segregation in the railroad dining cars and the drive on housing in which the role of ACHR bulks so big that few would want to discredit any reasonable claim it might put forth. ACHR can afford to put aside distractions and in the idiom of the British: 'Go on with the job'."

DISCUSS SUPREME COURT RULE—Civic women leaders met in Washington recently to decide the best course of action with the Supreme Court's decision to integrate public schools. The conference was sponsored by the National Council of Women.

Rights Council urges integration of schools

Afro-American P-11 Baltimore

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON (ANP) — The American Council on Human Rights, at its workshop on Planning for Integration in Education, held at the Willard Hotel, recently, unanimously went on record as approving "immediate integration" for all schools.

The group is composed of six Greek-letter organizations. Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

It also resolved to cooperate on a local level with existing organizations interested in integration to: 10-30-54

1. Induce an attitude of acceptance of an integrated pattern on the part of colored persons;

2. Gather and spread information concerning positive values of integration and employment opportunities in an integrated pattern;

3. Stimulate alertness on the part of the public and provide direction as to patterns of action for groups and individuals."

ACHR agreed that it would expand its membership by inviting other Greek-letter organizations, irrespective of race but with similar orientation, to join the Council.

It also plans to prepare projects for undergraduates to help prepare them for an integrated society.

The ACHR's Workshop was held in conjunction with the Council's semi-annual meeting of the Board of Directors.

— o O o —

THE ALL-DAY workshop was divided into three groups:

1. Discussing ways in which college Greek-letter fraternities can help in the integration.

2. Effective steps for helping the transition from segregation to integration in local communities.

3. Ways in which the organization can assist future teachers and undergraduates in accepting integration.

Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the U.S. Commissioner of Education; Dr. Paul Cooke, Miner Teachers College; Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, head of the Department of Sociology at Howard University; and Dr. J. Rupert Picot, vice president of the National Education Association served as consultants.

Miss Dorothy I. Height, Delta Sigma Theta, New York served as chairman and Dr. Sadie Yancey, Delta Sigma Theta, Dean of Women at Howard University, summarized findings.

— o O o —

GROUP NO. 1, was composed of Aubrey E. Robinson Jr., Alpha Phi Alpha, Washington convener. Miss Evelyn B. Pope, Zeta Phi Beta, Durham, N.C. recorder; Mrs. Dolores E. W. Powell, Zeta, Washington; Dr. W. Henry Greene, Kappa Alpha Psi, Washington;

Mrs. Dorothy Shaed Proctor, Washington, James E. Scott, Kappa Alpha Psi, Washington; Miss Madeline King, Zeta, Washington; with Dr. Paul Cooke, consultant.

— o O o —

MRS. EDNA OVER GRAY, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Baltimore, served as convener for Group No. 2; with Mrs. Peggy Hedgepath, Washington, recorder. Other members were:

Miss Edna Douglas, Sigma Gamma Rho, Little Rock; Miss Esther C. Peyton, Zeta Phi Beta, Washington, Edwin Hatfield, Chicago Council ACHR; Mrs. Arnetta G. Wallace, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Knoxville, Tenn.;

Miss Josephine Smith, Zeta, Washington, Mrs. Emma Manning Carter, Sigma Gamma Rho, Washington, Miss M. Patricia Goins, Alpha Kappa Alpha, Washington; with Dr. Picot serving as consultant.

— o O o —

GROUP NO. 3 was led by Mrs. Julia B. Craft, Zeta Phi Beta, Washington, with Miss Patricia Roberts, Delta Sigma Theta, Washington, serving as recorder. Other members were:

Miss Mary Anne Tuggle, Zeta, Washington; Miss Ethel Price, Future Teachers of America, Miner Teachers College; William H. Browne, Chicago Council ACHR; Mrs. Alma C. Hawkins, Sigma Gamma Rho, Washington;

Dr. Yancey; Dr. Walter Booker, Alpha Phi Alpha, Washington; William B. Butts, Kappa Alpha Psi, Newport News, Va.; Mrs. Elva Sowell, Sigma Gamma Rho, Washington; Miss Ruth Bannister, Future Teachers of America, Miner Teachers College;

Dr. Nancy B. Woolridge, Zeta Phi Beta, Hampton, Va.; Mrs Gertrude Barnes, Delta Sigma Theta, Philadelphia, Miss Letitia Johnson, Delta Sigma Theta, Washington; with Dr. Frazier serving as consultant.

— o O o —

OTHERS ATTENDIN were:

Miss Shirley A. Spencer and Miss Geraldyne Baker, both AKA's of Washington; Mrs. Alma C. Hawkins and Mrs Evelyn O'Chase, both Sigmas of Washington; Mrs. Bertell Collins Wright, Delta, Montclair, N.J.;

Mrs. Lorraine Williams, Sigma Gamma Rho, Washington; Dr. Howard H. Long, Alpha Phi Alpha, Central State College in Ohio; Elmer W. Henderson, director of the American Council on Human Rights; and Mrs. Doretha Stewart, American Council on Human Rights secretary.

Human Rights Council Plans School Aid

WASHINGTON — The American Council on Human Rights will hold a workshop on Planning for Integration in Education during its semi-annual board of directors meeting on Saturday, October 16 at the Hotel Willard in Washington, it was announced today by Elmer W. Henderson, the Council's national director.

The Human Rights group is a cooperative project of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Frateruity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

The purpose of the workshop will be to develop a specific program whereby the Council, its members organizations and its local affiliates throughout the country can aid in implementing the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases and effect a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration in the affected areas. An intensive analysis of the recent disturbances in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Delaware, will be made.

Rights council lauds D.C.'s handling of school riots

WASHINGTON

The American Council on Human Rights last week, through its president Elmer W. Henderson, lauded Washington officials' handling of the recent school disturbances, stating that it "contributed greatly toward preventing a serious public conflagration."

The statement from the council said that five significant lessons were learned from the disturbances, caused by the controversy over integration of white and colored pupils in Washington schools. The lessons, it said, were:

Firmness on the part of Dr. Hobart Corning and the school board to submit to demands of striking pupils for a return to segregated classes; flexible handling of pupils, depending upon conditions in the different schools;

—o O o—

UNIFIED ACTION of the police department and district commissioners and school officials, all of which seemed to be in accord; balanced treatment by the press in that it avoided sensationalism which might hove fanned the flames of the disturbances;

Calmness on the part of colored pupils and parents. The refusal of parents and pupils to resort to retaliatory action helped uphold the dignity of the school authorities and the decision of the highest judicial tribunal, the statement said.

The American Council on Human Rights will hold a workshop on "Planning For Integration in Education" during its semi-annual board of directors meeting on Saturday at the Hotel Willard. Elmer W. Henderson, the Council's national director, announced, this week.

The Human Rights group is a cooperative project of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

Evening Star 10-23-54

The purpose of the workshop will be to develop a specific program to aid in implementing the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases and effect a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration in the affected areas. An intensive analysis of the recent disturbances in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Del., will be made.

Consultants to the board during its sessions, will include Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant to the U.S. Commissioner of Education; Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, head of the department of sociology at Howard University; Dr. J. Rupert Picot, vice president of the National Education Association; Dr. Paul Cooke of Miner Teachers College and Dr. Sayde Yancey, dean of women at Howard.

Miss Dorothy I. Height, grand president of Delta Sigma Theta will be general chairman.

ACHR Calls For Integration

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

BY ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The African Council on Human rights at its workshop on "Planning for Integration in Education," held at the Willard hotel last week, unanimously went on record as approving "immediate integration" for all schools. p. 1

The group, composed of six Greek letter organizations, further resolved to cooperate on a local level with existing organizations interested in this problem, in utilizing various community media and obtaining the services of prominent ndividuals to:

"a. Induce an attitude of acceptance of an integrated pattern on the part of reluctant Negroes;

INTEGRATED PATTERN

"b. Gather and disseminate information concerning positive values of integration and employment opportunities in an integrated pattern;

Wash. 10-22-54

c. Stimulate alertness on the part of citizenry and provide direction as to patterns of action for groups and individuals."

ACHR agreed that it would expand its membership by inviting other Greek letter organizations, irrespective of race but with similar orientation, to join the council. And that it would prepare projects for undergraduates which will assist in preparing them as individuals for an integrated society and which will assist in preparing them to make their contribution during this period of transition.

The ACHR's workshop was held in conjunction with the council's semi-annual meeting of the board of directors.

RESULT OF DECISION

The all-day workshop was divided into three groups, the first discussing ways in which college Greek letter fraternities can be used as a vehicle to assist in the transition; the second, pointing out the most effective steps to be taken in aiding the transition from segregation to integration in local communities; and the third discussing ways in which the organization can assist future teachers and undergraduates generally to appreciate the changed condition as a result of the decision.

Dr. Ambrose Caliver, assistant, U. S. Commissioner of Education; Dr. Paul Cooke, Miner Teachers College; Dr. E. Franklin Frazier head, department of sociology, Howard University and Dr. Ruper Picto, vice presdent, National Education association, served as consultants.

Human Rights Council Plans School Aid

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Tues. 10-12-54

WASHINGTON — The American Council on Human Rights will hold a workshop on Planning for Integration in Education during its semi-annual board of directors meeting on Saturday, October 16 at the Hotel Willard in Washington it was announced today by Elmer W. Henderson, the Council's national director.

The Human Rights group is a cooperative project of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Frateruity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority.

The purpose of the workshop will be to develop a specific program whereby the Council, its members organizations and its local affiliates throughout the country can aid in implementing the decision of the Supreme Court in the school cases and effect a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration in the affected areas. An intensive analysis of the recent disturbances in Baltimore, Washington and Milford, Delaware, will be made.

Several distinguished educators will serve as consultants to the board during its sessions including Dr. Ambrose Caliver, Assistant to the U. S Commissioner of Education; Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, Head of the Department of Sociology at Howard University. Dr. J. Rupert Picot, vice president of the National Education Association, Dr. Paul Cooke of Miner Teachers College and Dr. Sadye Yancey, Dean of Women at Howard University.

Miss Dorothy I. Height, Grand President of Delta Sigma Theta will be general chairman.

Civil Rights Victories Are Result Of Hard Work By Many People

Defender P.12 Chicago, Ill. Sat. 10-23-54

WASHINGTON — While the U. S. Supreme Court's May 17 decision outlawing segregation in the nation's schools was hailed with jubilation and shouts of triumph echoed around the world, few people stopped to realize how much toil, pain and temporary setbacks had been endured to make this momentous victory possible.

Like the recent scaling of Mt. Everest, this pinnacle in the fight for full freedom was not reached overnight. Without the groundwork so painstakingly laid years before by many individuals and organizations, it would never have become a reality.

MRS. BERTELL COLLINS WRIGHT, president of the board of directors, American Council for Human Rights.

Playing a vital, behind-the-scenes role in this step toward full freedom and joining hands with other organizations like the NAACP in a continuing fight for first-class citizenship for all, is the American Council for Human Rights. Quietly, but relentlessly, this organization has been prodding lawmakers on Capitol Hill to recognize the rights of 15 million Negro Americans.

While Congress has not passed any civil rights legislation since 1875 and although the results of the council's efforts do not always show on the surface, there can be no way to measure the good that has been accomplished, not only for Negroes but for the nation as a whole.

A cooperative program of six national collegiate fraternities and sororities, ACHR began in 1946 as an outgrowth of the National Non-Partisan Council of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority. Discussions were held among leaders of the major Greek letter societies with a view toward expanding and enlarging the program of making an effective voice for their thousands of members.

The Council was organized after formal authorization by the governing bodies of the societies and a director was appointed in August, 1948. The first president, who was the guiding spirit for three years, was Mrs. Edna Over Gray of Baltimore, Md.

The national headquarters are at 1130 Sixth st., N. W. in the heart of the nation's capital. ACHR is registered as a regular lobbying group. The six supporting societies are: Alpha Kappa Alpha, Delta Sigma Theta, Sigma Gamma Rho and Zeta Phi Beta sororities and Alpha Phi Alpha and Kappa Alpha Psi fraternities.

HENDERSON IS DIRECTOR

Director of the council is affable Elmer W. Henderson whose warm personality has made the council, a personal thing to folks across the country. A lawyer who passed the D. C. bar examinations before he finished his courses, Henderson looks more like a college professor than a lobbyist.

Born in Baltimore, Md., he received an AB from Morgan college, went on to a masters degree from the University of Chicago and then went to Georgetown U. in Washington for his law degree. He taught sociology at Dillard and Howard universities and during World War II was Midwest Regional Director of President Roosevelt's FEP Commission.

He was the plaintiff in the now famed Henderson vs. Southern Railroad co. case which, after nearly seven years of litigation, brought a U. S. Supreme Court decision in June, 1950 ending Jim Crow dining car service on all railroads.

He was also the plaintiff in the successful suit resulting in the use of the Cincinnati Airport dining room by Negro patrons in 1951. In 1952, under the auspices of the State Department, he toured five European countries studying race relations and conditions of Negro troops.

The emphasis of ACHR has been on national legislation and action by the Federal government. It formulates and presents to the president, the legislative branch, and other high government officials, programs to insure equality of participation by all groups in government functions.

In its six years of active work, frequently cooperating with the NAACP the council has:

Helped to defeat the Winstead Amendment to the Selective Service Act sponsored by Sen. Russell of Georgia and Rep. Winstead of Mississippi which would have made permanent segregation in the Armed Forces;

Blocked passage of a bill to prohibit non-segregated swimming facilities under the Interior department in Washington;

Persuaded President Truman to appoint a Negro to the advisory committee on Point Four;

Campaigned against segregation in the Armed Forces and helped to influence favorable changes;

Filed briefs as friend of the court in the Thompson restaurant case in D. C. and Negotiated a satisfactory settlement in the case of A. Maceo Smith vs. the Phillips hotel in Kansas City.

In addition, the Council has helped to draft measures and fought for the passage of the National Housing Act to aid the needs of minorities. The council program now calls for the total elimination of segregation in housing. ACHR was a "friend of the court" again in the five school cases which ended successfully last May 17. Its biggest long-range program and ultimate goal is the enactment of a Federal Fair Employment Practices law.

FEP LAWS CITED

On this, Henderson believes that the most important by-product of the council's long fight has been the voluntary passage of FEP laws in 11 states and the relaxing of rigid bars in others. So great is the threat hanging constantly over them, that even the council's most bitter foes are goaded into taking some voluntary steps towards progress rather than yield to forced pressure.

The ACHR has kept vigilant watch and given testimony at the nominating conventions of both major parties to see what kind of civil rights planks they will include.

Currently, ACHR is busy with a program of instruction for giving assistance in school integration through its 30 local councils. It has published and distributed a smart, yellow pamphlet, "Integrating Our Schools" — a program for action with the text of the historic decision.

Officers and board members are Bertell G. Wright, Delta Sigma Theta, president; Sallie N. Edwards, Sigma Gamma Rho, vice-president; Laura T. Lovelace, Alpha Kappa Alpha, corresponding secretary; Evelyn B. Pope, recording secretary, Zeta Phi Beta; W. Henry Greene, Kappa Alpha Psi, treasurer; and Aubrey E. Robinson, jr., Alpha Phi Alpha, general counsel.

Other board member are Emma M. Carter, Beatrice Fox, Edna O. Gray, Dorothy I. Height, Howard H. Long, Patricia Roberts, James E. Scott, A. Maceo Smith, Arnetta G. Wallace, J. Ernest Wilkins, Julia B. Wilson and Nancy B. Woolridge.

In Calcutta, India, recently, the question was put to labor leader, William Oliver: "Can you make it work?" The reference was to the implementing of the Supreme Court decision. ACHR believes that it can work and will work by the continuance of the joint efforts of all the people who have enlisted in the battle for "Full Freedom."

The tools to work with are intelligence, persistence and most of all, dedication.

THE SERIOUS BUSINESS of the American Council For Human Rights is reflected in the intense expressions of the board of directors during a business meeting.

ELMER HENDERSON, director of the American Council For Human Rights, was on his way to the Supreme Court to hear the decision rendered in his favor in the famous suit against the railroad dining cars when this picture was taken.

Henderson Describes Negro's Predicament

P. 7 Sentinel

WASHINGTON — Increasing unemployment and a growing sense of economic insecurity among negroes was a major finding reported by Elmer W. Henderson, director of the American Council on Human Rights, upon completion of an extensive travel schedule during the past six weeks which took him to the states of South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Texas, Missouri, California, Colorado, Nebraska, Illinois, New York and New Jersey.

The American Council on Human Rights is a cooperative program of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Sigma Gamma Rho Sorority and Zeta Phi Beta Sorority. The Council seeks Congressional legislation and executive action toward equality of citizenship and opportunity.

MET HUNDREDS

During these visits Henderson addressed meetings sponsored by local units of the Human Rights Council, conferred with community leaders and held discussions with hundreds of persons in all walks of life.

Henderson said the current retraction in our nation's economy is affecting Negroes adversely everywhere he went and the usual pattern of "first fired" is being followed. Negro workers in California seem to be particularly hard hit in both the industrial and farming regions.

INTEREST IN IKE

Henderson found great interest in steps being taken by the Eisenhower Administration but was asked over and over again when the Government Conrtacts Committee would actually order contract industries in the field to cease discrimination so that Negroes could be employed or upgraded.

Bat. 2-20-54

He reported that all over the South there is a belief among both Negroes and whites that an end to segregation is inevitable regardless of the outcome of the present school cases before the Supreme Court. there was considerable activity in southern states and cities to build new colored schools and make gestures toward equalization to postpone the coming of integrated schools.

Henderson noted a discernible fear among Negro school teachers in the South that school administrators were preparing to retaliate against them if segregated schools were abolished.

HOUSING ACUTE

Henderson saw only slight evidence of any alleviation of the acute housing problem among Negroes by the erection of new houses. The unwritten code of the home building and real estate industry in banning the sale of new houses to Negroes is still in full force. The steps to increase housing available to Negroes taken by the Eisenhower administration have not yet penetrated the industry in any significant way.

Henderson observed a growing political consciousness among Negroes and a determination to act independently. They do not seem to be wedded to any political party. "We read in the papers what they say," Henderson was told, "But we want to know what they are doing."

Henderson will make a full report on his findings to the national board of directors of ACHR at its annual meeting in March. The findings will be used to further the Council's program in Congress and with the various executive departments of the Federal Government.

ACHR HEAD REPORTS:

Belief in South that end of segregation is coming

Afro-American P. 19

WASHINGTON — Increasing unemployment and a growing sense of economic insecurity among colored persons was reported by Elmer Henderson, ACHR director, on his return from a six - weeks, tour of 12 states.

Baltimore

He reported that all over the South there is a belief among both colored and white that an end to segregation is inevitable regardless of the outcome of the present school cases before the Supreme Court.

There was considerable activity in southern states and cities to build new colored schools and to make gestures toward equalization to postpone the coming of integrated schools.

Discernible Fear

Mr. Henderson noted a discernible fear among colored school teachers in the South that school administrators were preparing to retaliate against them if segregated schools were abolished.

He saw only slight evidence of any alleviation of the acute housing problem among colored persons by the erection of new houses.

Feb. 2-13-54

The unwritten code of the home building and real estate industry in banning the sale of new houses to colored people is still in full force.

Political Upsurge

The ACHR director observed a growing political consciousness among the colored people and a determination to act independently. They do not seem to be wedded to any political party.

"We read in the papers what they say," he was told, "but we want to know what they are doing."

Mr. Henderson will make a full report on his findings to the national board of directors of ACHR at its annual meeting in March.

Council Looks For Smoother, Rapid Change

32a

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — The American Council on Human rights recently released a specially-prepared brochure on implementating the decision of the Supreme Court in school cases, Elmer W. Henderson, ACHR director, announced last week.

RAPID TRANSITION

1) Adopt as a major target, the implementation of the Supreme court decision in their communities, looking toward a smooth but rapid transition from segregation to integration in public education.

2) Each council or chapter should seek quickly to inform itself on all aspects of the school problem in its area.

P. 1

3) Support local NAACP branches in its petition to school boards to integrate the schools.

4) An action group should be formed to effect the transition and to cooperate with other groups who are interested.

5) Hold interviews with members of local school boards on precedure and timing of integration.

ISSUES INVOLVED

6) A public meeting by the Council or in cooperation with other organizations should be called to help inform the public on issues involved and to develop community support for integration.

Bum. 8-8-54

7) Special attention should be given to integration of teachers to assure that merit and fitness and not race be the criteria in the transfer, hiring or dismissal of teachers and principals.

8) Every effort should be made to prevent the gerrymandering of districts to delay integration.

9) Negro parents and children should be urged to conduct themselves with dignity and forbearance at all times for we desire friendship and understanding as well as we do integration. Remember that children have no racial hostility that is not acquired from others-usually adults.

10) We should help our constituents to see that although in many areas it would be difficult to communicate with all white citizens, the example we set through our conduct in this period will surely not be lost on them.

11) Interracial committees for special purposes should be created as rapidly as possible.

GENERAL PROGRAM

12) Committees should call on ministers, newspaper editors and opinion molders of both races to seek their cooperation in the general program.

13) Action should be taken on all college campuses to especially acquaint future teachers with the basic issues and to develop in their minds a proper attitude toward the new situation to be faced.

NEGROES ARE HARDEST HIT BY CURRENT EMPLOYMENT SAYS COUNCIL ON HUMAN RIGHTS HEAD

Twelve-State Study Shows President's Contract Committee Needs to Step Up Program

DISCRIMINATION RAMPANT EVERYWHERE

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Increasing unemployment is causing a growing sense of economic insecurity among Negroes, Elmer W. Henderson, director of the American Council on Human Rights, reported last week.

His report was based upon observations made on six week trip to South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Texas, Missouri, California, Colorado, Nebraska, Illinois, New York and New Jersey.

Ike Lauds Wilkins, Human Rights Counc

WASHINGTON — President Dwight D. Eisenhower extended his personal greetings to the annual board of directors meeting of the American Council on Human Rights held here Friday and Saturday, March 19 and 20.

The President lauded the Greek-letter council's efforts to preserve and strengthen our liberties and praised the distinguished services of J. Ernest Wilkins, newly appointed assistant secretary of labor, who is one of the ACHR directors.

At its dinner meeting on Friday Dr. Howard H. Long, dean of Central State college in Ohio presented the results of a detailed study of the ACHR program over five years which was conducted by the Commission on Evaluation of which he was chairman. The report will be made public later.

The following officers were elect ed or re-elected for the coming year: Mrs. Bertell Collins Wright, president; Mrs. Sallie Nuby Edwards, vice president; Mrs. Laura T. Lovelace, corresponding secretary; Miss Evelyn B. Pope, recording secretary; Dr. W. Henry Greene, treasurer; Atty. Aubrey E. Robinson, jr., General counsel.

Other members of the board of directors are: Mrs. Emma Manning Carter, Mrs. Beatrice W. Fox, Mrs. Edna Over Gray, Miss Dorothy I. Height, Miss Patricia Roberts, Mr. James E. Scott, Mr. A. Maceo Smith, Honorable J. Ernest Wilkins, Mrs. Julia B. Wilson and Dr. Nancy B. Woolridge.

Dr. Lawless Is Named To Policy Body

Birmingham Ala. Tues. 11-16-54

CHICAGO — (SNS) — Dr. Theodore K. Lawless of Chicago, a Negro who gained recognition as the country's foremost dermatologist, was among the new members named to the policy committee of the "For America" organization, it was announced yesterday.

Gen. Robert E. Wood and Dean Clarence Manion, co-chairmen, made the announcement at the Chicago headquarters.

The organization was launched last May as a non-profit educational corporation "to promote peace and national defense; patriotic nationalism, to ppose all forms of totalitarianism and loss of American independence in super internationalism."

Other new policy committee members include Gen. A. C. Wedemeyer, Gen. Mark Clark, Gen. James A. Van Fleet, Frank E. Gannett of Rochester, N. Y., Mrs. Burton K. Wheeler of Washington, Roger McCormick of Chicago, and more than 30 others.

New Political Alignment Group Formed On 'States Rights' Base

32a

CHICAGO, May 7 (AP)—A new organization called "For America" was founded today to "combat super-internationalism and communism."

The founders said the group is not a new political party but served notice that it will enter the fall elections "to fight within both parties for congressmen and senators who have the same principles" as the organization.

The new unit was formed at a luncheon in the Chicago Club. The host was Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of the Chicago Tribune. In recent months the Tribune has been publishing a series of articles reporting sentiment among people throughout the nation in favor of political realignment.

Clarence E. Manion and Robert E. Wood were named co-chairmen. Wood headed the America First Committee, which opposed U.S. participation in World War II until Pearl Harbor. He recently retired as chairman of Sears, Roebuck & Co.

Manion, former dean of the University of Notre Dame Law School, resigned as head of a government commission after he spoke out for the Bricker amendment.

Under the Bricker amendment controls would be placed on treaty making.

Members of the organizing committee are Burton Wheeler, former Democratic senator from Montana; John T. Flynn, New York author; Howard Buffett, former Nebraska congressman; Hamilton Fish, former GOP congressman from New York, and Manion.

Daniel Rice, Chicago broker, was named treasurer.

Fish told newsmen that the organization is "no third party." He said it will be nonpartisan and nationwide. He added that it will take an active role in the November elections and will "fight within both parties" for candidates who share the group's views.

During the discussions at the luncheon table Fish spoke to fellow diners about "political realignment."

He also made public the new organization's declaration of principles. This did not mention realignment but indicated that realignment, if attempted and achieved, would come from working within the existing major political parties.

"We can have five miillon members in no time and can sweep the country like a prairie fire," Fish told the founders.

He said the organization could get started on a $500,000 fund.

The declaration of principles sets forth that it is "dedicated to God and country" for these purposes:

"To save America, regardless of party.

"To promote peace.

"To restore and uphold our Constitution as our basic law.

"To safeguard our freedoms from our enemies within and without.

"To provide adequate armed forces to protect our sovereignty and rights of our citizens throughout the world

"To oppose so-called preventive wars, or 'police actions.'

"To stop sending our American boys to fight all over the world without the consent of Congress.

"To combat super-internationalism, one-worldism and communism.

"To use every legitimate means to prevent squandering and giving away our money and resources, a burden that falls upon all Americans, threatening our financial, economic and political structure, and that can only end in bankruptcy and ruin, thereby aiding any nation planning world conquest.

"To demand the return to Americanism, enlightened nationalism and keeping our own interest uppermost instead of our costly, dangerously imperialistic foreign policy of tragic super-interventionism, and policing the world singlehanded with American blood and treasure.

"To organize For America on states rights basis to support candidates in 1954 and thereafter who are in accord with the principles herein enunciated."

Fish, in the discussion at the luncheon table, said internationalism had taken over the press, television and radio.

B'nai B'rith Leader Hits Med School 'Discrimination'

NEW YORK—(UP)—The head of B'nai B'rith's Anti-Defamation League declared Saturday that racial and religious discrimination are practiced by the nation's medical school admittance boards and "is both bad medicine and bad public relations."

The league official, Henry E. Schultz, said a study of medical college admittance records showed that 20,000 qualified applicants seek entrance into medical institutions every year and only 7,000 are accepted.

He pointed out that the President's committee on health needs of the nation predicted a shortage of 30,000 doctors in the country by 1960.

Schultz said the public's awareness that discriminatory practices against would-be medical students act against the best interests of the nation "has brought about a new type of tactic by the men who are still intent on keeping minority group members out of the medical colleges."

"Members of the medical college admittance boards have blossomed out as amateur psychologists," he said.

"In many cases the rejected candidate with grades far above the average finds that board members object to his diction, gestures and grooming."

The ADL chief then cited a statement by Dr. A. C. Ivy of the University of Illinois that "the time will soon come when medical schools will not be accredited unless they offer positive proof that they do not discriminate for reasons of race, religion or economic background."

Alex Miller Is Named To New Post In N. Y.

The appointment of Alexander F. Miller of Atlanta as National Community Service Director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith was announced today by William P. Bloom, chairman of the League's Southern Board.

For the past ten years, Mr. Miller has been Southern Director of the Anti-Defamation League with headquarters in Atlanta. In that capacity, he was responsible for the direction of the League's program for the bettering of human relations throughout the South.

In his new position, Miller will supervise the entire field operations of the Anti-Defamation League.

Miller will assume his new responsibilities at the national headquarters of the League in New York City on March 15.

Miller resides at 1369 Springdale Road, N. E. He is married and the father of two children. His family will remain in Atlanta until the conclusion of the current school year.

Christians, Jews Scored By CIO, Explain Interracial Program

The Defender

The National Conference of Christians and Jews, and many staunch supporters, were shocked recently when the Congress of Industrial Organizations withdrew support of the conference because of "basic differences" over discrimination.

Chicago Ill.

Officials for the CIO said the action was taken because some of the affiliated bodies of the conference, "especially in the South," openly engaged in discriminatory practices such as excluding Negroes from their deliberations or according them only limited participation.

Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, president of the organization, which was founded in 1928, admitted that charges of segregation in Southern cities, as cited by the CIO, were true.

Clinchy declared the original purpose of the organization, which grew out of the National Council of Churches, was to fight religious bigotry and prejudices, but conceded the time has come to "fight prejudice across the board."

Sat. 1-9-54

The NCCJ head contended also that the organization has changed its policy over the years to keep pace with changing times. Clinchy said:

"The conference has done more and more in the field of race relations. It is my hope that all of our operations will approach the problem of human relations as Americans. I am for integration and the end of segregation."

Here are some of the CCJ gains cited by Clinchy:

P. 9

TELLS PROGRESS

"Americans who are Negroes have no better advocates than the citizens who are Catholics, Jews and Protestants in the National Conference of Christians and Jews. These citizens, working for the "Justice, amity, understanding and cooperation" that are our objectives, realize that progress towards interracial justice will be faster in some sections, slower in others. But on both sides of the Mason-Dixon line overall developments are encouraging. Much work remains to be done.

As recently as this month, when NCC held its first formal civic dinner in Louisville, Ky., Negroes and whites dined together in a major hotel. Mr. John Kenna, our Kentucky Director, was cited last March for his work in interracial relations by the Louisville Defender. We have broken the color line in our human relations workshops at the University of Kentucky.

"Jackie Robinson is our Community Organization Chairman for Brotherhood Week 1954 and will make a brotherhood speaking tour to Pittsburgh, Detroit, South Bend, St. Louis and Tulsa under the banner of NCCJ.

"In the Dallas, Texas Thanksgiving celebration, whites and Negroes met in the Palace Theatre with no signs of discrimination. All citizens sat together on the platform and in the audience.

STUDY TOGETHER

"In Dade County, Fla., Negroes and white teachers study and work together on common U. S. human relations problems—another NCCJ "first" in that state.

"In Dade County, Fla., Negroes NCCJ's "Anytown, U.S.A." project now in its second year is a conspicuous example of interracial cooperation and progress.

"In Tennessee, the Memphis State College summer workshop for educators was bi-racial for the second successive year. NCCJ led again.

In Charlotte, North Carolina, NCCJ held the first inter-racial high school institute on human relations, Jews, Catholics, Protestants, Negroes and whites together.

"In Delaware, the Catholic co-chairman of our Delaware chapter, State Chancellor Collins Seitz, is the person who wrote the decision now before the Supreme Court ending segregation in Delaware public schools.

"Ever since it first started its seminars 20 years ago in the Hotel Willard in Washington, D.C., until this year at the Mayflower Hotel in the same city, NCCJ insisted that all its constituents, Negroes and whites, should be received together and treated equally. In 1953, a considerable number of American leaders who are Negroes took important roles in panels, chaired various sessions, and made major addresses in the Annual Meeting of the National Conference of Christians and Jews. They were treated in every way precisely as all other delegates.

"Practically every labor-management seminar sponsored by the NCCJ in our large industrial cities such as Newark, Rome, New York, Milwaukee, San Francisco and many others has had a Negro consultant. In our recently released labor-management film, "Chuck Hanson, One Guy," Dr. Harold Lett of the New Jersey State Commission Against Discrimination played the major role.

"The National Conference of Christians and Jews is opposed to all forms of prejudice and discrimination wherever that may occur.

NCCJ is one of the organizations which continuously, for 25 years, has had whites and Negroes on its national board, on its national commions and in its operating program. Even though our original primary purpose has been to buck religious prejudice, we have cooperated fully with the specialized organizations in the race relations field such as NAACP, the Urban League, and the church and synagogue race relations societies.

We extend New Year Greetings to Defender readers with the earnest hope for speedier progress in all human relations toward the brotherhood of the family of mankind under the Fatherhood of God."

Dr. Mitchell Tells How South Can Implement High Court Decision

BY WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

An almost capacity crowd filled the banquet room of the Butler Street YMCA yesterday to hear Dr. George Mitchell tell how integration can effectively be implemented in the South.

Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council cited instances of early days when famous trials stirred the South over the race issue. By contrast, he mentioned another trial.

"Bigger than any of the rest; diffused, centered in no one town, pervading a seventeen Southern states and more," the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court outlawing segregation in the public schools.

CONCEPT OF DEMOCRACY

"The trial is whether the concept of democracy, cherished in the Western world, is in these Southern states, broad enough and deep enough and strong enough to accept a national decision that all American children should have access to the same public educational facilities at the same time."

Dr. Mitchell believes the outcome of this trial is among the most serious issues of today. He believes that if the tradition of democracy particularly in the South is strong enough to enable a reasonable transition to equal status for all, the Western world would have won a battle. Such a battle, Dr. Mitchell indicated, would logically give the millions of peoples in Asia, Africa and other parts of the world a premis on which to build for the future.

The Executive Director of the Southern Regional Council stated further that:

WRITTEN CONSTITUTION

"For all the books that the social scientists have written, I have never seen one that could measure the extent to which a people posses democracy. What kind of a written constitution you have isn't much of a test; most of the constitutions are pretty similar, but beneath them the degree of democracy varies widely from nation to nation, from state to state."

Dr. Mitchell stated further that "To my mind, the test is in the security and independence of each even the humblest individual citizen, and the community's accumulated store of experience in doing things in the democratic way."

With this, Dr. Mitchell says the South comes far down on the scale.

Pointing out some of the shortcomings of the region, Dr. Mitchell questions the status of the South, socially, economically and politcally.

LONG-TERM WRITTEN LEASES

He asks if all Southerners have 'neat white-painted houses, do they feel reasonably safe in their jobs; do the farmers either own their land or have long-term written leases on it, and is everybody in the region free to vote?

"Not until the answers to these questions can be yes will it be accurate to say that the South has become a strong democracy," he added.

Dr. Mitchell believes democracy and morality, democracy and religion fit together and complement each other.

"It may be the case that in those areas of the South in which democratic allegiance to the law of the land is weakest, religion and morality can come forward to fill the breach." He furthed stated that:

"Happily, the religious forces of the South, at least through their leadership, have generally made it plain that they see the moral issues involved, and wish churches and their members to live up to the principles.

The Regional Council executive believes that one way to help effectively implement the Supreme Court's decision is to begin working with small community groups.

In almost every community, Dr. Mitchell believes, there are white people who don't want segregation anymore than Negroes do. He feels that it will eventualy takes groups of this nature to begin proceedings of settling community school problems in a cooperative fashion. When this fails as a last resort, he said, then it is time to use the courts.

The first series of the Hungry Club sessions, Dr. Mitchell was presented to the audience by Dr. R. O. Johnson.

Racial Leaders Air Problems Of Education

By IRVING FANG

Alabama men and women of two races sat down together here yesterday to discuss a common question — what lies ahead for Alabama schools?

The approximately 100 whites and Negroes assembled for the eighth annual meeting of the Alabama Division of the Southern Regional Council, which studies mutual problems of Negro and white [illegible]

Sparkplug of the session was Dr. Alonzo Davis, of Tuskegee Institute, who outlined an eight-point program for improving the status of Negro children in the school system.

Davis Offers Ideas

Dr. Davis, professor of psychology and dean of the school of education, suggested:

1. Pressure on school boards for action on student needs.
2. Leaders of both races to plan programs together.
3. Studying methods of de-segregation elsewhere so that it can be accomplished with the least friction.
4. Aiding teachers forced out by competition for jobs to adjust to new occupations.
5. Voting for advanced edcational legislation.
6. Supporting Negroes for school boards.
7. Supporting Negroes more acceptable to whites on a personal basis.

Explaining the last point, which he said often rankles Negroes, Dr. Davis added, "When the majority groups say you cannot legislate attitudes, I must admit they are right.

"We must try to win their hearts by making ourselves more acceptable."

Educator's Viewpoint

The Tuskegee professor spoke at a panel discussion, taking the point of view of an educator.

Also on the panel were Mrs. L. F. Maurer, of Gunter AFB, who spoke from a parent's point of view, and Clay Long, of Andalusia, who spoke from a high school student's point of view. Both are white.

Mrs. Maurer said the greatest obstacle to de-segregation is the fear that it would not work successfully. She pointed to the military services' de-segregation as proof that is has worked.

However, she said, "I do not believe a solution to the problem should be forced by either side. If the majority wants separate schools, they should have them, but all schools should be equal."

Long opposed immediate deseg-regation in the public schools, saying students were not ready, but favored non-segregation in the colleges.

Non-Segregation Is Answer

"The ultimate answer is complete non-segregation in the schools," he said. "The real problem is not where we should go, but how will we get there.

"College students are more mature (than those in lower grades) and Negro and white students would have much in common in goals and aims."

The Rev. J. Clyde Perry, Negro, Birmingham, looking at the problem from a minister's viewpoint, suggested a search of the scriptures for the answer to segregation.

"Each child of God should work out his destiny according to his ability," he advised.

Dr. Davis based his eight-point plan on two basic assumptions. One is that integration in schools is inevitable. The other is that the integration will be gradual.

"I am not a prophet of gradualism," he argued. "Those who offer the opium of eventuality to a minority group . . . are really trying to put the minority group to sleep."

He Advises Pressure

He advised putting great pressure to bear to get desired changes, on the knowledge there will be considerable opposition to change. This reaction of forces will result in gradual change, he forecast.

In an afternoon session, the group re-elected all officers for another year. They are the Rev. Dan Whitsett, Sylacauga, chairman; Dr. W. A. Bell, president of Miles College for Negroes in Birmingham, vice chairman; the Rev. Thomas B. Thrasher, Montgomery, secretary, and J. T. Brooks, Negro, Montgomery, treasurer.

Elected to the executive committee for three-year terms were Dr. Arthur B. Gray, Talladega College; the Rev. J. D. Hunter, Alexander City; the Rev. Powers McLeod, Andalusia, and C. V. Henley, Birmingham.

The role of the press in preparing citizens for democracy in public education was the subject of an afternoon panel. Participating were Emory L. Jackson, editor of the Negro Birmingham World; Charles Dobbins, editor of the Montgomery Examiner, and Robert Durr, editor of the Negro Birmingham Weekly Review.

Integration Is Project

Jackson said, "Integration in schools is our project and our fight, and it will be our victory."

Dobbins said a newspaper is obligated to "present our story from the viewpoint of patriotic Americans. . . . How can we win against a powerful enemy when we in our country are divided?"

Durr said, "The Negro press will go on as a protest press. . . . If we want to wipe out the communism that is sweeping across the face of the earth, we will have to learn to work together."

The annual session of the council was opened by Dr. H. C. Trenholm, president of the State Teachers College.

Southern Council given $240,000

ATLANTA (ANP) — A grant totaling $240,000 was approved last week for the Southern Regional Council to help defray expenses of the organization's educational program in some 12 southern states.

The Fund for the Republic, formed by the Ford Foundation in December, 1952, has as its purpose the preservation and extention of those individual rights which are the American heritage.

To Aid Employment

Most of the grant will be used to enable the state groups to employ professional staff persons, white and colored.

The Southern Regional Council was founded in 1944. It is an outgrowth of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. The council, like the commission before it, has sought to unite southern leadership regardless of race.

DESPITE IMPROVED LIBRARY FACILITIES:

Southern Council survey reports full freedom to read in Dixie still denied

ATLANTA (ANP) — Although 59 cities and towns give colored readers full service in their main libraries, freedom to read in the South does not exist, a survey taken by Southern Regional Council revealed last week.

In no state with separate library facilities are they equal, and in only two states can it be said that colored readers have reasonable access to library facilities.

In five states readers may not darken the door of a main library except for limited service, and two of these do not allow colored readers to use the main library.

Survey and Comments

This survey and comments on libraries for colored use in the South were recently revealed in the January edition of The New South, official publication of the Southern Regional Council.

This edition reported on a survey of 172 southern cities taken in 1953 by the SRC and featured an article, "Where Can a Southern Negro Read a Book?" by L. D. Reddix, chief librarian of Atlanta University.

The states of Mississippi and South Carolina do not permit colored use of any main library under any circumstances. The only libraries open to him are jim-crow spots not nearly as good as those for whites.

Limited Use Permitted

In Louisiana, Alabama and Georgia, citizens do not have the full use of any main library but do have limited use of six in Louisiana and one each in Georgia and Alabama.

In Kentucky, 21 cities open their main libraries to all citizens regardless of race, and in Texas, 18 cities do likewise. For other southern states the totals are Virginia, 6, North Carolina, 4, Tennessee, 4, Oklahoma, 3, Florida, 2, and Arkansas, 1.

The only large cities offering unrestricted uses of main libraries are Louisville, Ky.; Little Rock, Ark.; Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla.; Knoxville, and Nashville, Tenn.; Fort Worth, Houston, Austin and San Antonio, Tex.; Norfolk, Va. and Miami, Fla.

Barred in Some Cities

New Orleans and Birmingham offer limited use of the main library. Such large southern cities as Atlanta, Memphis, Richmond and others do not permit readers to use their main public libraries.

On the honor roll of democracy are 11 cities that allow unrestricted use of all libraries, main and branch. These are:

Jacksonville and Miami, Fla.; Louisville, Ky.; Burlington, N.C.; Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla.; El Paso and San Antonio, Tex., and Fredericksburg, Norfolk, and Roanoke, Va.

Library Workers

Three southern cities have colored workers on their library boards — Louisville, Roanoke, Va. and Winston-Salem, N.C.

The above picture of library facilities open to minorities, although bad, represents great progress in this field since 1941, when only 16 communities in the South gave any type of service in their main public libraries.

Mr. Reddick summed up the library situation in the South as follows:

"Two thirds of the colored people have no library service whatever, even though over a million of these live in communities where library service is provided for white readers.

Segregated Facilities

"Most of the 3,000,000-odd minority citizens who do have access to some sort of a library, live in a community that has a 'colored branch' in it somewhere."

Although, "jim crow or no library" is the practice in the South, Mr. Reddick revealed that there are few legal barriers to unsegregated libraries in Dixie.

Cost of Segregation

Mr. Reddick said it would cost the South $20,000,000 to build enough separate branch libraries to serve the potential colored reading public. His solution is:

". . . Forget the color line, consider a reader a reader, open all public libraries to the whole public."

Letter To The Editor

To the World-Editor:

During the month of Feb. under the auspices of the South. Regional Council, I visited thirty-eight Alabama communities. The purpose of my trip was to induce rational discussion of the possible impact on the local community of the desegregation of the public schools. I am taking this occasion to thank the many people who were willing to listen to my story, even though, in some cases, they did not agree with my point of view.

I found most of the people to whom I talked had not thought through this problem in any thorough fashion; and to some of them, it came as a shock to discover that the fears they expressed and some of the predictions they made had so little real substance. For example, the prediction that rioting and disorder will follow the breakdown of segregation is not supported by the historical instances of similar drastic changes. The prediction will hold only in the event of the failure of law enforcement agencies and in the absence of calm and rational community leadership.

Again, there seems to be no truth to the statement so frequently heard that most Negro leaders in Alabama want segregation to continue. Those to whom I talked expressed a contrary point of view. As one Negro principal put it, "Even if the schools could be made equal, I hope that the Supreme Court knocks segregation out because I just don't like to have someone shut a door in my face."

The most glaring inconsistency, however, is contained in the assertion that, if desegregation becomes a reality, "there won't be a Negro teacher in Alabama." Granting the sincerity of this apparent concern for Negro teachers, the question arises: Who is going to replace these Negro teachers who will lose their jobs? There is now all over the country a shortage of teachers, particularly elementary teachers; and the increase in the school population promises to make the shortage more acute in the next few years. Teachers' salaries are low. Last year over 150,000 teachers left the profession for other better-paying jobs. Meanwhile only 75,000 new teachers came into the profession. Where then would teachers be secured if all the Negro teachers in Alabama and other southern states were thrown out?

The most recent, available statistics seem to indicate that, on the basis of training and experience, the Negro teachers are, on the average, only slightly below the whites, and, in several counties, actualy are better qualified in terms of these criteria. Even if the damaging admission is made that there is a lower standard of qualification for Negroes than for whites, there is probably not a single county in which the least qualified white teacher is better than the average Negro teacher.

I talked to several school superintendents during my recent trip. These administrators know who the qualified teachers are, Negro and white. They know, too, the difficult circumstances under which many of these teachers work. They are aware of the wide disparity of facilities. I do not believe that all of them, or even the majority of them, would countenance the weakening of the school systems they administer at the behest of an outmoded theory of white supremacy.

In this conection, it is sometimes pointed out, with complete irrelevance, that "of the 133,000 Negro teachers employed in the United States, only 20,000 are employed in the North, East and West. The remaining 113,000 are employed in the 17 states and the District of Columbia where segregation is required." Of course, the most obvious explanation of the relatively small number of Negro teachers in the North and East is that the heavy influx of Negroes from southern communities into these areas in recent years has been comprised almost entirely of unskilled Negro laborers. It is not at all surprising that so few of these migrants have become teachers. It ought to be remembered, too, that the North and East offer a much wider occupational selection than does the South, where teaching is about the only thing an academically trained Negro can find to do.

In the event that desegregation occurs, Alabama, unlike some of the border states, will probably not find it necessary to abandon many schools because of small enrollments. It is entirely likely that more, rather than fewer, schools and teachers will be needed in the near future. My contacts in Alabama lead me to believe that whatever steps are taken will be in the interest of the children, Negro and white, who are, or should be, the major consideration.

State Parks And Inequality

In its publication, "New South", for April-May, 1954, the Southern Regional council has produced facts and figures which illustrate in the area of state parks, the bankruptcy of the "separate but equal" doctrine when applied to life and living in our modern society. The more a state or community adopts a policy of providing public services out of tax funds, the more it becomes utterly impossible to provide two sets of facilities dispensing those public services one for whites and another for Negroes. State parks constitute an excellent illustration.

The State of Texas, for instance, in 1952 had forty-five state park areas for whites and NONE for Negroes. Any idea of attempting to duplicate these forty-five state parks, so as to provide on a separate basis the same park facilities for every Texas Negro which are provided for every Texas white person, is so fantastically impossible as a practical matter that it points up the historical truth that the "separate but equal" doctrine was never intended to provide equal treatment to Negroes on a separate basis. The historical purpose of segregation, not only in schools, but in every area where public services have been undertaken at public expense has been to provide a scheme and a mechanism by which all or most of the public funds could be spent for the public enjoyment of white people and little or none for the public enjoyment of Negroes.

It would have been easy, for instance, in the early days of the public schools. to have taken the money available for building public schools, and divided it by two, and then to have built two schools exactly alike of whatever size and quality the money available would buy. Instead, a good school was built for whites, even if it took all of the money available, and then any kind of makeshift arrangement was made for Negroes. In many cases, like Charleston, South Carolina, for instance, no attempt whatsoever was made until very recent years to provide any type of public high school education for Negroes.

Public hospitals have been another crude and crass illustration of the p remeditated fraud and hoax of the "separate but equal" doctrine. In most cases, there is not even any pretense that the facilities for Negro patients are equal to those for whites, and the exclusion of a Negro patient's doctor from the hospital to which his patient is sent only adds to the insult of the inequality which historyp shows conclusively has always been the real purpose of those responsible for the "separate but equal" fraud and hoax. Indeed, a prize should be offered to anybody who can point to a single "separate" public facility for Negroes that is "equal" to the one for whites.

DE-SEGREGATION LITERATURE

The Southern Regional Council has published another significant pamphlet on school de-segregation entitled, "Answers for Action Schools in the South." You can get a copy for twenty cents by writing to the Southern Regional Council, 63 Auburn Avenue, N. E., Atlanta 3, Georgia. This should be must reading for P-T. A. leaders and members, the Alabama State Federation of Civic Leagues, social clubs, business groups, religious bodies and labor unions. It should be good source material for youth forums; a handbook for "Men's Day," "Women's Day," "Youth Day" speakers; and every-occasion speakers. Even some speakers at the Birmingham Hungry Club could give a review of the contents of this school de-segregation booklet. Parents should get a copy of it and discuss it at the dinner table with their friends and the members of their families.

The only large cities offering unrestricted uses of main libraries are Louisville, Ky., Little Rock, Ark., Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla. Knoxville, and Nashville, Tenn., Fort Worth, Houston, Austin and San Antonio, Tex., Norfolk, Va., and Miami, Fla.

The above picture of library facilities open to Negroes, although bad, represents great progress in this field since 1941 when only 16 communities in the South gave any type of service to Negroes in their main public libraries.

Reddick summed up the library situation for Negroes in the South as follows:

Although jimcrow or no library is the practice in the South, Reddick revealed that there are very few legal barriers to unsegregated libraries in Dixie. State laws are of three types:

1. Those permitting cities, towns and counties to set up their own.
2. Those calling for a state library, usually in the capital.
3. Those with library commission to set up a library program for the state especially in small towns and rural communities.

Race is seldom mentioned in any of these laws.

Reddick said it would cost the South $20,000,000 to build enough separate branch libraries to serve the potential Negro reading public. His solution is:

"...Forget the color line, consider a reader a reader, open all public libraries to the whole public; and establish branches, stations, mobile routes and units with regard to the principles of library organization and without regard to the skin color of the actual and potential readers."

SCR head calls for mixed school boards

NEW YORK—George A. Mitchell, executive director of the Southern Regional Council, called for integrated school boards at a recent meeting sponsored by the National Committee for Rural Schools.

Mr. Mitchell declared that "the time has come to pass in which the most important and largest public service, namely the schools, cannot be successfully operated within the customary white monopoly of government."

"The coming desegregation of the schools," he continued, "makes the old injustice of white administration of the institutions unsupportable."

Regional Council Gets Ford Grant

The Fund for the Republic of the Ford Foundation has approved a grant of $240,000 to assist the Southern Regional Council's educational program in 12 Southern states for a period of 18 months, according to the Council with headquarters at 63 Auburn Avenue. N. E

In a statement issued by the executive committee, the Council said:

"The fund for the Republic, which was established by the Fourd Foundation in December, 1952, is concerned with preserving and extending those individual rights which are the essence of our American heritage.

"The Southern Regional Council, since its founding in 1944, has expressed that concern as it exists among thoughtful people of both races in the South.

"As the successor to the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, the Council goes back, in experience and good will, to 1919. Its aim is the attainment of equal opportunity for all the people of the South."

The grant, with other contributions, will be used to make "stronger and more independent state bodies," the Council said. It plans a governing board and officers for each affiliated state organization, which will have its own membership.

"The greater part of the newly available funds will be used to enable the state groups to employ professional staff persons, white and Negro," the Council said. "Thus each Southern state will have a full-time human relations service, available to both public officials and private citizens, maintained and directed by local leadership."

States to be included are Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucy, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia

The Council believes that interracial boards of directors provide an approach "well suited to the human relations needs of the South. It puts major reliance where it belongs — on local responsibility and initiative — and it gives opportunity for the constructive forces in every Southern state to work effectively."

On the question of racial segregation in public schools, the Council said:

"The impending Supreme Court decision on public school segregation — whatever it may be — will call for all that is best and most responsible in Southern life. Fortunately there is abundant and growing evidence today of Southern willingness to find positive, democratic solutions to the problems of the region.

"It is our hope and belief that the Southern Regional Council, through its expanded state services, will make an important contribution to this effort."

George S. Mitchell is executive director of the Council. Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University, is chairman of the Executive Committee. Members of the committee include Attorney C. M Birnie, Atlanta; Rev. A. S. Turnipseed, Montgomery, Ala.; Very Rev. Maurice V. Shean, Rockhill, S. C.; Prof. John A. Griffin of Emory University; Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological Seminary, and Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn., Regional Director CIO.

The Board of Directors include Georgians Attorney Morris B. Abram, Atlanta; Mrs. Grace T. Hamilton, Atlanta; Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College; L. D. Milton, Atlanta; Dr. J. McDowell Richards, Decatur; Morton Weiss, Atlanta; Miss Josephine Wilkins, Athens, and Dr. B. R. Brazeal, dean of Morehouse College.

Southern Group Looks to Future

Regional Council Revamping Setup

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES

ATLANTA, Ga.—The Southern Regional Council, Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director, is revamping and enlarging its organization to meet the challenge of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation public school ruling in the South.

Through expanded state services, made possible by a $240,000 grant from the Ford Foundation's Fund for the Republic, the council plans to make itself strongly felt while influencing local opinion and public action.

Twelve states of the South will have a director and there will be assistant directors for most states, including Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

THE COUNCIL is composed of "people of the South who have risen above the problems of race," an official explained. "It is badly needed to think through these problems . . . it serves as an organization linking people of like minds and thoughts . . . as a sort of morale booster."

The official also explained that there was "no provincial feeling" in the Southern Regional Council, an interracial organization comprised of representatives from all states in the section.

"It has seemed to us that the most effective way to approach our problems is as Southerners, to demonstrate in the South that there is an impulse to do right within the area, and to refute the old lie that no Southerner would be for right," he said.

THE ATLANTA office—located in the Wesley Memorial Church at Auburn Avenue and Ivy Street, N. E.—is a beehive of activity, coordinating and servicing state groups and individual members throughout the region. Workers employ fact-finding, conference and persuasion in getting toward the objective—equal opportunity for all the people of the South.

Few racial advances in the area have not been influenced wholly or in part by the council or its influential members. It is the successor to the Commision on Interracial Cooperation.

EXECUTIVE committee of the organization consists of: Marion A. Wright, Linville Falls, N. C., president; Carter Wesley, Houston, Texas; Gordon B. Hancock, Richmond, Va.; A. W. Dent, New Orleans, La., and Alfred Mynders, Chattanooga, Tenn., vice president; Rufus E. Clement, Atlanta, chairman of executive committee; Leonard Haas, Atlanta, counsel; Dr. George M. Mitchell, executive director; Harold Fleming, assistant director; Mrs. C. M. Birnie, Atlanta; the Rev. A. S. Turnipseed, Montgomery, Ala.; the Rev. Maurice V. Shean, John A. Griffin and Harry V. Richardson, Atlanta, and Paul R. Christopher, Knoxville, Tenn., committeemen.

Regional Council Group Receives Fund Approval

ATLANTA, Ga. — A grant of $240,000 to assist the educational program of the Southern Regional Council was approved by the Fund for the Republic, a branch member of the Ford Foundation since 1952. The Fund is concerned with the principles of extending and preserving fundamental human rights.

The Council, founded in 1944, will extend its educational program in twelve states for an 18-month period. Its primary aim is to achieve equality of opportunity for all people in the South and has sought to unite the best of Southern thought and leadership without regard for racial distinctions.

Dr. Bethune, 79, flys to Switzerland for meetina

NEW YORK — Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, shortly after celebrating her 79th birthday annivery here, left by plane for Switzerland, last Tuesday, to attend the World Assembly For Brotherhood.

Interviewed upon her departure, the president-emeritus of Bethune-Cookman College was enthusiastic in her endorsement of the Supreme Court's decision that segregation in the nation's schools was unconstitutional.

"The recent decision on school segregation by the U.S. Supreme Court has been the greatest mandate that has come since the Emancipation Proclamation," declared Dr. Bethune.

Envisions "New Day"

Further commenting on the "segregation" ruling of the Nation's highest court, she added:

"We are coming into a New Day, and no one should pay any attention to what is being said in certain sections of the country such as from Georgia and other such states—it is only fear that these states now have."

Dr. Bethune will remain in Switzerland until July 29, when she will fly to Windsor, Ont., for a six-day visit.

Accompanying her on this trip was Mrs. G .D. Rogers, widow of the late G. D. Rogers, fomerly president, Central Life Insurance Company of Georgia.

Prior to her departure, Mrs. Bethune was feted with a birthday party at the Theresa Hotel where hundreds of friends gathered to express best wishes for her journey and to show appreciation for her splenlid leadership throughout the years.

Hundreds of congratulatory telegrams were received and many, many flowers. Mrs. Bethune's birthay, which was July 10, was also elaborately celebrated in Florida before she came north to make her flight abroad.

MEET AT CONFERENCE, CAUX, Switzerland — Miss Carol Deane (right), daughter of U. S. Congressman Charles Deane of North Carolina, is shaking hands with Richard Brown, professor of mathematics at the Blue Field State College in West Virginia, where both attended the world conference for moral armament in Caux, Switzerland. Dr. Bethune finds atmosphere for world peace at Moral Re-Armament assembly

CAUX, Switzerland — Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune, past president, National Association of Colored Women of America, told the World Assembly for Moral Re-Armament last week, she had seen at Caux "an ideology that goes beyond race or creed or color or religion."

Describing the "craving of the entire world for peace," Dr. Bethune said she has found at Caux "the uniting atmosphere" that could create peace.

Dr. Bethune, founder of Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Florida, said her visit to Caux had fulfilled "the yearning of my life over the years."

Finds Short Comings

"I have always been a fighter for the things I believed to be right," she said, "but since coming here I have found how lacking I have been in places I thought I was most effective.

"I felt I had done very well, but as I faced myself against the four absolute standards of MRA-honesty, purity, unselfishness and love - I knew I must right-about - face in order to inject this new stream into the lives of thousands and thousands of people I have been privileged to teach.

"I thank God for my days here for the restoration that has been determined in my own soul and the hope for my beloved country, America, that every individual there of every color and creed may see and catch what I have seen and caught during these past days."

Answers For World

Dr. Bethune said a meeting of the type held in the Swiss town gives fully the answers by which a divided world can overcome the forces of destruction.

"We see no segregation, no discrimination, no greed in the hearts and minds of men in such an assembly," she stated. Here we see a "thinking and working and planning on a basis of what is right.

Building Together

"At Caux, we people of all races and nations are learning to free ourselves from the shackles of materialism so that we may build together a new world with freedom, prosperity and justice for all."

Attending the assembly with Dr. Bethune was Mrs. G. D. Rogers Sr., of Tampa, Fla. Among the other United States representatives were Belford Lawson, Washington attorney, and Prof. and Mrs. Richard Brown of Bluefield State College, Bluefield, W. Va.

Negro Scientists At Chemical Group Meet

Call Fri 10-7-54

By GLADYS P. GRAHAM

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Negro scientists were among some 12,000 registered from this country and abroad at the record making sessions of the American Chemical Society in its 126th meeting here last week.

Included among those who attended the conference which had its headquarters at the Hotel Statler was:

Dr. Samuel P. Massie, chairman of Fisk university's department of chemistry. A native of Little Rock, Ark., and a holder of a doctorate from Iowa State college, Dr. Massie was one of six teachers who recently participated in a symposium on Putting the Plus Into College Teaching featured at the national meeting of the American Society which met in Kansas City.

He was the first Negro to be indicated as president of the Oklahoma Academy of Science. This occurred during his tenure on the staff at Langston university.

Dr. Massie, whose articles have been published in the Proceedings of the Oklahoma Academy of Science, Proceedings of the Tennessee Academy of Science, Beta Kappa Chi Journal and Iowa State Journal, among others, holds a grant of $18,000 from the National Cancer Institute for research on cancer drugs.

The noted scientist did industrial research on government war projects during World War II.

Other Negro scientists who attracted attention at the meeting included those who presented papers at the sessions. They were:

Dr. K. A. Huggins, chairman, department of chemistry, Atlanta university; Prof. H. S. McBay, Morehouse. Chemist National C Johnson, Universal Match Company, St. Louis, Mo., and Chemist G. J. Potter, Pulp and Paper Research Institute of (Montreal) Canada.

From Industry and government were noted Dr. Lloyd Cooke, Visking Corporation, Chicago, counellor of the Chicago section and chairman elect of the Chicago section; Chemist Lloyd Hall, Griffith Laboratories, Chicago, a veteran of some 37 creative years in the field. Vincent Wilmot, Printing Inks and Varnishes, Hope Gray Company, Clifton, N. J. Richard Epps, research work in antibiotics for Hoffman La Roche Inc., Nutley, N. Jersey and on the same staff Edward Jenkins, a junior bacterilogist.

The famed track star James LuValle, turned scientist and formerly with Eastman Kodak is active in Boston. C. H. Harris, Wright Air Development Company, Dayton, Ohio was also noted among this group.

From the research foundations was veteran Clarence Mason of the Carver Foundation, Tuskegee, Ala., who has made notable contributions to international research, both active and published. Lawrence H. Knox, Hickrill Foundation, New York, and Charles W. Harris, Wright Development Center, Dayton, were busy at sessions and as discussants.

Educational institutions including Howard university (Doctors Moddie Taylor, Morris Kelso); Central State College, (Doctors E. O. Woolfolk and Mrs. Johnson), Ohio; Fisk University (Dr. Massie) Tennessee; Lincoln University (Dr. W. C. Byrd) Jefferson City, Mo.; and Maryland State College (Dr. O. E. Yokely) Maryland, were represented.

Teacher unions given year to desegregate

CHICAGO (NNPA)— The 37th annual convention of the American Federation of Teachers Friday adopted a resolution calling for suspension of local unions next year if, in the opinion of the executive council, they have not made sufficient progress toward racial integration.

The resolution was amended after southern delegates protested stronger wording which flatly asserted locals would be suspended if integration was not accomplished by the 1955 convention.

Some southern delegates pleaded that integration would take time and that it would be unfair to put a "cutoff date" without penalizing those locals which were working hard toward integration.

In opposing the resolution, Irving E. Fullington of Birmingham, Ala., said:

"We in the South do not accept this organization's premise that segregation is evil or that the Supreme Court is the supreme lawmaking body and that its laws are the supreme laws of the land."

TEACHERS CLASH ON BIAS IN UNIOI

Proposal to Suspend Locals That Fail to End Color Line in Year Is Disputed

By GENE CURRIVAN

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 20—Segregation became an issue here today as the American Federation of Teachers, A. F. L., ended its thirty-seventh annual convention.

A resolution submitted by Richard Parrish, chairman of the convention Committee for Democratic Human Relations and a delegate from New York City Local No. 2, recommended that all federation locals that had not ended segregation completely before the next convention be suspended until integration was carried out. There are three such locals in New Orleans, Chattanooga, Tenn., and Atlanta, where the racial barrier is well defined.

The proposal brought about an explosive reaction from the Southern delegates. Some who favored desegregation asserted that they could not reconcile it expected to overcome the problem before the next convention. Others who favored segregation held that they could not accept segregation as an evil and declared that the states would fight any individual attempt to enforce it.

The situation was resolved when Israel Kugler, president of the New York City Community College, called upon the convention to accept a pacifying amendment. This gave the federation's Executive Council the right to recommend for suspension before next year's convention any locals that did not make "a sincere effort" at integration.

Recommendations

The federation lashed out at "special interest" groups that promote their particular economic points of view by conducting so-called business-education days on school time and at taxpayers' expense.

It warned that any school officials who permitted outside groups to administer any portion of the school program "under the guise of increasing the economic understanding of teachers and pupils or for any other purpose, are abrogating their responsibilities."

The 1,000 delegates, who represent more than 45,000 teachers, recommended:

¶Teachers' salaries should start at $4,500 at least and rise to $8,000 in eight or less steps.

¶The school day should not exceed five and one-half hours of suprevised activity and extra compensation should be paid for services beyond that limit.

¶Teachers should be privileged to decline without prejudice any outside activity.

¶There should be a minimum retirement allowance of 50 per cent based on any five consecutive years the teacher might select for all those retiring at the age of 55 with at least twenty-five years' experience.

¶A teacher should be eligible to take sabbatical leave after every seven years of service for study, travel or rest.

¶ There should be tenure, or job protection, laws for teachers wherein a court of appeals would be mandated to review challenged decisions of the education boards.

Objects to Loyalty Oaths

The convention held that there ought to be no special requirements in the form of loyalty oaths or limitations upon teachers' rights to join organizations of their choice.

The delegates accepted a recommendation by Mr. Kugler that legislation be sought to establish more public junior colleges throughout the country similar to the New York State community colleges.

The New York delegation failed again to get clarification of the federation's stand on "Fifth Amendment teachers." The convention reiterated last year's stand "that while we oppose the employment of Communists in our schools we decry the dismissal of competent employes solely on the ground that they avail themselves of their legal and constitutional rights guaranteed in our Bill of Rights."

AMERICAN NURSES ASSOCIATION

Miss Marr says Northerners discriminate against nurses

Afro-American P. 11

Baltimore, Md.

PHILADELPHIA—Miss Grace Marr, assistant executive secretary of the American Nurses Association, charged that nurses are being discriminated against in northern states of the U.S., here last week.

Sat. 11-27-54

Speaking at the 30th annual convention of the Pennsylvania State Nurses Association, she stated that 84 of 108 schools for nurses in Pennsylvania bar students on basis of race. Others, she said, have a very limited quota. These, she said, discriminate not only against colored students, but also against Indian, Chinese, Japanese and Mexicans.

Miss Marr told the delegates to the convention that in many cases colored nurses are not given jobs for which they are qualified only because of their race. In other instances they are restricted to the handling of certain patients in many of the hospitals of Pennsylvania, she said.

— o O o —

A SPOKESMAN of the Association said that plans are under way to form an advisory committee of lay people and a committee of the State Association to study the situation. The committee, it was said, will work towards the objective of the national program, which is "the achievement of the opening of all opportunities in nursing to members of all racial groups on the same basis."

Nurses fete ANA delegates

CHICAGO (ANP)—The Chicago Graduate Nurses' Association welcomed delegates to the 39th biennial convention of the American Nurses' Association which met here, April 26-30, in the Conrad Hilton hotel.

The graduate association planned a gala pre-convention program for visiting nurses. On the agenda were a banquet, Saturday, and a breakfast the following morning. Both events were in the Washington Park YMCA.

Mrs. Frances F. Gaines was mistress of ceremonies at the banquet, and Miss Jane A. Belt, chairman of the program committee.

The Chicago Graduate Nurses' Association once was the local chapter of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, which merged with the American Nurses' Association several years ago. Some local chapters still exist, but most disbanded with the merger.

Officers of the group include Jennie A. Gravely, president; Ann Hightower, secretary, and Minetta Marion, treasurer.

END OF BIAS URGED IN NURSING FIELD

Association Official Reports Georgia Affiliate Is Only One Still Barring Negroes

By LILLIAN BELLISON

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 26 — The American Nurses Association reported today that its affiliate in Georgia is the only state group that still bars Negroes from membership.

Mrs. Elizabeth K. Porter, president of the association, told 2,700 persons registered for the opening of its thirty-ninth biennial convention here that understanding world conditions was the first challenge to nurses this year. She said that action also must be taken on the home front "as rapidly as possible to remove barriers that prevent the full development and full employment of nurses belonging to minority racial groups."

Of the 1,200 schools of nursing in the United States, 710 say they enroll students on the basis of qualification without regard to color, Mrs. Porter announced. She said that, although Negro nurses were finding increasing opportunities for employment, they seldom were considered for posts above the general duty level.

"And too frequently they do not receive the equal salary for equal work," she added.

Miss Grace E. Marr, assistant executive secretary in intergroup relations for the association, urged Negro students to apply for admission to the nursing schools of their choice "rather than to schools that have traditionally accepted colored students." She asked also that Negro nurses apply for positions in which they have interest and qualifications "wherever those positions exist."

Miss Marr said that admission of more Negroes to nursing schools would ease the nursing shortage. She stressed the need for admitting only qualified students to these schools. Expanding and improving elementary and secondary education for Negroes would qualify more of them for the study of nursing, she said.

Praises Student Group

The association official called on each of the 173,000 members of the association to promote integration of the Negro nurse in her place of employment. She praised the members of the National Student Nurses Association for operating on an integrated basis in advance of the parent body.

The association made its first presentation of the Mary Mahoney Medal to Miss May M. Maloney, executive director of the West Virginia State Nurses' Association. The award, established in honor of the nation's first Negro nurse, was given to Miss Maloney for her efforts to integrate nurses of racial minority groups in the profession.

Miss Maloney, whose illness prevented her from attending the convention, succeeded in having three nursing schools in her state extend enrollment to Negro students. She also set up one state and four district committees of the association in West Virginia to further intergroup relations.

In a further move for equality, the association made a grammatical revision of its by-laws to delete the pronoun "she" in recognition of the 2.4 per cent of its membership who are men. Sentences listing different membership requirements for women and men also were deleted.

AMERICAN NURSES' ASSOCIATION

Nurses Still Face Race Bias In Profession

CHICAGO — (NNPA) — Racial discrimination still exists in the nursing field despite action to remove barriers which prevent full development and employment of nurses belonging to minority groups, Mrs. Elizabeth K. Porter, president of the American Nurses Association, told the 39th biennial convention of the organization Monday.

STILL BARS COLORED

The association reported that its affiliate in Georgia is the only state group that still bars colored nurses from membership.

Mrs. Porter announced that 710 of the 1,200 schools of nursing say they admit students on the basis of qualifications and not color. Although colored nurses were finding increasing job opportunities, she said, they seldom were considered for posts above the general duty level.

"And too frequently they do not receive the equal salary for equal work," she added.

Colored students were urged by Miss Grace E. Marr, assistant executive secretary in intergroup relations for the association, to apply for enrollment in nursing schools of their choice 'rather than to schools that have traditionally accepted colored nurses."

NURSING SHORTAGE

She also urged that colored nurses apply for positions in which they have interest and qualifications "wherever these positions exist."

Admission of more colored students to nursing schools would ease the nursing shortage, Miss Marr said. The emphasized the need for only qualified students applying to these schools. Expanding and improving grade and high school education for colored students would qualify more for the study of nursing.

One of the 18-point tentative program of the association for 1954-56, submitted to the House of Delegates, was promoting full participation of minority groups in association activities and eliminating discrimination in job opportunities, salaries, and working conditions.

The association made its first award of the Mary Mahoney Medal to Miss May M. Maloney, executive director of the West Virginia State Nurses' Association. The award established in honor of the nation's first colored nurse, was given to Miss Maloney for her efforts to integrate colored nurses in the profession.

DISTRICT COMMITTEES

Miss Maloney, whose illness kept her from attending the convention, got three nursing schools in her state to open their doors to colored students. She also set up one state and four district committees of the association in West Virginia to promote intergroup relations.

TO UPGRADE COLORED NURSES

Guardian Sat. 5-22-54

Although the American Nurses Association has made much progress since the recent dissolving of the National Association of Colored Graduate Nurses, much is still needed to be done. Miss Grace E. Marr is assistant executive secretary of the ANA in charge of the intergroup relations program for upgrading colored nurses in hospitals and opening up more employment opportunities. She also cites the fact that rarely are colored nurses elected to office or appointed to committees in the ANA, state or district nurses association.

Tuskegee Man Elected To National Group

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala. — Edward L. Price, who has served on the faculty of the Tuskege Institute School of Agriculture since 1948 as landscape architect and head of the Department of Ornamental Horticulture, was notified this week of his election to the American Society of Landscape Architects.

In achieving this distinction, he becomes the second Negro in the United States to be so honored. The other is Dr. Charles Dickenson of Lincoln University at Jefferson City Mo.

Price received a B. S. degree in Agriculture at Tuskegee Institute in 1937. He reecived a certificate from the Los Angeles Park School before going to Ohio State University where he received a bachelor's degree in Landscape Archietcture.

During 1952 and 1953, he completed work at the University of California for master's degrees in both Landscape Architecture and Ornamental Horticulture. At the University, he made an outstanding record. He returned to his work at Tuskegee last summer.

AMERICAN TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

ATA Donates $1,809 To NAACP Defense Fund

NASHVILLE — It was a cool, calculating American Teachers Association that met here July 25-27, pondered aspects of the Supreme Court's decision, celebrated the 50th anniversary of its founding in Nashville and gave $1,809.90 to the NAACP.

The meeting held at Tennessee State university drew the largest attendance of any ATA meeting in almost two decades.

More than 500 delegates and teachers representing 19 states considered approaches and reactions and proposals as to what should be the teacher's attitude to the Supreme Court's decision and suggested plans and proposals.

Gerard A. Anderson of South Carolina president, presided over the sessions.

The graphic, penetrable Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, led the mainspring of thought on the convention theme, speaking on "What Should Be the Teacher's Attitude Toward the Supreme Court Pronouncement."

In his keynote address he gave seven attitudes he thought teachers should take toward the pronouncement.

"We should rejoice over the decision," Morehouse college's president emphasized, "because as I see it, it marks one of the fundamental distinctions between a democratic government and a totalitarian government such as Russia. . .it seems to me that it indicates the genius of American democracy. . ."

"Our attitude must be one of obedience to the law," Dr. Mays continued. "This is not a local issue. . .it is not a decision for Negroes; it is a decision for America."

The meetings crowning moment was the ATA's presentation to the NAACP of $500 for a life membership and the customary 10 percent of annual memberships to the legal and educational defense fund, amounting to $1,809.90.

The presentation was made to Thurgood Marshall by ATA Trustee C. L. Harper amid the applause of a standing ovation.

"When the story of this fight is finally written, one of the most important chapters will deal with the contributions and the cooperation of Negro teacher groups such as ATA," Marshall said in his acceptance.

Symposium speakers during the convention were Dr. Walter N. Ridley, NEA-ATA joint committee secretary, Virginia State college; Mrs. Bonita Valien, Fisk university; Dr. George W. Gore, jr., NEA defense commission member and president of Florida A and M. university; Dr. Miles W. Connor, Coppin State Teachers college president; Mrs. Minnie D. Bell, Washington, D. C.; and George D. Brantley, Sumner High School, St. Louis.

Other program participants included Dr. George C. Mitchell director, Southern Regional Council; Miss Mary L. Williams, NEA-ATA committee chairman; Dr. Robert C. Hatch, State Department of Education, Montgomery, Ala.

Major officers elected were: Mrs. Lillian Rogers Johnson, Mississippi, president; Elmer T. Hawkins, Maryland, vice-president; Mrs. Minnie L. Bell, D. C., and C. L. Harper Georgia, executive committee; G. A. Key Tennessee and Dr. J. H. Taylor, N. C board of trustees; Dr. H. Coucil Trenholm, Alabama, executive secretary; Dr. Howard H. Long Ohio, treasurer.

ATA gets NAACP membership

32b

NEW YORK — The American Teachers's Association, largest organized body of teachers in the country, has paid in $500 for a life membership in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as part of the Fight for Freedom campaign.

The Fight for Freedom campaign seeks to aid American democracy by eliminating racial discrimination and segregation by Jan. 1, 1963—the centennial of the Emancipation Proclamation.

—oOo—

FOUR PERSONS and two organizations made an initial payment on an NAACP life membership during the last fortnight in which a total of $1,053 in Freedom funds was received.
